Mr. Jans announces that he will change the policy of the house, cutting out the vaudeville and catering to the insistent demand for the latest and best feature pictures at popular prices. He feels that he is well-equipped to cater to his patrons, as the Rivoli has a capacity of 2,000, and he will thus be able to make prices within the reach of all.

Simplex Distributors Busy

The Dwyer Bros. & Co. of Cincinnati, Ohio report the installation of a battery of Simplex Projectors in the new 1,800-seat State Theatre which was recently opened in Columbus, Ohio. Word also comes from the Chicago office of the Exhibitors' Supply Company, Inc., of the installation of Simplex Incandescent equipment spotlights and a Minusa Screen in the new Family Theatre, Frankfort Heights, Ill.

B. F. Forter, the well known distributor of Simplex Projectors in and around New York City, announces the installation of two Type "S" Simplex Projectors in the new 1,200-seat Ronson Theatre, Newark, N. J. The new Superba Theatre of the same city was also recently equipped, as well as the Globe and Victoria Theatres, by the above distributor.

The Western Theatre Equipment Company of Seattle, Wash., advise that they have secured the order for the complete equipment, including Simplex Projectors, which will be installed in the Rialto Theatre, Wenatchee, Wash., which is now being erected by the Pacific Coast Theatres, Inc.

The Sherman Theatre, St. Cloud, Minn. which is said by many to be one of the finest motion picture theatres in central Minnesota was Simplex equipped by the Teco Products Mfg. Company of Minneapolis.

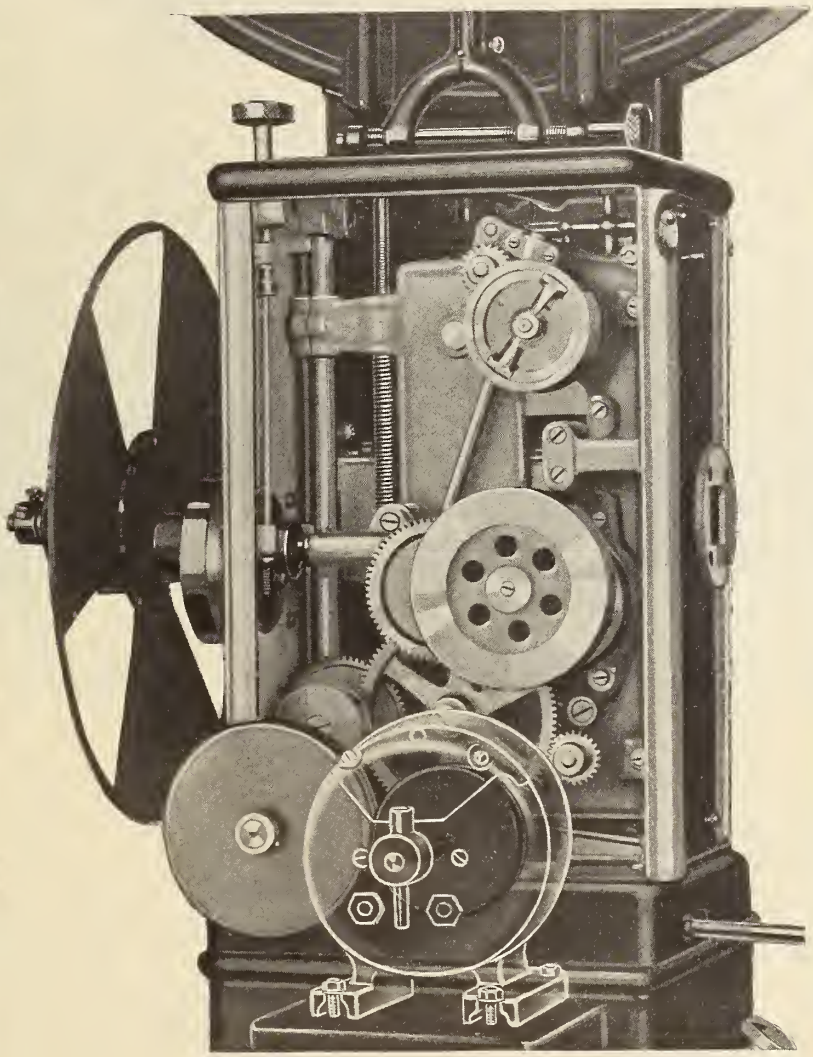
Theatres Auctioned



The Ideal and Broadway moving picture theatres, Columbia, S. C., have been sold at auction to satisfy a mortgage given by the Palmetto Enterprises to the Capitol Theatre Company. The two houses, valued at about $40,000, were bid in by the holders of the mortgages for the nominal sum of $2,750. These theatres thus revert back to the company which formerly operated them.

Both houses will be reopened, it is announced by George C. Warner, head of the Capitol Theatres Company, who will have general direction over the theatres. The Ideal will be under the active management of Captain and Mrs. Jack Bell, who have been with the theatre in this capacity for several years. The Broadway, Mr. Warner announced, will be closed for several weeks to permit numerous alterations and improvements.—KEENEY.

Better be safe than sorry; for that reason at least once a month make a careful inspection of your theatre for rags, litter and oddiments stuffed in corners, back of radiators, and in other places that perhaps spell danger if neglected.

State Theatre Installs Typhoon System

One of the latest additions to an already large list of moving picture theatres in Brooklyn, N. Y., is the new State theatre, situated at DeKalb and Franklin avenues, and built by Messrs. Bleendes and Strausberg.

To make this theatre complete in every respect the very best equipment money could buy was installed. There are fifteen hundred seats and each has an unobstructed view of the screen. The matter of cooling and ventilation received very close attention and after considerable thought on the subject the order for this part of the equipment was placed with the Typhoon Fan Company of New York.

On each side of the screen special compartments were constructed and the large Typhoons installed there, the air being forced out into the auditorium through grilles just over the screen as may be seen by referring to the accompanying photograph. During the warm weather this Typhoon System will change the air in the State once every minute, or sixty times an hour. For ventilating during the winter the System is reversed in its operation and the foul air withdrawn.

Fire Destroys Another House

The Crown Motion Picture Theatre at 358 Main street, Hartford, Conn., has been condemned and closed, following a $150,000 fire in the theatre and adjoining garage. The roof of the theatre collapsed and the interior was flooded with water. Building Inspector Barrett refused to issue a permit at present for repairs, saying that it will be impossible to provide satisfactory fire escapes, as the theatre building is situated in a peculiar manner and there can be on way to provide exits, excepting from the front of the house. Manager Antonio Delorenzo considers condemnation of the house another chapter in his run of hard luck, the house having been closed December 20th by State Police Superintendent Robert T. Hurley, and about $5,000 being expended to provide the building with satisfactory fire prevention arrangements and to remedy defects in construction. It had only been reopened a day or so when the fire and resultant condemnation took place.—Agard.

New Name for Old Seattle Theatre

The Clemmer theatre, Seattle, under the management of William Cutts, was renamed shortly after January first, the Columbia.

In order to select a name, the Kinema Company has been conducting a "Name and Slogan Contest" through the columns of the weekly paper published by the theatre and given to its patrons.

New signs have been made for the theatre, and the lobby has been redecorated during the past two months. The unusual lobby displays arranged by Manager Cutts for his recent offerings have been the subject of much comment in theatrical circles. The Columbia is the home of Universal pictures.—Prager.

Building Operations Increase

Builders in Queens Borough, N. Y. City, are not filing as many applications for permits at the present time as they have been during the past four months, but the records at the Queens Building Bureau show that the total operations for December will be almost as great as for preceding months. At the present time the total number of applications for the year amount to 12,568 for new buildings. This is more than twice the number of applications for 1920, when the total for new buildings was 6,081.

Robbins Opens Olympic Theatre in Watertown

The Olympia theatre in Watertown was opened under the management of Nathan Robbins on Christmas Day, and capacity audiences witnessed the shows on the opening day as well as Monday, when the city officials were present at the first evening performance as guests of Mr. Robbins.

The policy of the Olympia theatre will be the presentation of the latest and best pictures in conjunction with a program of music rendered by the Olympia Concert Orchestra, under the direction of Patrick Conway and instrumental and vocal soloists who will appear in stage presentation under the direction of Dr. Wilson.

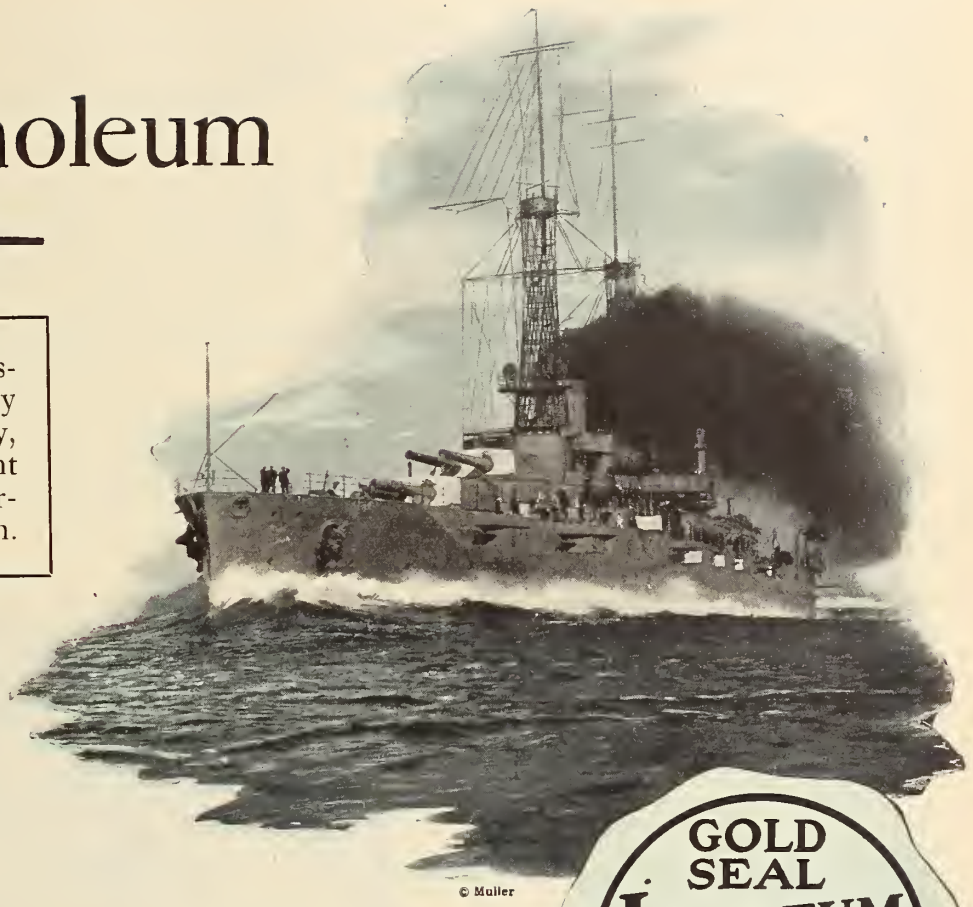
A Progressive Supply Dealer

Realizing the need of the industry for better projection, the Salt Lake Theatre Supply company of this city has let the contract for installation in its quarters at 48 Exchange place of a model projection room which will be the only one of its kind in the west. There extensive experiments will be carried on and previews conducted of educational and theatrical films, with a view of devising means for obtaining the best results in the projection of individual films to be used in schools and theatres of the intermountain territory.

It is the belief of Samuel I. Levin, manager of the company, that through this system of previews intermountain educators and theatrical exhibitors may be given valuable suggestions on how to secure the best results they are to show.

Famous Architects Design Theatre

The same firm of New York architects which designed the Woolworth building, in New York as well as the one in Watertown, N. Y., has just been engaged to draw the plans for the new theatre to be erected by Charles Sesonske and Frank A. Empsall in Watertown. The house will seat 3,000 persons.—Grant.



Theatre Corporation Formed

To meet the increasing demands for a first-class motion picture house at West Haven, Conn., the United Theatres Corporation has been formed in that town, with Edward E. Carll, Dominic J. Cofrancis and Charles E. Spreyer as directors. The corporation is to build a $50,000 house at Campbell avenue and Blohm street. Work on this is to start immediately and it is expected to be ready for occupancy by April 1. Only first-run and first-class films are to be shown at this house. A small amount of stock will be floated at $10 per share, yielding interest at eight per cent.—Agard.

Battleship Linoleum Defined—

The term "Battleship" has been misapplied so widely to solid-color heavy linoleums, regardless of their quality, that its real meaning is often lost sight of, even among architects and in the floor-covering trade. Here is the explanation.

In the first place, the designation "battleship" linoleum is not now, and never has been, the trade name of any single manufacturer's product. Instead, it stands for a fixed and inflexible standard of quality — a standard so high that this material can withstand even the most severe conditions of battleship service.

"Made According to U. S. Navy Standard"

Genuine battleship linoleum—of U. S. Navy Standard—is made according to the exacting specifications of the Navy Department for linoleum to be used on the decks of naval vessels. It must prove up under various tests, some of which are: the bending test, indentation test, absorption test, and burlap test. Other requirements concern the necessity for highest grade materials, uniformity of color and finish, seasoning, etc.

Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum is genuine battleship linoleum. It is the exclusive product of the Congoleum Company and conforms in all respects to U. S. Navy Specifications. It should not be confused with so-called battleship linoleums which do not conform to the Navy Standard.

Purchasers of Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum are doubly protected—first, by the specifications prepared by the United States Navy Department, which insure the very highest quality; and, second, by our Gold-Seal Guarantee, which pledges "Satisfaction or Your Money Back".

National Anti-Misframe League Forum

Dear Editor:

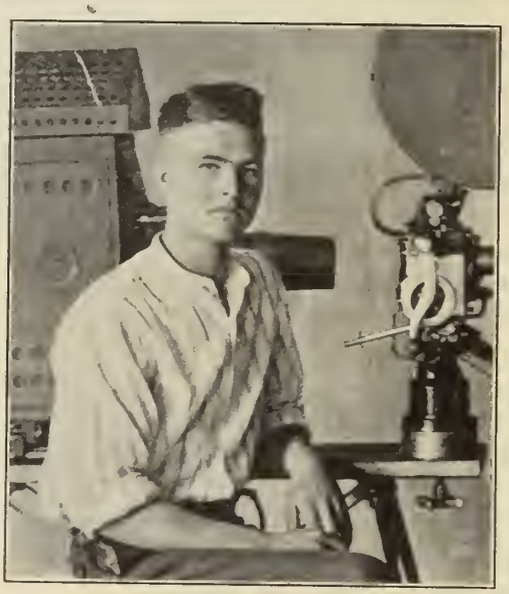
I have a little difficulty with my picture, and I would like to have some help, if it is possible to obtain it. First of all, I have an Argus headed screen, I am pulling 60 amperes at the arc with a General Electric converter, or compensarc as it is called, on 130 foot throw at a 25 degree. I am using 11/32-inch silver tip below and a ¾-inch cored National above. My condensers are the meuiscus bi-convex combination, 6½ rear and 8½ front. The screen is sitting vertical and is absolutely plumb. Now my grief is this: My picture is wonderful from the balcony and the projection room, you couldn't wish for one better, but from the main floor it is positively rotten, even if I do say so myself. We first had the screen tilted back at the top, but after straightened it.

Well, I guess I have run down for this time. Any help I may receive will be appreciated.

Yours for better protection,

W. J. Fallon.

N. A. M. L. No. 245, 1516 Ingleside avenue, Sioux City, Iowa.



The reason that W. J. Fallon does not secure good reflected light to the main floor is entirely due to the characteristics of the Argus headed screen. This screen reflects the light in a different manner than any other screen now on the market. The maximum light is thrown directly back along the line of projection. It makes very little difference if the screen is tilted or not, as the crystal heads are round. There is no way of remedying the trouble in the case cited by Brother Fallon excepting by changing to a different screen, or by moving the projection booth to a lower level, thus bringing the line of projection nearly on a level with the main floor. Of course this latter is probably entirely impossible, though it is the correct position for a projection room.

If Brother Fallon would like information concerning the proper screen to use in this theatre, the Editor would be only too glad to furnish the recommendation. However, to make the projer selection of a screen it is necessary to have a floor plan of the theatre, showing the position of the screen, and the seating layout, including also the various distances. The elevation view is also required, showing the balcony, projection booth, etc., so that the angle of projection may be considered.—Gentlemen,

In the December 17th issue, Bro. Schaub, in commenting on the setting of the shutter does not make it plain enough, I believe, he says among other things, "it is almost impossible to eliminate a ghost if it (the shutter) is too close or too far from lenses;" this I believe is wrong, unless the main blade of shutter is too narrow; in that case, if one happened to strike the right place it would help, but if the operator is unable to place his shutter at the correct position, I would advise widening the main blade, little by little, until ghost disappears, this will remedy the ghost evil, regardless of where the shutter is placed. The only advantage, and that is of tremendous values, of having the shutter at the correct distance from lenses, in other words at the aerial image is that you can trim the main blade narrowest at that position than at any other, thereby increasing your light on screen. Now to find the aerial image, procure a piece of tin large enough to completely cover the condenser; in the center of this tin, punch a small hole

Membership Buttons

It has been customary for this department to furnish a celluloid membership button to new members upon receipt of their applications. Our present supply of buttons has been exhausted, and we are now considering the possibility of ordering a bronze metal button and charging the members for its actual cost. From the quotations we have at hand it appears that we would have to charge about twenty-five or thirty cents. To help us decide we would appreciate hearing from the various members on this matter.

Earl Bayer

rectly over the condenser next to the arc, with (about the size of a lath nail), place this dithe hole as near the center of condenser as possible. Now project the light thru the small hole, and thru the lenses. You will be able then to see the smallest place in the ray of light that is the proper position to place the shutter. The darker the booth, the better, you can see that ray of light. Also, by blowing a little smoke in the ray, it will help.

Mr. Schaub's advise about clean sprockets and play in intermittent movement is good sound advise to any operator, let's have some more of that kind of advice, let's all pull together.

Hoping this will be of benefit to some one, I remain

Yours respectfully,

Fred Knoll,

Chief Projectionist, Ames Theatre Co.

Dear Editor:

I am writing you a few lines briefly describing my projection room; would like to send a photo of same, but haven't any at present, although am sending one of myself. My room is equipped with two Powers 6B machines, a Hertner 50-50 TransVerteR. I must tell you about our new steel booth, it is made of 20 gauge steel size 8 x 12 feet, with a 12-inch vent at top leading to the roof, all observation port holes are equipped with fire shutters controlled with a master cord that has a fuse link coming down to magazines of each machine, in case of fire all vents, observation port holes will close. I also keep a bucket of water and a small bag of sand to use in case of fire. No smoking is allowed in the booth at any time. All films except that on the machine or on the rewinder are kept in steel film cases. I am a member of the National Anti-Misframe League. I think the N. A. M. L. is a great thing when it comes to improving conditions in the projection room. This is my fourth year as Projectionist and I will be glad to help any member of the N. A. M. L. who is having trouble if I am able. Come on boys, let's make the N. A. M. L. 100 per cent. Will close.

I remains your for better Projection.

Earl Boyer,

Projectionist, N. A. M. L. No. 1565.

P. S. If good wishes were "FILLUM," my wishes for all N. A. M. L. members are a 12-reel production—and for the "Editor," a serial.

Friend Editor:

There has been more or less chatter about change-over ideas. I also have my ideas of change overs and I wish to discuss this particular phase of Projection with every reader of the N. A. M. L. Forum.

We are generally taught the adage, "Don't criticize, unless one has a better idea to offer in place of that criticized." Well, I think I have a better idea to offer than most of the ideas on change overs which have been presented to us in the past.

There is the combination of punch holes that some fellow who uses them thinks that his way is the best. Then the fellow who scratches the film for so many pictures, and again the fellow who uses the "X" marks. Then the fellows who use the tin foil signal device to wake them up in time not to miss the change to the next reel, and various other ideas too numerous to mention.

Well, outside of these, few ideas, to my opinion, none of them are hardly worth mentioning, only in the way of discouraging the use of them.

Assume the idea that all projectionists rewind and inspect their films before putting them in the machine for the day's showing.

Then it is easier for them to copy one action from the end of the reel which he intends to change over from, than it is for him to grab his punch or scissors or some other destructive tool, which would put a mar in his projection rather than a point of perfection.

Maybe some of you don't quite grasp the simple idea as yet. Pick up the end of your film, just before where it says "End of Part 1, or 2," and look at the action; if a fellow in that scene drops his hand, say about eight inches from the end of the action in the reel,, then take that little action or motion and write it down on a piece of paper (cue sheet) and so on for every other change over, and then you have, maybe, three or four "cues" and number the cues for the end of each reel which you are going to use for a change over, and see if you don't get better results and the audience won't have to wonder what those peculiar marks are which precede the ending of each reel or at the end of every other reel.

Take for example: I am rewinding part 2 of my show and at the end of the reel it shows a close-up of a character, then I would put on my "cue sheet" change on close-up of man, or woman, or whatever it might show. Again, if the reel ends on a fade out of a character

My dear Mr. Griffin:—

Your letter to Mr. Al Trezona of December 20th has been handed to me and I wish to thank you very kindly for the condition that our two Power machines were returned to the New Palace Theatre.

I assure you it is the greatest piece of work I have ever seen and that we are now boosters of the Power's institution.

Wishing you a Happy New Year, although rather late, I beg to remain, or a particular scene, then I would put on my "cue sheet" fade out on boat, or house, and then use one's common sense as to the length of the scene, and then snap—your change over is made. I think that should be fairly clear in most of your minds now; so try it and let's hear of your comment on it.

This idea may be new to some and old to others, nevertheless it is the only change-over idea which would be O. K'd by me, as it does not damage the film in any way and does not employ the mechanical use of the film. The idea is used altogether in changes of numbers on a vaudeville stage.

If any projectionist or operator thinks that the tin foil idea is a good gag and does not damage the film, he is wrong and for proof I wish he could see some of the samples which I am enclosing to the editor. Take your cues from a title preceding a scene or any action; try it, and you and every one else will notice the difference in your projection. Let's do away with these other damaging practices and start the New Year right.

R. E. Burnett,
N. A. M. L. No. 1413. Pres. Local 156, Danville, Illinois.

Dear Ed.:

I am sending in my blank to join the N. A. M. L., so as to better the pictures for the exchange and audience also.

I have been reading the N. A. M. L. news and discussions, and think it will be a great help to the brother operators, that is if they will send in their ideas, etc., to help each other out.

Hoping to hear from you soon to find out if I am accepted, so as to send in my dope on the betterment of the N. A. M. L.

Yours truly,
J. Clyde Hutchison.
Strand Theatre, Kenova, W. Va.

Dear Editor:

I have never written to the News yet, so I thought I would write to let people know that the N. A. M. L. wasn't dead yet, even if I am a small town operator. I have only been in the booth about two years and have belonged to the League hardly that long, but try to do my part as a member, though sometimes it is a hard thing to do. I want some one to answer a question for me. Does the exchange ever inspect their films before they leave the house? Sometimes I get some films that look as if they had never been inspected at all. I am sending you some samples of some patches that I have cut out recently and think it is a shame that some people would butcher up a film like that. I would like to know if all the members feel like I do about the way some operators or inspectors take care of the films. I get some films here sometimes that I have to work on for five hours to get them in shape to run and think it is about as much the fault of the exchange as the operator, for all these films come from the exchange to me. Guess I had better ge off the wire, for some one else might want to use it a while. I think if all the members would get together they could get some of this bad work cut out and I for one will do all I can.

Very truly yours,
John C. Creed, Operator.
Amuzu Theatre, Elkin, N. C.

Gentlemen:

Inclosed please find my application for membership to the Anti Misframe League. Although I have always taken out all misframes and otherwise sent the film back in better condition than we received it (or seen that it was done) I, like many other of the boys, have neglected to join the League. I have always realized what a good it will do the industry if every projectionist was a member. I know the boys feel that it is the exchange's place to send film out without misframes, punch holes, etc., but I am sure that if each of us takes time to repair the film we use, it is only a matter of time until every print we receive will be in first class condition.

Very truly yours,
Arthur B. Wooley,
Saybrook, Ill.

Dear Editor:

Inclosed find application for membership in the N. A. M. L. for my assistant, also myself. In my mind the League is a very good thing not only for the projectionists but for the producer as well. The sooner all the boys get together and join the sooner our film troubles will be over. Yours very truly,

O. J. Hosack,
Chief Projectionist.
E. J. Wykoff,
Asst. Projectionist.

Dear Editor:

The Forum has helped me improve my projection about twenty per cent; my change-over receives credit for most of that.

My projection room is nothing to speak about just at present but by Spring it will be the best booth in any 400-seat house. We are going to get new machines soon but I can't decide upon any particular make. All have their good points—and their bad points.

The new manager has ordered a Hallberg Type H, 50-50 D. C. Amperes, 3-Phase motor generator and I wish all projectionists who have had experience with this or any other type would write to me and give me a few pointers on their care and operation.

Many speak about their electric rewinds. How many have thought of using a sewing machine motor with a foot control? Let it soak in boys.

In answer to B. C. Harrington's question I think that "A" is right. We have had an old film about the place for several years and I used this to experiment on. While the film was clean nothing much happened when I tightened it while rewinding but when I put a tiny chip of carbon on the film—Whew! Warning: Don't try this with good film.

I hope every projectionist helps me with my new generator. Yours very truly,

John W. Schmock,
N. A. M. L.: 1549.

Try the Movies

If the barracks are so lonely
And the town is kinda slow
When you can't get in the crap game
'Cause you haven't enough dough
When your best girl's gone and ditched you
And you've got no place to go
Try the movies.

There you'll find a clean amusement
And you'll have a laugh or two
To forget about your troubles
Or the grouch that's haunting you
If you feel you're going cuckoo
Why, there's just one thing to do—
Try the movies.

NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE PLEDGE

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Nicholas Power Has New Sales Manager

Edward Earl, president of the Nicholas Power Company, announces that Herbert Griffin, formerly Technical Engineer, has been made general sales manager of the company. This will be good news to the many friends Mr. Griffin has made in the fi fteen years he has been closely connected with the motion picture industry. Griffin started in 1906 as an operator, and that was as close to the bottom of the industry as anyone could get in those days. At that time, those who operated motion picture machines had considerably more nerve than knowledge, and the applicant for a position did not have to prove very much. Many of those still in the business started in just the way Griffin did, but have well earned the title of projectionist, which means that a man is well informed regarding the mechanical details of his work, electricity, optics, etc. Mr. Griffin joined some sort of an organization of operators a good many years ago, and as this was later absorbed by the I. A. T. S. E., he is one of the oldest members of that organization. Griffin has frequently spoken before projectionists societies, and is highly popular with the members as he is always willing to help them with any of the special knowledge which his position with the company has enabled him to secure.

About nine years ago, Griffin joined the Power's forces, and was a road representative for a number of years. In this position, he was very successful and acquired a wide knowledge of the requirements of owners, managers and projectionists. It might be assumed that these requirements are about the same in all places. But this is not true about motion picture machines any more than it is about most other things in this world. The combination of selling experience and technical training Mr. Griffin has acquired in the past fifteen years is an ideal combination, and should prove highly valuable in his new position. Since Will C. Smith resigned as general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, to become a distributor for Power's, the company has had none in a high executive position connected with the Sales Department who had the proper technical training, and this has proved unsatisfactory. In August, 1920, we carried the following announcement when Mr. Griffin was made technical engineer of the Nicholas Power Company. "As assistant to the general manager, a very large part of his duties consisted in investigating and passing upon the constant stream of new ideas and inventions which came to the Nicholas Power Company in connection with their product. Most of the latest additions and improvements to Power's Projectors are the result of the preliminary investigations made by Mr. Griffin.

As road representative, Mr. Griffin became well acquainted with many of the distributors of Power's and thoroughly believes in the company's policy of backing up the distributor in every possible way.

Mr. Briffin's experiences have been varied and have frequently been given wide publicity in the trade papers and other publications. One of the most interesting of these was during the seventeen months he was in charge of motion pictures for the Y. M. C. A. in Russia. He had a large number of freight cars, completely supplied with motion picture equipment, and brought the films into sections of Siberia and other parts of Russia which had never seen motion pictures previously. Mr. Griffin's experiences and the information acquired while in Russia will sometime be extremely valuable when political conditions become more stable in that country. He believes that for Americans, Russia will some day be a veritable gold mine.

In addition to being an expert projectionist, Mr. Griffin is also an electrical engineer, and this has been very useful in the development of the high intensity arc lamp. Mr. Griffin's various promotions are gratifying evidence that there is plenty of room at the top for men who start at the bottom of an industry, and through their own energy and ability acquire a store of useful knowledge. As previously stated, Mr. Griffin began as an operator and with no more influence than thousands of other projectionists, has risen to one of the highest positions in his company.

Schools Rated on Movie Equipment

OLYMPIA, Wash., Jan. 9.—"Does your district own a motion picture machine, stereopticon, or stereoscope?" is the question asked of the rural schools of Washington, to help determine their rating.

The State Department of Education is issuing a standard rating card, and the checking as to visual education equipment is done by the county superintendents, who send the rate card to the teachers under their supervision. In considering whether a school shall become standardized, this information regarding its pedagogic up-to-dateness is required by the Department.

Mrs. Josephine Corliss Preston, state superintendent of public instruction, reports to the Society for Visual Education that a steadily increasing number of schools in the larger centers are investing in motion-picture machines and using them in the regular school curriculum. Increased interest, she says, is also manifested in making available a large supply of good educational films.

The method used by the teachers in Creston to procure funds for the purchase of a projector is typical of what is taking place in many other towns all over the state. Here a picture machine was secured, put to work and made to pay for itself. The teachers presented popular programs, including educational and recreational films, and earned not only the price of the machine but a substantial balance for additional equipment and incidental expenses. In other cases, like that of Hoquiam, the Parent-Teacher Association has come to the aid of the schools and given them the necessary equipment. The boys and girls, themselves, in some districts have earned a projector by soliciting subscriptions to magazines, salvaging paper, and giving enttertainments.

"Visual education is one of the most valuable of the newer movements in education," declares Mrs. Preston. "A large share of every person's information in any walk of life comes to him through the sense of sight. Knowledge gained in this manner is of lasting value, because it is most vividly impressed as a mental picture. For this reason it would be of great educational benefit if the instruction which is given in certain subjects of the school course of study could always be supplemented with moving picture films bearing on any particular phase of the work which the teacher may desire to emphasize."

Permits Estimated to $17,000,000

With building activities for 1921 the largest in the history of Indianapolis, the city will enter on the new year with an even greater building campaign in prospect, in the opinion of local contractors and architects who have studied the situation from every angle and in particular relation to what is contemplated for the future. The prediction, Walter B. Stern, city building inspector, said, is based on statistics for 1921 which show a total of more than 10,000 permits issued with a valuation represented in costs of more than $17,000,000. The number of permits issued and the valuation is the largest in the history of the building inspector's office.

Reserved Seat Tickets for BIG PICTURES

There are a great many really big productions available today by exhibitors. These are productions that in the past would have been road shows, either not playing your town or playing the opposition combination house. You can give these special productions the proper presentation right in your own theatre. The secret is RESERVED SEATS. "The Birth of a Nation," "'Way Down East," "The Four Horsemen," "Over the Hill," "The Old Nest," and many other unusually big pictures must be played with reserved seats. They are too long for a grind show. They must be presented at advanced prices, and be put on in real showmanship manner. Are you able to handle the big pictures? The Reserved seat policy will make for success.

Advise us your seating capacity and we will be glad to quote you prices and send you samples.

Imperial Theatre, N. C., Thoroughly Equipped with All Modern Conveniences

Great Care Taken in Securing Most Complete and Efficient Installations

The Imperial theatre, Asheville, North Carolina, which opened January 2, is one of the most modern houses in the South. It is a "one-floor theatre," with an ingenious seating arrangement that provides facilities for 1,298 patrons without crowding. More than $150,000 was expended by S. A. Lynch, the owner, in equipping the new playhouse with every possible convenience. Thousands of dollars were spent in erecting a lovely arcade at the Imperial entrance, which was constructed from what formerly was a cafe.

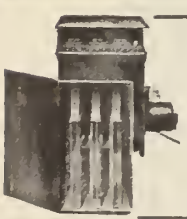
J. B. Carroll, who is manager of the new theatre, formerly was manager of the Imperial theatre at Charlotte, N. C. Mr. Carroll has purchased a modern pipe-organ, which will be operated in conjunction with the concert orchestra permanently engaged at the Imperial.

The lighting system of the Imperial is of the most modern type. Approximately 4,500 electric globes are required to light the new playhouse, and all are controlled from the projection room. As the pictures are flashed on the screen, the vari-colored lights will slowly dim and gradually fade away entirely.

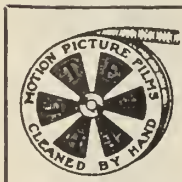
The switches throughout the Imperial are protected by switchboxes that prevent employes from receiving shocks. A marquee at the front entrance to the theatre requires hundreds of lights and extends over the sidewalk, adding materially to the beauty of the theatre entrance.

Fresh air is also an outstanding feature of the new playhouse. Four large ventilation blowers were installed in such a manner as not to interfere with the heating arrangements. They were made especially for the Imperial and are arranged so that 200,000 cubic feet of fresh air can be distributed through the building in one and one-half minutes. A special electric line was necessary to operate the blowers, which are controlled from the projection room. The blowers will be placed in operation at intervals. They measure 16 feet in height. After the theatre is given its nightly renovation, the blowers will operate for ten minutes.

In accord with the efforts of Manager J. B Carroll to make the Imperial the best equipped theatre in the South, a lounge and rest room has been placed at the entrance to the lobby. Mahogany plush furniture has been placed in this room, and a luxurious carpet to match enhances the beauty of the place. Lovely floor lamps have been placed in the rest room and in the lobby to fill out the harmonious color scheme.



A library has been equipped for the members of the Imperial concert orchestra. In this department will be found any desired piece of music, and the library has been accoutered in such a manner as to make it both cosy and attractive.



Special uniforms for all employes of the Imperial have been secured. These are of gray to harmonize with the prevailing color scheme of the playhouse.—KEENEY.

To Build House

With plans calling for a seating capacity of between 1,200 and 1,400 and general appointments intended to make it one of the most modern of southern New England's so-called "small-town" motion-picture playhouses, Stephen T. Mulcahy is to utilize his recently-acquired K. of C., on Main street, at Winsted, Conn., as a theatre site. The property is located in the heart of Winsted's business center, adjoining the telephone building. The site was sold to Mr. Mulcahy within the past two weeks by the Knights of Columbus, his bid, $12,000, being the highest received. The purchaser announces that ground will be broken soon, weather permitting, and it is hoped to have construction well under way by spring. The building is to have two stores, one on each side of the theatre entrance. It is hoped to have the playhouse ready for operation by the time summer visitors arrive in that popular part of New England.—AGARD.

been developed for use up to and including the 150 watt Mazda C lamp.

D—Glass plates are somewhat difficult to apply, needing a special holding device and are rather expensive. They are obviously only of use across the mouths of relatively small reflectors.

E—Gelatin color screens are available in a wide variety of tints and shades. They are therefore especially of service to produce delicate gradations of color. The gelatin material is rather difficult to manipulate, being affected by moisture, extreme heat or extreme cold. The screens break easily and the life of the screen in service is rather short. The gelatine screens are inexpensive, but cumbersome to handle. Where gelatin screens are used across the mouths of reflectors or in border and strip lights, special precautions must be taken to have a reliable holding device. By this is meant, some means of preventing the gelatin from curling, opening a gap and allowing unmodified light to escape, spoiling the effect. A net-work of fine wire overcomes this difficulty. The means of holding the color-frame in place is also important. A drop will frequently sway as it is being raised to the flies, striking a border light and possibly breaking or knocking a screen out of place. This necessitates lowering the entire border and replacing the screen. If colored lamps are used and this happens, one or two lamps may be broken, but the effect will not be marred. If color caps are used with a good holding device, unless the shock is severe enough to break the cap the color effect would not be spoiled. It is likely that if the cap is broken the lamp would be broken with the same effect.

F—Fabrics or colored paper screens are at best only temporary. They should be fire-proof in character and tend to have a very high absorption for a given color modification. They are rarely of service for general color effects save in times of necessity, but for decorative purposes in introducing a touch of color, ornamental silk and similar shades function well.

Motion Pictures the Victor

The Hippodrome theatre, Spokane, Wash., has succumbed to the lure of the "movies" and passed from vaudeville to a strictly motion picture house. The Hippodrome, house in the Columbia building, has had a varied career, changing from vaudeville to pictures and from pictures to vaudeville, then offering a little of both, until now it steps to the front as a "first-run" motion picture house. Ray A. Grombacher, manager of the Liberty theatre here and well known to the picture industry, has taken over the interests of Manager C. S. ("Doc") Crews, and will operate the house. He assumes the Hippodrome lease, which expires August 30, 1922, and has an option for three more years. Manager Crews has also disposed of his Liberty theatre in Walla Walla and is now "theatreless" for the first time in years.

"We haven't exactly worked out our policy yet," Mr. Grombacher said. "It will be feature pictures as a regular thing, but more than that we cannot say at present."—COLVER.

Schools Install Motion Picture Equipment

The Rochester board of education has awarded the Buffalo branch of the Independent Movie Supply Company the contract to install Powers' projection machines and equipment in the school of that city. Frank Davidson, branch manager, also announces that the Falls' agents of the company have sold two Powers' high intensity arc machines to Frank Amendola for installation in the new Amendola theatre, on East 9th Street.—TAYLOR.

Shubert Remodels Toronto House

The Shuberts have announced their intention of converting the Royal Alexandra theatre, Toronto, into a vaudeville and picture theatre. This theatre has long been the home of dramatic and musical comedy road shows. The Shuberts will probably build another theatre in Toronto shortly to accommodate the dramatic offerings. —GLADISH.

Installs One of the Largest Theatre Organs

The Strand theatre, which only recently opened, gave its patrons a real treat through the selections presented on its mammoth organ. This organ was installed by the Man & Colton Company. Leading local exhibitors have commented very favorably on the performance of this unit, especially upon its tone and flexibility of operation. This organ was in the process of construction for six months and cost $25,000. An unusual feature of this instrument is the Guatemalan marimba, xylophone and harp.

McCormick Declares Music of First Importance

"It is more important to provide good music for motion picture audiences than any other," declares S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, who has grappled with various exhibitor problems which have raised their heads from the time he came to the Allen last May, with foresight and resourcefulness and whose attention to the musical programs, in collaboration with his orchestra conductor, Philip Spitalny has set new presentation standards for the motion picture theatres of the Forest City.

Manager McCormick has presented at his theatre such standard compositions as Tschaikovsky's "1812 March," the costumed performers on the stage carrying out the composers story of battered Moscow, whose citizenry fired their own buildings rather than let them fall into the hands of the approaching French under Napoleon.

The set showed the Kremlin, the symbol of the heart of Russia, and the splendid orchestra played the stirring March until the audience was one with the musicians.

Cowled figures accompanied "Les Preludes;" two scenes from "Cleopatra" showed the arrival on her barge of the Egyptian queen with Mark Antony awaiting her to demand tribute to Rome and instead falling victim to her beauty and charms, and later on her throne after Antony's self-inflicted death.

Colorful costume vivified "The Two Grenadiers," which has for its theme the never-dying spirit of France. "The New World Symphony" and Rimsky-Korsakoff's brilliant "Scherazade" with tableau and bacchanale, have also been elaborately presented and other bigger things are planned.

Stock Rescores Symphony

Noted Conductor of Chicago Orchestra Writes New Orchestration for "Rhenish"

FREDERICK STOCK, conductor of the Chicago Orchestra, has rescored Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony in E flat, and in so doing probably will have the approval of every musician familiar with the original.

A number of notted conductors have threatened or promised to rescore not only this symphony but others. Among those who have expressed dissatisfaction with "Rhenish" was Theodore Thomas, and Felix Weingartner in his book on "The Symphony Since Beethoven," speaks thus of Schumann's weakness in orchestral technique:

"Almost always he is working with all his resources; he does not bother to work out the parts in accordance with the nature of the individual instruments. With a naïveté almost childlike he thinks to attain fullness and power by doubling the instruments. For this reason the sound is thick and clumsy, the color gray on gray; the most important voices, if you play them exactly according to his directions, sometimes cannot be brought out so they shall be heard; and a real forte is generally quite as impossible as a real piano."

Schumann himself had an uneasy consciousness that all was not well with his instrumentation, as is shown by his withdrawal of his D minor symphony after its first performance in 1841, his keeping it for ten years and revising it and changing its scoring. But his deficiency of early training and his lack of experience taught him neither what was wrong nor how to remedy it. We went to work by doubling many of the instruments, thinking thereby to gain sonority and power, and in the opinion of some the new version is not in many respects an improvement upon the old.

Perhaps Schumann's revision of this one symphony may have implanted in the minds of some of his admirers an idea of the possibility of doing the same service, in a better way, for the others.

But reorchestrating a symphony is a much more serious and daring undertaking and means a much more drastic surgical operation. Whether it is proper at all might well be the subject of discussion. How far is it proper, necessary or allowable to go in changing or tampering with the works of a master, to make them "practicable," to bring them back to life when they are in danger of death? At any rate Mr. Stock has been brave in making an attempt and according to all reports he has been successful—so far.

Seattle Theatre Conducting Musical Contest

Manager Von Herberg of the Jensen and Von Herberg circuit, Seattle, has hooked up with a movement for better music now in vogue in the city with a contest in which a prize of $500 is offered to the civic, musical or fraternal organization which presents the best musical program, of four numbers for rendition by the Coliseum theatre orchestra.

All programs offered in the contest will be played at one of the regular Sunday concerts which have been one of the features at the Coliseum for several months.

There will be no expense attached to the entrance into the concert. All that is necessary is that the society wishing to enter communicate with Manager Frank Steffy of the Coliseum theatre, so that official entry may be made and a date for the suggested program fixed. The only condition is that the four numbers suggested be of such a character as will be satisfactory to the musical requirements of the orchestra. Conductor Kay is to be judge of this phase of the contest.

Because of the high class music now offered at the Coliseum, the theatre has become known as "Seattle's symphony centre." It is hoped by Manager Von Herberg to create larger musical interest in Seattle by this contest. Organizations such as the Seattle Civic orchestra have already joined the contest, and offered their program to be presented, and interest throughout the city is already attracted by the offer.

One Straus and Some Others

Personalities About Various Composers Whose Names Are Similar

THE New York Times recently gave space to the following musical history concerning the Strauses and the Strausses. The article is reprinted principally because of its adaptability for use in theatre programs and in connection with newspaper copy in which the theatre musical bill may be tied up by a small amount of ingenuity in re-writing.

Even those musically versed have been known to confuse the various composers named Straus (or Strauss). Probably there is none so base as to mix Richard Strauss, at present conducting the Philadelphia Symphony here, with Oscar Straus, composer of the lately revived "Chocolate Soldier." But now comes Artur Schnabel, a Viennese pianist who made his American début in Carnegie Hall the other day, to tell a little about the Strauses and the Strausses, and to help in a measure to straighten them out.

"There are," declares Mr. Schnabel, "three famous Straus (or Strauss) families—composers of Vienna. Oscar Straus, composer of 'The Chocolate Soldier,' is musically and racially distinguished from the others. He is a Jew, while the other Strausses are not.

"Oscar Straus, at the present moment, is living in comparative luxury in Vienna. His time he spends in the famous coffee houses of that city. He is commonly to be found there from 2 till 5 in the afternoon, and from 11 o'clock at night until some early hour in the morning. He is in receipt of royalties from practically every European city, and, of course, from America. He sits surrounded by musicians of lesser note and wealth, whom, to a degree, he supports. With him, also, much of the time, are the leading composers, librettists, actors, actresses and singers of Vienna.

"Richard Strauss, at present in this country, is of another house of Strauss, and himself and his works need no introduction to Americans.

"The third dynasty has the most members. It is that of the Waltz King and the famous conductors of the Imperial Court Orchestra of Vienna, playing actually for the Emperors of Austria. The founder of this dynasty was Johann Strauss, Sr., the famous first Waltz King. He, like all of the elder sons of this family, was the Imperial Court conductor. Johann, Sr., had three sons—Johann, Jr., Joseph and Edward. Johann, Jr., became Court conductor. He was the most famous of the three sons, having composed a series of waltzes—among them 'The Blue Danube.'"

Rothafel Acts as Judge in Band Contest

S. L. Rothafel, in charge of presentation at the New York Capitol Theatre, acted as one of the judges in a musical contest between the Band of the Philadelphia Wanamaker Store and that of the 15th Infantry of the New York Guard, held recently at the 22nd Regiment Armory, New York. Mr. Rothafel was assisted by Lieut. Santleman of the U. S. Marine Band and Patrick Conway, conductor of Conway's Band.

This new national distributing organization brings into association two men who have for many years in this industry maintained honorable, fair and clean relations with motion picture exhibitors.

WALTER E. GREENE was one of the founders of Paramount, organizer and president of Artcraft and vice-president in charge of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

F. B. WARREN was one of the initial members and vice-president in charge of distribution of the Goldwyn organization and also built the Associated Producers' distribution, of which he was general manager.

THE ONLY MOVING PICTURES

INTERNATIONAL SCORES AMAZING SCOOP

Exclusive moving pictures of the greatest news event of the entire world, the outstanding topic of interest in every home of hamlet, village, town or city—that is what International is now offering to exhibitors. Every foot of film ever taken of the late Pope Benedict XV, and interior scenes of the Vatican are exclusively owned by the International and can only be shown by exhibitors showing the International News.

HUMAN! INTIMATE! IMPRESSIVE!

Those are the adjectives that best express these remarkable pictures of the late Pope amid the glories of the Vatican. They give a vivid idea of the majestic splendor surrounding the Papal ceremonies. They include close-ups of the priceless jewels of the Church as well as the Pope's tiara; beautiful glimpses of St. Peter's and parts of the Vatican which have never before been pictured, including the gorgeous Scalia Regia and many other amazing scenes. The climax of the film shows Pope Benedict mounting the Sedia Gestatoria (the great chair of the Popes) and being borne aloft by his attendants—a scene which millions have journeyed to Rome to see, most of them in vain.

A 500 FOOT SPECIAL IN REGULAR RELEASE

If there ever was a special this is one! Remember, these are the only pictures of the kind in the world, the only pictures of the kind that ever can be obtained, and they deal with an event of world importance that everybody is talking about. They are coming to you in the regular release of the International News No. 7 as just one more instance of this news reel's progressiveness.

TWO DAYS AHEAD OF RELEASE DATE

International go-out-and-getiveness plus Universal service—that's what every International News exhibitor knows he can gamble on. Even though no news reel in the world can possibly show pictures like these, Universal realizes that the quicker an exhibitor gets this reel the quicker he can cash in on it. Therefore Universal exchanges throughout the country are being supplied with advance prints which will be ready for release two days ahead of schedule.

THE POPE EVER FILMED

A FORTUNE IF RELEASED AS SPECIAL

We don't have to tell you what a cleanup International could make if it released this as a special. You know it as well as we do. When you corner the market on a commodity you can demand and receive any price you ask for it. We have cornered the market on these pictures but we'd rather make friends than momentary big profits. International News Service means service in every sense of the word and big scoops are only a part of that service.

NO EXTRA CHARGE

These remarkable pictures are coming to you in a regular release, on the regular schedule at the regular price. It cost us thousands of dollars to procure them and thousands more dollars to rush them out ahead of schedule, and we are hoping to get it all back—in your good will. It's a big opportunity for you. Go to it and make as much money as you can. The more you make the better we shall be pleased.

ONE MORE VICTORY FOR INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITORS

Just a word to exhibitors not showing the International News. We've told you time and again of scoops and beats we have secured. We've tried to impress upon you that International News, backed by the world-wide Hearst newspaper organization, has greater facilities than anyone else to secure the news first. Here is just one more instance of what we have been telling you. You can't afford to deny your patrons this greatest of scoops. The Leather Pushers

Romance is supposed to be one of the big "draws" of a picture on the screen Combine this with action and plucky fights made by a clean-cut young fellow, humor that the director has succeeded in not overdoing, and you have a picture that is worth going far to see. Don't get the idea that this series of pictures is a serial. Each one is entirely separate from the preceding one. So if you are opposed to serials, don't let the "serial" idea prevent you from looking these over. It isn't a "highbrow" picture either, although the young hero comes from the ranks of the silk-stocking aristocracy. There is a novelty to this series, and the exhibitors claim they are looking for something novel. The proper atmosphere has been given the series and the types would be hard to beat. You've seen 'em all yourself—the hangers-on of the ringside, gambling touts, the chorus girl who lives with a chum in the "Roarin' Forties," and the Joneses and Smiths who just sit and watch the fights. "There's something about this "Leather Pushers" that gets you right away, and when you've seen the series you will understand why we're "sold" on it. That's all.

Points of Appeal.—Because the picture is understandable by the entire audience, because it is a clean series and is good for the young person to see and because it is away from the usual stuff

The Cast.—Generally the leading man is a sort of fellow that couldn't pick out the marvelous actually do in real life the marvelous things he does for the screen. Reginald Denny IS really a fighter. Or rather was, when he was in the World War. We know, because we met him. Hayden Stevenson performs a dual role. He acts as Hallida fight manager and also does some introductory stuff for the picture. A good idea. Another good actor and one who kn something about getting the laughs is "Tin Ear" Fagin, wh Charlie Ascott. Sam J. Ryan plays well the part of "Dum Carney, the rough and tumble manager Sam McVeigh app as one of the fighters who helps train the youthful aspiran the belt, in the picture

The Leather Pus

There is a good punch in each round of "The Leather Pushers," and some of them are knock-outs. Youth, action, romance and a good stiff contest figure in each round. The rounds are two reels each in length, and while each story is complete in itself there is a connection between them. The career of a gentleman prize fighter is traced from its beginning to the last fight, which gains for him the heavyweight championship. His trials and experiences are told in a fascinating and attractive manner. The stories are by H. C. Witwer and appeared originally in Collier's. With Reginald Denny in the leading role and Harry Pollard directing, some of the best fight scenes yet recorded on the screen are to be seen in "The Leather Pushers."

A thrilling fight occurs in each episode From the moment the bell rings to the last punch your attention is riveted upon the screen. The photography is clear and the direction excellent. A very clever device is used to link the episodes together This enables the exhibitor to show them consecutively or separately. There is no "continued in our next" at the end of a two-reel round, but one of the characters will step aside and, when the others are not looking, will take the audience into his confidence by telling them in plain language that the "Kid" is a good boy and all of that, but he is sure going to have a tough time if he ever meets "Hammerin' Jack," or words to that effect. It is in this way, also, that the dramas are introduced. This does away with a lot of back flashes and long-winded titles. The manager of "Kid" Roberts seeks an opportune moment to turn aside and tell the audience in his own dialect that the "Kid" is really a college boy, and all that, but he got into the fighting game to help his father and is determined to make good.

The characters are drawn from life and well contrasted. Reginald Denny has a fine screen appearance and personality. His physique is athletic and his acting likable. Hayden Stevenson plays the part of the "Pork and Bean" manager and Charlie Ascott is ideal in the role of "Tin Ear" Fagin, a "has been" and hanger-on. Sam J. Ryan presents a nice bit of character work in the part of the opposing manager The fighters who appear in the ring with Reginald Denny are all professionals, a good many of them of national reputation. The atmosphere created is realistic and the ringside scenes thrilling. Here and there a little comedy work has been inserted, just enough to relieve the tension and ease off the action.

In putting this series over you can safely promise your folks some of the most realistic fight scenes ever filmed. Tell them also that real boxers appear against the star and that their names are Sam McVey, Jack Renault, Danny Hayes, Frankie Ryan and Bob Armstrong Speak about the stories, the author and recall the fact that the series appeared in Collier's. The fights are vigorous and red-blooded, but at the same time the are clean and bring to the foreground the skill of the profession, leaving out any brutality which might appear objectio able to a certain class of patrons. "The Leather Pushers" a full of sure-fire stuff and not only are they certain to attra but will keep them repeating until all twelve rounds are f ished. And even then they may call for more

(UNIVERSAL)

In acquiring "The Leather Pushers," series of twelve two-reel subjects writ- en by H. C. Witwer, and which orig- nally appeared in Collier's Weekly, Uni- ersal displayed keen showmanship.

The first two episodes of the series, ach a complete story, were shown priv- tely at the Blackstone Hotel, Chicago, ast week, to trade and newspaper repre- entatives, sports writers and critics and ll were unanimous in their praise of the ictures. They are the real goods in reen entertainment.

The Witwer stories are being put into icture form by the Knickerbocker Photo- lay company, headed by H. L. Mess- ore. Harry Pollard directed them un- r the supervision of Mr Witwer, the thor.

Reginald Denny is featured in the ries, in the role of a young college man d football star. He is good looking ough to hold the screen without be- g a strong man, and although a splen- d athlete, he does not swagger. Helen ombs plays opposite the star and hers in the cast are Sam J Ryan, Hay- n Stevenson and Charles Ascott. As- tt plays the role of "Tin Ear Fagan," training quarter hanger-on, and fur- shes much of the comedy. Sam cVey is a trainer and many other well- own figures in sporting circles partici- te in the ring battles.

The first story concerns a young col- e man engaged to a society girl who compelled to enter the prize ring when father's finances are swept away in all Street. The first episodes are led "Round One" and "Round Two." ere are two realistic and well staged uts with as much suspense and ex- ement attached to them as in the re- tly pictured championship battles. It no effort to get interested in the pic- es. They furnish fine entertainment d should prove popular with any class dience

(Universal—Jewel—Collier's)

UNIVERSAL FILM introduces "The Leather Pushers" with three "rounds" of the fastest action we have seen in some time. A "round," as used here, means a single subject consisting of two reels. Each "round" is so constructed as to make a fairly complete subject in itself. There will be twelve "rounds" to the series, one "round" being released each month.

"The Leather Pushers," based on H. C. Witwer's stories published in Collier's, reveals the trials of a gentleman pugilist fighting his way from the "bimbo" ranks to the light heavyweight championship of the world. And, boy, he does fight, taking his share of punishment from such well-known "pugs" as Sam McVey, Bob Armstrong, and Frank Burns. Reginald Denny plays the role of the "comer," Kane Halliday, alias "Kid" Roberts.

The "Kid" does not win the coveted crown in the first few rounds—not by a long shot. He must run the entire gamut of tricky managers, financial set-backs, and the disasters resultant from ill training. The feature bouts, of course, are the main punches of each picture, but some of the sidelights of the prize-ring and the training quarters are almost as interesting. Atmospheric "shots" of the sidelines, quips from the spectators packed in appropriate titles, and the antics of the trainers and managers in their corners during exciting moments of the ring battle are sure to get a laugh.

Of course, there is a girl, who breaks her engagement with Kane because of his pugilistic career; and there is Kane's father, whose financial misfortune is the direct cause of the boy's abandonment of college and his entrance into the prize-ring. Dad needs the money to be reestablished in Wall Street, and Kane is out to get it for him. Mr. Denny is a handsome figure in evening clothes, and each "round" gives him a chance at the social whirl.

The types in the pictures also deserve a word. Hayden Stevenson as "Joe" Murphy and Sam J. Ryan as "Dummy" Carney—both rival "pork-and-bean" fight managers—and Charlie Ascott as "Tin Ear" Fagin, a trainer, fit their roles admirably.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"The Leather Pushers"

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

It has been the good fortune of Universal to produce that "something different" in offering the new series, "The Leather Pushers." In these, H. C. Witwer's popular stories of the ringside have been pictured without losing any of their individual flavor. The author's slant on this particular phase of life, his conception of the type of people who make it a success, added to the slangy jargon which has always been one of the chief delights of his readers, have been transferred to the screen with integrity.

Even the most obvious objection to such a subject has been surmounted. It does have an appeal for women as well as men. While romance and boxing may, upon first consideration, seem too far removed to be logically associated, Mr. Witwer's familiarity with all angles of the sportsmen's life makes such a combination both plausible and entertaining. Perhaps the immediate reason for its success is that the hero is a gentleman-boxer. This is a feature of which the director, Harry Pollard, has made the most. Reginald Denny, who has been chosen to play the leading part, is a handsome type, well qualified physically to impersonate the champion, but still possessed of gentle features and a graceful manner, so that his feminine admirers will be many. "Kid Roberts's" weakness for silk dressing robes and pretty ladies and the ridicule that is forthcoming from others because of this, is a delicious touch that appears and reappears—but not too often.

Mr. Denny's accomplishments as a boxer occasioned much praise at the opening showing. Several well-known "leather punchers" as Sam McVey, Jack Renault, Danny Hayes, Frankie Ryan and Bob Armstrong, make ringside scenes a great success, and the selection of types for fans is all that could be desired.

The series consists of twelve two-reelers, each of which is known as a round. The first three, upon which this review is based, show the circumstances that bring Kid Roberts to the ring, his first three difficult fights, the dispute among the managers and his first two unsuccessful love affairs. Each round is a complete chapter

A MONEY-MAGNET

NEW YORK'S VERDICT:

"'The Ruling Passion' is an answer to the question of what kind of films does the public want. There simply isn't any one who can do the things that Mr. Arliss does with the same touch of perfection. He is in a class by himself. * * * Certainly it is not like the things he has done before, yet he brings to the role the same matchless playing and magnetic personality."—NEW YORK EVENING MAIL.

"The Ruling Passion" is a comedy with a new and delightful plot. It is George Arliss' newest and most surprising achievement. The setting and photography leaving nothing to be desired. It is a winning feature film."—NEW YORK MORNING TELEGRAPH.

"'The Ruling Passion' tells a lively story, in which comedy and more serious drama are happily blended."—NEW YORK EVENING TELEGRAM.

"This adaptation of Earl Derr Biggers' story, 'Idle Hands,' is an engaging comedy, lighter of touch than that of any of Arliss's preceding vehicles."—NEW YORK EVENING SUN.

"'The Ruling Passion' is the best of George Arliss's pictures. Here is a film with an excellent story, which holds the interest, appeals to one's sympathy and amuses, and is acted by a cast which ably supports the expert Mr. Arliss. The role which Mr. Arliss undertakes is unlike those in which he is familiarly known, and is something of a lark for him, as it will be for those wise enough to see him in it."—NEW YORK EVENING GLOBE.

"It's an entertaining comedy, with George Arliss in a role that reveals an unsuspected flair for humor."—NEW YORK EVENING JOURNAL.

"The sinister George Arliss of 'The Devil' and the keenly contriving George Arliss of 'Disraeli' give way to the more genial and simply human George Arliss of 'The Ruling Passion.' It's a human story and humanly done by Mr. Arliss."—NEW YORK TIMES.

"George Arliss's acting in the screen play, 'The Ruling Passion,' is of a high order. It is distinctive and finely drawn, in a photoplay of real human quality. As a comedian Mr. Arliss is a delight."—NEW YORK MORNING WORLD.

"It is one of the uniquely delightful comedies of the winter, raising Mr. Arliss to the pinnacle of the screen. Chuckles and continuous chortles were the order of the day. Mr. Arliss carries out the delicious entertainment with the most feathery of touches, so that one declines to believe, despite the evidence, that it is twenty years since he essayed straight comedy."—NEW YORK HERALD.

"'The Ruling Passion' is a bright comedy of outdoors and George Arliss is a comedian again. Anything Arliss does is interesting, but as a comedian, he appeals deeply. He acts where many merely behave."—NEW YORK AMERICAN.

"George Arliss is such a perfect actor that everything he does seems to be of the utmost importance. Mr. Arliss isn't a shiek, nor a political schemer, nor a spy, nor even a devil. He is a rich man who is advised by everyone to retire when he doesn't want to."—NEW YORK TRIBUNE

"THE BRIDE'S PLAY" has a tremendous, feminine appeal. It pictures two great bridal scenes—the first, in the days of knights and armor when men often took their wives from rival suitors at the point of the sword or the lance—the second, a wedding of today, with all the romantic, picturesque marriage rites, that have been handed down from time immemorial.

Harrison's Reports, issue of January 21, says:

"'The Call of Home' may safely be classed among the few one hundred per cent pictures.

"A death-dealing flood shown near the end of the picture is startlingly realistic; it is easily the best of its kind ever seen in pictures.

"An exceptionally fine drama in which the all important element of human interest is conspicuous in practically every scene."

Motion Picture News, issue of January 28, says:

"Well sustained drama with excellent flood scenes, exceptionally well done; compares favorably with anything that has reached the screen. Vivid and thrilling. Holds the suspense up to the final moment. Enacted by all-star cast, even the 'bits' are admirably executed. A sincerely produced picture with no artificial note to mar it."

"A group of flood scenes that are as fine as anything of the sort ever done on the screen before. Excitement and rapt wonder. Realistic mad torrent completely flooding a large valley and destroying everything."

AS TO THE LITTLE MINISTER

Vitagraph Film of Barrie's Story Recently Shown an Entirely New Production

Our attention has been directed to the review of the Vitagraph picture entitled "The Little Minister," which appeared Dec. 28, 1921.

We are informed by the Vitagraph Company of America that some years ago it produced a picture entitled "The Little Minister," and that this picture was released and exhibited extensively and successfully throughout the United States. Within the last month or two the Vitagraph Company produced and released for exhibition an entirely new picture entitled "The Little Minister," in which the stars and the entire cast were entirely different from its first production of this name. We were in error in indicating that Vitagraph is at the present time causing to be exhibited the old picture entitled "The Little Minister," which it made some years ago.

The original picture, while successfully exhibited at the time it was issued, was not deemed suitable for re-exhibition at this time and for that reason, among others, the more recent production has been completed as an entirely new creation and picture and has been reelased for exhibition by Vitagraph.

We were also in error in indicating that the Vitagraph Company had disposed of any rights of any kind or character with reference to its picture entitled "The Little Minister" to any other company in the business. We were also mistaken in attributing to Vitagraph any effort to trade on the name or reputation of any other person or company connected with any other motion picture entitled "The Little Minister."

The two pictures are entirely separate and distinct from one another and each was made without reference to the other. We are very glad to correct the erroneous impression which might be drawn from the article of December 28, 1921, reviewing Vitagraph's picture entitled "The Little Minister."

"THE LITTLE MINISTER"
(Vitagraph)

Excellent Production Made From Barrie's Classic

JAMES M. BARRIE'S celebrated story (not the play) has been made into a feature production by Vitagraph, and it behooves every exhibitor to book it because of its excellent qualities. Some of those who have been showmen over a score of years will doubtless remember the three-reeler which Vitagraph made from the same story. With the advance in technical equipment—with an advance in the art of translating a story for the screen, the producers have done extremely well by this charming document which is entitled to classical honors. The lovable figure of Lady Babbie, the quaint character of Gavin Dishart, the little minister, and the picturesque natives of Thrums—these are all given life and color here.

Not even the stickler for truths will be able to find any flaw in this production. From a technical viewpoint, the offering is richly decorated. The thatched cottages, the simple interiors, the charming backgrounds—these are all caught. You become an actual participant in this fragrant story of old-world sentiment and romance. You follow the adventure of Gavin with the deepest interest, even though you have been made familiar with the plot through the story or play. It carries the deepest sort of heart interest. There is sympathy for nearly every character. And when the soldiers surround the little village in order to compel the simple weavers to obey the laws of the country, you are stimulated with desire to be with them and help them in some way. The minister tells the natives to find a way to peace. But they rebel because of the insistent demands of the "gypsy girl," Babbie, who eventually proves to be the ward of a neighborly baron.

There is rich incident offered when Gavin upbraids the wicked Rob Dow during church services. And you almost catch the spiritual inspiration as the young preacher finds a champion in his tormentor. The story revolves around this little circular town of Thrums. The walls are penetrated and you see a simple folk, deeply religious and eager to live their lives in their own way. It is a charming moment when Lady Babbie runs to the home of Nannie to discover whether her beloved is dead. She is betrothed to her guardian, but she willingly elopes with the minister, and they are married according to gypsy [illegible] being a gypsy camp [illegible]ramatic note, as Gavin jumps into [illegible]disappointed baron. Story by J. M. Barrie. Scenario by C. Graham Baker. Directed by David Smith. Photographed by Steven Smith.

The Vitagraph version of J. M. Barrie's quaint story, "The Little Minister," has James Morrison in the title role and Alice Calhoun as the Lady Babbie. The scenario was prepared by C. Graham Baker, who has followed the original story very closely and woven the choicest incidents into the photo-play. It is a picture of rare charm, carefully produced and thoughtfully acted.

When we first heard rumors of "The Little Minister" being brought to the screen again, we hoped that some one would have the good sense to cast James Morrison in the title role. It was left for Vitagraph to realize that he fits into the part perfectly. He has the Little Minister's stature, his sincerity and his boyishly emotional moods. He is so good we feel like shouting "We told you so!" Alice Calhoun does nicely, too, with the role of Babbie, although she lacks her roguishness and spontaneity. She is best when the necessities of the role allow her to subside and be a wee bit sad.

William McCall makes a splendid Rob Dow. He is burly, exacting and a little simple. The part of Nanny is touchingly played by Dorothea Wolbert, while Dr. McQueen, Lord Rintoul, Taammas Whamond and all the other delightful characters appear in revue and look and act their parts. A word must be said for little Richard Daniels, who is seen as Micah Dow. He is a freckle-faced, snub-nosed youngster who has a world of expression in his funny little face, and he is charming every moment he is in evidence.

The whimsical Scotch story is too well known to be repeated at length. Almost every one knows the tale of the Little Minister, who forgets his dignity, his church and his responsibilities when he falls in love with the gypsy Egyptian girl who turns out to be the famous Lord Rintoul's ward. It is a delightful story, full of quaint characters, quaint humor and sweet romance. It is the sort of story one can read over and over again without growing tired.

The settings are picturesque and the costumes tight, uncomfortable looking and amusing, but quite in line with the times. The picture should prove a popular attraction, for the story is worth while and the picture well made.

ALICE CALHOUN IN

THE LITTLE MINISTER
(VITAGRAPH)

This is a most delightful and interest holding picturization of James M. Barrie's famous story of the same name, presented with splendid acting, beautiful photography, and direction that will scarcely permit of improvement. Great audience picture. Directed by David Smith.

Alice Calhoun and Richard Daniels in "The Little Minister" (Vitagraph)

One of the best pictures yet produced in Vitagraph studios is "The Little Minister" with Alice Calhoun in the part of "Lady Babbie," one of the most lovable characters made known to us by the facile pen of James M. Barrie. And if the charming Miss Calhoun gives us nothing more than her "Lady Babbie" she has set a high mark for her older and more experienced screen sisters to aim at. It is undoubtedly the best work yet done by this popular young screen star, and augurs well for her future.

The entire picture is most pleasing. Barrie's famous story has been most closely adhered to in the writing of the script, and to David Smith should go great credit for his able direction. The story is woven for the most part about the humble life of the poor weavers in the little Scottish village of Thrums.

The atmosphere of the little hamlet has been maintained throughout. The quaint houses with their thatched rooves, the costuming of the characters, the cosmannerisms and customs portrayed on the screen promise to make this picturization one that will meet with nothing but approval from all those who enjoy clean, wholesome drama, free from the taint of the eternal triangle.

In spite of the simplicity of the Barrie story the picture has several big and tense scenes. The terrific rain storm at the gypsy camp, the wedding of "Lady Babbie" and Gavin Dishart in that same rain storm, and the river scene where the little minister rescues Lord Rintoul and Rob Dow loses his life, furnish some thrilling situations in which no opportunity for realism is lost.

The story is well cast with James Morrison as the little minister, Henry Hebert as Lord Rintoul, William McCall as Rob Dow, and Richard Daniels as his Micah Dow.

And in the latter Vitagraph has discovered, or rather uncovered, a young prodigy who will well bear watching. The youngster has more freckles to the square inch than Wesley Barry ever thought of wearing, and he is a natural actor. He is in several of the big scenes and portrays his important part with a stage presence rare in a child. He apparently doesn't know that there is a camera within a thousand miles. His work is all business and he is a real actor, real in fact, that we can stand a lot more of little Richard Daniels.

All in all, "The Little Minister" is one of the most enjoyable screen entertainments of the season, and should prove to be a great audience picture.

SYNOPSIS

To the little Scotch village of Thrums comes the newly ordained minister, Gavin Dishart. Little Babbie, the gypsy girl, makes fun of him, but when the soldiers attack the town she is protected by him. To shield her from the soldiers he pretends she is his wife. This constitutes marriage in their country. Babbie is in reality Lady Babbie, betrothed of Lord Rintoul. The latter sets the date for their marriage, but Babbie runs away. In a terrific rain storm Lord Rintoul breaks a leg and is being carried away by the raging river. The Little Minister swims out to him and rescues him. He and Babbie confess their love and are married in the church.

Practically every essential of good photodrama is in The Little Minister. Vitagraph has selected a splendid cast, from the charming Alice Calhoun to tiny Richard Daniels.

All of the quaintness and peculiar charm of the little Scotch town of Thrums pervade the picture, and not only is this manifest in the settings and costuming, but even to the extras, there is evidence of careful picking of types.

Sir James M. Barrie's famous story has been screened with unwavering faith to the original theme and all the good fortunes that may befall an author's work picturized, have attended it. It stands out as unique in that its interest begins in the first two hundred feet and in this respect good direction and splendid editing are combined to make a motion picture that should have wide popularity.

There are thrills and there is heart interest. The love motive is delightful but never "gushy," and its climax is swift and pleasant.

The flight of "Lady Babbie" to her sweetheart, when the report comes to her that he has been killed is the beginning of a sequence in which one of the wettest rainstorms in motion picture history has been screened. There is nothing puny about this storm. The players are drenched in it, and throughout this deluge the strongest dramatic action of the story is revealed:

Each new picture in which she is cast sees her in a new light of stellar achievement.

James Morrison is the "Little Minister." Few could so well characterize the very young dominie of the small Scotch hamlet as has Morrison. Not merely is he diminutive, but he registers the minister's gentle kindliness and [illegible] fearlessness incomparably well.

William McCall contributes a fin[illegible] in his part as "Rob Dow," and of [illegible] said he owns a better understandi[illegible] screen player than many grown ac[illegible]sciousness whatever. And whate[illegible] he possesses already.

It is a mighty good picture.

"The Little Minister"
Vitagraph Offers Charming Production of Barrie's Famous Story, Starring Alice Calhoun

Reviewed by Mary [illegible]

Preserving much of the delightful Barrie sentiment, Vitagraph's version of "The Little Minister" will give pleasure to many who have enjoyed the story. The thousands of others, too, who have not read the book may find real entertainment in the film, as the pictured story has the appeal of the classic, the characteristics that will not only keep the old friends but make many new ones. For two very good reasons, it should succeed—it is clean and it is different.

The love story of Babbie and Gavin Dishart, interpreted with fine imagination by Alice Calhoun and James Morrison, is admirable for its purity and sincerity. The elusive, mischievous, and altogether lovable Babbie is a charming creature, as played by Miss Calhoun. Possibly a stronger contrast between her standards and the environment of Gavin, the man of grace and piety, who first sermonizes against her and then falls in love with her, could have been effected in the beginning. James Morrison, however, drives home this important characterization, with fervor. The old Scotch villagers are rare types. Here and there a Barrie touch might have been added to accentuate their personal eccentricities, contributing to the comedy value of the whole.

A splendid effect at the close is the rain scene. The torrential deluge that follows immediately upon the Gypsy wedding ceremony and nearly succeeds in separating the lovers for all time, is a great melodramatic splash.

VOL. XXV FEBRUARY 4, 1922 No. 7

14½%

CONSIDERABLE discussion has immediately followed last week's editorial in which we gave government tax figures to show that up to December first and for six months back the distributing business was only off 1% and the theatre business only 14½% as compared with the same six months period a year ago.

It has been pointed out to us that 14½% doesn't begin to tell the plight of theatres in certain sections.

And, secondly, that out of the gross theatre admissions—lumped together in the government tax reports—we don't segregate picture theatre admissions from legitimate, vaudeville, cabaret and general amusements.

We anticipated, very clearly we thought, these criticisms.

If you take two six months periods, year by year—it isn't necessary to segregate at all. We must assume that unless the legitimate or vaudeville or cabaret business has cut very heavily into pictures—that the comparisons hold good for pictures.

And when we say heavily we mean by millions of dollars.

But, again, if it is true—that the legitimate or vaudeville or cabaret or any other amusement has weaned the public away from pictures and to such an extent, then there's something decidedly wrong with pictures or picture theatres or admissions or all three factors.

We are inclined to think that our figures are about right; and that the people in this business are in just the same boat as every other business man in this country—namely, they are being compelled to put back into their businesses, in order to hold them together, the profits they made in good times.

Only, in this business, we are much better off than others in other lines.

It's a case of good sense, hard work, patience—and the bank roll that some have been wise enough to lay by.

Good Goods to Sell

WE have seen some exceptional pictures recently: "Tol'able David," "The Little Minister"—both the Vitagraph and Famous Players versions, "Hail the Woman," "Turn to the Right," "The Sin Flood," "The Silent Call," "Miss Lulu Bett," "Foolish Wives."

We mention but a few here; and we know of others to be released shortly.

Some outstanding successes in the State Rights field must be included: "Where Is My Wandering Boy," "Ten Nights in a Barroom," "School Days" and "Why Girls Leave Home."

These pictures—the fact that the market right now has better pictures, and better box-office pictures—better by far than ever before in the writer's memory—spells optimism more strongly than anything any one can say.

Granted that rentals are right—and here's a problem we don't know how to solve except by percentage playing (the right kind, not necessarily any present kind) there remains but one and a very big factor:

Exploitation

Exploitation is the basis of this business. It is fully half of it. A good picture without the exploitation it deserves is only a poor picture. An exhibitor without exploitation resources is as handicapped as a fisherman without bait. Exploitation—as it will vary between good and poor—will sway the box-office receipts of this business by millions and millions of dollars each year. That's a fact!

A very large percentage of the population of this country will want to see these and our other "better pictures." That's certain. Whether they will or not will depends upon—exploitation.

Motion Picture News will do all it can—with its Exhibitors Service Bureau. We wish it occupied the entire book. And we'll try and get the advertiser—that will be a millennium—to use his advertising pages to the same important end.

Namely, exhibitor exploitation aids!

Exploitation will spell the success of the business this year.

The Dollar Sign

THE newspaper announcements that Mr. Hays is to receive a salary of $150,000 were speedily followed by a yarn that his life was to be insured for a mere matter of $2,000,000.

All of which will suggest to the politicians everywhere new schemes for taxation and renewed efforts for censor boards with all the income and patronage they entail.

And which will further convince the public mind in general that this business is a financial circus. . . . About the first step to be taken in the campaign of constructive publicity so sadly and so immediately needed is one that will take the dollar sign off our industrial door.

And to replace it with the modest truth about the lowly financial size of this industry as compared with the giant industries of the world.

Or, better still, to have the public mind gradually grasp the fact that our chief concern is not dollars but the responsible control of a certain agent whose real greatness consists in its ability to sway the minds and morals of one-tenth of all this country's population every day.

William Fox

THE anniversary, this week, of the Fox Film Corporation brings out the fact that William Fox has been in this business for a matter of eighteen years.

And a mighty interesting career it has been. One could pretty well write the story of the film business and miss nothing of its romantic revolutions by writing the story of William Fox. He has been constantly in the thick an thin of it.

Today his abilities and his indomitable in dustry are expressed better than we can tel them by the size and solidity of the Fox Film Corporation with its large, modern and com plete plant in New York and its well-establishe domestic and foreign branches.

He is a fighter, an independent first, last an foremost; and this industry may never know just how much it owes to William Fox it freedom from monopoly. In every tendency i this dangerous and futile direction you coul always be sure of one opposing force—and tha was William Fox. You can still be as sure.

He is a producer—in the true sense of th word; and nothing illustrates this better tha the facts about the production of "Over th Hill." It was he alone who dug up this buried treasure of a theme. He read and reread an even acted the story till a director saw it as h did. From that point on and as you see it toda every bit of it expresses his showman's intuitio and guiding hand.

We hope for—and there will be—more pic tures like "Over the Hill" from William Fox

Patience!

SPEAKING of stars' salaries—as we did th other week—a film executive sends us practical commentary, to wit:

A super-salary, meaning a salary as high as th clouds, serves only to ruin the star and enrich th government.

The star, let us say, gets a salary so high that th exhibitor cannot, at least does not, make money. H loses money. So does the distributing concern. Bot are sore, with all the soreness that losing money alway excites. The star, after reaching an enviable positio goes tumbling swiftly down—and down.

The star alone received a lot out of the super-salar contract. But the government steps in and takes mos of it.

So in the wind-up the star got less than half the sa ary and loses a good-will worth millions. And th distributor and exhibitor lose heavily.

Only the government wins.

It may seem patriotic to foster super-salaries. Bu it destroys business and prosperity, from which a taxes come.

How much better that the star should receive a sa ary so that all, including the star, may make a profit— and the star, in addition, may continue to build u good-will!

Film Distributors Hold Important Meeting

Film Boards of Trade Inaugurated; Washington Authorities Modify Film Requirements

THREE matters of importance to film distributors received the attention of the distributors' division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry at a meeting held Friday, January 20, at the Hotel Claridge, New York, presided over by P. L. Waters, chairman of the division.

The first concerned was the inauguration of Film Boards of Trade in nineteen distribution centers of the East and Central States, and the establishment of the Hoy Reporting Service in each of these centers. Arrangements were perfected whereby this will be consummated quickly.

Eleven companies entered into the agreements necessary to nationalize the Hoy Service. They were: Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.; Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Fox Film Corporation, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, Metro Pictures Corporation, Pathe Exchanges, Inc.; Pioneer Film Corporation, R-C Pictures Corporation, the Selznick Corporation, Universal Film Manufacturing Company, W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Other companies are expected to join the movement shortly.

The second matter under consideration was the exchange housing situation in Washington, D. C. Jack S. Connolly, Washington representative of the National Association, reported that the District of Columbia Commissioners had complied with the request that the owners of buildings now occupied by exchanges in Washington be given until March 3rd to comply with existing fire prevention regulations.

The third subject of discussion was the requirement of the District of Columbia Commissioners that film containers used in Washington exchanges be corrugated on top and bottom, and that the metal of such containers shall be at least 25 U. S. gauge. The original requirement was that these containers be fibre-lined. At the request, however, of the National Association and the Washington Exchange Managers' Association, the latter requirement has been rescinded, it is announced, thereby saving the industry at least $40,000 a year, as this drastic requirement would have necessitated the purchase of an entirely new supply of film containers for Washington, it is explained. Under the amended requirement all film containers now in use in Washington, which are of twenty-five gauge metal, can be utilized to meet the requirements of the district authorities by having the tops and bottoms corrugated, it was pointed out. This can be done with a metal die or stamp.

Mr. Connolly reported at the meeting that a hearing would be held shortly on the National Film Theft Bill, introduced a few days ago by Congressman Walsh, of Massachusetts, on behalf of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Among those who attended the meeting were: P. L. Waters, president of Triangle Film Corporation; R. A. White, general sales manager of Fox Film Corporation; S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; G. L. Hess, secretary and general counsel of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; S. E. Morris, vice-president and general manager of the Selznick Corporation; E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.; Charles R. Rogers, general manager of R-C Pictures Corporation; P. N. Brinch, general sales manager of W. W. Hodkinson Corporation; A. I. Siegel, representing John M. Quinn, general manager of Vitagraph, Inc.; F. V. Chamberlain, general service manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; F. H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association, and C. B. Hoy, proprietor of the Hoy Reporting Service.

Fairbanks & Pickford Buy Jesse Hampton Studios

A LATE dispatch from Los Angeles advises that Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford have purchased the Jesse D. Hampton studios for a consideration of $150,000. The new owners will take formal possession of the studios on February 1.

Douglas Fairbanks' next subject has been temporarily titled "The Spirit of Chivalry." Allan Dwan will direct the production. Mr. Fairbanks and Miss Pickford leave Los Angeles for New York on Friday of this week, January 27, Miss Pickford to attend the Wilkinson trial and Mr. Fairbanks to arrange a production program in conference with Hiram Abrams of United Artists.

Nine Incorporations in New York State

NINE companies incorporated in the motion picture industry in New York state during the past week, the company having the largest capitalization being the Elmwood of Penn Yan, capitalized at $50,000, and located at Penn Yan. The directors are H. C. Morse, W. M. Patterson and C. B. Briggs, all residents of Penn Yan.

Other companies incorporating during the week were: E. R. Champion Distributing Company, $10,000; E. R. Champion, Elizabeth Huber, Joseph Forster, New York City; Variety Sales Corporation, $10,000, M. R. Weinberg, William Rakoff, New York; Reuben Weinberg, Brooklyn; Third Avenue Motion Picture Theatres Company Inc., and the Highclass Motion Picture Theatres Company, each capitalized at $20,000, and having as directors, G. W. and Ruth Anson and Harry Frankel, of New York City; Projection Rooms, Inc., $5,000, Dave and Marie Narcey, William Kamean, New York; Joseph M. Schenck Productions, $10,000, and Talmadge Producing Corporation, $10,000, with N. M. and Joseph M. Schenck and Bert Nayfack, New York City; Morstan, Inc., $500, H. C. O'Donnell, L. E. McMahon, M. V. Phelan, New York.

Plea for Federal Investigation Meets Rebuff

A petition for a Congressional investigation of the motion-picture industry submitted to a sub-committee of the Senate Judiciary Committee at Washington on Wednesday, January 25th, met with a decidedly cool reception at the hands of the sub-committee members present.

The sponsors for the recommendation were Canon William S. Chase of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Senator Myers of Montana. Senators Shortridge of California and Ashurst of Arizona, members of the sub-committee, sharply criticized the proposed resolution asking for the Congressional investigation as contrary to the Constitutional right of free expression.

Canon Chase, who frequently appears before Congressional committees in behalf of reform measures, made his customary biased attack on the motion-picture industry.

Judging from the questions directed at Canon Chase by Senators Shortridge and Ashurst, they are very much opposed to any proposal that would seek to censor news matters in newspapers or pictures on the screen. The consensus of opinion was that the move for an investigation by Congress would progress no further.

U. S. Supreme Court Rejects Appeal of Operators

A blow was dealt union picketing last week in a decision handed down by the United States Supreme Court dealing with a case in Kansas City. Chief Justice Taft announced the dismissal for want of jurisdiction of the application of the Kansas City Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 170, the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, and others to bring before the court an appeal from the Missouri Supreme Court.

Bronx Exhibitors Install Officers for 1922

Distinguished by the presence of county officials and members of the bench, the tenth annual installation of officers and banquet of the Bronx Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association was held on Monday evening of this week, January 23rd, at Daubert's Club Rooms, in the Bronx, New York City. This organization represents in its membership forty-six theatres of the Borough of the Bronx.

Judge Harry Robetzek served as master of ceremonies at the installation and also acted as toastmaster at the banquet. Judge Robetzek introduced John J. Whitman as president; John C. Bolte as vice-president; Henry Cole, executive secretary; Henry Zuckman, treasurer, and Mr. Wilson as sergeant-at-arms. The trustees are E. Falter, M. Sussman and I. Rothman. This term marks the tenth year of Mr. Wittman's incumbency in the presidency.

The speakers included Judge Robetzek, District Attorney Edward Glennon, Judge William E. Morris, Surrogate George Schultz, County Clerk of the Bronx Robert L. Moran, Municipal Court Justice Peter A. Sheils, Assistant District Attorney William Quigley, Chief Electrical Inspector for the Bronx Frank Fitzpatrick, John Hyland, superintendent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and Charles McLaughlin, attorney for the exhibitors' organization.

Censorship for pictures was made the object of vigorous criticism, Justices Robetzek and Schultz especially emphasizing the injustice of subjecting the motion picture to a restriction not imposed on the spoken drama. Judge Sheils warned especially against the "locked door" in picture theatres, and Attorney McLaughlin seconded the Judge's remarks by stating that he would not, except under protest, defend the cause of any member in court charged with having "locked doors" during his performances.

John Hyland, of the S. P. C. C., told of the improved relations between his organization and the Bronx exhibitors. He stated how in the last ten years cases brought against theatre owners for illegal admission of minors had dropped from about forty per year to sixteen, of which latter only eight had resulted in convictions during the year 1921, he declared. This improvement he credited entirely to the ready co-operation being received from the vast majority of theatre owners in supporting the spirit and letter of the law.

Bill Introduced to Amend N. Y. Censorship Law

A BILL was introduced last Monday night at Albany by Assemblyman W. W. Campbell, which, if it passes, will amend the New York state motion picture censorship law, by making mandatory, instead of permissive as at present, the issuance of a permit by the commission for pictures intended solely for educational, charitable and religious purposes.

Action is Expected from N. Y. Convention

Convention in February to Argue Pertinent Questions; Record Attendance Expected

ON Wednesday, Feb. 15, the New York State exhibitors assembled in annual convention in Albany will take up the estion of securing better shipping facil-es for films. The entire day will be given er to various discussions with the prob-le adoption of several resolutions. The estion of uniform contracts, as well as e adjustment of film prices and the out-ing of the attitude which the State asso-tion will take on various legislative bills, e all due to be thrashed out.

During the last few days Charles L. Reilly, of New York, president of the otion Picture Theatre Owners of the ate; Samuel I. Berman, executive secre-y, and W. H. Linton, treasurer, have n in Albany for the purpose of going er every detail incidental to the big gath-ng, and which now appears likely to be-me a record-breaker in the way of at-dance. The Theatre Owners' Chamber Commerce of New York has notified O. Stacy, secretary of the Albany Theat-al Managers' Association, that it will vel on a special train, exclusively for its mbers, from New York to Albany on the ening day of the convention. The New York F. I. L. M. Club is also engaging extra Pullmans, which will be attached to regular trains out of New York on the morning of February 14.

There is one thing, though, that exhibitors have got to do within the next few days, and that is to make their hotel reservations. While two hundred or more reservations have already been made, there are several other hundreds who are simply neglecting to do this. A letter to Samuel Suckno, in care of the Albany theatre, will take care of the reservation.

During the last few days all arrangements have been practically completed for the convention. On arriving in Albany the delegates should go at once to the Hotel Ten Eyck, and to the information desk on the mezzanine floor, where they will receive their badges, hotel reservations and any information desired. The afternoon of the first day will be given over to a meeting of the executive committee and the announcement of sub-committees.

In connection with the motion picture ball on the night of February 15 it has been decided not to announce any stars who will appear at the ball until two or three days before. This is to avoid a possible disappointment to the public at the last moment.

The committee of women which is looking after arrangements for the entertainment and comfort of all of their sex attending the convention has completed its program. On the afternoon of the opening day there is to be a sightseeing trip for women around Albany, including the state buildings, with tea served at the Hotel Ten Eyck at 5 o'clock. Proctor's Grand will entertain the women that night. The Albany Chamber of Commerce will tender the women a luncheon at the Hotel Ten Eyck on the second day of the convention.

Federal Bureau Producing Educational Films

Work Done on Cooperative Basis by Bureaus of Mines and Commerce and U. S. Industries

HOW motion pictures are being made by the Federal Government for the dissemination at home and abroad information concerning America's in-dstries is described in a statement re-ved from the U. S. Bureau of Mines and U. S. Bureau of Foreign and Domes-i Commerce. The statement, under the tion "Educational Cooperative Motion Pictures," describes the bureau's work as follows:

1. Educational motion pictures are pro-ced by the Bureau of Mines and the Bu-u of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, cooperation with agencies representative various phases of the mineral industry, w materials of all kinds, and general nufacturing. These pictures are intend-ed for the promotion of a wider public owledge of the industry represented, and not permitted to be shown where an mission fee is charged. The films are ned without cost other than transporta-n charges for showing before educa-ional institutions, community meetings, ofessional and technical societies and ilar public associations, both in this ntry and abroad.

2. The cost of producing the films is rely met by the cooperating agency. e representatives of the Government agency advises as to the type of film that would be most useful for educational purposes, serves as a consultant in the preparation of the scenario, and in the final arrangement of the film. After the complet-

"3. When the Bureau representative approaches a company or association for the purpose of obtaining its cooperation, it is desired to inform them, as nearly as possible, the exact expense involved in producing such a film, preferably a definite footage cost. This method has been used for the past two years and has proved satisfactory. The character of these pictures will vary greatly, such as underground work in the mines, interiors of large steel mills, factories of all kinds, etc.

"4. A motion picture company which desires to submit a competitive cost price per foot should have at its disposal at least 40 Wohl (or similar) lights, six spot lights, at least three thousand feet of No. 6 stage cable and all necessary equipment for the installation of such lighting equipment, such as transformers, fuse boxes, etc. In many cases in the past it has been found necessary to set up at least two thousand feet from the source of electrical supply.

"5. In estimating a cost price for the completed film it should be understood that only the amount of the film in the finished story is to be paid for, irrespective of how much has been exposed in photographing it. It should be understood that the titles will figure in on the final footage. In addition to the cost per foot for the completed film, it is understood that all traveling, subsistence and other incidental expenses incurred by the cameraman will be paid in addition to the footage cost. Also a sum will be paid for the services of the cameraman for each day that he is away from his headquarters. This sum should

"6. The Bureau representative who directs the production of the films will be in complete charge of all operations, such as directing the scenes, cutting the film and arrangement of the titles. No payment will be made by the cooperating agency on a film until the entire production is completed, and the film approved by the Director of the Bureau under the direction of which the picture is made.

"7. In estimating the cost of footage the same figure will be used, if it be a one, two, three or four reel picture.

"8. Further information regarding the production of these films may be obtained from M. F. Leopold, Safety Engineer, U. S. Bureau of Mines, Washington, D. C."

Sarah Bernhardt Invited to Film Celebration

Leading stars, directors and authors, representing the entire film profession in Hollywood, sent a cablegram Sunday night to Sarah Bernhardt in Paris, inviting her to come to America as their guest of honor in a nation-wide celebration of the tenth anniversary of the first big feature picture featuring a stage star.

The cablegram, which was addressed to the famous actress at the Sarah Bernhardt Theatre, Paris, follows:

"We as representatives of American motion picture art invite you to visit America to be honor guest in nation-wide celebration of tenth anniversary of feature motion picture. This invitation is in recognition of fact that you were first as you have been greatest artist to lend your genius to establish motion pictures as art. Your example ten years ago in creating 'Queen Elizabeth,' first feature picture, gave this new art impetus which has carried it to its position as most important entertainment of world. Your appearance in 'Queen Elizabeth' was inspiration to motion pictures as your appearance on speaking stage always has been inspiration to drama."

"The Rosary" Big Success at Frisco Premiere

"Your splendid editorial on 'The Rosary,' produced by Selig & Rork, arrested our attention, with the result that we had the world's premier showing at our Imperial theatre on January 23rd. The box office verified your good judgment and ours. 'The Rosary' is splendidly cast and superbly directed and is proving a high class entertainment for all classes."

Seek Lower Electric Light Rates in New York

The New York Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, at its meeting last Tuesday decided to take action in connection with the existing electric light rates, now prevalent in its territory.

President William Brandt, in appointing a special committee for the purpose of petitioning the Public Service Commission to reduce the rates, pointed out the following facts:

That the use of electricity in picture theatres is one of its greatest expenses; that such theatres use more electric displays, advertising for marquees and signs than any other industry; that the very nature of the business requires several projection machines and spotlights in each theatre, together with electric decorations, electric fans, electric exhausts, electric cleaning devices, motors for organs, etc., making the motion picture theatre one of the most important consumers of electricity.

Mr. Brandt further declared that the rates in some instances had nearly doubled, and that they were working a tremendous hardship on an industry which was laboring under a severe business depression.

There are six companies directly involved. They are the New York Edison, United Electric Illuminating Company, Brooklyn Edison, Queens Edison, Public Service Company of New Jersey, and Richmond Light and Railroad Company.

Statistics have been gathered with a view to showing that the price of coal, the cost of supplies and material, and the salaries of all employees of these companies have been materially decreased, so that a reduction in electric rates would not work a hardship upon these companies.

It is expected, in response to the petition from the committee of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, that a public hearing will shortly be had by the Public Service Commission.

Warner Plans Broadway House for Independents

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by the Warner Brothers' headquarters that Harry M. Warner is planning the construction of a motion picture theatre on Broadway, New York. The site is now under consideration, and the house will be built between Forty-second and Forty-ninth streets, according to the announcement. The cost of the theatre will be in excess of $1,000,000, it is declared. The building of the proposed cinema edifice is declared to be due to the fact that independent motion picture producers cannot get a Broadway run with their production, "due to the monopoly of the theatres now in that vicinity," says the Warner Brothers statement. With the completion of the plans for the structure, it is planned to give all those organizations with meritorious attractions an opportunity to present their product to a Broadway audience, it is announced.

New York Not Final Judg Say Papers of Country

A recently published statement b Arthur S. Kane to the effect that Ne York is not to be looked upon as a cr terion for film values, has been taken up b many important newspapers of the cour try as a significant commentary on pres ent day film conditions.

The Pittsburgh Gazette Times in print ing the Kane statement in full says tha the New York ideal is not national an that the big city is often wrong as regard the taste of the rest of the country Among many other newspapers which re printed this analysis of motion pictur standards were: The Sacramento Bee, th Seattle Times, the Portland Journal, th Detroit Free Press, the Union (N. J.) Dis patch, the Philadelphia Ledger, the Port land Oregonian, the Atlanta American the Denver Post, the Oakland Tribune, th Sacramento Union, the Baltimore Sun.

In his article Mr. Kane asked the ques tion, "Does New York set the taste fo the rest of the great American republic i motion pictures?" He answers it b pointing out that a Broadway success i no criterion for the results to be obtaine afterward in thousands of America towns radically different from the heter ogeniously populated and tremendous provincial Bagdad of the East. From hi own experience as sponsor for the Charle Ray productions Mr. Kane stated that th star's policy of appealing to the America outside of the big centers is a great facto in his success.

The Reader Has His Say

Objections to Central Exchange Idea

January 18, 1922.

Motion Picture News,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen: In the news dated January 7th, 1922, I have just read a letter submitted by B. F. Heustes, of the Community Theatre, at Harbor Beach, Mich. In this letter Mr. Heustes expresses a few of his ideas and goes on to say that there ought to be only one film exchange in the state to take care of all the business, instead of twenty or thirty, thereby eliminating expense of managers for all these exchanges, cut down clerical forces and also the number of film salesmen.

Permit me to say a few words which may be of interest to Mr. Heustes, exhibitors, exchange managers and salesmen.

It would be impossible for one central exchange to take care of all the business in this State. The manager of such an exchange would require as many assistants and clerks as are now employed by all the exchanges. As far as I can see it would not remove censorship nor cut expenses in the least. If one salesman were to call on the exhibitor and try to sell all the features and comedies released in Michigan he would be so bewildered and burdened with his load of press sheets and cards which every salesman has to carry that he would have to stay two or three days in a town to try and tell the exhibitor what he has to sell and when he got through neither one would know a great deal and, I believe, that one salesman's expense account would be equally as large as the several who now make the same territory for the different exchanges.

I do agree with Mr. Heustes that there are a lot of pictures on the market that might better die a natural death, but why buy the inferior pictures? There are any number of good pictures and I think it the duty of every exhibitor to make a study of the current releases and when the salesmen call you are prepared.

Competition is the life of trade. I certainly would feel sorry for the exhibitor if there were only one exchange in the state. They could ask any price they wanted for a picture and you could buy or not buy. As for service, it couldn't be better. Of course, I am speaking from what I know of the Michigan exchanges. Do you think we would get such good service from one exchange? I say No. Conditions in this state are better than in some of the other states.

Let me say to all exhibitors, treat the salesman courteously whether you wish to buy or not. It doesn't cost you anything and he wont go away with a sore spot and ready to tell the first fellow he meets that such an exhibitor is HARD BOILED, etc. Treat them as you would like to be treated.

Michigan has a very efficient lot of managers and clerks. Get acquainted at the exchanges where you do business, but buy from the salesman, that's what he's on the road for.

Maxine Theatre,
Croswell, Mich.

"Stop Shooting the Bull and Come to Earth"

Motion Picture News,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sirs: I have read, with interest, your numerous articles, "Seeing It Through," contributed by various exhibitors; also all of the various editorials by Mr. Johnston, and I have profited by all of those articles very much.

In the face of fierce competition, (this kind of competition where they let them in free), we are "Seeing It Through" to the extent that our patronage has increased sixty per cent. in the past month.

I have noticed in the past several months in nearly all of those "Seeing It Through" articles and Mr. Johnston's editorials that the plea is for the exhibitor to cut expenses, never a word do I remember reading about the producer cutting his expenses.

Several years ago a noted comedian was reported to be getting a salary of one million dollars per year. Just recently a certain film has been released that the producer said, "Cost their company one million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars."

Mr. Hays is reported to get one hundred and fifty thousand dollars per year.

All of those things have happened with gobs of others equally extravagant. You know that.

In connection with this there is a little story that I would like to tell you. Yesterday a banker-business man was taken sick in our audience and I invited him up to my office to lie down until he was better. In the course of his conversation he mentioned this million dollar salary, the extravagance and waste of this industry and finally came to the Hays salary. To use his exact expression: "This makes me sick—this wanton wasting of money, those enormous salaries, which the people must pay in the long run."

Don't you think he is right? Does not the audience pay for this foolishness in the long run? I think it was P. T. Barnum that said, "There is one born every minute." Now that might have been all right in Barnum's day, but they are not born that fast now. Audiences are as wise as owls. They know practically as much about a program as does the exhibitor. They are buying productions, not stars or "movies." A production does not have to be lavish with a million spent on it for them to buy. They want good stories, well produced and acted. I will cite you "Over The Hill" for example.

Several years ago there was a wild scramble for stars and it hasn't exactly stopped yet. Some gink arrived at the conclusion that if he would corral all of the stars he could dominate this industry. All he lacked of corralling all of the stars wasn't much, but did he dominate the industry? I want to make this prediction right now, "There will never be any one, or any corporation, dominate the Motion Picture Industry." Henry, with his billion dollar suit and his one hundred forty-one million cash in the bank, could not make an impression.

We have gobs and gobs of stars, but when we want a large crowd in our theatre do we put on a star to get that crowd? I should say not. All people are wise to the fact that a picture with a bunch of stars in it has about nothing else to recommend it.

Another thing I would like to say, "Of all of the mis-advertised industries that were ever formed I'll bet the motion picture industry heads the list. We read of a picture that the producer says, "Cost a million" of "Million Dollar Salaries." Enormous prices paid to stars and for some five-reelers. It is all right for all of us to "shoot the bull" in our own trade magazines, but for God's sake let's keep this shooting the bull out of the daily newspapers. You know there are some people, some, mind you I said, that believe the press agents. You will find an awfully small per cent. of these among exhibitors that read trade journals.

This letter no doubt to you is a series of brainstorms, but I hope I have left the impression that producers must come back to earth, cut their expenses along with the exhibitors. Let's have honest advertising and honest critics' reports and above all let's quit "shooting the bull" about those million dollar productions, million dollar salaries and stuff like that.

There are some productions that cost that, but it is getting so that anytime one releases a five-reeler it is put on the market as "A Million Dollar Production."

Wishing the News continued success, I am,

Yours truly,
C. R. Sullivan,
Amarillo, Texas.

An Outsider Points the Path for the Industry

(The following letter is from the head of a commercial film to a prominent exhibitor. It is another strong argument for a national move by the exhibitor and industry in general toward a wide-awake-to-danger campaign to fight the industry's battles.)

Dear Mr. ——: Have just witnessed something here that may be of more than passing interest to you, that is the success of a movement to close the theatres Sunday. About 3 or 4 months ago a Bob

Industry Asked to Assist Disabled Soldiers

A plea, addressed to the motion picture industry, to spread some sunshine among the ranks of disabled soldiers now in hospitals as a result of wounds and other forms of disability sustained while serving under the country's flag, was received by Motion Picture News from E. V. Hanegan, Knights of Columbus Secretary at the National Sanatorium, Johnson City, Tenn. Mr. Hanegan is evidently contributing his own mite of sunshine among the maimed and the sick and is willing to meet the industry half-way in securing additional help for "his boys." Mr. Hanegan's letter follows in full:

"Editor, Motion Picture News,
"729 Seventh Avenue.

"Dear Sir:

"In my charge is the entertainment needs of the hospital attached to this big institution containing over 1,000 disabled world war veterans and every minute of the 16 to 18 hours daily that I spend in rendering the 300 odd hospital patients, a hundred and one forms of service, I learn how much more they require and how much more they have earned from us. Therefore, without further preamble, I am appealing to you to get a few of the big men in your trade together in order that these splendid boys may get an opportunity of seeing their production masterpieces.

"I personally screen over a hundred movie shows on the walls of the various hospital wards with my portable projector and forget my fatigue in the realization of how much more entertainment the bedridden boys need.

"The trade has a splendid opportunity to do a really big thing for the lads worn in service for our flag, though I know they have done much already. The need I speak of is vital, a good movie heartening these kids more than medicine.

"I will gladly pay transportation both ways on film sent me as I want these boys to see the big stuff that presently, they can only read about.

"With every good wish,
"Yours sincerely,
"E. V. Hanegan,
"K. of C. Secretary, Hospital, National Sanatorium."

Moss Files Revised Plans for New House in N. Y.

B. S. Moss has filed new revised plans for a theatre in the Bronx at Tremont and Webster avenues, New York City. This structure has been held up for a year on account of the high cost of construction, and the erection of a modern magnificent playhouse will be started at once, it is announced. The seating capacity will be 2,600. The cost is to be close to a million dollars, it is declared. The house is expected to be completed in time for opening about Thanksgiving Day.

Film Theft Unmasked; Buffalo Men Sentenced

A FILM theft plot involving the attempted piracy and sale of motion picture prints which would have represented a loss of at least $500,000 to the companies involved, has been thwarted by the Film Theft Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, according to word from the National Association's offices. The film was to have been shipped to Japan, Mexico and South America, thus spoiling the market for the rightful owners of the pictures, it is declared.

The details of the plot and its frustration were divulged following the arrest, in Portland, Me., of Leon Gorman, a distributor's agent, with headquarters in that city, who is charged with attempting to steal 1,000 reels of motion picture film which were found in his possession and which belonged to several of the important film companies.

William Pearson, 1233 South Harding avenue, Buffalo, a former salesman for United Artists, and an alleged member of a band of international film thieves, was sentenced in Buffalo last week to from three to seven years at hard labor in Auburn prison when he pleaded guilty to a charge of grand larceny, first degree. Pearson is alleged to have stolen films from the United Artists' Company and shipped them to Mexico and South America. He was arrested in Chicago, where he gave $25,000 bail and waived extradition.

Morris Taitus, former shipping clerk at the Buffalo United Artists' exchange, has pleaded guilty to a charge of grand larceny, first degree, and is scheduled to be sentenced Friday, January 27. Taitus is alleged to have shipped several stolen films from Buffalo. The market value of the stolen reels is said to be $1,000,000.

Julius Stern, Sick, Delays Trip to the West Coast

Julius Stern, president of Century Film Corporation, who as second vice-president of Universal is Carl Laemmle's personal representative at Universal City, has been ill for the past week with an attack of grippe which has delayed his return to the Coast where he is expected to carry out the plans for a big 1922 production campaign both for Universal and Century.

"Must Reduce Prices"

PRICES must be reduced if moving picture houses are to be made profitable to their owners, is the opinion Joe Hopp, of Rosenfield, Hopp & Comny, who recently put his theory into actice and quadrupled the business of e of his theatres by making a drastic cut admission prices.

Mr. Hopp made the following statement support of his contention that prices ould come down:

"In Rock Island and immediate vicini, the big industrial plants closed about ne months ago and are still closed, with indication of when they will resume eration. It is estimated that this has rown out of work about five thousand ead winners in Rock Island, nearly all whom, or in equal number, are still unployed. Our company operates two uses in Rock Island, one on a high grade sis, the other upon an ordinary basis. ith a continuous losing business here we d an economic problem to meet.

"In our second house, seating about ven hundred, we tried so-called super fn features, a combination program consting of the feature film and musical bloid, and other things, each requiring a admission charge ranging from twenty-ght cents to fifty cents and we continued flop in business.

"We were seriously considering closing te house, but finally decided to try one re thing, which we had been considerig for some time. We made a radical op in price admission, charging adult ad child the same. We have now entered or third week of this experiment and as a result we must agree with those who in ne with the keeping of the times, reduced ices of admission. We have thus far fund that approximately four times as ny people attend that theatre and our receipts are more than double, and we nw find ourselves a little across the profit ne.

"In our opinion exhibitors during the posperous war period were going too fst and now exhibitors must do their part t help bring things back to a pre-war bsis. Another, and perhaps the most imptant angle, is consideration of the fact tht the man unemployed cannot take his vfe or sweetheart to a show and pay seenty cents or more for a pair of tickets, although he can spend twenty or thirty cnts for a pair. The head of the family ca take his wife and children at ten or fifeen cents a piece to see a movie show ocasionally, where he cannot go at all at hher prices. He, too, must have his recrtion, and exhibitors hoping to win popur favor should adjust their business to met the exigencies of the present industrial situation.

"Admission prices will have to come dwn, and with this, of course, the cost of oeration, of which the film service plays th greater part."

Word from Prizma, Inc., advises that the Patent Office interference, obtained by A. Hernandez-Mejia in 1918 with Kelley Patent No. 1,259,411, owned by Prizma, Inc., has been finally decided in favor of William V. D. Kelley, technical adviser of Prizma, Inc., by the unanimous decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, written by Mr. Chief Justice Smyth in patent appeal No. 1,429.

The Kelley patent involved was issued March 12th, 1918, and A. Hernandez-Mejia subsequently demanded and obtained an interference. The first decision of the Examiner of Interferences awarded part of the claims to Kelley and part to Hernandez-Mejia, which on appeal by Kelley to the Board of Examiners in Chief was reversed and all claims awarded to Kelley, according to Prizma. This decicision of the Board of Examiners in Chief was later affirmed by the Commissioner of Patents upon appeal by Hernandez-Mejia, and has now been affirmed by the Court of Appeals upon further appeal by Hernandez-Mejia.

The subject matter in controversy, it is explained, relates to methods of making double-coated positive motion picture film in natural colors, and the product itself, and the decision now finally establishes the priority of one of the patents under which Prizma Master Pictures in Color are made.

Stanley Theatre Celebrates First Anniversary

The first anniversary of the Stanley theatre, erected by the Stanley Company of America at 19th and Market Streets, Philadelphia, will be celebrated the week of January 30. The opening of this $2,000,000 theatre a year ago marked a new and prosperous epoch for business on Market Street west of Fifteenth.

Prior to the selection of the large lot at the Southwest corner of Nineteenth and Market Streets as the site for the new Stanley theatre, that section of Market Street was practically deserted save for a few large wholesale warehouses, little stores, automobile places and such business as required locations near the river. Today there is a remarkable change to be seen and this influx of business is increasing each week.

And He Walked Out

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—(Special.)—When Senator Clayton R. Lusk informed the New York State Senate last Monday night that it had been invited to an illustrated talk in the Assembly Chamber on the New York port development, Senator James J. Walker interrupted:

"Wait a minute," said Senator Walker. "Have the pictures been censored. It is well to know whether or not the law has been complied with."

"Yes, the pictures have been censored" replied Senator Lusk.

"Then they will not be worth looking at." Senator Walker remarked.

Rupert Hughes Flays Censorship

"Anyone who is willing to be a censor is not fit to be one," said Rupert Hughes, well known author and scenarioist, in an address on the "Future of the Motion Picture" on Thursday evening at the Bushwick High School, Brooklyn.

Mr. Hughes characterized the film censorship boards as "sausage machines" and said that it is eminently unfair that film productions, on which months of painstaking effort have been spent by authors, actors and directors, are obliged in several states to be ground through these machines before the public itself is allowed to see the result of this serious, intelligent and painstaking effort.

"The motion picture studios are really laboratories where people work as earnestly as in many other laboratories in the world," said Mr. Hughes. "These people are not gypsies. They are earnest, conscientious people, working hard and exercising self-denial and strict attention to their art. The comedians, or clowns of the screen, work like chemists to get the exact formula which will produce an explosion of laughter. Chaplin, Harold Lloyd and other notable clowns are in reality great dramatic artists, all working just as seriously and earnestly as any other professional workers in the world."

"Pennsylvania has spent millions of dollars on censorship, but I defy anyone to go to Philadelphia and find any cleaner pictures there than that are shown elsewhere, or any less depravity and crime than is found elsewhere. Certainly the motion pictures cannot be blamed for crimes and evils that have been existing since the creation of the world."

Mr. Hughes' address was one of a series of lectures that are being given in the public schools of New York through an arrangement between the Board of Education and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Other speakers in the near future will be D. W. Griffith and Paul H. Cromelin.

Testimonial Luncheon for Robt. Levy of Chicago

Motion picture theatre managers of Chicago gave a testimonial luncheon to Robert Levy at the Illinois Athletic Club last week. Mr. Levy has just been appointed by President Harding as United States Marshall of the Northern District of Illinois with headquarters in Chicago. It is the first time that the motion picture business has been honored to such an extent in this section of the country.

BUILDING BUSINESS

What Unity of Effort Actually Accomplishes | Go-to-Theatre Week at Rockford, Ill. | Adapting the Dollar Day Idea to Pictures

THE "Go to the Theatre Week" or "Go to the Movies Week" idea, originating in the Middle West last year, and explained several times in various issues of the NEWS in descriptions of the individual campaigns, is being given a trial this week at Rockford, Ill.

The Rockford Theatre Managers' Association, made up of the powers that be in the ten theatres of the city, picture, vaudeville and legitimate houses, have banded together, secured the co-operation of the local newspapers, appropriated an advertising fund large enough to do things and started out to make theatrical history for the city.

The "Go to the Theatre" week idea itself probably does not need explanation, and if it does a glance at the page cut at the right, a reproduction of the first page of a special section running in the Sunday edition of the Rockford Morning Star, under date of January 22nd, will accomplish this more effectually than anything that can be related in text, but giving approval of the plan, explaining the impetus which it is bound to give to theatre going and the general results that can be obtained by using it, is something that probably can be chronicled to further advantage.

Advantages of Cooperation

The Rockford campaign seems to be one of the best organized and best planned "Go to the Theatre Weeks" yet staged. It shows to especial advantage the wide co-operation that can be obtained from newspapers, when advertising appropriations are used in a proper manner and the "flash" that can be obtained when exhibitors get together in an attempt to increase business, make new friends for their theatres and greater friends of the newspapers.

Just how great a stimulus to theatre going the Rockford campaign will bring about it is not possible at this time to state, but that such effort is sure to be reflected in a greatly increased attendance has been proven a dozen times, and is as well a foregone conclusion. There is another angle to the idea that according to the reports from other cities, has as pleasing effects as the immediate returns in cash during the "theatre week." People who have never gone to the theatre regularly, who have been theatre goers and have gotten out of the habit, are made permanent patrons to not only one theatre, but several.

This is especially true if the programs are built up with care and strangers to the theatre are "sold" with the idea that there is real entertainment delivered, instead as many people think, quite the contrary.

A Lesson in Cooperation from Rockford, Ill.

THIS page and the one opposite are devoted to selling the idea of "Go to the Theatre Week" or "Movie Week," as it has been termed when put over at a number of Middle West cities during the past year or so.

No less than a dozen cities have tried the scheme and in every instance the results obtained not only in immediate profits but in general interest concerning theatrical entertainment, have been beyond the most enthusiastic expectations.

The News is indebted to Frank E. Maffioli, manager of the Strand theatre, Rockford, Ill., for the information given relative to the campaign which the Rockford Managers' Association is carrying on this week.

Special Newspaper Section

One of the features of the Rockford "Go to the Theatre Week" campaign was a five-page special section in the Rockford Morning Star. The section opened with the self-explanatory page spread shown on the opposite page. The reader will note that the complete bill of each of the ten Rockford theatres is given in full and that there is a slogan that sets a definite goal in the "Go at Least Three Times" line.

Page three opened with a 6-inch press story on the bill at the Palace theatre, and carried a cut of Chauncey Olcott in addition to a story about the engagement of Mr. Alcott's play at the Rockford. There were also press notices for the programs at the Columbia and Strand. A special story announced the closing of a theatre ticket contest that had been a feature of the "Go to the Theatre Week" advance campaign.

The rest of the page was taken up with displays. The Orpheum theatre had a 14-inch by four column display on "Molly O," the Midway three columns by 18 inches, billing "His Back Against the Wall" and a popular girl contest the Midway is running during the month of February. The last column carried displays by the Palace, Columbia, Dreamland, Colonial and Star theatres, giving the change of bills at these houses for the full week.

Merchants Cooperate

Number four was a co-operative page. Fourteen of Rockford's merchants divided the page under a "Go to Theatre Week" head across the top, except a five by seven inch space in the center where the bills at each of the ten theatres were listed again.

Page five was devoted very largely to text and cuts explaining about the lighting of sets for motion pictures. Searchlights, Sun-Arc lamps, floor spots, Kleigs, portable spots, overhead spots, etc., were illustrated and fully explained. Some Beulah Dix "Answers to Movie Fans" stuff completed the page. This of course was a "syndicate" page, but it tied up very well with the campaign and sold the general idea of pictures excellently.

The NEWS is indebted to Frank E. Maffioli, manager of the Strand theatre, for a copy of the special section from which this article has been written.

Vaudeville

OF the speaking stage perhaps no distinctive form of art provides more for the entertainment of millions than Vaudeville. Based on the supposition that "variety is the spice of life" these offerings are now to be considered as a necessary part of the daily amusement bill of fare of every progressive city. It is safe to say that they offer the most popular form of high grade entertainment on the speaking stage. From the most skillful exponent of the jugglers art, the high priests of magic from th far east, to the gymnast who holds you spellbound with expositions of muscular skill,—this stage presents them all. Then the rollicking comedian brushes away that tired feeling in a gale of laughter or in the songs of yesterday or today you find enjoyment. Maybe it is a short playlet that you like best, with some noted star whose ability carries you away, or again the dance which presents a picture that brings to mind other days and far away countries, or the breath of spring. All of this is vaudeville and all of it you may enjoy at any time.

IF it were within your power to hark back—to become man or woman of the bygone days, to step back into the early ages of civilization and the theater really means to all peoples. You would then know the importance and part which the theater has played in the lives of man and in the moulding of nations. Powerful as a factor for great good the stage has not only served to furnish amusement and recreation, but has been at all times of untold educational value, presenting the lesson of yesterday to those of today.

Since the day of the early Greek theater when the efforts of philosophers presented to the multitudes, up and through the middle ages when a different type of civilization existed, and the theater taught the lessons of both state and church, the stage has played its part in the upbuilding of civilization. Then came the strolling player the minstrel, to furnish amusement and recreation in going from place to place, offering their bills to amuse and instruct. And so on up to the time of Shakespeare, whose immortal works written for the players of that day serve us now on our great stage and in our schools.

The lives and history of men and nations, since the earliest ages have been unfolded before our eyes and from the words, the writings, of the learned men of those days, through the lips of the actor of today we are able to enjoy what if history turned back through time. And now its our great see the pages of history turned back through time. And now its our great theaters, with our finished actors, and with the brains and mechanics of the world at the command of the men whose lives are dedicated to the building up of this great force, why will say that the theater does not play an important part in the daily life of man. And when it does not play its part proclaim that amusement and recreation must be a part of the daily life if we are to keep fit, to keep pace with the rapid advancement of science and when a great nation such as ours commends the theaters for their part under the stress of conditions such as have but recently prevailed,—then indeed must the theater be a necessary part of civilization, and worthy of your consideration.

Motion Pictures

A wonderful new force is aboard in the land—an influence which stimulates the imagination, which brings healthy excitement and the keenest pleasure and which educates—such is the motion picture. Do you realize the growth of this wonderful new art the possibilities which it has. Through the eyes of the motion picture camera you may travel the world over, you may see the wonders of nature, and learn of all peoples, you may be present at the inauguration of a president, or at work or play with the greatest living celebrities, you may witness events in the affairs of nations which make the world's history,—all of this is your privilege. On the screen you will see stars of the first magnitude acting for you tales which have made history, or presenting the offerings of the most brilliant writers of this day and age. Through pantomine you may watch the antics of comedians who make the tears of laughter chase gleefully away. Did you ever stop to think what the motion pictures really offer to you.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

The arrival of a new film peddler is reported by D. Arnold Kohn, of Pioneer, who was passing around the cigars this week to celebrate the advent of the stork at his home.

L. R. Nelson is the latest addition to Metro's Chicago exchange staff of salesmen and will cover the Illinois territory. Mr. Nelson formerly was connected with Select and has a wide acquaintance in this district.

Sales Manager Eichenlaub states that First National Week, February 18th-25th, promises to be one of the most successful ever arranged by that company in the Chicago district and that more than one hundred theatres already have set in First National pictures for the solid week.

Manager Barbee, of Barbee's Loop theatre, reports that the recent cut in admission prices from forty-five cents and war tax to twenty-five cents including war tax, has caused a marked increase in matinee business and that night trade is beginning to pick up. The three weeks' trial at lower prices has convinced him that he made a wise move and that as the public becomes educated to the fact that notwithstanding the smaller admission high class pictures are being shown, night business will also pick up materially.

R. C. Seery has been spending the last ten days in New York. It is understood that he looked over a number of pictures while there with a view to obtaining some additional releases for the Illinois territory.

Sig Friedlob, formerly connected with the Chicago office of Universal, has returned from the south, where he has been working for some months, to take position as salesman for Pioneer. Manager Silton has assigned him to the Indiana territory.

Associated First National's Chicago and St. Louis offices have completed arrangements whereby the southern Illinois territory, heretofore handled out of Chicago, hereafter will be covered by the St. Louis office. The Chicago territory will include Quincy, Jacksonville, Springfield, Decatur, Mattoon, Charleston and Paris, territory south of these cities being that covered out of St. Louis.

"Peacock Alley" and "Turn to the Right" are rapidly being booked by leading theatres of the Chicago territory, according to Manager Rozelle, of Metro's Chicago exchange, who states that a big advertising campaign, including the posting of twenty-four sheets on one hundred and fifty-six boards in Chicago and large newspaper space will be used to back up these features. "Peacock Alley" is scheduled to open at the Randolph about February 4th for an indefinite run and will be followed by "Turn to the Right." Both pictures will then be shown in the Lubliner & Trinz houses and other theatres outside the loop.

Charles F. House, who recently resigned as manager of Ascher's Midway theatre at Rockford, Illinois, to accept an offer to go to the West Coast, has been induced by Ascher Brothers to remain in Chicago and look after their interests at the Terminal theatre in Albany Park. In addition to being a full-fledged theatre manager, Mr. House is an accomplished organist, that being his means of "breaking into" the theatre game. He became associated with Ascher Brothers just six years ago, and it is a noteworthy coincidence that his first engagement was for the opening of the Terminal theatre where he presided at the organ. In 1919, Nathan Ascher consented to Mr. House's taking over the management of the Midway theatre in Rockford, where he has remained ever since with unusual success.

Manager Ed. Silton, of Pioneer's Chicago exchange, has booked "Shadows of Conscience" for the entire Harry Gramp Circuit and for the Dee Robinson houses, where it will open at an early date. Pioneer is handling this Russell Productions' seven reel super feature for Illinois and Indiana. Many film men have declared it one of the best box office pictures released on the independent market this year.

The Palace theatre, the new house which is rapidly nearing completion at South Bend, Ind., has announced a policy of vaudeville and pictures, the theatre having been leased for the Orpheum Circuit.

Walter Blaufuss, well-known Chicago music director and composer, has been engaged by Ascher Bros. to take charge of the orchestra and other musical features at the Roosevelt. Mr. Blaufuss gained national fame as the composer of "Out of the Shadows," "Your Eyes Have Told Me So," "My Isle of Golden Dreams" and many other popular songs.

Will M. Hight, popular publicity expert and veteran theatrical man, is another new member of the Ascher organization, having recently been appointed manager of the Adelphia theatre. Nate Ascher is back at his desk after a flying trip to New York.

Herman Stern, district manager for Universal, is at the Michael Reese Hospital following an operation for infection of the neck, and while on the highway to recovery, it may be several weeks before he returns to his office.

Wallerstein Bros., who purchased the Garden, Michigan City, Ind., from Ezra Rhodes about one year ago, have about completed wrecking the old house preparatory to erecting a new theatre, which will be named the Tivoli. They expect the work of construction to move from now on with some speed.

Manager Lambiotte, of the Temple theatre, Mishawaka, Ind., is another moving picture man who is reported seriously indisposed and is confined to the hospital.

Manager Bernstein, of the Starland, Idle Hour and Dreamland theatres of Michigan City, Ind., was in Chicago this week conferring with Publicity Director Hill, of Universal, on extensive plans for the advertising and exploitation campaign for "Once to Every Woman," "Reputation," "Outside the Law" and "No Woman Knows," which are to run in his houses at an early date. Earl Salisbury, managing director of Shillings' Musical Hall, and the Opera House, Valparaiso, was another out-of-town visitor who was working with the Universal publicity department on exploitation campaigns for "No Woman Knows" and "Reputation.'

L. M. Rubens, president of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners, is planning a four months vacation abroad and will sail from New York on January 30. Before returning Mr. Rubens expects to visit France, Germany and other continental European countries, as well as Palestine and Egypt.

A notable array of Goldwyn executives from the home office and exchanges gathered in Chicago this week for their annual midwinter sales conference. The meetings were held at the Congress Hotel, starting Monday. Among those present were Samuel Goldwyn, Alfred Weiss, F. A. Gudger and Abraham Lehr, of New York, and Arthur Lucas, Atlanta; J. A. Koerpel, Boston; George A. Hickey, Buffalo; Cecil E. Maberry, Chicago; Jack Stewart, Cincinnati; W. K. Kimes, Cleveland; L. B. Remy, Dallas; Ben Fish, Denver; J. E. Flynn, Detroit; W. E. Troug, Kansas City; M. Wolf, Los Angeles; Newton Davis, Minneapolis; S. Eckman, Jr., New York; Felix Mendelssohn, Philadelphia; Nat Barach, Pittsburgh; G. C. Parsons, San Francisco, Jack Weil, St. Louis; W. E. Banford, Seattle; W. A. Busch, Washington; J. W. Pope, Jr., New Orleans; H. S. Lorch, Omaha; and Chas. Knickerbocker, Salt Lake City.

Pete Smith, publicity man for Marshall Neilan, has been in Chicago for several days in advance of the arrival of Wesley Barry, the popular boy star who will arrive the end of this week to make personal appearance at Balaban & Katz houses.

Slow music for Paramount bowlers. Their challenge to the world was promptly accepted by Universal's "Secret Four," who met and defeated them in a series of three games on some fast alleys. The score was "Secret Four" 1830 and Paramount 1741. The Universal quartet now announces that they are open for games with any exchange team in the territory. "Come on you slickers" is their slogan.

Chicago theatre owners who have been opposed to the daylight saving law in Chicago, as it is injurious to theatre attendance during the summer months, are pleased over the action of the city council judiciary committee which has unanimously recommended that the period of daylight saving be cut from seven to five months. The committee recommended an ordinance which will put Chicago on a daylight saving basis from the last Sunday in April until the last Sunday in September. Last year daylight saving began on the last Sunday in March and ended on the last Sunday in October.

Universal's Chicago exchange, represented by L. W. Alexander, manager of the short subject department, W. L. Hill, director of publicity, and J. J. Sampson, was host to a number of Chicago newspaper men and others at a luncheon at the Blackstone last week, at which some of the series of two reel "Leather Pushers" were screened. The sporting editors, who were present, were particularly interested in the prize ring scenes and were generous in their praise of the action and reality of these episodes. Among those present were Virginia Dale, Chicago Journal; Genevieve Harris, Chicago Post; J. J. Moroney, Chicago Post; Howard Mann, Sporting Editor, Chicago Post; Ed Smith, Sporting Editor, Chicago American; M. F. Baldwin, Editor, Moving Picture Age; Dudley Grant Hays, Director of Visual Education, Chicago; J. A. Power, Collier's National Weekly; W. F. Ford, Collier's National Weekly; Alderman O. H. Olson, Chairman of Chicago Athletic Commission; and David Rotoff, Sporting Editor, Chicago Daily News.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FIRST NATIONAL

Molly O—
Good box office attraction which gives general satisfaction. Plot a little disconnected but characterizations fine and funny. Good drawing card for any audience. (Middle West.)

Played to good crowds for two weeks. A real box office attraction which offers unlimited opportunity for exploitation. (Middle West.)

A fine picture which brought dandy business. (West.)

Love's Redemption—
Norma Talmadge gained new friends in this picture, which did a good business for the week. (Middle West.)

Fairly pleasing but not up to Norma Talmadge's standard. (Middle West.)

Did good business, but patrons commented on weak story. (East.)

The Lotus Eater—
Exceptionally good picture. Business only fair. (East.)

Trust Your Wife—
Fair picture and fair business. (East.)

All for a Woman—
An excellent production which flopped at the box office because it went over their heads. (East.)

Wife Against Wife—
Plenty of room for inexpensive exploitation with this one, which drew well the first week. (Middle West.)

Wedding Bells—
Light comedy of high class kind. Not strong in plot or acting, but pleasing throughout. Our patrons liked it and we had a fair week. (Middle West.)

R. S. V. P.—
Really, one of Ray's best; women liked it especially. (Middle West.)

My Boy—
Very entertaining picture and featuring Jackie Coogan in advertising brought in good business. (Middle West.)

Stardust—
Went simply great in connection with star's personal appearance. Receipts great. (East.)

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Rent Free—

Only fair picture which Wallace Reid's popularity helped to put over. Played to fair business. (Middle West.)

Enchantment—
The picture did a good week's business despite a week of unusually cold weather. (Middle West.)

An elaborately staged picture on an amusing theme which went over well because of its pronounced feminine appeal. (East.)

Don't Tell Everything—

Had capacity business with this picture during its entire run. (West.)

Fairly good picture. It went over right well. (South.)

Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford—
Good stuff. They liked it. They came in droves to see it. A good week now when good weeks are scarce. (Middle West.)

Couldn't stand a week; good picture but no star to attract. (Middle West.)

Pleasing picture and business fair. (East.)

Under the Lash—
Gloria Swanson is always a good bet with us. They liked her in this picture, but they didn't crowd the house to see her. (Middle West.)

The Lost Romance—
Tolerably good picture. Business about as usual. (South.)

The Great Impersonation—
Good picture but business fair. Slack trade due to general conditions as picture was very well received by audiences. (Middle West.)

Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm—
On third showing did good business among children and women. General business poor. Just broke even. (Middle West.)

The Gilded Lily—
Second run showing brought fair business. (Middle West.)

Just Around the Corner—
Fine production which brought good business. (West.)

The Little Minister—
A very good picture indeed. Business good. (South.)

The Last Payment—
Good business on this picture which was considered fine entertainment. (West.)

FOX

Queen of Sheba—
Held up for three weeks, which speaks well for any production these days. (Middle West.)

On second week's showing business only fair. Did not in any way compare with first week's business. But one house seems to do big business each week here. (Middle West.)

Opened to excellent business, held up fairly well for week. Held for another week. (East.)

Went over big. Good for two weeks. Can't be exploited too much. (Middle West.)

The Devil Within—
Fair sea picture. Plenty of thrills and action. (Middle West.)

Over the Hill—
Finished two weeks' extra run and still went strong. (East.)

Thunderclap—
One of the best things Fox has turned out. Excellent business. (Middle West.)

The Chauffeur—
Went over very nicely. (South.)

Connecticut Yankee—
Second week to good business. (West.)

METRO

Peacock Alley—
Well liked. Receipts pleasing. (East.)

Fighting Mad—
Patrons enjoyed this picture, which is full of action. Capacity at every performance. (East.)

The Conquering Power—
One of the best pictures we have had for a long time. They liked it and receipts showed up well. (South.)

The Hunch—
Mediocre picture and business to match. (East.)

UNIVERSAL

Sure Fire—
Western feature that seemed well received. Business, however, just fair. (Middle West.)

Across the Deadline—
A thriller. Big business among downtowners who are looking for vicarious excitement. (Middle West.)

Fairly good picture. Business about average. (West.)

The Fire Eater—
Good both as regards entertainment and box office value. (West.)

Cheated Hearts—
Did average business. Story fairly entertaining. (East.)

GOLDWYN

Grand Larceny—
An excellent handling of the triangle subject, with an unusual twist at the end. Good box office attraction. (Middle West.)

Pretty good picture. Business about as usual. (West.)

The Ace of Hearts—
Fairly good feature. Average business. (West.)

Doubling for Romeo—
The best of the Will Rogers series of pictures. Business below usual, which is never very heavy. (East.)

Poverty of Riches—
An average picture. We played it with an elaborate prologue, a grand opera soloist and an elaborate setting, and had a nice week. (Middle West.)

VITAGRAPH

The Little Minister—
We played this with "Don't Tell Everything" (Paramount) and the great majority of our audience who spoke of the show liked "The Little Minister" better than the other concurrent feature. (East.)

Had wonderful financial results on this. Patrons said it was better than Paramount. (Middle West.)

This picture will get you more favorable comments from your better class of patrons than most of the super specials. By far the best Alice Calhoun ever done. (Middle West.)

Production and acting very good. Big business on this picture. (East.)

Excellent picture. Good satisfaction. Fair business. Patronized largely by women and did not draw men or children to any extent. (Middle West.)

Good production. Average business. (Middle West.)

A great picture which went over well. (Middle West.)

A Guilty Conscience—
Fine program feature that should draw with any clientele. Business not very good. (Middle West.)

REALART

Morals—
A first rate attraction, better than many of the star pictures which played with it during the same week. (Middle West.)

Went across big. Receipts first class. (East.)

HODKINSON

Rip Van Winkle—
Beautiful production, artistically done from start to finish. Had big crowds all week. Appealed as much if not more to grown-ups than to children. Everyone delighted with this type of production. (Middle West.)

Jane Eyre—
Artistic and faithful picturization of famous novel which appealed strongly to high class audience. Did average business. (Middle West.)

R-C PICTURES

The Lure of Jade—
Good picture. Seems to be especially an attraction for women. Good business. (Middle West.)

The Duke of Chimney Butte—

PATHE

A Sailor-Made Man—
One of the most ambitious of Lloyd's comedies, and up to his usual standard. (Middle West.)

WID GUNNING, INC.

What Do Men Want—
Right catchy title, incited the curiosity, afforded a good tie-up with the dailies and brought fairly good business. (South.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Iron Trail—
Went over big. Northern pictures are liked here. (South.)

SELZNICK

Shadows of the Sea—
Well made picture. Business good. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

The Woman Untamed—
Fair picture and fair business. (West.)

The reproduction of the window display, shown above, proving that small-town exhibitors if they are live wires, need no exploitation lessons from their city brethren.

The story of the way John W. Cramer put over "The Old Oaken Bucket" at Gillespie, Ill., is especially worth while since it should be an inspiration to the showmen of the small towns.

"Old Oaken Bucket" Exploitation Goes Big

JOHN W. CRAMER, exploiteer for the Pert theatre, Gillespie, Ill., gives us the details of his recent exploitation campaign on "The Old Oaken Bucket."

The campaign began two weeks in advance of the showing with a series of teaser slides, originated by Mr. Cramer with copy taken from the press book. The slides were run one at a time, with the orchestra playing, "The Old Oaken Bucket," as each slide came on but with no explanation as to what the stunt was all about until the last slide was used.

Lobby decorations were next in order. A lot of "buckets" were cut from old cardboard and painted and lettered until they looked like the real thing. These were hung in the lobby and foyer.

Mr. Cramer painted special posters for the lobby frames and during the showing of the film used a soloist at appropriate places in the picture.

A contest among the school children was another stunt which went over in good shape. Prizes were given to the school children who furnished the largest list of words formed from the letters appearing in the title of the picture.

Mr. Cramer has promised the details of his campaign on "What Do Men Want?" Same will appear in an early issue.

uffalo's "Neediest Families" Fund Tie-up with Picture

The Shea Amusement company of Buffalo and e Fox Film company joined hands with the uffalo Evening News on Monday, January 9 i putting on a special days' showing of "Over e Hill," giving the receipts of the afternoon d evening to the Fifty Neediest Families in ffalo Fund, started by the newspaper. In re- n the News gave as many dollars' worth of blicity on page one advertising the picture d the theatre. This publicity ran a week in avance of the third week run. W. R. Shec- n, general manager of the Fox Film com- ny, sent a check to Buffalo for $100 which h stated was to pay for a seat in the gallery.

Paterson Theatre Stirs Interest with Ballyhoo

THE American Theatre, Paterson, N. J., stirred the interest of the entire city with its bally-hoo in connection with the engagement of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

Attired in the steel armor of a knight of medieval days, with lance and shield, a man was sent through the main thoroughfares or Paterson astride a horse whose mane was covered with the tasseled cloth used by the Knights of the Round Table. On another steed was a man dressed as "Sir Boss" of the picture, with his upturned trousers, kingly staff, plumed silk hat and exposed socks and their supports.

Both horses bore large banners announcing the place, time and occasion. At various points, when the two horsemen met on the streets in their peregrinations, they feigned anger and began to clash, one using his wooden lance, the other his staff.

Large crowds gathered wherever the riders appeared.

With its effectivencss established by the results obtained by other exhibitors, the "Queen of Sheba" chariot stunt was again utilized advantageously by the management of the Capitol theatre, Des Moines, Iowa.

Four black chargers procured from nearby stables were harnessed to a large chariot, sufficiently spacious to hold two drivers. Another similar chariot was rigged out and drawn by four white horses. With the permission of the police authorities, the two ballyhoo vehicles were raced down the main street of the city for a distance of three blocks during the lunch hour of the day preceding the opening.

The event had been heralded in "teaser" manner, and a large throng witnessed the so-called race. Banners proclaiming the entertainment value of "Queen of Sheba" and announcing the theatre at which it was to be shown—lettered in bold red—covered the bows of the speeding chariots.

The extra driver distributed hundreds of heralds and cards as the chariot sped down the thoroughfare.

Dunbar Builds Pleasing Lobby Front

The cut-out o fthe lady is of beaver board, using an old litho as a model while the draperies are of velvet. A spot light hanging under the marquee threw it into relief against the dark purple background with bronze splashed tips.

Greenman Gets Much Publicity with Private Screening

HENRY GREENMAN, manager of the Fox-Liberty theatre, St. Louis, gained much advance publicity for the showing of "Theodora" at that theatre by giving a private screening three days in advance of the showing.

Invitations were issued to Italian literary societies, newspaper critics, clergymen and exhibitors of St. Louis and surrounding territory.

Taking a spring scale and masking it as in "emotional machine," W. E. Paxchall secured a lobby display that attracted a lot of attention when "The Sheik" played at the Majestic theatre, Austin, Texas.

The dial was covered with blank paper and draw symbolic designs of "love, hate, jealousy" and other primary emotions were arranged around the path of the indicator.

A large board which completely concealed the rest of the scale contained a key to the symbols. A card read:

Emotion Register, Climb On This Machine. Registers Your Emotions. This Device Was Used By Rudolph Valentino in Properly Gauging His Emotions for the Big Scenes in "The Sheik."

This gave the co-ed flapper of the University something to talk about. The lobby stunt was supplemented by a box of contributions from The Austin American Misspelled Word Contest. Persons finding all the misspelled words in "The Sheik" advertisements were admitted free. The box contained 500 answers. The Austin American took advantage of the hook-up to spread this sign:

Do They Read the Austin American.

Branford Stages "Molly O" Prologue

Newark Theatre Presentation Adds Much to the Show

The prologue was in two scenes, opening with "The Alley" and closing with "The Ball Room," with a cast of twelve. The first scene represented an alley at dusk, with a faint glow in the windows of the houses. An amber spot picked up Miss Norma Leyland, soprano, who was dressed to resemble Miss Normand in the picture, sitting on a suitcase. After she had sung "You'll Come Back to Me," George Dale, tenor, came on, dressed as a laborer, and after a short exchange of words he sang "Molly O." As they made their exit the drop was taken up and the second scene represented a ball room with the Branford Mixed Quartette dressed as the guests in the ballroom scene in the film.

The opening song was "Drink to me Only with Thine Eyes," followed by the duet from "Tales of Hoffman." Following the songs the dancing girls came on, giving a Grecian dance arranged with the music. At the close of this number, Miss Leyland dressed to resemble Miss Normand in an evening gown and wearing a mask, appeared. Stepping forward, the tenor declared: "I know everyone here but this lady. Who are you?" As she removed her mask the entire company exclaimed: "Why it's Molly O." Following a dance the entire ensemble sang "Molly O" and came down in front of the plush curtain While they were still singing the sheet was lowered and the film started, the song being timed to end as the first title was shown, giving the production a flying start.

In the ballroom scene the dominating color was blue, thrown on by spots and strip lights, and the soloists were picked out with an amber spot from the booth. During the dancing a color wheel was used from the booth. The prologue was the talk of the town and all the newspapers carried special stories on the importance of the presentation of them to give any production the right atmosphere.

Hyman Tries Out "Art Course" Exploitation

AN art course for laymen via the screen has been quietly inaugurated by Managing Director Edward L. Hyman at the Brooklyn Mark Strand, not as an educational proposition, but as a semi-entertainment and educational effort.

Mr. Hyman launched the innovation with a showing of "The Beggar Maid."

Last week Mr. Hyman followed this up with a presentation of a motion picture adapted from the painting by Josef Isreals, known as "The Bashful Suitor."

Not only were high school teachers notified of the course, but art students were given personal notification.

It is the intention of Mr. Hyman to use this type of film as an auxiliary feature following the featured film.

Jackie Coogan Imitator Helps Regent with "Peck's Bad Boy"

In exploiting "Peck's Bad Boy," Harry Gilbert, manager of the Regent Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., secured a covered truck and placed two large scarlet and white signs on the sides, with a slogan and the dates. In the back of the truck, framed in the doorway, was a boy imitator of Jackie, his dog beside him. This truck ran around the city all day, stopping a bit at each block in the residence district by choice and down-town because it was necessary, because many times the driver was called down by one of the policemen for blocking the traffic.

This picture shows the "emotional machine" lobby display for "The Sheik," which W. E. Paschall, manager of the Majestic theatre, Austin, Texas, devised

Unemployment Idea Adapted for Use on "Fightin' Mad"

THE unemployment situation, which is just now so vital a part of every city's problem, was the most effective part of the campaign of Manager George Schmidt, of the Strand theatre, Atlanta, to exploit "Fightin' Mad."

The city council and various civic bodies in Atlanta have been agitating themselves for weeks over this situation which has been made more acute by the cold weather.

Manager Schmidt engaged a big truck, and picked up off of the street ten men whose need for work was aggravated by the fact that they had families. These men were hired for the whole week, and were carried up and down the streets in the main part of the city, bearing on each side of the truck, a giant banner which read: "We were unemployed until the Strand theatre engaged us to exploit 'Fightin' Mad.' It's a good show."

The fact that the men had families, and that Manager Schmidt had, for a little space, solved their problem of work for them, was taken up by the newspapers, and made much of it. The result was that Manager Schmidt enlisted the co-operation and interest of everybody that read the papers.

Simple Lobby Display Sells All Comedy Bill

Manager Miller of the Rialto theatre, Augusta, Georgia, recently played a bill at his theatre, which totally wrecked all previous box-office records of the three Augusta houses—doing, at twenty-five cents admission, two hundred dollars more business at the Rialto than was done at his other theatre, the Modjeska, which was playing a picture at fifty-five cents admission.

The bill was made up of Harold Lloyd's "Never Weaken" and Charlie Chaplin's "The Idle Class." The lobby was a simple one—two full-length mirrors, one on either side of the lobby. On one of these mirrors had been pasted a full length cut-out of Chaplin, in his old make-up as the tramp. Mounted and facing this mirror was a full-length cut-out of Chaplin as the rich man, elegantly dressed. The two men seemed engaged in conversation. Across the lobby was the other mirror which carried a cut-out of Lloyd. Facing this, and regarding him proudly, was a cut-out, mounted, of Mildred Davis, his leading woman.

The center of the lobby held a ballet-box in which patrons were invited to drop their votes for the best comedian, and for the person who gave the best reasons for choosing his favorite, in essays of one hundred words or less, prizes were given of "war-tax-less passes."

The bill played a two day engagement and started the New Year with a bang for the Rialto.

Snider Gets Great Result from Lobby Display

The bottom of the stage was covered with sand. The figures standing in front of the tent were taken from the 22x28 photo as were the horses in the distance against the horizon. The tent was made of a piece of cloth 28 inches square striped with a brilliant red show card ink. The lone palm tree was made of a round piece of wood painted brown and leaves cut from dark green paper. The four men on horseback in the right foreground were cut from the three sheets. The sides of the box was painted with ordinary kalsomine blended, using blue, pink and white. Three 75 watt lights were placed in the frame, which kept the interior of the box brilliant even during the day.

Singer Supplies New "Over the Hill" Stunt

The management of the new Palace theatre, Troy, N. Y., conceived a truly original exploitation stunt in connection with the recent showing of "Over the Hill."

Troy, as everyone knows, is a city of shirt and collar factories and laundries. A large percentage of the theatre goers are workers in either the plants or the offices of these concerns. Therefore it was realized that a good place to reach these thousands of prospective patrons of "Over the Hill" would be right where they work.

The management of the Palace theatre employed a singer who for three days prior to the opening of the engagement toured the various factories during the lunch hour and entertained the workers by singing the song "Over the Hill." Arrangements had been made with the employers, who welcomed the plan heartily.

Aside from newspaper advertising, this was the only advance publicity given the production; but the results were beyond expectation.

The miniature bridge was built out of steel construction such as is handled by many of the larger toy stores for children. The bridge cost but very little, as one of the big Seattle department stores furnished the material, gratis. As the electric train approached the bridge an air whistle, operated from the box office, was sounded. The electric engine pulling the little train carried a headlight as large as could be used and have it in keeping with the size of the locomotive. This headlight was large enough to show up well at night as the train rounded the curves and wound through the painted hills.

He took some discarded display cards and printed on the back of them, in glaring red ink: "Peck's Bad Boy Did This." Then he went around town, spotting every broken window, every torn screen, every site of a fire, every wrecked automobile, every damaged spot of any kind, and attached one of the cards.

For a few complimentary tickets he used the surplus energy of the town boys and had them pile an immense heap of vehicles and other debris in the street in front of his theatre, and he liberally sprinkled this heap with the glaring cards.

Shafer Does Good Work on "Connecticut Yankee"

Elaborate decoration of the lobby front with original posters and uniquely framed stills, and the parading of a mannikin about the streets of the city, constituted the main features of an exploitation campaign for "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," conducted by M. D. Shafer, manager of the Washington theatre, Detroit.

Large frames attached to the outside of the building were filled with posters of various sizes which had been prepared by special poster artists. Stills in racks of fives were placed on the winter doors and relieved the monotony of the drab aspect which winter doors often present.

A man attired as "Sir Boss" of the picture, with his trousers rolled to the knee, revealing the conventional sock and garter; with an ostrich plume in his hat and a long staff in his hand, walked through the streets of downtown Detroit to the delectation of the spectators and the effective exploitation of the production. A large banner across his back told the story of where, when and what.

The lobby display on "The Sheik," originated by John B. Snider, of the Grand theatre, Bessemer, Ala. The story to the left describes the display.

Above

This cut shows the lobby decorations and the ballyhoo for "The Fox" used recently by the Rivoli theatre of Philadelphia. Especially effective exploitation is the several cut-outs shown in the center of the cut. The horse and rider paraded about the streets during the run of the picture, but the attractive lobby was the big bet in the exploitation campaign.

Below

The window at the right of the cut appearing below shows a picture of an original painting, that would have done credit to an art gallery which the scenic artist of the Peoples theatre, Portland, conceived to exploit the recent engagement of "White Mouse" the two-reel dramatic picture. The feature on the bill was "Serenade" billed with scene stills and original lobby cards.

Below

Huge Cut-outs Sell "Lying Lips" for Schade

HUGE cut-outs prominently displayed at the base of his electrically illuminated sign, so that they attracted attention a couple of squares away on both sides of the entrance to the Schade theatre, Sandusky, Ohio, aided George J. Schade, owner and manager, to put over "Lying Lips."

The "flash" was made with an ordinary billboard layout, several strips of lath, a few nails, a couple of cans of paint for "touching up" here and there, and a can of varnish.

As a lobby display for "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," when it played at the Howard theatre, Atlanta, cut-outs showing money-bags tilted at such an angle as to show a stream of golden coins pouring forth, were used.

These two bags were large enough to hold several stills from the picture, and the words "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" were lettered in the down-pouring stream of gold.

Cards about twenty-two inches wide, of a pale yellow were lettered in gold and black, and read "Come in and get your share of a fortune that laughs," "The screen story of George Randolph Chester's best-known character," "Fanny will for J. Rufus— and you won't wonder after you've seen him"—"His sinking fund was forty-three dollars—but in a month he was worth a million," and so on. These cards were hung about the lobby, in eye-catching places.

An enormous pine-tree so tall that its top seemed to touch the ceiling of the lobby, was hung with colored lights, artificial snow, and various ingenious gifts—a doll made from a cut-out of J. Rufus, a package of stage money, labelled "For my good friend, Blackie Daw," and so on. Holly, mistletoe, pine-branches and colored lights wound around the broad marble staircase added a note of Christmas to the whole thing, making a most effective display.

A Fine Example of a Good Prologue

As an espousal of the cause of good prologues for photoplays and their value thereto, Managing Director Joseph Plunkett, of the Mark Strand theatre, N. Y., presented a unique introductory setting and symbolic music to "Hail the Woman."

The background is gained by the use of silver gauze drapes and the pedestal effect in the foreground center is achieved by proper draping with similar material. Upon the opening of the scene the full view is that of an impressionistic gray dawn. An amber spot is concentrated to the center of the pedestal, giving the appearance of a very early sunrise. A baby spot on the singer's face completes the illusion of the sun's first rays.

The soprano (Kitty McLoughlin), mounted on the pedestal, sings "Awake" (Hahn), and as she finishes the blue borders gradually break out over the entire background. The heavens have been brightened by the sun's awakening. When all the lights are full up as required by the set, the tenor (Richard Bold) steps out from R. and sings "Come Love Divine" (Concavello). A duet of the same number brings the prologue to a close.

Thirty Part "Molly O" Campaign

Roth-Partington Forces Wake 'Frisco with Their Exploitation

"MOLLY O" exploitation in San Francisco, when the picture played the Roth and Partington theatre, the California, was divided into 31 separate and distinct parts, each of which might be elaborated into a complete story, but which lack of space forbids.

Here is an abbreviated account of what the California publicity staff put over:

20 Window displays in down-town district.

Cooley Arranges Special Children Shows

C. D. COOLEY, general manager of the Consolidated Amusement Co., of Tampa, Fla., arranged a mass meeting to which all mothers and all members of the Women's clubs were invited.

The meeting was held in the Victory theatre. It was a big success, both in attendance and interest. Mr. Cooley outlined a plan of giving special shows for children and requested the co-operation of all mothers and all members of the Women's clubs.

Those present were unanimous in their approval of the plan, and so Mr. Cooley has booked a number of these special children shows.

"Money" Lobby Gets 'Em in for Park

"Money" was the keynote of the advertising and stage money over-flowed from the big office safe shown.

Appropriate signs were arranged about the lobby. "All is not gold that glitters" read one and others were in a similar vein.

The soldier in regulation accoutrements was a hit with the fans.

Landau's Personal Campaign Works Well

A most successful example of an exploitation campaign based on the personal endorsement idea has just been put over by Leo A. Landau, managing director of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, in connection with his showing of "Over the Hill."

Mr. Landau ran a series of newspaper ads over his signature in which, among other things, he mentioned the extended runs the picture had enjoyed in other big cities, reminded his patrons that he never personally endorsed a picture that wasn't worthy of it, and citing "The Miracle Man" and "Humoresque," and proclaiming that the engagement of "Over the Hill" was more a matter of pride than a hope for financial reward owing to the price paid for the production.

The result was entirely satisfactory in every way. Another notable angle of the selling campaign was that the usual mother love theme was not even mentioned, the reason being that Mr. Landau figured that this angle was shopworn from use on other pictures and has too much of an element of preaching in it.

MANAGER DUNCAN, of the Strand theatre, Asheville, N. C., is a live wire exhibitor, as was proven by his lobby for "A Pair of Silk Stockings" when this feature played a two-day run at his house.

The center of the lobby was turned into a pretty little boudoir, with a very elaborate dressing-table, the top covered with silken "feminine fripperies" that were, in themselves, enough to capture the attention of feminine passersby.

Seated in front of this dressing-table, with her back to the street, but with the triple mirrors of the dressing-table giving a good look at her, was a wax "dummy" such as are used in department store windows. This dummy was dressed in a negligee that was the envy of nine out of ten women who passed, and she was in the act of drawing on a pair of elaborately embroidered silk stockings. On the dressing-table in front of her was a box, half-opened, from which trailed silk stockings of variegated hues.

Weinberg Gets Lots of Publicity for "Fauntleroy"

In exploiting "Little Lord Fauntleroy," which opened a two week's run at the Mark-Strand in Buffalo on Christmas Day, Manager E. O. Weinberg sent out invitations to all school principals and teachers in the city to view the picture at a private showing in the Strand last Saturday. Most of the instructors accepted the invitation and the house was jammed to the doors. Newspaper men were also invited. In this way two birds were killed with one stone, the teachers told their pupils to see the picture and the reporters through their newspapers told the public.

With a supply of attractive photographs of the star and scenes from the play, Mr. Weinberg made the rounds of the newspaper offices and induced several of the editors of the illustrated sections to use many of them in the Sunday rotogravure pages. One editor selected enough for an entire page.

The Strand advertising appropriation was tripled for the production. Mr. Weinberg also had special heralds printed for distribution in the schools and to members of Mothers' clubs and church organizations. In these, he emphasized the clean, wholesome nature of the story and its special appeal to women and children.

A beautiful lobby was arranged, including a shadow box frame display, made by cutting out figures from a six sheet, mounting them on beaver board and illuminating the whole by electric lights hidden between the cut-outs.

"School Days" Prologue and Lollypop Mat Event at Easton

IN exploiting his recent showing of "School Days," Harlan E. Woehrle, manager of the Third Street theatre, Easton, Pa., sought the co-operation of the local school authorities.

His first step was to induce the teachers in the various schools to hand out a herald announcing a special morning matinee at which lollypops specially prepared in wax papers bags would be distributed to all the children who attended. A prologue in which a dozen talented local boys and girls and Mr. and Mrs. Woehrle took part was presented as a part of the show.

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

New Equity Feature Interests Trade

IN all the history of the Equity Pictures Corporation no such instantaneous flood of communications has ever reached the offices of this organization as that which has greeted the first trade paper announcement on "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" announces that company.

"This flood of inquiries from state right buyers, independent exchange men and exhibitors," states Equity, "is a direct contradiction of the belief that business isn't what it should be.

"From forty-six states already letters and telegrams have poured into the office of Equity demanding prices, terms, playing dates, etc., in spite of the fact that the advertisement distinctly stated that plans for distribution, release date, etc., would be given out in due time. In four cases, exhibitors have already asked their local independent exchanges for reservations even before those independent exchanges have consummated any deal for the picture.

"In two communications prominent state right buyers have threatened Equity with the breaking off of any further business relations unless Equity gave these state right buyers first crack at this picture. One of these men went so far as to say that he was promised first opportunity at another sure-fire independent winner—went ahead and secured a raft of playing dates and then was turned down by the concern releasing the production. Equity immediately wired this buyer and others as well that every one interested in 'Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight' would get a square deal.

"Naturally, the officials of Equity are gratified at this extraordinary response, and in spite of the fact that we fully realize we have a winner, no officials of this concern dreamed of such a nation-wide response in such a short space of time.

"The plans as already laid out include a city-wide 24-sheet billboard campaign in New York City, to run for a period of two months, using a teaser 24 for the opening gun, followed by a beautiful pictorial stand. A series of unusual stands will be produced for this picture, the sketches of which are now in our offices. The plans now laid out call for two styles of 24 sheets, three styles of 6 sheets, four styles of 3 sheets, six styles of 1 sheets and two window cards, with a number of other clever novelties for exploitation purposes in windows, stores, frames, etc., throughout the country."

A Broadway run for "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight" is promised and for which an elaborate musical score and unusual stage and mechanical effects are now being planned.

From the exploitation angle there is being worked out now an advertising campaign book that will set the high-water mark for exhibitors' helps, ideas, stunts and exploitation that will turn a tide of dollars into exhibitors' box offices in every city, town, village and hamlet throughout the entire world. Elaborate details for the presentation of the picture in the leading cities are now being prepared, all based on plans which will allow the average exhibitor to get similar effects assuring sensational entertainment wherever the picture will be shown.

Speaking of the popularity of the theme, Equity states that every song book, every hymn book, every church edition, school edition and college edition contains the song "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight." It is an old classic that conjures up into the minds of those who see and read this title on posters a heart interest, mother love drama that should draw in every section of the country. "At no time in all the history of show business has there been such a demand for the old-time melodramas as today," claims Equity. "Show business runs in cycles and we are now in the melodrama cycle. Where sex plays flop, where spectacular shows starve, melodrama thrives."

No date for release has yet been set by Equity. This will be forthcoming in due time. In the meantime, hook-ups are being made with leading phonograph concerns for dealers all over the country. A song is being prepared in herald form that will be shot broadcast all over the country. Not a trick is being overlooked from the showmanship standpoint to put this picture over with a tremendous smash.

To Distribute Ray Series

National Exchanges, Inc., Close for Distribution of Revivals

CHARLES RAY will be seen on the National Exchanges, Inc., program about the first week in February, according to the terms of the contract just entered into between National Exchanges, Inc. and Art Brand Productions, Inc.

By the terms of this agreement, which is the most inclusive contract ever entered into by National Exchanges, Inc., this firm acquires full ownership and complete control of 20 modernized versions of Charles Ray success, each production being two reels in length, as they now stand.

These pictures were originally produced as features under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince and many well-known players are seen in them in support of Charles Ray.

The first four pictures are: "African Love," a modernization of "The Renegade," directed by Charles Swickard with Louise Glaum and Herschell Mayall in the supporting cast; "Saved from the Depths," a modernization of "Shoal Light," directed by Scott Sidney with Estelle Allen and Joseph Dowling in the cast; "After the Storm," a modernization of "Desert Gold," directed by Scott Sidney with Clara Williams and Frank Borzage; "The Mystery of the Mission," a modernization of the "Spirit of the Bell," with Enid Markey opposite Charles Ray.

These features will be released by National Exchanges, Inc., at the rate of one every other week for forty weeks.

"Great Authors" Series Now Complete

Charles Urban announced this week that the series of "Great Authors," which James A. Fitz-Patrick has been working on for the Kineto Company of America is now completed.

Distribution plans are being perfected by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. The "Great Authors" will be released on the one-a-month basis, the same as they are playing at the Strand theatre in New York.

Carnival Comedies Sold in Middle West

Carnival Comedies, the new series of two-reel comedies which C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is distributing to the States Right Market, were sold this week to the United Film Service of St. Louis. The sale was made to Sam Werner, head of that company, who will handle the comedies in the Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois territory.

Kineto Now Producing "Great Statesmen"

JAMES A. FITZPATRICK, who produced the series of "Great Authors" for the Kineto Company, is already at work on a new Kineto series to be based on "Great Statesmen."

Work has gone forward on a number of subjects; among them, George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Alexander Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson of the Revolutionary period; James Monroe, Daniel Webster and Abraham Lincoln. Other contemplated subjects are James C. Blaine, Grover Cleveland, William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson. It is probable that in this latter group several substitutions will be made. There will be twelve subjects in the series, each being treated in a single reel.

Mr. Urban expects Mr. Fitzpatrick to finish the entire series by late spring or mid-summer.

Metropolitan National Exchanges, Inc., Opens

Metropolitan National Exchanges, Inc., a new distributing office, is now open and doing business at suite 1005, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City. This exchange is affiliated with National Exchanges, Inc.

Metropolitan National Exchanges, Inc., will distribute all National Exchanges, Inc., coming productions in the Greater New York territory. At the present time it is handling Kineto Reviews and the series of twenty modernized versions of Charles Ray successes.

Jerry Wilson, formerly with Myriad Picture Corporation, and Nathan Marcus, formerly with Realart, two well-known film men, are members of the sales force.

Novel Lobby Displays for "Jungle Goddess"

The Export & Import Film Company, Inc., world distributors for "The Jungle Goddess," Col. Selig's spectacular new fifteen episode wild-animal serial, has announced that in the preparation of supplies for the exhibitor, special efforts are being made to provide unique material for the exploitation of the serial.

"The Jungle Goddess," according to an official of this company, will have far superior accessories for its entire fifteen episodes, to those generally prepared on the biggest "super-special" features.

A prominent animal artist has been engaged to concentrate work on the preparation of novel lobby displays, both in the 11 x 14 and 22 x 28 sizes. Two special oil paintings are now being painted for the latter use. On the smaller cards individual border drawings will augment the photographed reproductions from the picture.

Public Wants Melodrama

Alexander, Returning from Trip, Finds Special Demand for Action

WILLIAM ALEXANDER, of the Alexander Film Corporation, recently returned from a country wide film business trip, says the cry for melodrama is widespread. The play of action and tense situation with physical conflict a corollory has always been a salable commodity in films, but the new year has started with an increased demand everywhere for this class of screen play, according to the distributor, who rejoices in the condition, for the trip that developed the information was taken to exploit the fifteen Sir Arthur Conan Doyle Sherlock Holmes Adventures that the Alexander firm is about to release.

The finest theatres of Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Cincinnati, Boston, St. Louis, New Orleans are favoring the plays of blood and sand, mystery and perilous adventure rather than the purely social conflicts that have been raging generally.

Vaudeville is creeping into a great many of the small screen theatres of the middle west and south with a view to offering something different than screen theatre zone competitors. This move, says Mr. Alexander, is resulting in a greater demand for the short reel miscellaneous subjects.

Of 12,000 reply post cards sent out by the Alexander firm to moving picture managers throughout the country questioning film men's disposition toward the Sherlock Holmes productions of the Alexander firm 5,796 correspondents expressed interest in the subjects, saying the interest had been generated by the reception given the Sherlock Holmes pictures by the trade paper critics.

The Alexander trip, consummated in less than four weeks resulted in the sale of more than 70% of the Sherlock Holmes unsold territory.

Sacred Films Speed Work

Sixth Old Testament Episode to Be Ready Ahead of Release Date

SUCCESSFULLY striving to keep well in advance of the release schedule, the Sacred Films Incorporated, of Burbank, California, producers of the Old Testament Narratives, are now editing and titling the fifth Old Testament Narrative, "Abraham" which will be ready one month prior to precribed release. The officers of the organization intend to keep ahead of scheduled release, and will have the first year's product completed in ample time so as to continue unhampered on the balance of the proposed sixty episodes.

The story of Abraham is possibly the most magnificent of any of the stories released to date, as it pictures temples and palaces, queer household gods, streets, shops and bazaars of indescribable ancientness—a lost world of romance, Babylonia. This reel marks the beginning of massive production which will be continued throughout the sixty episodes.

Colonel John T. Axton, Chief Chaplain of the U. S. Army, has endorsed the work of the Sacred Films because they are the first Bible screen stories to be theologically and archaelologically correct.

Barrett McCormick has booked the series for the Allen theatre in Cleveland, and is as enthused over the box office possibilities as is Mr. Rothafel.

Pyramid Production Plans

Kenneth Webb Will Direct Betty Blythe in Third Super Feature

THREE important announcements were made this week by Walter E. Greene, president of Pyramid Pictures, Inc., of New York City.

The first and most important is the signing of Miss Betty Blythe as star of Pyramid's third super feature and the fact that Kenneth Webb will direct this spectacle. "The Mayor's Wife," from the pen of Anna Katherine Greene, will be the starring vehicle for Miss Blythe. Production will commence in about three weeks at the Whitman Bennett Studios in Yonkers which has been taken over by Pyramid for the making of its third "bigger and better product."

The second big item of interest to be heralded to the trade is the announcement that Ray C. Smallwood will commence casting at once for the second super feature to be made by Pyramid. "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge," from the pen of Paul M. Potter, has been chosen for the second story offering.

Monte Blue, the Griffith star, has already been signed to play the big male lead in this all star production. Mr. Smallwood is negotiating with female stars. Announcement of the full cast will be made within the next ten days.

The third announcement to the motion picture world is the news that "My Old Kentucky Home," the first of a series of Pyramid super productions, is almost ready for the trade world. It is being assembled, titled and cut and elaborate plans are being made for its New York showing.

Russell Feature Sold on West Coast

"Shadows of Conscience," the seven-reel special produced by Russell Productions, Inc., for the independent field, has been bought for the territory of Nevada, California, Arizona and the Hawaiian Islands by the Progress Features, of San Francisco and Los Angeles.

E. H. Emmick, manager, wired W. D. Russell, manager of Russell Productions, Inc., at the Chicago office that "Shadows" is one of the few pictures of the '80's going "big" in the Islands, due to the faithful representation of life at that time.

This true story of American life of fifty years ago is receiving a hearty welcome from Americans of today, according to both Mr. Emmick and George A. Levy, of Liberty Theatres Corporation, who has the rights to western Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, New Mexico and southern Idaho, as well as A. E. Lefcourt, president of the Pioneer Corporation, who is booking the "Shadows" picture in New York state, northern New Jersey, northern Illinois and Indiana.

Russell Productions, Inc., have achieved such success with their first American classic that a series of six "outdoor" pictures, featuring twelve stars, will be the next output of Russell Studios. B. D. Russell, production manager, is in California, superintending the details of getting the series under way.

Third Amalgamated Release Announced

With the first of the co-star series of Amalgamated ready for immediate release and the prints and advertising matter of production No. 2, "Any Night," with Robert Edeson, Tully Marshall, William Courtleigh and other stage stars in the cast being forwarded to the franchise holders, Franklyn E. Backer announces the third special picture as "The Greater Duty," an elaborately picturized version of the story of that name by Walter Rivers.

This latest picture to be handled by East Coast Productions, Inc., through independent exchanges is finished and will be given its initial public showing at an early date. It is another co-star vehicle and promises to be of unusual interest to many because of the fact that G. M. Anderson is prominent among the featured players. Others in large type on the posters of "The Greater Duty" are Frank Campeau, Carol Halloway and Melbourne MacDowell.

Kay Bee Corp. Buys Neal Hart Productions

Walter A. Baier, manager of the Kay Bee Distributing Corporation, Toy Building, Milwaukee, announces the purchase of the new series of eight Neal Hart productions from the William Steiner Productions Company, New York, and the first release, "Tangled Trails," is scheduled for a first run in Milwaukee week of February 5. All the important key centers of Wisconsin already have contracted for this series, according to the Kay Bee offices and predict a big success for this new series in their territory.

Greater Pacific Film Activities

To Make 26 Features for Independent Market States Hayes

PLANS providing for the production of a series of twenty-six five reel subjects for the independent market have been announced by John J. Hayes, President of the Pacific Film Company at Culver City, all of which is to be in addition to the series of "Folly" Comedies now being completed and distributed.

"This company made such an excellent showing in the making and distribution of Folly Comedies and other subjects during the past year that we will materially increase our production and distribution activities," Mr. Hayes' statement reads. "The Pacific Film Company is producing pictures exclusively for the independent exhibitors and exchange men and the series this year will consist of twenty-six features in addition to one or two series of comedies."

"At the present time our production department has completed three of the twenty-six subjects, the list including 'The Able Minded Lady,' a Saturday Evening Post story in which Henry B. Walthall is featured with excellent support by Elinor Fair and Helen Raymond; 'The Voice in the Dark,' made under the direction of Fred J. Becker, features Ora Carew supported by Walter Whitman, Gloria Joy, Joseph Van Eltz and an all star cast and 'The Forest King,' featuring Lillian Hall and Reed Chapman.

"The new studios of Pacific Film Company have been completed and are in excellent condition for making the big program we have laid out. The company has just completed twenty-six one reel comedies bearing the trade mark of Folly Comedies. Alternate releases feature George Ovey with Arby Arly and Vernon Dent with Violet Joy. Sales of these comedies has been made to some of the best distributors throughout the country including Standard Film Service of Cleveland; Celebrated Players Film Co. of Chicago; Mid-West Distributing Company of Milwaukee; Merit Film Corp. of New York; Eastern Feature Film Exchange of Boston; Reliance Film Exchange of Washington; Eltabran of Atlanta, and the Peerless Film Service of San Francisco and Los Angeles."

Julius Singer, formerly of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has been maintained as the New York representative, with offices for the Pacific Film Company at 729 Seventh Avenue. E. H. Silcocks, one of the best known salesmanagers, and former salesmanager of the Special Pictures Corporation has been appointed General Salesmanager of the Pacific and is now enroute on trip touching all key cities in the United States. Mr. Joseph Di Lorenzo, formerly of the Famous Players-Lasky, just made a hurried trip to the coast to talk things over with John J. Hayes, General Manager of the Pacific Film Co.

Mr. Julius Singer will handle the entire European market on all the Pacific's output.

Many Bookings Sought on "David and Jonathan"

APPLICATIONS for booking of "David and Jonathan," Second National Pictures Corporation production of E. Temple Thurston's novel, are being received by mail and wire from all parts of the country, according to a statement made at the main offices of the concern, 140 West Forty-second street, New York City.

It is announced that nine prominent independent exchanges have obtained franchises from Second National Pictures Corporation.

Ben Abrams has been engaged by Second National Pictures Corporation to undertake the standardizing of releases in the West. He is now on an extensive tour of the regions.

The Corporation also announces the engagement of T. A. Bronstetter as general sales manager for Second National Pictures Exchange, 414 Ferry street, Pittsburgh, Pa. J. F. (Jack) Frazier will remain as manager of the Pittsburgh office.

"Chic" Sale Heralded on Vaudeville Tour

The popularity of "Chic" Sale, who has been the headliner at the Colonial theatre, New York, for the week of December 26th, is demonstrated by the way the Pittsburgh, Pa., newpapers have heralded his appearance in that city where he will play at the Davis Theatre the week of January 2nd, and exhibitors throughout the country will be interested to note that so great is the interest in Mr. Sale's first motion picture that it is always mentioned.

Of Mr. Sale's week in Pittsburgh, The Leader says: "Monday jubilators and theatregoers generally, in Pittsburgh, are to have an opportunity of seeing "Chic" Sale in Keith vaudeville. The delightful portrayer of odd character types, who has just completed his first motion picture play entitled "His Nibs," recently returned to the two-a-day' and is having a most conspicuous success."

Must Attend More to Story

More Thought to Story and Less to the Pictorial, Warns DeMille

MAINTAINING that the story is the important thing and that the pictorial side of the photoplay must always be subordinated to the story, William de Mille, the noted Paramount producer, sounds a note of warning to the screen workers who specialize in gigantic spectacles, in a recent interview.

"The story is the vital thing in the photoplay," Mr. de Mille declared. "The picture must always be subordinated to the drama. I believed thus years ago when I directed my first picture 'The Ragamuffin.' Judged by present day standards that was an exceedingly crude photoplay. But the basic qualities that I demanded then are just as much present in 'Bought and Paid For,' my present production.

"It is my belief that many photoplays fail because their producers permit the pictorial possibilities to run away with the story. Drama is sacrificed for picture. The picture may be exquisitely beautiful. But after all the picture is but a medium. The story—not the pretty picture—is what the people go to the theatre to see.

"I have been censured occasionally for sacrificing the pictorial side of the picture. Lovers of beautiful photography argue that the same amount of drama might be maintained with additional pictorial beauty.

"Where it is possible to combine the two, I heartily favor such a combination. But the moment the pictorial begins to overshadow the story—when the attention wanders to the beauty of the scene and forgets the suspense of the story—that's the moment to subordinate the picture.

"I weigh mentally each scene in a picture before I photograph it. I try to decide how I can get the maximum amount of story into that particular scene. After that is settled—and not until then—do I permit the pictorial side of the scene to enter into my reckoning.

"More attention to story and less to the picture means better photoplays. And better photoplays are what the public is constantly demanding."

Raid of Zeebrugge in Burr's Novelty Review

In his coming one reel release, under the title of Burr's Novelty Reviews, Charles C. Burr, president of The Affiliated Distributors, Inc., will be a series of animated drawings in pastel, portraying the raid on the famous German submarine base Zeebrugge, in the English Channel. These pictures are from the pen of Dudley Buxton, one of England's most famous animated artists, and who has long been a student of naval warfare.

In making the drawing of this famous encounter, Mr. Buxton has given the plans of the raid most careful study. As a student of naval warfare, the artist has put in every touch, every detail. Each ship in the raid is shown on the screen.

Arrow Film Announces "The Innocent Cheat"

Arrow Film Corporation, having turned from the old year into the new with a record-breaker in "Ten Nights in a Barroom," is marshalling all its force for the purpose of releasing a second picture in the same class as "Ten Nights," namely: "The Innocent Cheat," directed by Ben Wilson, which is said to be as universal in its appeal as "Ten Nights in a Barroom."

Universal Completes "Peterman"

"Peterman," the first screen classic from the pen of America's prisoner-author, Louis Victor Eytinge, is on its way to the public as a Universal special attraction. It has just been completed at Universal City with Herbert Rawlinson as the star of the story under the direction of Tod Browning.

"Peterman," whtich means safeblower in the patois of the underworld, is the narrative of a man who was barred and branded because of the crimes he was supposed to have committed, and who came back to the top by protecting his own victims from other crooks in a thrilling coup.

Barbara Bedford, George Hernandez, William Courtwright, Gerold Pring, Willsi Marks, Ed. Tilton, George Webb, Helen Stone and Betty Eliason support the star.

Regal-Fischer Distribution Plans

David G. Fischer, vice-president and general manager of Regal-Fischer Corporation, the formation of which company was announced last week, states that he will employ a radical departure from former methods employed by independent distributors. The features owned and controlled by this organization will be sold or rather leased to the state right exchanges, if they have the facilities for handling them, and if not, the Regal-Fischer Corp. will exploit the features direct to the exhibitors, with the co-operation of the local exchanges. A fair and equitable basis has been worked out for both the exhibitors and exchanges, it is stated. The New York territory will be handled direct from the home office. Frederick A. Fleck will take charge of the New Jersey section.

Davis-Brandt Feature for Sol Lesser

Sol Lesser, president of All Star Features Distributors of San Francisco and Los Angeles, bought "Life's Greatest Question," the new George H. Davis—Joe Brandt feature production this week, for release in his territory.

Exceptional Prepares Script

To Film "Mister Antonio" at End of Otis Skinner's Stage Tour

IN spite of the fact that Otis Skinner, who is at present touring the country in "Blood and Sand," is away from New York City, both Mr. Skinner and the Exceptional Pictures Corporation, with whom Mr. Skinner is under contract for a picture version of Booth Tarkington's play, "Mister Antonio," are busy preparing for the production.

Realizing fully that one of the greatest requisites for a motion picture of high standard is a perfect continuity, Alexander Beyfuss, president of the Exceptional Pictures Corporation, is conferring with several of the leading continuity writers in the country preparatory to contracting for the transformation of the Booth Tarkington play into motion picture material.

The story of "Mister Antonio" is highly adaptable to the screen, as it has plenty of action and local color. Starting in the slum districts of New York City it rapidly shifts to a country town, allowing for humorous as well as dramatic characterization. As "Tony Camaradonio," Mr. Skinner enjoyed three years of success on the speaking stage, and he feels that the motion picture version of the play will give even broader opportunity for a romantic characterization of the lovable troubadour of the hurdy-gurdy.

No date has been set for the filming of "Mister Antonio," and the start will probably not be made before early spring because Mr. Skinner's appearance in "Blood and Sand," which is proving a brilliant success on the road. Mr. Skinner drew capacity houses in Dayton, Ohio, Terre Haute, Ind., Champaign and Springfield, Illinois, the week of the 23rd, and will play in St. Louis, Missouri, the week of the 30th.

Arrow Special's Openings

Demand for "Ten Nights in a Barroom" Growing Week to Week

THAT the vast American public is showing unwonted interest in great motion picture productions, having the essential of heart interest in them and is revolting against the purely spectacular offerings, is evidenced by last week's progress in the exploitation of Arrow's L. Case Russell's version of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" and the reception it is receiving from the public in various parts of the country.

The picture opens on January 30th, in Toronto for an extended run and the exploitation being in the hands of Clinton White, one of Arrow's special representatives. Then again, on the same evening, Thomas A. Curran, also of Arrow, will put the picture on Wilmer & Vincent's Orpheum in Altoona, Pa. The same enterprising firm, Wilmer & Vincent, also have houses in Utica, N. Y., and have booked the picture there, the week of January 29th. Charles V. France is in charge of Arrow's campaign at this point.

Lightning Photoplays of Boston reported the opening of "Ten Nights" at the Globe theatre in Boston, January 23rd, to continue indefinitely. The picture is held over for a second week at the Arcadia, Reading, Pennsylvania.

Messrs. Carr & Shad report that "Ten Nights" has shattered all records as a box-office attraction; being the first time in the history of motion pictures in Reading that a production was held over for more than a week's showing.

Exhibitor Praise for "Ashamed of Parents"

The Warner Brothers production "Ashamed of Parents," is said to have elicited scores of letters from exhibitors who voice the opinion that the feature is bringing excellent business results and satisfaction to their patrons. A letter that not only reveals the money-making possibilities of the picture, but also its wonderful appeal, is declared to have been received from H. Shoenbach, manager of the New 125th Street theatre, New York City.

Mr. Shoenbach's letter reads as follows: "Without exaggeration your picture, 'Ashamed of Parents,' played to the most phenomenal business in the history of my theatre. I have played the picture for three days to capacity. The appeal of this picture is wonderful, and the comments from my patrons were unanimous in praise of its stirring dramatic qualities. Allow me once more to congratulate you, Mr. Warner, for being able to show one of the greatest box-office attractions of the year."

"David and Jonathan" Has Novel Theme

The picturization of E. Temple Thurston's popular novel, "David and Jonathan," marks a distinct departure, according to the producers, from prevailing forms of photo-drama. It deals, not with human manners and customs, in the main, but with the inexorable laws underlying and determining human conduct. The philosophy, as those who read the book will remember, is presented always through the thoughts and feelings of David Mortlake, John Hawkedey and Joan Meredith, the trio cast away on an island off the African coast and compelled to adjust their lives and habits to a strange environment.

It never takes the form of a discourse by the author for the instruction of reader or motion picture patron. The arguments are the arguments of the three, with each other, with themselves, over conflicting tendencies affected by the primitive environment, and with the destiny which, regardless of their own will and any traditions of their existence in civilization, the laws of nature itself must impose upon them.

Short Subject Programs for Long-Headed Exhibitors

IT is pretty generally admitted that a lot of exhibitors are finding it difficult to get profitable programs.

Ever play Poker? How many times have you sat in a game where the hands were all running rotten and by common consent everyone yells for another deck of cards? And when the deck was changed haven't you noticed that usually the hands change for the better also?

It's time to change your deck!

If costly features have for the time lost their pull, try short subject programs!

Put in a Pathe Playlet, 3 reels, Pathe News, 1 reel, Hal Roach Comedy or Harold Lloyd reissue, 1 reel, and a Pathe serial episode, 2 reels, or some other snappy, attractive combination that your Pathe salesman can tell you about.

You'll get that program at a Let Live Price; and there isn't a person in your patronage that won't be highly pleased.

Serial Nears Completion

Production of Twelfth Episode of "The Jungle Goddess" is Started

WORD comes from the coast studios of Col. Wm. N. Selig, where "The Jungle Goddess," Selig's masterpiece wild-animal serial is being made, that production on the chapter-picture has already reached the eleventh and twelfth episodes.

The Export & Import Film Co., Inc., world distributors for "The Jungle Goddess" originally announced that they contemplated completion of the serial by February 1st. Difficulties encountered in the filming of the many hazardous wild-animal stunts written into the scenario by Agnes Johnston and Frank Dazey, are said to be the reason for the slight alteration in the scheduled plans of the serial.

As production is now progressing, it is promised that the entire fifteen episodes will be completed by March 1st. Five episodes of "The Jungle Goddess" are already in New York, while chapters 6, 7 and 8 have just been shipped from Los Angeles. Episodes 9 and 10 are now being cut and titled.

"I could have rushed this serial through to be finished on scheduled time," advises Col. Selig, "had I not wanted to make 'The Jungle Goddess' my masterpiece episode drama. In working with wild animals—and I believe I have more experience along those lines than any one else in the motion picture business—one can never depend on what the animals are going to do. There are days when some of the lions cannot be tempted to work at all.

"In 'The Jungle Goddess' I am taking great care to have all the wild animal action as realistic as if it had actually happened in the jungles. This means that we are not just taking fleeting shots of running animals but are getting the most unusual stunt scenes ever filmed. The tiger and lion acts I recalled from Ringling Brothers' circus have done remarkable work before the camera.

"When I say remarkable," continues Selig, "I am speaking from the experience gained in making my two previous wild-animal serials. I have yet to hear anything but lavish praise on these two serials and I can safely assure exhibitors that 'The Jungle Goddess' far surpasses both of them from every angle."

The Export & Import Film Co., Inc., states that it is rushing work on the accessories and pressbook for the serial to have everything in readiness for March 1st release. Many novelties will be provided for exploitation purposes.

Warner's Serial Release

Buyers and Distributing Organizations Bid for Jungle Serial

HARRY M. WARNER, of Warner Brothers, announces the release of his latest fifteen-episode animal serial, "Shadows of the Jungle," co-starring Grace Darmond and Philo McCullough, to the independent market. Overtures from some of the biggest distributing organizations and state-right buyers have already been made, but it is said that no definite negotiations have been consummated.

The success that has attended former Warner serials, such as "The Lost City" and "Miracles of the Jungle," is declared to have furnished the incentive to produce "Shadows of the Jungle." According to Mr. Warner, more than half the serial has been completed at the West Coast studios by his brother Sam Warner, under whose direct supervision the serial is being made, and the first three episodes will be available for exhibition within the very near future.

"The making of a serial picture," said Mr. Warner, "is a stupendous undertaking, both financially and otherwise. The reports that have been made to us by exhibitors who have played 'Miracles of the Jungle' and 'The Lost City' convinced us that there are hundreds of thousands of people who eagerly follow the serial screen story.

"How well we have succeeded will best be determined when the first episodes are made available for exhibitors. A significant fact relative to our previous serial, 'Miracles of the Jungle,' is that it was released during the most depressive time of the year. And that was in the early spring and summer of last year. Despite this fact, exhibitor after exhibitor came with the story that had it not been for our serial production, they would have been compelled to close up for the summer months.

"'Shadows of the Jungle' will duplicate and, in my estimation, make it more than possible for exhibitors to do as good business in summer as they do during the winter months."

In addition to Miss Darmond and Mr. McCullough the cast includes Jack Richardson, Robert Agnew, Derelys Perdue, Mabel Stark, Captain J. R. Riccarde and hundreds of others. The story and continuity was written by Frances Guihan.

"School Days" Rights Sold for Canada

Charles Stephenson, of the Stephenson Attractions, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., has purchased the exclusive rights to Warner Brothers latest production, Gus Edwards' "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, for the entire Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland, it is announced.

Eddie Polo ot Work

Eddie Polo, serial star, is at work in Miami on the first of a series of six super serials. The serial is stated to be a modern version of the story of Robinson Crusoe. It will be made in fifteen episodes.

Pathe Contest Under Way

Word from Exchange Centers Predicts Success for Brunet Month

PATHE branch managers and salesmen throughout the country, are now engaged in one of the greatest competitions ever staged by the organization with the stakes for the victors ranging from $2,500 down to $500.

The wire from General Sales Manager Eschmann announcing the terms of the contest had hardly reached the thirty-four competing offices, before dispatches began coming back to the home office expressing the enthusiasm of the entire sales force.

"Details of ten week sales and collection contest shows that today marks an epoch in the history of our company as the starting point of the greatest and fairest contest ever waged among thirty-four entrants. The Eastern Division branches are out to win all prizes."

James Loughborough, who has just taken over the managership of the Albany office, which has been a three-time winner of past Pathe contests, sent the following business-like message:

"Albany out to repeat in qualifying and Brunet Anniversary contest. We have finest organization, best sales force. It isn't, 'he can who thinks he can', but 'he will who knows he can.' Watch Albany grab four straight."

"Wired our district manager, Mr. Wessling, to place his money on San Francisco in contest. We think too much of Mr. Wessling to have him lose. Entire San Francisco organization assures home office of earnest co-operation and every branch a run for the money."

New Orleans comes to bat with a challenging wire from Jack Auslet, in which he says:

"Wire regarding contest read by entire force with much enthusiasm. Count New Orleans branch in first division as usual. We have never failed in Brunet month. Meeting today of entire force. Will make this great inspiration day for the Pathe New Orleans branch. 'Go get 'em' will be our policy."

To Determine Most Popular Hallroom Comedy

A new method of checking up the popularity of each of the Percy and Ferdie Hallroom Comedies, as a means of discovering which type comedy meets most with public approval.

Each week since these comedies were first shown in the leading film theatres throughout the country, many requests have been received from "fans" for photographs of Percy and Ferdie as they appear in various releases.

The producers intend to tabulate these requests so that, by means of comparisons, they will have a sure method of ascertaining which of the comedies have been most liked, and basing subsequent production upon the results.

Heavy Advertising Preceeds "His Nibs"

January 28th will mark a high point in the exploitation campaign which has been carried on by the Exceptional Pictures Corporation for "His Nibs," the rural comedy production in which Charles (Chic) Sale is starred, for a full page advertisement for Mr. Sale and "His Nibs" appears in the January 28th issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

Although "His Nibs" was released early in January, and has been shown at a few of the larger theatres in Key cities throughout the West, the month of February will find the production being nationally released. The production will appear at the Capitol theatre in New York City within the next few weeks, and an important new booking is for the entire Butterfield Circuit.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Harold Lloyd Signs Long-Term Contract with Pathe

HAROLD LLOYD has signed a new long term contract with Pathe.

The new agreement between Lloyd and Pathe, under whose banner the comedian has become established in the front rank of motion picture stars, was framed by Paul Brunet, who conducted all the negotiations for Pathe.

Hal Roach, who has made all the comedies in which Lloyd has appeared for Pathe, of course continues as producer.

It is explained that the matter of the length of the Lloyd Comedies under the new arrangement will be strictly governed by the character and quality of the material evolved in the production development of each subject—which means that the Lloyd standard of excellence is to be maintained first of all; a given story that turns out to be adequately filmed in two reels will be confined to two reels, and so released. This is a principle cherished by Lloyd himself, and naturally met with no opposition from Pathe.

It is well known throughout the picture industry that the last year of Lloyd releases has proved the comedian to be the peer of any screen star living, judged either by art standards or by the drawing power of his productions. It does not appear to be recorded that bidding for the work of any star has been more active or dealt with larger figures. But the long association between Pathe and Lloyd had been so agreeable and so fortunate for both parties that, it is said, a change never has been seriously considered by either. Nevertheless, their speedy mutual understanding regarding the justness of any new demands on the part of the comedian or his producer, and the advantages accruing to the latter through a continuance of their relations is considered to be an achievement highly creditable to Paul Brunet.

Conferences on the subject of the new contract occurred almost daily during the two weeks' visit of Harold Lloyd and Hal Roach to New York. Past and present conditions in the motion picture industry with promises held for the future, leading problems of production and distribution, evidences of the advancing status of Lloyd comedies both artistically and commercially—every detail of the situation was canvassed frankly and thoroughly. All these matters were thrashed out, it is declared, in an atmosphere of such complete mutual understanding that the actual signing of the new contract was a mere formality, postponed for ceremonial purposes to the last day prior to the departure of Lloyd and his producer for the Pacific Coast.

Following the completion of the new long term contract with Harold Lloyd, Paul Brunet said:

"Harold Lloyd has established the reputation and earning power of a motion picture star of the first magnitude. On that basis his productions will be handled by Pathe. The widespread attitude of exhibitors toward all of the Lloyd comedies released within the past year, irrespective of our own judgment regarding their quality and commercial value, would justify this policy. Few pictures in the ordinary feature classification released during that period have served to attract larger or more profitable audiences.

"Harold Lloyd's comedy creations crystalize a fundamental quality lacking which, no motion picture or other creation designed for public entertainment can hope to make a convincing appeal. Reviewers are wont to refer to this as 'the human touch.' More and more they are going on record with the statement that, 'Harold Lloyd has the human touch.'

"This verdict has come to be recognized as obvious. Lloyd's comedies have ideas and consistent form. He creates laughter by legitimate means through the medium of the picture screen with all the art employed by the masters of stage comedy. His opulence of creative impulses and fertility of invention make him independent of familiar adventitious aids and makeshifts. From the beginning he has continued guiltless of 'slap stick' methods, instinctively realizing that 'pie-throwing,' farcical makeup and grotesque costuming amount to a confession of paucity of ideas that spring from the fountain head of human comedy. Besides, he has the rare ability of communicating his own spirit to those who work with him.

"Neither public adulation nor steadily advancing rewards have caused Harold Lloyd to relax in the slightest degree either his remarkable industry or adherence to the high standards he set for himself. He is now barely reaching his prime, and the great success he has won is certain of still further increase. He has accomplished these things under the banner of Pathe, and Pathe is proud to continue its function of giving the Lloyd Comedies the most intelligent handling and the widest distribution which the forces of its organization command."

Christie Elevates Viora Daniel to Stardom

IN featuring Viora Daniel in the latest comedy he has completed for Educational release, "'Twas Ever Thus," Al Christie has moved her up the ladder along with Dorothy Devore, Bobby Vernon and Neal Burns, who alternately head the casts in the new Educational-Christie Comedies.

Miss Daniel has been with the Christie organization about a year. She was in the leading role in "Let Me Explain" and in "In for Life." She also appeared with Neal Burns in "A Pair of Sexes" and with Bobby Vernon in "A Barnyard Cavalier.' Recognizing her ability and personal charm, Christie has now placed Miss Daniel as one of the "regular" Christie stars, and she will alternate in releases with the others.

First National Opens Butte, Mont. Office

THE ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL chain of exchanges has been augmented with a new office in Butte, Mont., created to take care of the rapidly increasing amount of business in that state. It is located at 114 West Granite street, and Charles W. Koerner, a salesman who has been covering the state of Oregon for the Portland exchange, has been installed as manager.

The establishment of the new office followed the action of the First National franchise holders of Montana, holding their regional "Get Together" recently, in voting in favor of an exchange in their state, but Butte was decided upon by a large majority of the delegates present. The move will facilitate the distribution of First National pictures in Montana, which has been served heretofore by the Seattle exchange, and the exhibitors will receive speedier service.

2 Goldwyn Features Finished

Ben Hampton's "Wildfire" and Willat's Melodrama

GOLDWYN announces the completion of two feature productions, Benjamin B. Hampton's adaptation of Zane Grey's "Wildfire," and Irvin V. Willat's production of the Gouverneur Morris story, "Yellow Men and Gold."

With the completion of "Wildfire," Benjamin B. Hampton has finished the first of his five productions to be released by Goldwyn. Claire Adams and Carl Gantvoort, a recruit to the screen from grand opera, have the leading roles in "Wildfire," and reports from the producing studios indicate that the roles are among the very finest that have fallen to the lot of these two screen players.

Associated in a directorial capacity with Producer Hampton in making "Wildfire" were Eliot Howe, Jean Hersholt, and Dick Rush. The scenario was written by E. Richard Schayer, while Gus Peterson, William Edmunds, and F. H. Sturgis were associated in the photography. Arthur Tavares was film editor.

Goldwyn officials are confident that their concern has another big melodramatic success in "Yellow Men and Gold," made from Gouverneur Morris' adventure novel of the same title. A finished print has just been received from Culver City at the New York headquarters. Irvin V. Willat was engaged by Goldwyn especially to direct this picture and he is said to have accomplished wonders with it.

Richard Dix and Helene Chadwick are featured in the production. Dix has the biggest and best sustained character that has fallen to his lot in pictures and he rises to the occasion a perfect dynamo of energy. Miss Chadwick also has a role quite different from any in which she has hitherto been seen and in addition to acting her part with her usual ability and resourcefulness she looks very charming in the Chinese costume which the part calls for.

Rosemary Theby was especially engaged for the part of one of the conspiring treasure seekers, Carmen, and is at her best in the role. Henry Barrows makes his bow in a Goldwyn picture in "Yellow Men and Gold" as the leader of the band of cutthroats who seek a sunken Spanish galleon laden with treasure which went down in the sixteenth century off a certain island in the South Seas. He has acted in photoplays for many producing companies and won for himself an enviable reputation in "heavy" roles.

The story has much of the romantic fervor and melodramatic action of Stevenson's "Treasure Island." The story is built around two rival bands of treasure seekers who set out for the island where a Spanish galleon, loaded with gold and silver ingots, was sunk in the sixteenth century.

Critic in High Tribute to Harold Lloyd

ROBERT E. SHERWOOD, the dramatic and motion picture critic of Life, gave Harold Lloyd a remarkable tribute in the January 19th issue of that weekly. Mr. Sherwood said:

"Now that the intelligentsia have discovered Charles Chaplin, and have come to the conclusion that he is an actor, they should turn their attention to Harold Lloyd. This tortoise - shell - rimmed youth has turned out five comedies this year that deserve to be ranked with Charles Chaplin's best efforts before he rose to superhuman heights in 'Shoulder Arms' and 'The Kid.' 'A Sailor - Made Man,' Mr. Lloyd's latest, is a hilarious fantasy, describing certain phases of life on the permanent waves. To say that it is uproarously funny is obvious and trite—but true. Therefore consider it said."

In this list would be Harold Lloyd's Associated Exhibitors' releases, "Now or Never," "Among Those Present," "I Do," "Never Weaken" and "A Sailor - Made Man."

Paramount Announces Jan. 29 Releases

ON January 29, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is releasing the George Fitzmaurice production for Paramount, "Three Live Ghosts," and Mary Miles Minter in the Realart picture, "Tillie."

For this screen production of the stage play, "Three Live Ghosts," by Frederick W. Isham, which scored one of the biggest hits of the theatrical season of 1920-21 in New York, George Fitzmaurice took his entire organization to England, there to get the real backgrounds for the story which was more or less handicapped in the stage version of its painted sets.

"Tillie," the Realart picture in which Mary Miles Minter is starred, is an adaptation of the novel, "Tillie, the Mennonite Maid," by Helen R. Martin and the play by the author and Frank Howe, Jr. Alice Eyton wrote the scenario and Frank Urson directed, the production being supervised by Elmer Harris. Allen Forrest plays opposite Miss Minter and the supporting cast also includes Noah Beery, Lucien Littlefield, Lillian Leighton, Ashley Cooper, Robert Anderson and Virginia Adair.

Preparing for Cecil De Mille's New Subject

Preparations for the production work on "Manslaughter," Cecil B. DeMille's forthcoming Paramount picture, are going steadily forward at the Lasky studio and in New York despite the absence of the producer on a vacation tour abroad. He is expected to arrive in New York shortly after February 1st.

Jeanie Macpherson, who will write the continuity for the Alice Duer Miller story, has been in New York for several weeks studying the locale of the story and developing the scenario. Leatrice Joy has been selected as the female lead.

Herbert Brenon Talks at Authors' Meeting

It has been the custom of the Authors' League of America to have a prominent director at each of their monthly luncheons to give them words of advice on writing for the screen. The January luncheon at the Cafe Boulevard, New York City, had Herbert Brenon, well-known Fox director, as the guest of honor. Mr. Brenon, who has just completed a picture with William Farnum as the star, talked on writing up to the screen, not down to it—which was a gentle reminder that authors must take motion pictures seriously if they are to succeed.

"Highest Law" for Holiday

Selznick Suggests Ince Picture for Lincoln Birthday Offering

AS an especially appropriate booking for the week starting February 12 the Selznick organization calls attention to the Ralph Ince presentation of "The Highest Law," a photoplay in which Mr. Ince plays the role of Abraham Lincoln. As Lincoln's Birthday falls on Sunday the holiday will be celebraetd Monday and this fact gives showmen two days (where Sunday shows are in order) to make a special drive on the Lincoln subject.

"The Highest Law" was produced in time for Lincoln's Birthday a year ago and was very generally played at that time—but there still remains hundreds of theatres where the Ralph Ince presentation will come as a new feature for the reason that it has not been played. Mr. Ince not alone stars in "The Highest Law," but he directed the presentation from his own assemblage of data bearing on the subject of Abraham Lincoln.

The story of "The Highest Law," relates an actual incident in the Rebellion as touching directly upon the life of the great "War President." Ince has made a specialty of Lincoln interpretations, having also produced "The Land of Opportunity" when the Selznick organizations was co-operating with the Americanization movement that the late Franklin K. Lane inaugurated when he was Secretary of the Interior in the previous administration at Washington.

"The Highest Law" is a subject of direct patriotic appeal and is ideally suited to the celebration of Lincoln's Birthday with Ralph Ince's interpretation of the well-beloved character and effective piece of acting.

To Film "Robinson Crusoe"

Harry Myers to Appear in Title Role of Universal's New Serial

ALTHOUGH the scenario and production departments at Universal City have been working for more than four months on the serial, "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe," the cast has just been definitely selected. Julius Stern, who has been so busy with the details of the opening of "Foolish Wives" that he too had to take to his bed for a few days, has just announced the cast for the latest serial of the new type. The definite selections were somewhat delayed by illness. He now announces, however, that Harry Myers, who has played with Universal fully half of his photoplay career, has been signed to play the lead, Robinson Crusoe. This selection is particularly happy, as he will endow the role with a wealth of humanness and humor. No one who saw his work in "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" will doubt for a moment that he will make a wonderful Crusoe.

There is only one man on the screen to play Friday and Mr. Stern was fortunate enough to be able to sign Nobel Johnson up for Friday. Others of prominence in the cast are Gertrude Olmstead, the Elks prize-winning beauty; Joseph Swickard, who played a big role in "The Four Horsemen;" and Gertrude Claire, who has just finished in an important part for "Human Hearts." As has already been announced, Robert F. Hill will direct.

"Molly O" Scoring Everywhere

Theatre - Owners Tell of Excellent Business Being Done

LEAVING in its wake a constantly and rapidly increasing list of shattered records, "Molly O" the Mack Sennett-First National super comedy, is registering sensational success in every section of the country, crowding every theatre where it is being shown and winning extended runs in many houses, declares a statement from the First National headquarters.

In Los Angeles "Molly O" has just completed a six weeks' run at the Mission theatre, where policemen were frequently required to hold in check the mobs seeking admission. In Milwaukee it broke the attendance and box office records at the Strand. In Cincinnati it did likewise at the Boulevard, the first picture to get a weeks' run at that house, drawing patrons from all parts of the city, and at the Walnut it achieved "very good receipts," according to the management.

"Excellent attendance" marked its showing at the Vernon in Chicago, Manager J. O'Connell adding: "Everybody was well pleased and went out talking it over in complimentary terms. It is the kind of picture we want." J. E. Coston, manager of the Harvard theatre in Chicago was very enthusiastic about the production, terming it a very satisfactory picture and one which did good business.

S. Barrett McCormick manager Allen theatre, Cleveland:

"I know you will be very much interested in the successful run of 'Molly O' at the Allen theatre.

"The first week's business was so large that we felt it advisable to hold the picture over the second week, which proved a very successful move on our part, as the picture enjoyed splendid patronage throughout the entire two weeks. 'Molly O' is a picture that is bound to please and is one of the most satisfactory attractions that the Allen has played."

H. C. Horater, manager Alhambra theatre, Toledo, O.:

"'Molly O' opened at the Alhambra Sunday to capacity business from 3 p. m. till closing. Monday and Tuesday business was great. Today the same. It looks to me as if 'Molly O' will do more business than any picture we have had on here in two years. It certainly is a box office attraction."

J. S. Phillips, manager Rialto theatre, Ft. Worth, Tex.:

"I have just completed the most succcssful run of any picture in my experience, which covers a period of more than ten years, on 'Molly O,' Mack Sennett's wonderful production. It is one of the few pictures that please from the street urchin to the bank president, from the weak tiny girl to the gray-haired grandmother and the sour old maid. Every day I played the picture I made money. A picture to [illegible] to drive away the blue day."

Ralph Lieber, manager Circle theatre, Indianapolis:

"'Molly O' opened Sunday and Monday to very big business. Monday matinee broke all existing house records, including Charles Chaplin in 'The Kid.' We expect that 'Molly O' Week will be one of our winning weeks of the past four years."

Big "Scoop" for International

Exclusive Pictures of Pope Shown as Death is Announced

WHAT is claimed by Universal officials to be perhaps the greatest news reel "beat" ever recorded in moving picture history occurred last Sunday when the International News Reel Corporation supplied Broadway theatres a few hours after the Pope's death with the only and exclusive moving pictures ever taken of Pope Benedict XV. International, the only news reel company ever to take moving pictures of a Pope or in a Vatican, recently obtained possession of the only other moving pictures of the Pope ever filmed, and now possesses exclusive rights to the only picture of the late head of the Roman Catholic Church, and of the interior of the Vatican.

At the same time that Broadway houses were being supplied with the Pope pictures, 300 prints also were being rushed by fast mail, airplane mail, courier and other means to exhibitors in other parts of the United States. These prints, each five hundred feet in length, are a part of International News No. 7, released by Universal, and are being supplied to all users of the International News Reel service, without added cost.

The celerity with which the pictures of the Pope were distributed Sunday is all the more remarkable owing to the fact that International was not deceived by the false report of Saturday afternoon but waited until absolute confirmation of the Pope's death early Sunday morning, before starting to work on the news reel features. Laboratory workers of the Universal Fort Lee plant had to be called from their beds to begin the printing and cutting of the film.

The special 500-foot feature is made up of pictures never before shown in public, including several hundred feet of ceremonial "shots" showing the Pontiff in remarkable poses, performing his duties as head of the church. Some "shots" taken of the Pope during the visit of the American Knights of Columbus and not heretofore released also are included.

The films give an unusual idea of the splendor surrounding the various Papal ceremonies. They include close-ups of the church jewels, among which are the Pope's gem-decked tiara and mitre. The remarkable affection exhibited toward the Pope by the people of Italy is shown in colorful scenes of Benedict XV blessing hugs throngs of pilgrims to the Holy City.

The most striking scenes of the exclusive International pictures show the Pope mounting the hallowed Sedia Gestatoria, the chair upon which he is borne high above the heads of those around him in ceremonial processions.

Gunning Plans Production

Interests Bankers; Sales Machine in Hands of Organization Formed

IMPORTANT production announcements will soon be forthcoming from the Wid Gunning organization, says Robert E. Welsh of the Gunning company. Wid Gunning has once more turned his attention to production, leaving the running of his sales machine in the hands of the efficient organization that he has built up.

"All through last summer," the statement from Mr. Welsh declares, "Mr. Gunning was devoting his entire attention to production. In fact, that was the original intention in the organization of the company which he financed, and to which he brought the two Lois Weber productions, 'The Blot' and 'What Do Men Want?' and the production 'Our Mutual Friend.' Developments in the operation of that company forced him to come to New York to take active charge. The result has been that since September he has had to devote all of his time to the running of the sales machine and the establishment of the policies which were primarily supposed to have been placed in operation at the starting of the organization, since those policies were the sole and only purpose for the formation of the corporation.

"His time, as has been said, was originally intended to be devoted to production, the selection of pictures, and, in cooperation with the producing units looking to the Wid Gunning sales machine for their market.

"Now that Wid Gunning has completed the reorganization which, unfortunately, took a great deal more time than an original beginning would have required, he has been able once more to turn his energies to the matter of selecting production. It has been remarkable how many productions there have been available and, in fact, Mr. Gunning has spent practically all of his evenings for a stretch of many weeks in the projection room viewing product which had been submitted for acceptance to his organization for distribution.

"Mr. Gunning has now selected certain subjects for Spring release. An announcement concerning these pictures may be expected in the near future.

"He has also been actively engaged in association with the best banking interests in New York and California in arranging for the financing of independent directors. Under the arrangements being worked out these directors would be, in every way, their own bosses with the additional advantage of an association which would give them permission to call on Mr. Gunning, as advisory counsel, for judgment of story construction and general production detail.

"The financial interests which are now becoming particularly interested in financing independent productions, since the Wid Gunning organization has succeeded in creating a real independent market, have turned to Wid because of the efficient and fundamentally sound sales plan he has put into operation, because of the high character and ability of the personnel of the organization and because in financing the directors selected by Mr. Gunning they have the benefit of his years of experience and intimate contact with all of the directors of film production."

"Lady Godiva" Release Soon

Asso. Exhibitors Will Distribute Film Version of Tennyson Classic

IT is declared by Associated Exhibitors officials that no finer screen version of literary classic has ever been made than "Lady Godiva," the film spectacle which Associated Exhibitors will distribute for Wistaria Productions. In its entirety, "Lady Godiva" is stated to follow with exact precision the theme of Lord Alfred Tennyson's original poem, even to the titles, many of which are transcripts of Tennyson's own words.

An advance statement from Associated Exhibitors declares that no opportunity has been lost to surround the production with the correct atmosphere of mediaeval England, even though a true deliniation made necessary the erection of an entire village, surmounted by the massive feudal castle around which much of the action takes place. In the last reel, this enormous structure is destroyed, together with the corresponding interior sets, proportionate in size and splendor to the castle itself, it i from her betrothed and forced int a loveless marriage with a feud lord who had conspired to gain th throne, and the subsequent indigni declared.

The life of Lady Godiva, tor ties suffered at his hand, is th basic theme of the feature, whic culminates in her famous rid through the streets of Coventry an the uprising of the oppressed towns folk.

Associated Exhibitors state tha the release date of Lady Godiv will be early in March and th prints will be in the exchange citie well ahead of that time. They de clare that the hand-colored title and the particular care which i being taken in the printing and tint ing of the film, preclude the possi bility of stating exactly when th branches will have them, for non will go out until thoroughly in spected by the Pathé laborator executives.

Arliss in Comedy-Drama

"The Ruling Passion" Adapted from "Idle Hands" by Earl Derr Biggers

GEORGE ARLISS, inimitable character actor, is seen in a comedy drama role for the first time in many, many years in "The Ruling Passion," his latest screen production, and second of the Arliss feature for United Artists.

"The Ruling Passion" was adapted from a story by Earl Derr Biggers, called "Idle Hands," and published last summer in the Saturday Evening Post. The story is whimsical and quaint and presents Mr. Arliss in a role that gives him wide opportunity for his superb pantomimic artistry.

In this new feature Mr. Arliss plays the part of a retired multimillionaire who is enabled to do ever so many kindly little acts. All the way through the picture there is a quiet little chuckle, and a hearty laugh often, and perhaps, a tear, here and there.

James Alden, the character portrayed by Mr. Arliss, has worked all his life. He can't stay retired, despite physicians' orders and the pleas of wife and daughter. Idleness makes him peevish. So he secretly invests a small sum in a little garage, and finds his young partner poor as a church mouse, but a fine chap, strong, straight and on the level. Alden has a beautiful young daughter. He and the young daughter fall in love. The father steps in, favoring his young partner as against a wealthy polo player, favored by Mrs. Alden.

An old barn is transformed into an up-to-date mission garage and there Mr. Arliss, as John Grant, clad in overalls and with grimy hands, works as a mechanic by day while at night, Mr. Arliss, as James Alden, and clad in faultless evening attire, is to be found in the palatial country home.

There is an abundance of splendid humor all the way through for which George Arliss has become famous.

"Handle with Care" Is Released Jan. 22nd

A STRONG cast, headed by Grace Darmond and including Patsy Ruth Miller, Harry Meyers, James Morrison, William Courtleigh, Landers Stevens and William Austin, features "Handle with Care," the Al and Ray Rockett production released by Associated Exhibitors on January 22nd. According to all reviews, exhibitors are assured of a production which should prove highly satisfactory.

Associated Exhibitors have prepared an especially complete line of accessories and exploitation ideas which are fully described in the campaign book, now available in their exchanges. They declare that their sales organization reports big interest among the exhibitors and anticipate that it will be a tremendous success in the theatres.

Intriguing Mystery!
"THE ISLE OF ZORDA"

unning's Novelty Reel Work of Ashley Miller

"THE GOOD THINGS OF LIFE," the weekly short-feature novelty just acquired for distribution by Wid Gunning, Inc., is the creation of Ashley Miller, who has many notable achievements to his credit during a career of thirty-five years on the stage and in motion pictures.

For twenty years, Mr. Miller devoted himself to theatricals, as actor and playwright. Several of his plays, including a musical comedy, saw New York production. Then motion pictures attracted his interest, fifteen years ago, and he started, auspiciously, with D. W. Griffith, who produced some of his stories. For some time, he worked in the old Biograph with Mary Pickford and others who developed world-wide fame.

From Griffith, he went to the Edison company, where he wrote and directed short comedies, for seven years. He left that company to direct specials for Pathe, Famous, Lasky, Vitagraph and Community Productions, but his strongest interest remained with the short subject.

He tried various experiments in the short-subject field, inventing the plastic modelling, which was released on the Paramount program. He continued his experiments and "The Good Things of Life" is his latest achievement.

"The Good Things of Life" is a weekly single reel release, the first number of which will be issped on February 15.

R-C Renews English Contract

Sir Wm. Jury Will Continue Distribution in United Kingdom

THE increasing popularity of R-C productions throughout the United Kingdom is attested by the renewal of the contract for a period of two years, for the distribution of R-C Pictures in that country by Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., Sir Wm. Jury, managing director.

The complete R-C output is involved in the transaction, including the star productions featuring Pauline Frederick, Sessue Hayakawa and Doris May and the director subjects produced by Wm. Christy Cabanne and L. J. Gasnier. These embrace such attractions as Pauline Frederick in "The Lure of Jade," in which the noted star has proven such a success throughout the United States; "Two Kinds of Women"; Miss Frederick's forthcoming production, "The Glory of Clementina," founded on the novel of the same title by Wm. J. Locke.

Some of the Hayakawa series included in the transaction are "Five Days to Live," reported to be one of the greatest scenic and dramatic subjects in which the Japanese-American star has ever appeared, and "The Vermillion Pencil" scheduled for release in March and in which the eruption of a volcano and an earthquake furnish scenic novelties that have already created widespread interest among American exhibitors.

Among the Doris May offerings to be distributed by Sir William Jury are her first two successes "The Foolish Age," a fast-moving satire on the customs of rich young American women and "Eden and Return," a farcical comedy of high originality in which Miss May impersonates the bubbling sub-deb type which has established her as one of the foremost young stars in this country. Other Doris May productions which the Jury interests will distribute in England are her forthcoming vehicles "Boy Crazy," now completed at the R-C Studios in Hollywood, Cal., and "Gay and Devilish," another swift-moving comedy designed for laughing purposes only.

The Gasnier productions listed for early release are "Silent Years," in which Rose Dionel, Pauline Starke, Tully Marshall and a distinguished cast enact a drama of life in the St. Lawrence River Valley in Canada. The story was based on Harriet Comstock's novel "Mam'selle Jo." The other Gasnier subject scheduled for distribution in England is "The Call of Home," which already is thrilling audiences throughout the United States with its spectacular flood scenes. It is, according to the unanimous verdict of screen critics, one of the biggest scenic productions of the year with the flood episodes standing forth as masterpieces of the directing art. Other big thrill scenes mark "The Call of Home" as a truly big production in theme and development.

The Cabanne productions include his smartly produced "At the Stage Door," which affords an intimate glimpse of life behind the scenes in a big New York theatre and details in most engrossing fashion the story of a young and high spirited girl who went to the metropolis to forget a broken romance in her old home town. A number of prominent Ziegfeld Follies beauties appear in "At the Stage Door," including Lillian (Billie) Dove, most beautiful of all Follies girls.

Pathe News Shows Hays Grinding Camera

Alice Calhoun Starts Vitagraph Feature

Alice Calhoun, the young Vitagraph star who went to the Hollywood studios late last year especially to play the role of Lady Babbie in James M. Producer and Author Cooperate on Picture

The happy balance of producer and author in co-operation is in effect at the R-C studios, Hollywood, as Doris May's fourth starring production, "Gay and Devilish," is in the early stages of work, under the direction of William A. Seiter. This is a Hunt Stromberg production, with Pliny Goodfriend as cameraman.

Charles A. Logue, author of "Gay and Devilish," has become a temporary member of the Hunt Stromberg staff, for consultation with Stromberg, Seiter, and the continuist, Garret Elsden Fort. Free exchange of ideas and suggestions relative to the construction and staging of this high-geared comedy drama, has resulted in many artistic and box-office angles which, it is said, will be shown to splendid advantage when the picture is completed. The author has suggested many original comedy "gags" to embellish the production, and these have been put into practical, workable form by Director Seiter.

Selznick to Film Scene at Charity Bazaar

The Selznick Pictures Corporation are contributing a stunt to one of the big charity entertainments of New York City in the near future which ought to prove of particular interest to the motion picture trade as well as to the general public.

The Tenth Annual Ball of the Israel Orphan Asylum is to be held at Madison Square Garden, New York City, Saturday evening, February 25. As a special entertainment attraction, the Selznick company has consented to film a climactic scene from the forthcoming Selznick Picture starring Eugene O'Brien, entitled "Channing of the Northwest," on the big ballroom floor during the course of the evening. Immediately after the shots are made the negative will be rushed to a waiting laboratory and a print of the scene will be projected on a big screen at the Garden before the night's fun is over.

Fox News Claims 1921 Record for "Scoops"

ACCORDING to announcement from Fox Film Corporation, Fox News has established during 1921 a new record for undisputed news "beats" and exclusive human interest events.

In the list are the only air pictures ever made of the Grand Canyon in Arizona. Remarkable in every detail were the shots taken by a Fox cameraman from a 'plane which glided perilously among the narrow canyon walls to photograph the wonders of the great chasm. Also there are the first pictures ever taken of Francisco Villa, the Mexican ex-bandit, on his ranch; pictures of Germany's ex-Crown Prince in exile; the only picture ever taken on board the United States giant dirigible Roma; the first official picture of Ku - Klux Klan.

At heavy expense and even risk of life, Fox cameramen made their way to a position from which they might scoop the world with pictures of King Charles of Hungary attempting to regain his throne and his final capture. Then there were the only pictures ever taken of Grover C. Bergdoll, the notorious war slacker, in his hiding place in Germany.

Strong Cast to Support Marion Davies

A strong cast is being assembled by Cosmopolitan Productions to support Marion Davies in her forthcoming production of "When Knighthood Was in Flower," based on Charles Major's popular novel. Among those who have been engaged are: Forrest Stanley, Ernest Glendinning, William Norris, Lynn Harding, Pedro de Cordoba, Charles Gerard, Ruth Shepley, Theresa Maxwell Conover, Arthur Forrest and Macey Harlan.

Robert G. Vignola will direct the production.

Priscilla Dean to Star in "Under Two Flags"

After spirited competition and negotiations extending over several months, John C. Brownell, eastern scenairo editor of the Universal, has just purchased the screen rights to "Under Two Flags," by Ouida. Priscilla Dean will be starred in this picture. No story by this popular and prolific author is better known, and "Under Two Flags" has the great advantage of being known throughout the world as well as in America. Mr. Brownell's negotiations were conducted through Bory Osso, who is the American representative of the English firm of Chatto & Windus.

"By Light of Purchase" Selznick Revival

On February 20 "By Right of Purchase," sixth of the Talmadge revivals, will come to picture showmen through Select exchanges. In this feature Norma Talmadge is the star and the production was original at the time when Eugene O'Brien was Norma's leading man. The Talmadge revivals are all furnished on new film, retitled and re-edited.

Margery Land May, now a member of the Selznick scenario staff, furnished the scenario from which Charles Miller directed the presentation two years ago. Eugene O'Brien has since become a Selznick star and showmen who play the revival of "By Right of Purchase" will have the advantage of billing two stars.

More Critics Praise "The Lotus Eaters"

Critics of Detroit and Philadelphia coincided in their opinions of "The Lotus Eater," the John Barrymore production, directed by Marshall Neilan and released by First National. The Philadelphia Record called it "a photo drama of unusual power in theme and beauty of settings," and the Ledger stated that Mr. Barrymore made his role "not only outstanding, but enjoyable and interesting."

The Detroit Journal said: "Here is something novel, weird, fantastic and altogether fascinating in photoplays." The Detroit Free Press stated that the play is at all times entertaining and superbly acted.

Morris Making Trip for Selzniek

Sam Morris, vice-president in charge of distribution for Select Pictures Corporation, left for Chicago on January 23, on the first leg of a journey that will take him to most of the Select exchanges in the mid-west section. He will have Chicago as headquarters for the next few days, making trips out of there to neighboring branches.

Mr. Morris lately returned from Washington and the South where he went in the interest of Select pictures' distribution and his Chicago trip is but a second section of an itinerary that he has mapped out for the next few weeks. This time he is especially interested in promoting the sales of "A Man's Home," the first of this season's Selznick specials, and "Conceit,' the special starring Hedda Hopper and William B. Davidson.

Minneapolis Salesman Wins Hapton Contest

B. H. COHEN, Pathe salesman working out of Minneapolis, and W. W. Kofeldt, Pathe branch manager of San Francisco. are winners in the Jesse D. Hampton Sales and Collection Contest, which ended on December 24. Announcement to this effect was made by Pathe this week, following the compilation of the returns for the eight weeks competition period, which began on October 31, and closed December 25 at midnight. The victors can take either a transcontinental trip at Mr. Hampton's expense, or $500 cash, its equivalent.

Cohen had a decided advantage over his field, registering a total of 3,645 points. His nearest competitor was M. Hulling, Assoicated Exhibitors representative in San Francisco, whose total was 2,185 points. Other leading contestants were C. Calloway, Pathe, Cincinnati, 1,825; J. Ringwood, Pathe, Minneapolis, 1,422½; L. C. Carboni, Associated Exhibitors, Boston, 1,350.

The San Francisco branch showed an increase in Hampton collections of 54.36 per cent. Milwaukee finished second, New Haven third, Buffalo fourth and Oklahoma City fifth. The contest for the branch prize was much closer than that among the salesmen.

Although Lee Moran, the Century Comedy star, writes and has a hand in directing all his releases under his new contract yet he made an exception in favor of "A Bitter Vacation" which was especially written for him, and on which production will soon be started.

This is the story of a lazy clerk who not only avoids trouble but work as well. Moran continues to be directed by Alf Goulding.

READ WHAT CRITICS SAID

WID'S DAILY—

Mae Murray does her best work in lavish "Peacock Alley" . . . As a whole, looks like good box office bet and undoubtedly Mae Murray's best . . . Direction splendid.

VARIETY—

MORNING TELEGRAPH—

The star never looked more adorable. . . . Exhibitors are advised to book the picture early.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS—

Robert Z. Leonard has . . . set a precedent that will keep him alert, to live up to. Unquestionably, "Peacock Alley" . . . will pass the severest test known for a picture—that of getting the money.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD—

As Cleo of Paris, in a colorful production, "Peacock Alley," Mae Murray does a striking piece of characterization. . . . The production is both lavish and effective.

MOTION PICTURE JOURNAL—

In "Peacock Alley" Mae Murray scores with the finest piece of acting ever portrayed by this well-known celebrity.

CINEMA ART—

The last word in pictures. . . . The star never looked more adorable than in this picture. The settings are costly and the direction is excellent.

NEW YORK HERALD—

Mae Murray's first independent production has been lavishly as well as painstakingly screened. . . . Miss Murray . . . does the best acting of her career.

EXHIBITORS HERALD—

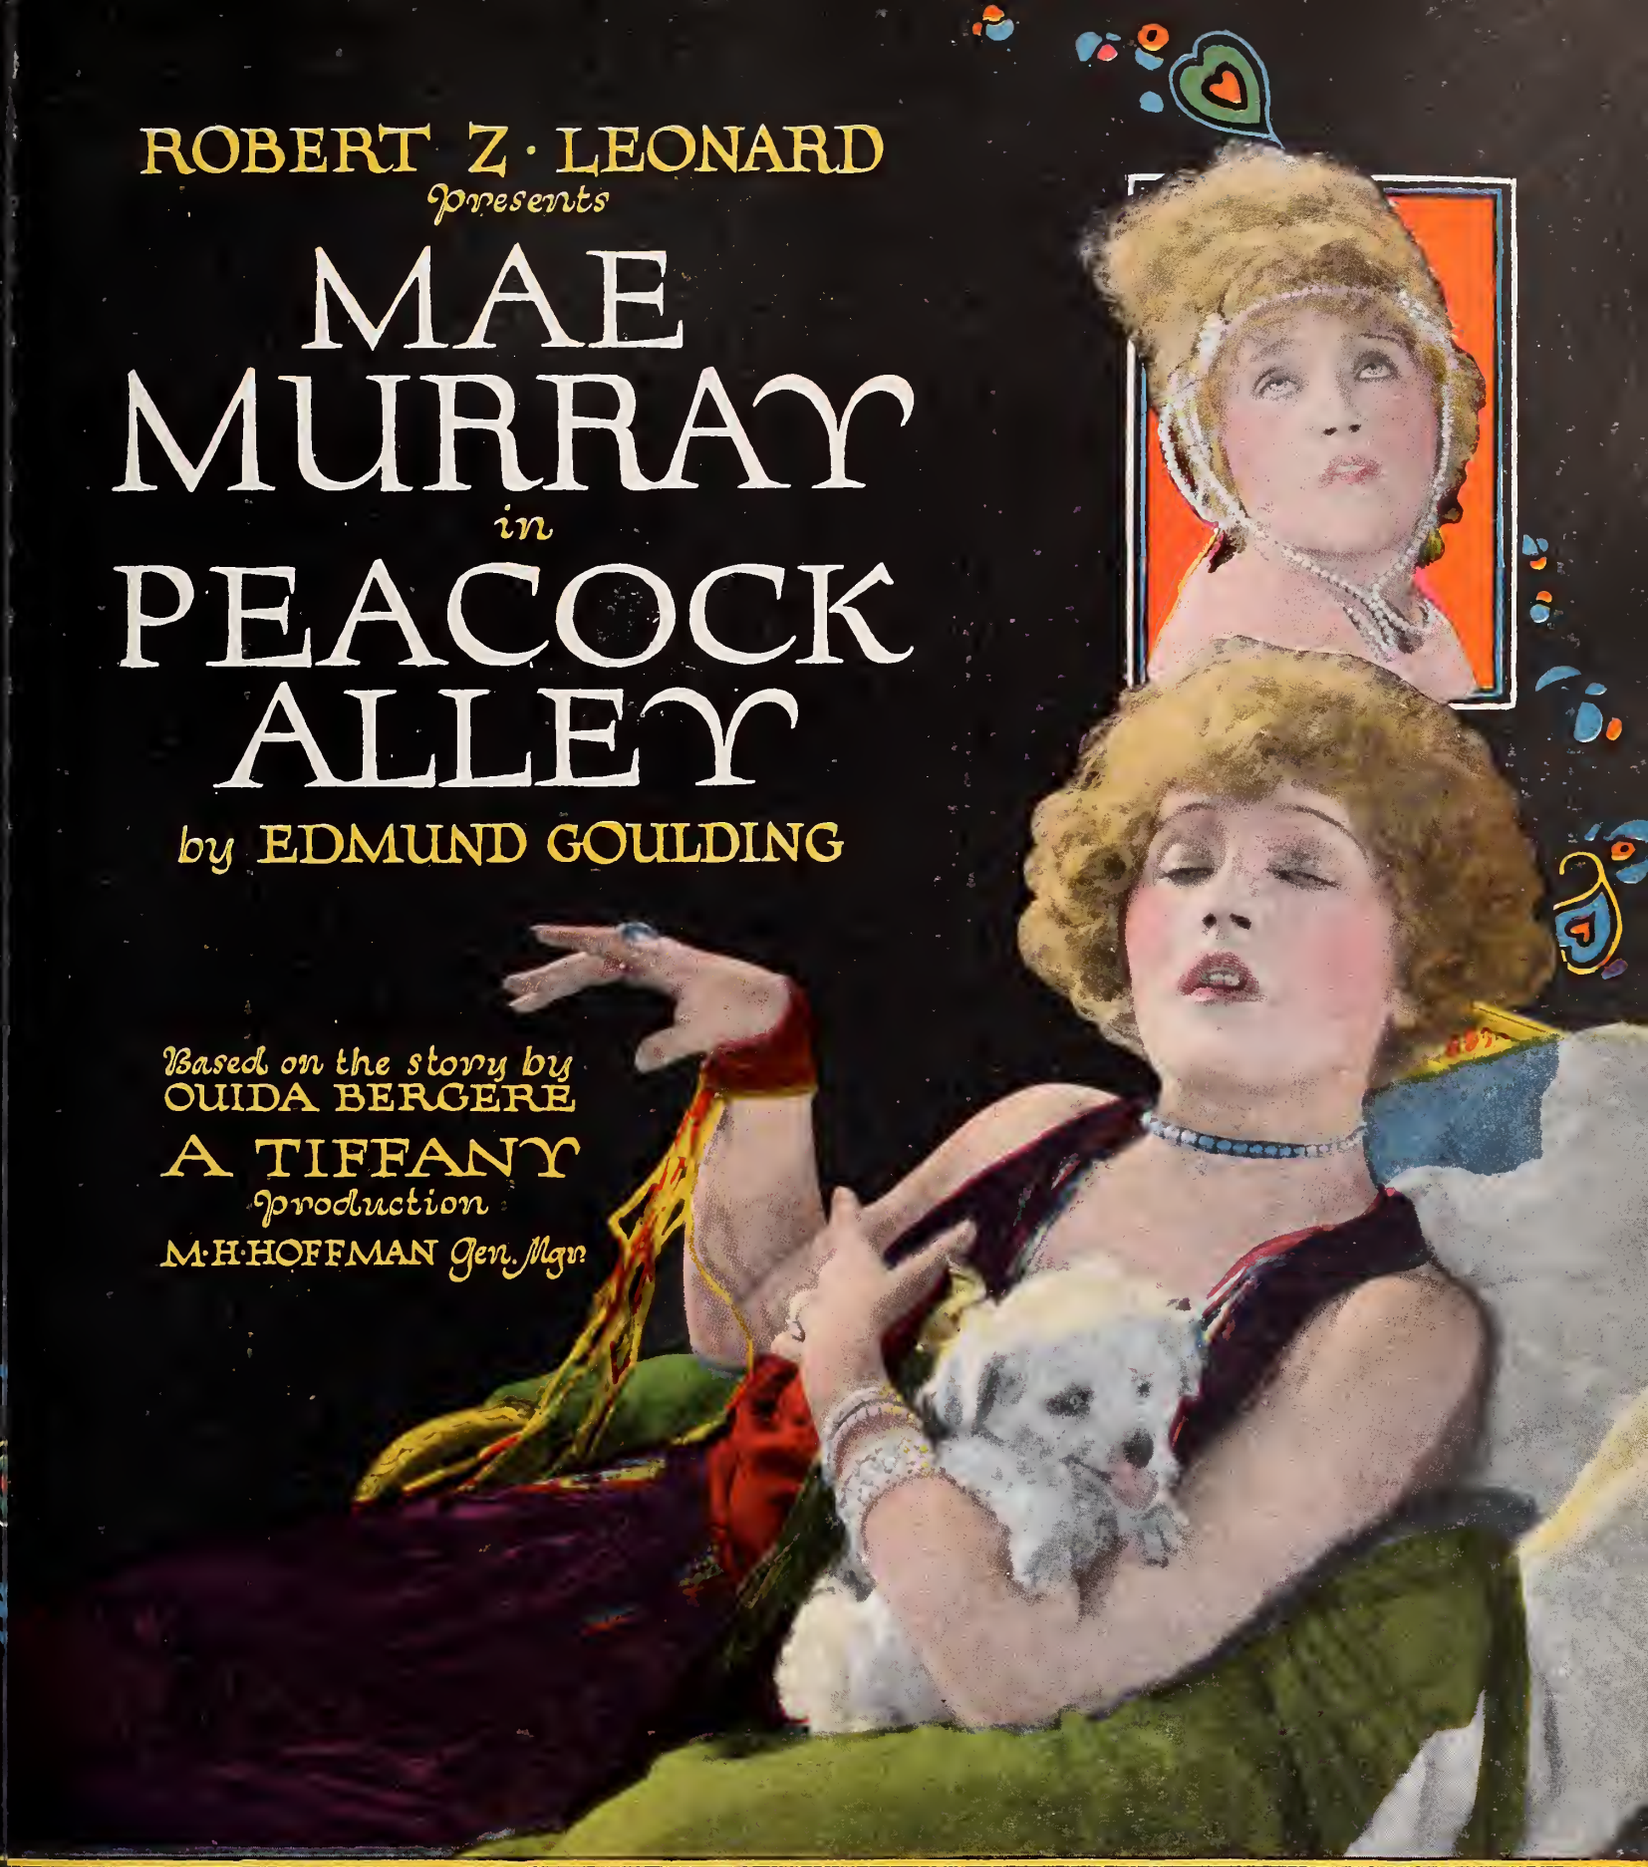
THE BILLBOARD—

Typically a Mae Murray picture! Ravishing, dazzling, with a lilting twang of cabaret jazzing—yet pulsating warmly with the lure of love and exotic romance. . . . All other pictures of this character become inconsequential in comparison.



WEEKLY FILM REVIEW—

"Peacock Alley" bids fair to take rank with the biggest box office attractions of the season. It has the requisites—story, star, direction, setting, atmosphere.

It doesn't take three weeks to look at a theatre

WHEN B. S. Moss threw open the doors of his beautiful new Cameo Theatre in New York, he threw "Peacock Alley" on his screen.

And those who came to the Cameo threw the hope of getting a seat to the winds.

As Harriette Underhill in the New York Tribune said: "'Peacock Alley' is making seats hard to get at the well named Cameo Theatre . . . sure fire stuff . . ."

The surging jam of people who stormed the Cameo the first night or so might only have been curious to see the new theatre.

It's worth seeing, all right; but "Peacock Alley" ran there three packed weeks.

And beautiful though the Cameo is, it doesn't take three weeks to look at a theatre.

Zukor Felicitated on 10th Paramount Anniversary ; ;

Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corp., in whose honor the tenth anniversary of Paramount pictures will be observed throughout the world

SINCE Paramount's announcement to the trade of its plan to celebrate its tenth anniversary in March, President Adolph Zukor has been deluged with telegrams from leading exhibitors all over the country, congratulating the company upon its success and present position in the film world and extending to Mr. Zukor personally their felicitations and expressing their appreciation of his leadership ever since the birth of the modern motion picture a decade ago.

Following are some of the telegrams received:

From H. M. Crandall, Washington, D. C.: "The healthy growth of the child depends on the care of the parent, and for your many years of faithful service I think you can well be termed a parent of the motion picture industry. Your association with it dates from the days of its infancy and the benefit of that association is reflected in the present gigantic scope and healthy influence of that still growing infant. The position of your company in the motion picture world today is a living testimonial to the years of faithful and efficient service of one whom I am proud to be able to call my friend. May your future success be in proportion to that of the industry of which you are a pioneer and whose interests you have done so much to advance."

Ascher Bros., Chicago, Ill.: "We extend to you greetings and felicitations on the tenth anniversary of Paramount. Your untiring efforts during the past ten years reflect great credit on the industry. We congratulate you and wish you all things good."

Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Chicago, Ill.: "Feeling that we are part of Paramount's big family, we take pleasureable pride in extending to you our congratulations and best wishes for the continued growth and success of your child on its tenth birthday."

Phil Gleichman, Detroit, Mich.: "Congratulations to you and Paramount on your tenth anniversary. Never in the history of any business has so thoroughly been demonstrated the wisdom of your policy of the best at a price consistent with its earning power. The motion picture industry owes you a debt of gratitude for your loyalty and enterprise for I hope to see reflected in the forthcoming March anniversary month. I know I am echoing the sentiment of every progressive exhibitor when I say, 'On to prosperity with Paramount.'"

William Goldman, St. Louis, Mo.: "It is not really, as has been said, the first hundred years which are the hardest. Actually the difficult years are the first ten, and the manner in which you have guided the best pictures in the world through to this the tenth anniversary has been the wonder and admiration of every one. Let me add my congratulations and those of every employee of the Missouri Theatre to the long list which you must have already received."

John H. Kunsky, Detroit, Mich.: "My congratulations to you on the tenth anniversary of Paramount. You have built up a wonderful organization."

A. H. Blank, Des Moines, Ia.: "Congratulations upon this the tenth brilliant milestone in the resplendent career of the Famous Players company. The history of motion pictures, reading at times like a wonder tale in its miraculous growth and expansion into an art worthy of the name, is but a history of the foresight and dauntless fortitude of Adolph Zukor in realizing the dreams of a man of rare vision. I had the pleasure of showing the first production released by the Famous Players and our theatres have been built more magnificently and more frequently as we endeavored to keep in step with the amazing elaboration of your ideas. The industry owes you much, Mr. Zukor, congratulations and best wishes to you and to your organization."

Mark Brower, Pittsburgh, Pa.: "Congratulations on your tenth anniversary. Hope Paramount will continue to hold the proud place in the industry in the future that it has held and holds now. We know, 'If it's a Paramount Picture, it's the best show in town,' and so do our patrons. Long life and best wishes."

Frank J. Rembusch, Indianapolis, Ind.: "Allow me to congratulate you and your wonderful organization upon rounding out your tenth year of furnishing the moving picture exhibitors of America with a class of pictures that has been responsible for the success and firm foundation of this great industry. The confidence in which you are held by the exhibitors of Indiana is supreme."

Frank L. Newman, Kansas City, Mo.: "Heartiest congratulations on tenth anniversary. It was the consistent quality of the Paramount brand from its start, furnishing the backbone of good pictures week after week, that was responsible for the marvelous growth of the motion picture industry. In my opinion, Paramount Pictures have done more to establish this great industry than any other single agency, and it is with pride that on its tenth anniversary I can say that I have been 100% Paramount exhibitor since the inception of the brand. Here's hoping that Paramount pictures will achieve as much in the next ten years of its existence as it has in the past, and that I am playing Paramount on its twentieth anniversary. A long life and a prosperous one for Paramount.."

Leo A. Landau, Milwaukee, Wis.: "Please accept our sincere congratulations and be assured of our hearty co-operation in doing everything we can to make the celebration of the occasion a fitting one. With kindest personal regards."

Max Nathanson, Providence, R. I.: "It is with genuine pleasure that we note the tenth anniversary of Paramount Pictures. You and the excellent organization you have builded are indeed to be congratulated on this occasion. Yours is a large share of the credit for the present high plane on which the motion picture industry is established. You have our very best wishes for the years to come."

Alfred S. Black, Boston, Mass.: "We have already notified your distributing department that this organization can be counted upon to co-operate 100% energy and zeal in making your tenth anniversary not only a success financially, but as a personal tribute to your record and leadership in the motion picture industry in the entire world during the past ten years. Personally, I truly feel that you will be able to look back in years to come with real satisfaction upon the response made in compliment to yourself."

Jacob Lourie, Boston, Mass.: "Paramount's tenth anniversary brings to mind your wonderful accomplishments in these ten years and the conception and development of your splendid organization which has been so large and so influential a factor in the upbuilding of the industry. Please accept our congratulations and sincere good wishes for years of even greater achievement."

Robbins' Amusement Co., Inc., Utica, N. Y.: "Permit me to congratulate you on the tenth anniversary of Famous Players, in commemoration of which we are booking Paramount Pictures throughout our entire circuit."

Clemmer & Lamback, Spokane, Wash.: "Wish to congratulate you and the entire Paramount organization for the service that has been rendered my theatres in the past. May this coming March be one of your biggest and most successful months. As Paramount has given the industry most of the best pictures made, accept my hearty congratulations and good wishes. My theatres are booked solid with Paramount Pictures."

George E. Carpenter, Salt Lake City: "Congratulations on tenth anniversary of production and distribution of consistently the best motion pictures on the market. Long may you head an organization that has its finger on the public pulse, forsee the amusement trend and keeps two jumps ahead. This theatre has been practically 100% Paramount from the start and judging from past performances we see no reason for change. Your policy of consistently good pictures plus service, exploitation, national advertising and fair dealing, placed Paramount in a class by itself. Your product and ideas entitle you to pseudonym of 'Babe Ruth of Filmdom.'"

I. Libson, Cincinnati, O.: "Accept my hearty and sincere congratulations on Paramount's tenth anniversary."

Lubliner & Trintz: "Greetings and best wishes to you and Paramount on tenth birthday. Your careful handling has made a giant of an infant in ten short years, and we wish you continued prosperity."

C. E. Whitehurst, Baltimore, Md.: "Wish to extend congratulations to you on your tenth anniversary as the head of Famous Players which today stands without a peer in the motion picture industry of the world. May our relations continue as pleasant as they are today."

Stanley Chambers, Wichita, Kas.: "To co-operate with Famous Players in celebrating tenth anniversary affords me great pleasure. Congratulations are certainly in store for Paramount and your own good self. You have been one of the guiding factors in putting this industry on the stable basis on which it stands today. May even greater success predominate during the Paramount year of 1922."

Harold B. Franklin, Buffalo, N. Y.: "Accept our congratulations on the tenth anniversary of Famous Players. Have booked the week of March 8 to 13 solid with Paramount pictures as an expression of good will to you and your company."

Lawrence Beatus, Loew's Palace, Washington, D. C.: "Permit me to extend to you my heartiest congratulations on your tenth anniversary as head of the great Paramount organization. May your successes of the past be increased a hundred fold in the years to come."

Sid Grauman, Los Angeles, Cal.: "Mere words cannot express the sincerity of this congratulatory message on the tenth anniversary of your esteemed enterprise. The evolution of your progress during these ten years is recorded in the history of American industry and the success achieved under your brilliant leadership shall never be forgotten. My compliments to you personally and to your efficient organization."

Gore Bros., Ramish & Lesser, Los Angeles, Cal.: "On behalf of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., we wish to extend our heartiest and sincere congratulations on the tenth anniversary of Paramount. Both to yourself and your splendid organization belong that rich praise and reward which follow marked efforts and success in achieving the pinnacle of actual accomplishment."

New York Critics Laud "The Grim Comedian"

Goldwyn's Rita Weiman photoplay, "The Grim Comedian," had its first New York showing this week at the Capitol theatre, with Jack Holt and Phoebe Hunt in the leading roles, and received unusually good reviews.

"Splendidly handled as to players, direction and production," said the critic of the New York American. "The story has appeal and is notable for the fine acting of Phoebe Hunt as the Mother, Jack Holt as the Man, Gloria Hope as the Daughter and young John Harron as the Boy."

The New York World: "A well acted picture. The Goldwyn company has mounted this photoplay in its usual splendid style. It is a picture of certain charm. The realism in which the photoplay deals may be attributed to the knowledge of the stage and stage life possessed by Miss Weiman."

Telegraph: "Another of those charming Rita Weiman back-stage revelations. The film is extremely well done and is intensely human. Interesting character studies as well as a fine sincerity and a charming simplicity."

"Beyond the Rainbow" in Cutting Room

William Christy Cabanne is engaged in cutting his latest production, "Beyond the Rainbow," for R-C Pictures, at the Sixty-first Street Studio, New York. The work now is well under way, and will likely be completed within the next week. It is to be released February 19.

Director Cabanne worked with an all-star cast in the making of "Beyond the Rainbow," including many popular screen players. The cast includes Harry Morey, Lillian "Billie" Dove, Virginia Lee, Diana Allen, James Harrison, Macey Harlam, Rose Coghlan, William Tooker, Helen Ware, George Fawcett, Marguerite Courtot, Edmund Breese, Walter Miller, Charles Craig, Clara Bow and Huntly Gordon.

"I am confident 'Beyond the Rainbow' will prove a box-office bonanza," declares Mr. Cabanne.

Eight-Reel Drama in Color

Prizma Hails "The Glorious Adventure" as "Unqualified Success"

A STATEMENT from the Prizma headquarters tells of the "unqualified success" of "The Glorious Adventure," J. Stuart Blackton's photoplay, at its premiere presentation in the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, London. "The Glorious Adventure," done in Prizma coloring throughout its length of eight reels, is said to mark a milestone in the art of making motion pictures. A statement issued by Prizma in connection with the premiere showing of "The Glorious Adventure" follows:

"There are more than 200 acting parts in the play and more than 1,000 people were used in its production. The picture is eight reels in length and is completely done in Prizma color. The story is a thrilling drama cast in the seventeenth century, full of fast action, thrilling fights, large massed fete days, and culminating in a stupendous climax showing the great fire of London. Interspersed throughout are beautiful pastel effects, delicate characterizations, and exquisite close-ups, in which the texture of the skin and color of the eyes of the players are faithfully reproduced. What is of great importance to the moving picture industry is the fact that throughout the entire eight reels there is no fringing, no blurring, no failure of registry, or other minor imperfections that up to date have hampered the progress of color motion photography.

"The color work was done for Mr. Blackton in London under the personal supervision of Wm. V. D. Kelley, technical adviser of Prizma, Inc., New York, and the photography was by Wm. T. Crespinel, chief photographer, and Prizma used new apparatus and devices that were finally completed and tested just two days before the Prizma technical experts sailed for London to start the photographing of the play.

"More than a year was consumed in preparation and more than four months in actual photographing of this play, but it was apparent after three weeks' work that the color work was to be so successful that Mr. Blackton dismissed his black-and-white cameramen, who were also working on the picture, and proceeded with the entire photoplay in Prizma color. The results reported from London following the opening at the Royal Opera House more than justify Mr. Blackton's decision.

In a recent edition of "Conquest," the British popular science magazine, Mr. Blackton is quoted as declaring.

"There has been some discussion as to whether the ordinary projection machine would effectively show this color film on the screen, and suggestions have been advanced that a special machine would be required for projection. I want to state, as emphatically as possible, that this is incorrect. This film can be shown in any theatre and the usual projection machine will throw it effectively on the screen. It is, therefore, as commercially practical as it is artistically attractive."

Pathe Releases for Feb. 5th

Three-Reel Edition of "Convict 993" Heads Short-Subject List

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., announces that the latest Pathé playlet, "Convict 993," featuring Irene Castle and an all-star cast of players, will head the strong collection of short subject features and the one serial episode scheduled for release the week of February 5. Among those playing prominent roles in the offering are Helene Chadwick, Warner Oland, Paul Everton, Harry Benham and J. H. Gilmour.

"The Trap" is the sixth episode of the new Pathé serial, 'White Eagle," starring Ruth Roland. The chapter is replete with thrills and gives the Pathé star full opportunity to display her daring in performing perilous feats. Earl Metcalf, Virginia Ainsworth, Harry Girard, Otto Lederer, Gertrude Douglas and Bud Osborne play prominent roles in the episode and help keep the action going at a rapid rate. Features of the chapter are the lighting effects and the interior scenes in the chamber of the Golden Pool.

"The Lamb" is the current reissued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd. The offering shows the spectacled comedian as a timid youth until the worm turns, and he becomes a battler. Lloyd is supported by Bebe Daniels, who appears as a cabaret singer, and "Snub" Pollard, as the proprietor of the tough cafe.

"The Fox and the Grapes," one of the best known tales of Aesop, is the latest animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables." "Blow 'Em Up' is the title of the current Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard. The offering is an uproarious satire on the methods of anarchists—and hence a topical theme amusingly told.

Pathé Review No. 141 presents a series of subjects of the most entertaining sort. "Nature Cast Out" is a study in the ways of cities; "Timber Thrills" presents the real moments of danger in the day of a lumberjack; "Color for Milady's Silks" is the story of the patterns in silk goods; "The High Jumpers of the Himalayas" gives slow motion views of the Himalayan "tahr" or mountain goat; and "Teddy in Glazier Land" is the first of a series of four Pathécolor stories in which 5-year-old Teddy adventures among the Alps.

Stanlaws Starts New Paramount Picture

A combination of exceptional interest is announced for a new Paramount picture, "Over the Border," by Albert Shelby LeVino based on the short story, "She of the Triple Chevron," by Sir Gilbert Parker.

It will be a Penrhyn Stanlaws production, the first he had made since his return from New York to the Paramount Western studio. It will be made with Betty Compson, Tom Moore and a splendid cast including such well known players as Casson Ferguson, Sidney D'albrook, J. Farrell Macdonald, L. C. Shumway, Jean deBriac, Edward J. Brady and Joseph Ray.

Griffith Asked to Film National Drama

To have the greatest drama of their national history told by D. W. Griffith in the film is the desire of two great South American nations. Representatives of these two governments came to New York to see "Orphans of the Storm" at the Apollo theatre, and then made an engagement for Mr. Griffith to attend a conference in Washington.

The scenarios of these stories would be the work of a committee of the foremost native authors of the two countries.

William Farnum Film Due in March

"A Stage Romance," the Fox feature starring William Farnum and his first production since his return to America from his long European vacation last fall, has been completed and will be released in March. The story concerns a romantic chapter in the life of Edmund Kean, the famous English actor. The picture was directed by Herbert Brenon.

Well-Known Players to Support Chas. Jones

A large and well-known group of actors constitute the cast of Charles Jones' newest picture now being made at Hollywood for release by Fox Films. It includes Eileen Percy, Mae Busch, Robert Daly, G. Raymond Nye, Joe Harris, Otto Hoffman and William Steele.

Marion Davies, in center, and two scenes from "Bride's Play," her latest Cosmopolitan production. A Paramount picture

"Bride's Play" Does Tremendous Business

IN offering "The Bride's Play," starring Marion Davies-Cosmopolitan Productions announces that it wishes the exhibitors to know that this picture rolled up the magnificent total of $24,169.25 during its week's presentation by Hugo Riesenfeld at the Rialto theatre, New York. The proof of the value of the production lies in those figures because they demonstrate that Mr. and Mrs. Public like "The Bride's Play," and like it with enthusiasm, declares a statement from the Cosmopolitan headquarters. The statement continues:

"'The Bride's Play' is an appropriate successor to Miss Davies' previous popular release 'Enchantment.' It gives the star every opportunity to display her many talents and she never lets an opportunity escape. In 'Enchantment Miss Davies appeared as the personification of the modern 'flapper,' of gay, irresponsible and heedless youthfulness. In the new picture she has a different role—a dual role, in fact. In the first part of 'The Bride's Play' she plays a modern Irish maid, a winsome, kindly and generous girl. In this part Miss Davies wears a dark wig, re-establishing the fact, proved first in 'Buried Treasure,' that she is beautiful either as a blonde or brunette.

"Newspaper and trade paper reviewers have stressed two points as the salient accomplishments of the producers of the picture. These two points are romance and beauty. The settings, the creations of Joseph Urban, have evoked the heartiest approval.

"The original' story of "The Bride's Play' appeared in Hearst's Magazine. The author, Donn Byrne, also wrote 'The Woman God Changed.' George W. Terwilliger, director of the picture, is a critic and scenario writer as well as a first class director. Mildred Considine, who has written more than one hundred successful pictures, prepared the scenario of 'The Bride's Play,' bringing out with a deft touch the high romance and charm of Mr. Byrne's story.

"Without expert photography the loveliness and artistry of 'The Bride's Play,' would have been lost. To Ira H. Morgan was entrusted the task of recording upon the film the romance as interpreted and directed by Mr. Terwilliger. Mr. Morgan has been in motion pictures for many years and has photographed some of the best known feature pictures. His photography in Miss Davies' picture has been universally praised.

"A cast of the first magnitude was selected by Cosmopolitan Productions to support the star. Wyndham Standing, with a background of several successful years on the stage and screen, was engaged as leading man. Mr. Standing plays the part of an Irish baronet with the ease and poise tha one associates with real aristocracy. Carlton Miller, who has played in pictures with several stars, assumes the role of a faithless Irish poet, an interpretation capably and convincingly done. Jack O'Brien, who has been the hero in many screen romances, again has a virile part in this picture. He appears in the mediaeval episode in the guise of a young nobleman who rides off with the girl of his heart despite the fact that she has just been married to another. Richard Cummings, a fine character actor, is seen as a jovial old Irishman. Frank Shannon, scoring a success in the stage production of Eugene O'Neill's play "Anna Christie"; Eleanor Middleton, Thea Talbot, Julia Hurley, John P. Wade and George Spink complete the cast.

"The story of 'The Bride's Play' is interwoven with some of the most picturesque and delightful legends and rites of ancient Ireland.

"Aileen Barrett, an Irish lass of education and refinement and versed in the folk-tales of her native land, is a sweet, kind-hearted girl, helpful to the poor and instructive and gentle to the young.

"The loveliness of Aileen brings as an earnest wooer Sir Fergus Cassidy of Kenmare, last of the ancient Kenmare line, and owner of Kenmare Castle and its large estates. Also into the life of the orphaned girl comes Bulmer Meade, a young Dublin poet much in vogue. He, too, feels the spell of Aileen's charm, and with his good looks and extravagant speeches, makes a deep impression on Aileen. Then he disappears.

"Fearing for the safety of the poet, Aileen goes to Dublin. There she discovers that he is a trifler and unworthy of her devotion.

"Sir Fergus resumes his persistent courtship, and their engagement follows. It is announced that at the marriage ceremony in the castle the ancient custom of the 'Bride's Play,' will be revived.

"Upon reading this, Meade realizes his mistake and recalling an ancient tradition in connection with the 'Bride's Play' custom, he resolves that history shall repeat itself and that Aileen shall yet be his.

"According to the tradition, the Earl of Kenmare, living in the same castle that was now the home of his descendant, Sir Fergus, took for his wife, Lady Enid of Cashel, though Enid had given her heart to the Marquis of Muckross. Enid bravely begins the round of the spectators in accordance with the form of 'The Bride's Play.' Each man of the neighborhood she asks the question, whether he was the one she loved the best, and each in turn said, 'No.'

"Suddenly there appears before her the handsome and stalwart young Marquis of Muckross, the man she loves and has promised to marry. She asks: 'Are you the one I love the best?'

"Muckross seizes the girl in his arms—and the rest is an ancient Irish version of the Lochinvar story.

"And now, at the wedding of Aileen and Sir Fergus, history begins to repeat itself. Aileen starts her round of the guests exactly as Enid did, asking each of the men if he is the one she loves the best.

"And now, again, there suddenly appears Bulmer Meade, where Muckross had stood. But here the repetition of history absurdly ends. Aileen takes one of her wedding slippers and strikes Meade a smarting blow across the face. The poet slinks away through the crowd, and Aileen rejoins her husband."

To Help Rehabilitate Russia

Rothacker Names Representative in Moscow; Films to Play Useful Part

THE ROTHACKER FILM MANUFACTURING COMPANY plans to take an important part in the rehabilitation of Russia as soon as political and industrial conditions there permit the launching of the work. As a preparatory step Dr. A. Altschuler, of Moscow, has been appointed as the representative in Russia of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago, and the Rothacker-Aller Laboratories, Los Angeles. A statement from the Rothacker headquarters in Chicago has the following to say about the plans being made for Russia:

"The rebuilding of Russian industries will be largely a matter of training young men to take the places of the industrial engineers, manager, specialists, who have passed on to a land where Bolshevism is unknown.

"Watterson R. Rothacker was the pioneer practical picture producer and there is no American industry which has not been filmed by the Rothacker organization. From pictures now in the Rothacker vaults young Russians can be given a comprehensive and practical education in any branch of industry.

"Many of these Rothacker pictures were produced for other than educational purposes, but is is merely a case of re-editing to make them purely educational.

"Simeon Altschuler, who, with J. Wesley Smith, is engaged in the Furnishing Studio Service in Los Angeles, will give these films a preliminary editing in this country. Dr. Altschuler will do the final editing in Russia.

"Dr. Altschuler early foresaw the part the motion pictures of American industries would play in the rehabilitation of Russia. For over a year he has been negotiating with the Rothacker organizations. He is now prepared to import Rothacker pictures on a wholesale scale when the propitious time arrives.

"Incidentally these pictures will accomplish a great deal toward opening a market in Russia for those American products which the Russian students will see manufactured on the silver sheet.

"Dr. Altschuler is a brother of Simeon Altschuler and of Joe Aller, resident head of the Rothacker-Aller Laboratories. He was educated in the University of Moscow and has traveled extensively. During the entire war he was identified with the Russian Red Cross."

Fox Releases for February

Tom Mix in "Chasing the Moon" Heads Schedule of Five Features

FOX FILM CORPORATION'S release schedule for February contains a number of productions rich in dramatic strength, according to announcement issued this week.

Heading the list of offerings is a Tom Mix picture, "Chasing the Moon"—a story which provides ample geographic area for the virile star's dynamic action and adventurous travel. The picture visualizes the romance of a young college-bred millionaire who forsakes the luxuries and refinement of his Eastern home for the more rugged, outdoor life of the open West, and then proceeds to entangle hims lf in a series of startling episodes which take him to various parts of the globe. In Russia, in Spain, on the Pacific Ocean, aboard trains and ships, he pursues his way with the desperate speed. Then there are plotters, smugglers and the love of a woman.

"The Broadway Peacock" is the title of the February release starring Pearl White. The picture was directed by Charles J. Brabin and concerns the love of a Broadway cabaret girl for the only man with whom she ever has been infatuated. His failure to return that love in like measure creates the situations which make the picture one of intense heart interest. In this production Pearl White, it is said, reaches unusual heights in emotional acting.

William Russell's picture will be "Strength of the Pines," a drama of perilous adventure in the forests of the Northwest. As Bruce Duncan, adopted son of a New York man of wealth, Russell goes into a feud-ridden region of Oregon for the sake of a young woman to whom he is devoted. He encounters perils galore, thanks to the plotting of a timberland gang who aim to rob the girl of her property.

The second production in which Maurice Flynn, former Yale football hero, is starred in a February release. "Smiles Are Trump," is the title, and it depicts the trials of a young assistant paymaster for a big railroad. It is packed with sensational action and deeds of daring.

Another picture in the February list is "Little Miss Smiles," starring Shirley Mason.

An Al St. John comedy, "Straight from the Farm;" two Sunshine Comedies, "Please Be Careful" and "West Is West," and four Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons complete the list. The Mutt and Jeff offerings are "The Phoney Focus," "The Crystal Gazer," "Stuck in the Mud" and "Too Much Sap."

Mr. J. H. Young, Manager,
Vitagraph Company, Inc.,
401 Joseph Mack Bldg.,
Detroit, Michigan.

My dear Mr. Young,

I just completed a four day run at my Strand Theatre, with your James Oliver Curwood Special- "Flower of the North", and it behooves me to say without any flattery, that this picture surpassed anything I have shown during the business depression as a box office attraction. You may pass the good word along to other exhibitors, and refer them to me as to the quality of this picture and the wonderful opportunity it offers for exploitation.

As soon as your next special production is ready, kindly get in touch with me providing it is as good as "Flower of the North".

In closing I wish to congratulate you and the Vitagraph Company on having such an excellent production as "Flower of the North".

Yours very truly,
Strand Theatre

Wesley Barry to Make Appearance Tour

WESLEY BARRY, the youthful First National star, has begun a tour that will take him to most of the important cities of the United States, where he will make personal appearanee. He is traveling in the uniform of a United States Junior Naval Reserve Cadet.

Barry's first appearance will be at the Chieago theatre, the new Balaban and Katz house in the Windy City, during the showing of "Penrod," the Marshall Neilan picturization of the famous stories, and starring the freckle-faced one. The national premiere of the picture will begin at the Chieago on January 30. Barry will appear on the stage of the theatre in an act written by H. C. Witwer, the famous humorist. Accompanying "Freckles" on his tour are Pete Smith, Neilan's director of publicity, and Frank Vaile, the star's tutor.

The city of Los Angeles gave him an official send off on Wednesday, the date on which he started on the first leg of his transcontinental tour.

"The Prodigal Judge"

First Nat'l Units Very Busy

Not a Studio Idle and Some Plants Have 3 Units at Work

INDEPENDENT studios and stars releasing their photoplays through First National were never busier than they are at this moment, the company announces. Not one studio is idle and at some, such as the United, Thomas H. Ince's, Mack Sennett's and Louis B. Mayer's, three and four companies are working at the same time.

The independent studios have recently shipped to the New York offices of First National two Mack Sennett comedies, one of which features Ben Turpin and is titled "Bright Eyes." The other is a two-reel Sennett comedy, still unnamed, featuring Billy Bevan and Mildred June.

R. W. Walsh's "Kindred of the Dust," a dramatization of Peter B. Kyne's novel, also has been finished recently and has received a pre-view showing at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in New York City. Marshall Neilan's film version of Booth Tarkington's "Penrod," in which 'Freckles' Barry plays the title role, is also completed. Neilan has purchased Hugh MacNair Kahler's "Fools First."

In the cutting and editing rooms of the studios there are now a number of big productions which will be ready for release in a few weeks. Katherine MacDonald's "Domestic Relations" is being prepared and final titles will be inserted this week. Anita Stewart's "The Woman He Married" also is being cut and edited. J. L. Frothingham has "The Man Who Smiled" almost completed, and all filming on the picture has been finished. At the Thomas H. Ince studio four photoplays—"Jim," "The Hottentot," "Skin Deep" and "Bellboy 13" are getting their final grooming before shipment is made to New York.

In the cutting rooms at the Ray Studio both "The Deuce of Spades" and "Smudge" are being edited. "The Deuce of Spades" will be finished this week. At Buster Keaton's new "twin-six" studio "Cops" his latest comedy has been assembled for shipment, while in the Mack Sennett cutting room the final splicing of "For Love or Money," formerly "When You Leave Home," is being done.

In New York Richard Barthelmess' latest production, "The Seventh Day" has been filmed and editing is well under way.

Plays that have been on the verge of production for many months are now aetually under way. Maurice Tourneur is in the midst of filming "Lorna Doone" and J. Barker, Jr., is completing "Pawned." Another production, Richard Walton Tully's "The Masquerader," the making of which had been postponed for sometime is now well begun. Allen Holubar, also is busy again. His new production is "The Soul Seeker," starring Dorothy Phillips.

At the Louis B. Mayer studio John M. Stahl is completing the filming of "One Clear Call" and Anita Stewart is busy on the dramatization of Countess Barcynska's "Rose O' the Sea." At Mack Sennett's studio, "On Patrol," the fourth Billy Bevan-Mildred June comedy, is in the making and Mabel Normand is working at top speed in "Suzanna," her romantic drama of early California life. Ben Turpin is a sort of Toonerville Trolley conductor in some scenes of his latest two-reel comedy, "The Robin's Nest."

At the United studios both Norma and Constance Talmadge are busy. Constance finished "The Divorcee" on January 17 and Norma is now well started on the interiors of "The Duchess of Langeasis."

Katherine MacDonald has started another picture titled, "Conquer the Woman." Recently she completed "Domestic Relations" and "The Infidel."

Charles Ray has chosen his cast for a new play. The cast includes Barbara Bedford, William Scott, Carl Miller, Robert St. Andrews and Wallace Beery. No title has yet been selected.

There are several photoplays being cast into continuity form now at the various studios for future production, among them Thomas H. Ince's "Someone to Love," "The Desert Fiddler," "Wooden Spoils" and "Finding Home." Katherine MacDonald's scenario staff is preparing "Conquer the Woman" and Marshal Neilan will do "Fools First" next.

Charlie Chaplin also is hard at work at his La Brea Avenue studio; but the title and plot of his next production remains a dark secret.

Summing up, it looks as if 1922 will be one of the busiest years the producers and stars releasing through First National ever had.

New Home Office for Hodkinson

MARKING another milestone in its business expansion of the past six months, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has begun the evacuation of its present headquarters in the Harriman National Bank building on Fifth Avenue, where the Hodkinson offices have been located for the last four years, to take over on February 1st, the former executive offices of Realart Pictures Corporation at 463-9 Fifth Avenue.

The lease which gives the Hodkinson organization possession of the former Realart offices was signed on January 19th, and dates from February 1st, 1922 to February 1930, a term of eight years.

A statement from the Hodkinson offices announcing its change of headquarters follows:

"The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation was organized and incorporated on October 31, 1917. In November of the same year executive offices were established on the third floor of the Harriman National Bank building at 527 Fifth Avenue. As a result of the continued expansion of the Hodkinson interests these quarters soon became too crowded, and several months ago additional office space was taken on the fifth floor of the Guarantee Trust Building, 522 Fifth Avenue, where the accounting department and offices of the purchasing agent are located. A few months ago however, it was realized that even this additional amount of space did not afford sufficient working room for the rapidly expanding company, and with the establishment of the Hodkinson branches in November it became apparent that larger quarters would have to be acquired at once. At that time, however, no other Fifth Avenue building offered a solution to the problem.

"In order to relieve the situation temporarily, several of the offices were sub-divided. It was inevitable, however, that the company would be forced to move in a very short time.

"When the first announcement was published that the Realart offices were to be abandoned negotiations were immediately opened for their acquisition by Hodkinson. The deal has been pending for several weeks, but was definitely closed and the lease signed last Thursday.

"The arrangement for taking over the former Realart headquarters includes all office fixtures, desks, filing cabinets and two of the latest type Simplex projectors.

"The new Hodkinson Home Office occupies the entire fourth floor of the building at 463-9 Fifth Avenue, and for the first time since its incorporation Hodkinson will have its own projection room and sufficient space to accommodate the large staff of home office executives and employees without undue crowding. The projection room in the new Hodkinson offices has the longest throw of any private projection room in the city, and the seating arrangement consists of luxurious over-stuffed divans and arm chairs.

"The five executive offices are arranged on the Fifth Avenue side of the building, each of which is luxuriously but tastefully appointed. Additional offices are arranged on the 40th Street side and along the side facing a large open court on the north. The projection room is located in the center of the floor space. One of the most imposing rooms in the entire suite is the reception hall. The walls are panelled in walnut and the furnishings are massive over-stuffed divans and arm chairs, while the floor is covered with a double thickness of soft grey velvet carpet.

Educators Praise Ruth Roland Serial

Pathe quotes letters received from high educational sources warmly commending "White Eagle" for its freedom from objectionable features and for its absorbing dramatic, realistic and artistic qualities.

Paul C. Stetson, of the Board of Education, Dayton, Ohio, writes:

"In response to your invitation, a committee from the Board of Education, the Parent-Teachers' Association, principals and myself, viewed the first three episodes of 'White Eagle.' We found the photography to be excellent, the settings of the play to be most beautiful and the parts very well acted. While it is, of course, a very exciting play, still if the remaining episodes are up to the standard of the first three, we are very glad to endorse it as a suitable performance for children."

The following letter is from Mrs. A. J. Barnett, of the Central Council of the Parent-Teachers' Associations of Dayton and vicinity:

"Judging from that part of 'White Eagle' serial shown at the private screening, I should not hesitate to endorse it for children. While the adult may see in it some impossible situations, it is full of the kind of thrills that young people enjoy. The Western scenery was most artistic. It brought out the vastness and the natural beauty, which is the impression we like our children to have."

Kinograms Forging Ahead

Enters 2nd Year With Educational in Foremost Ranks of News Reels

KINOGRAMS news service is entering its second year with Educational. On January 30, 1921, Educational Film Exchange, Inc., released its first issue of this news reel.

During the twelve months in which Kinograms has been distributed through Educational its progress in news gathering and presentation has placed it in a position acknowledged to be the equal of that occupied by any news reel on the market.

The regular staff of photographers has been greatly enlarged. The result of this service has been quickly reflected in a large increase in the number of the Kinograms subscribers, according to Educational. During the last three months, for example, the returns on Kinograms have been increased from fifteen to twenty-five per cent, it is declared.

A fine example of the way in which Kinograms is winning favor is seen in the case of the Strand theatre in Buffalo, where Walter Hayes was persuaded to try out Kinograms only after a year of constant effort by Educational's representatives, declares a statement from the Educational offices. Hayes had been running another news reel, it is explained, and had consistently refused even to look at Kinograms until a few weeks ago. When he was at last persuaded to run Kinograms in his theatre for a couple of weeks he was so well pleased that he immediately began to run Kinograms exclusively, it is declared. He now declares this the equal of any news reel produced.

"We look forward to a big year for Kinograms," said E. W. Hammons, president of Educational. "The Kinograms Publishing Company and Captain G. McL. Baynes, its head, assure us that the coming year will find them making just as hard and just as consistent an effort to make Kinograms greater as they have put forth in the last twelve months. This is to be done without regard to cost, so that we feel sure that every big news event will be 'covered' thoroughly and speedily for Kinograms users, and they, in turn, may feel confident of showing their patrons the best news pictures available at least as soon as they could get them from any other news service.

"Kinograms is proving its editorial and artistic supremacy with every release. This supremacy, we are sure, will be maintained throughout 1922. This should be—and will be—Kinograms' biggest year."

"Century Week" a Success

Completed Returns Show That Sales Were More Than Doubled by Drive

COMPLETED returns on the results of the holiday drive of Century Comedies show that sales from the different exchanges more than double their previous high records. The most complete and gratifying co-operation was given Julius Stern, president of Century, whose idea of making holiday week every year Century Comedy Week has evidently met with the complete approval.

The returns alone on the special bills for children featuring the Brownie and Baby Peggy series were notable, it is stated, and show that parents give their patronage to those houses which provide clean comedies written and directed with some regard for the juvenile patrons and their parents, declares Century Film.

The campaign went over well not only in the United States, but in Canada as well. The Garrick theatre in Winnipeg gave one special matinee for children at which Baby Peggy and Brownie were shown in "Chums." Speaking of this film the Winnipeg Free Press said:

"Woman Wake Up" is Probable March Issue

It is understood that the next Associated Exhibitors feature will be "Woman Wake Up," starring Florence Vidor. While no announcement as to the release date has been made, Associated Exhibitors intimated that "Woman Wake Up" will be available early in March and will start off a month characterized by three big features including Florence Vidor in "Woman Wake Up," Leah Baird in "Don't Doubt Your Wife" and the Wistaria Production, "Lady Godiva."

The cast which supports Florence Vidor includes George Meredith and Louis Calhern, and the production has been described as a comedy drama of the highest quality, both in settings and story which is in keeping with the nature of the Florence Vidor productions.

Hereafter to Be Known as Rodolf Valentino

Henceforth it is to be Rodolf Valentino, instead of "Rudolph." The Paramount star states that the original spelling of his name is with the o and f, that he uses it in all business transactions and that he prefers thus to be known to the motion-picture trade.

Short Subject and Late Feature Reviews

" Back Pay "

(Cosmopolitan-Paramount)

"BACK PAY," Cosmopolitan's latest feature for Paramount distribution is a heart interest drama with a punch. Fannie Hurst's gripping story made a good play, but transferred to the screen it makes even a better motion picture. The limitations of the stage prevented the spoken version from scoring with all its abundant highlights. On the silver sheet its vital ingredients are splendidly emphasized. It is the story of a country girl who confessed that she had a "crepe de chine soul" and who refused marriage with her boyhood lover because it meant all the ugly, drab things that culminate when wedlock and poverty go hand in hand. And when she finally acquires the lovely, luxurious things of life she takes them, clear-eyed, realizing fully what she is doing.

These touches were well established by Fannie Hurst, and Frank Borzage, who directed her "Humoresque," has brought them forth in brilliant manner. The picture is worthy of commendation because of this delicate treatment, though there are many other excellent things about it. It is a restful moment to discover a heroine of the screen who adopts the life of "lily of the field" without being tricked or deceived. The heroine, Hester Bevins, is a regular girl and real flesh and blood—one that will be recognized as possessing the vices and virtues of a human being and not a hand-painted Dresden china doll. The characters are not many and Frances Marion, who wrote the continuity, has established them clearly. There are no various plottings and counter-plottings for the sake of adding the w. k. picturey touch. Miss Marion and Mr. Borzage have seen to it that there is no excess of footage.

(Arista Film Corp.—State Rights Feature)

THIS is a dramatic picture visualizing the tragedy which has followed the Jew from the birth of history to the present day. While the theme contains a modern treatment of Jewish persecution under the Czar's regime in Russia, the thought is conveyed that the visualization is a development of what they have suffered throughout the history of their race. By treating it in modern fashion the author and director have acquainted the Hebrews and Gentiles with the tragedy.

It is a simple story, rather complicated through the introduction of many characters, yet one which keeps to its argument with fairly convincing force. The Cossacks pounce upon some innocent offenders and the cruelty culminates in pogroms which were the order of the day a few years ago. Women and children are brutally assassinated along with the men. The principal protagonist is placed against a wall and stoned, but he cries aloud to God for assistance. And it is given him. His tormentors remain to display their humility.

As the title indicates, the picture reveals the prejudices of certain races and religions against another. Some may take it as propaganda. But it is fraught with too much tragedy and incident pertaining to persecution to call it anything else than a true visualization of horrible conditions as they once existed in Russia and as they undoubtedly exist now in other quarters of the globe. The atmosphere is well suggested, even though the players are inclined to display exaggerated emotions. Again they suffer from an over-indulgence in the make-up box. But taking it as entertainment "Prejudice" is certain to appeal in quarters where any persecution exists—even though this persecution is merely slumbering. There is no doubt of its appeal in Jewish localities. As for other religions, the disciples or followers will admit that the story is correct. It is certain to inspire charity and sympathy everywhere. — Length, 6 reels. — LAURENCE REID.

Selznick News Reel

(Current Issue)

TO you want to know what the Selznick cameramen are doing? For one thing they were right on the job watching Will Hays affix his signature to his big movie contract. That complete harmony reigned is noticeable in the smiling countenances of Messrs. Zukor, Fox, Goldwin, Lewis Selznick, Myron Selznick, Williams, Quinn, Laemmle, Cochrane, Loew and various others. Restful to the optic nerve is Delysia registering the coyness of the eternal feminine as she smiles for the cameraman and you. She is departing for Europe and Pearl White appears to kiss her good-by. Others sailing for foreign ports are Lillian Russell, who still retains her perennial youth despite her sixty years. The actress is taking up a government position at a salary, it is said, of less than a dollar a year.

Claire Windsor is next introduced as the probable choice to fill the chair opposite Chaplin's at the breakfast table. Miss Windsor is a Seattle society beauty who wields a wicked tennis racket. She admits that Charlie's feet prevent him from dancing around the court—they might get tangled up. An interesting sketch is the oldest forty-niner who prefers a team of oxen to the flivver. A Parisian shot exposes the side-walk cafe, the midinettes preferring the cold with a warm stove near-by to being shut up inside. A thrilling shot reveals the dangerous pastime of skating to the power of a sail which is guided after the fashion of a sail-boat. The reel marks an innovation in titling, the captions being presented as if a part of the day's news and printed in neat shape. The excerpts take up the smallest possible space and stand out in bold relief against the black. It's a good idea and emphasizes the shots as being genuinely authentic.—LAURENCE REID.

" The Jungle Goddess "

(15 Episode Serial—Selig-Export & Import)

AFTER you have witnessed a portion of this serial and felt its thrills and watched the animals—the equipment of the Selig zoo—you feel like going out in front of the house shouting—"Hold your horses, here comes the parade!" Serials have come and gone, will come and go again, but "The Jungle Goddess-" quite surpasses them all when it comes to measuring out thrills by releasing a bunch of wild animal stunts. Mr. Selig's zoo is well known to contain an assortment that Messrs Ringling might envy. Putting them in a serial as the background for sensational incident which has to do with timely rescues—well the spectator is in for open-eyed entertainment.

The group of man-eating lions and tigers caught by an intrepid camerman with several close-ups are good for a creeping thrill up and down one's spine. The onlooker doesn't have to wait for things to start. The elephants, tigers, lions and apes come on and bring the suspense with them. What matters it if the story is wildly melodramatic. One isn't looking for the human touch in a serial. What one does expect is unadulterated action. From the moment that the child is whisked up in a balloon and deposited in the jungle—to be adopted by a barbaric race of blacks the spectator is held in a tight embrace of suspense. There is danger, for a religious idol-worshipper would use her as a sacrifice. But she has a champion. Like Daniel the lions avoid her. Which is enough to convince the evil forces that she possesses supernatural powers. Later when she grows to womanhood, the hero comes to rescue her. And the scenes are saturated with rescue thrills.

The child has stood between a scientist and a fortune. Hence her riddance. A hefty thrill reveals a big tiger pouncing on a native woman and tossing her to the ground. You have sympathy for the heroine on account of her tiny personality. Between extending her this quality and responding to the thrills—well one has a full entertainment in "The Jungle Goddess." Elinor Field and Truman Van Dyke play the leading roles. The atmosphere is well suggested. It is a fascinating jungle picture and exhibitors in the state rights field are certain to lug their money bags to the bank after playing it. For it is bound to attrack the crowd. —LAURENCE REID.

" Step This Way "

(Mermaid Comedy — Two Reels — Released Through Educational Exchanges, Inc.)

RICH hokum and rough and tumble action characterize this Mermaid comedy, directed and supervised by Jack White. For a start it pokes a little fun at bootleggers. The hootch is transported inside of a baby carriage and everything goes fine until the bottles start to leak. The cops make an early entry into the comedy, and never leave it. There are some circus scenes which provide the best fun. The one best gag is when one of the fugatives jumps through a huge circus billboard and is seen emerging from the open mouth of a huge hippopotamus by a drunk. There are many of the favorite gags brought in, each one varied enough to be good for a wild laugh.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Science at Home"

PROF. F. P. SMITH, of London demonstrates some simple electrical experiments in this reel, all of which can be executed by amateurs with no other material than can be found in any American home. It is a reel which will be of unusual interest to those boys and young men who are beginning to find that the mysteries of electricity, its properties, and effects, extremely fascinating. A static electrical machine is made from two phonograph records, pasted with tinfoil. The further development of the machine is made simple to the audience by detail, after which follows some scenes showing the results which may be obtained. These are interesting shots.—*MATTHEW A. "Primitive Life in Tennessee"

THE mountaineers of Tennessee have won the reputation of being among the most picturesque people of America, and this Kineto Review offers proof that they deserve the name. There are no modern improvements in the Lookout Mountain region. The people are still in the pioneer epoch. They live in log cabins, and the house wife does everything from sheering the sheep to combing and spinning the wool. The old farmer lights his pipe with flintlock and tinder-box. Candles are home made by pouring tallow into moulds, and the man of the house makes his own spoons from pewter.

"Hokus Pokus"

(Christie Comedy—Two Reels—Released Through Educational Exchanges, Inc.)

BOBBY VERNON comes to the fore in this Christie comedy, after quite an absence. It is a rural comedy, and the "opery house" plays a large part in the story. The back stage scenes are well done and the types in the audience are carefully selected. The story concerns a magician who is to give an exhibition of his art to the villagers. He selects Bobby and his girl for his assistants. Of course, Bobby can't do anything correctly. He shoves the goose up through the wrong trap door, and he uses force when he believes the magician has stabbed his sweetheart. For a climax there is a robbery executed by the former assistants of the professor. The jewelry, collected from the audience, disappears, and Bobby and the girl are wrongfully accused. But our hero straightens things out and catches the real crook.

Vernon does some Russian dancing in semi-slow motion which is effective. In his close-ups his facial contortions are very emphatic. Josephine Hill is the girl.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"So This Is London!"

(Prizma—One Reel)

THE city of London carries enough atmosphere to charm the world. The American, the German, the Frenchman, the Italian—each responds to this immense center of life. Its history, its glamour, its medieval lore brought down to the present day—these are all there for the interest of the traveler or picturegoer. If the latter is unable to avail himself of the pleasures to be gained by an actual visit, all he needs to do is to watch the theatre where the Prizma reel is showing. He will be rewarded as if he stood in Piccadilly Circus or along the Thames Embankment or gliding along in a London bus.

The color scheme brings out richly the flower "girl"—an old lady to be correct—and the sidewalk artist, who draws anything for the sake of the shilling. The spectator mounts a bus, rides by the Houses of Parliament, takes in St. Paul's and the Nelson Monument, travels on to the hour when the new guard displaces the old guard at St. James's Palace. This is a pompous ceremony. It is all done with much color and atmosphere—a tribute of medieval days. The guards in their red coats and high buffers going through their military maneuvers—a ceremony which always attracts a crowd—is the crowning climax of a study which should find a nifty place on any program.—LAURENCE REID..

"Bright Eyes"

(Mack Sennett Comedy-First National)

YOU merely have to glance at the title to understand that Ben Turpin is the star of this sparkling comedy from the Sennett lots. The comedian with the gifted eyes has a sure gloom-chaser here for it gives him the best opportunities he has had in some time. As long as Turpin has been appearing in pictures the directors have failed to take advantage that his face might stop a clock. But he glances at the time-piece on the mantel and the pendulum ceases to swing. He looks in a mirror and it breaks. Ben is up to other tricks here. He is aided in inspiring laughter by a rich assortment of clever titles—all of which have the true comedy spirit. The girl sends Billy Bevan, the butler, after a ham. Billy dons his Eskimo suit and goes into the refrigerator to bring it forth.

Do you want to know Ben's occupation? Well—he is in oil. His fame has preceded him, and after he has been ejected from the rich mamma's house, he is finally admitted and paid the proper attention. But villains are at work and Ben gets the air when mamma is made to believe that he is an imposter. Ben doesn't care. Why? The prettiest girl is the kitchen slavey. He gets aboard the flivver and has a thrilling time—thrilling for the audience, too. Trains just miss him. A sample of capitalizing Ben's trick eyes is seen when he is eating or drinking the soup. He puts the spoon in his neighbor's dish, thinking it his own until called attention to the breach of etiquette. "Bright Eyes" will make bright faces everywhere. Just book it and see for yourself.—Length, 2 reels.— LAURENCE REID.

"Shipwrecked Among Animals"

(Century Comedy—Universal)

THE cannibals are missing here and in their place are the animals. Harry Sweet carries on the antics here. He is discovered shipwrecked on a South Sea Island, attempting to impress his personality upon a native daughter. But the animals are too plentiful and too wild and Harry is forced to seek safety in flight. Universal, as the title indicates, has burlesqued its feature production, "Shipwrecked Among the Cannibals," and the tomfoolery is not long in arriving. The shipwreck scene itself is good for a hearty laugh. Harry fits a life-saver upon the dog and makes his way to the telephone booth. The wire is busy. The comedy releases other comic ideas too; which taken collectively makes it far above the average of its kind. Length 2 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"One Stormy Knight"

(Christie Comedy—Two Reels—Released Through Educational Exchanges, Inc.)

AS is usual with Christie comedies, "One Stormy Knight" is built upon stronger material than mere senseless slapstick. There is a story behind this action, and it provides opportunity for continual fun and some healthy laughs. It is all about a prize fight fan whose ticket for a big bout is stolen by his wife. But hubby sneaks off anyway, and wife, just as determined to see the fight, disguises as a man, and goes to her reserved seat. After this scene, which is well staged, comes the plot developments. A stag party is in progress, but there are thirteen at table, so wifie, still in man's clothes, is requisitioned. The party ends in wild confusion when the second wife unexpectedly returns. The guests are hid in all parts of the house. Here is a wild mix-up, which is complicated when the female prize fight fan changes to a woman's apparel and is discovered by the wife. There is considerable fun before the tangle is straightened out. Dorothy Devore is featured.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Schoolday Love"

(Campbell Comedy — Two Reels—Released Through Educational Exchanges)

W. S. CAMPBELL does not seem to quite be able to equal his first release for Educational, "The Stork's Mistake." His latest, "Schoolday Love," is an othodox "kid" comedy, well packed with those little cute gags which make for a good reception by an audience, and enacted by a couple of youngsters who know how to make the most of their childish appeal. It should, therefore, prove satisfactory at the box office, even if the action is along familiar lines.

The cast consists chiefly of a little boy, a littler girl, a monkey, dog and mule. The boy has a patent automobile, with a dog on a treadmill providing the motive power. The girl rides to school on the mule, with the monkey to keep her company. The youngsters are left for a time and the audience follows the fortune of a schoolmaster who is chased by a bear. Then comes the climax—the burning of a cabin and the rescue of the two children by the animals. These animals are well trained and a neat thrill is provided.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Peace and Quiet"

EDDIE LYONS, veteran comedian that he is, has brought out a rattling fine comedy for Arrow in this release. It is fast moving, and draws its material largely from the "haunted house" idea—an idea which can be worked cleverly for any number of laughs. "Peace and Quiet" has a whirlwind introduction. Eddie plays the part of a new editor. The typical chaotic newspaper office is pictured. To get revenge, a copy boy mixes the type so that a debutante is described as "wanted by the police." This is one of the many "journalistic bones" flashed on the screen.

The editor goes to a sanatarium for peace and quiet. So does the debutante who has been libeled. The sanatarium houses also a bootlegger and a superstitous housemaid. To secure solitude the bootlegger poses as a ghost and as a result the patients get anything but peace and quiet. There will be continual laughter during this ghost sequance, for the gags are sure fire and consistent.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"SATURDAY NIGHT"
(Famous Players—Lasky)

Mismated Marriages Theme Given Original Treatment

"SATURDAY NIGHT" is rather a peculiar offering for a De Mille picture. The first three or four reels are typical, relating through original and entertaining incident, titles, etc., what happened to bring about the marriage of a society bud to her chauffeur and of a rich young business man, fiancé of the girl referred to, to the daughter of his laundress. Then comes a series of sequences, rather on the farce comedy order, in which the "oil and water will not mix" idea is gotten over. Following this is some melodrama—a very well done fire scene with the heroine rescued in a realistic manner.

In the end the wives and husbands are explained as having been divorced, with the chauffeur happily married to the laundress and the other two deciding to try double harness together also.

The picture carries suspense, especially on the outcome of the story, but it is possible that the ending may not be entirely satisfactory to some of the fans.

The treatment, the theme, mis-mated marriages, has received gives the two people of the "400 class" all the best of it. The wife who has always been used to luxury until her marriage, loves her husband and wants to stick to him. Likewise the husband who has married the erstwhile laundress is unwilling to call quits. It is the other pair, bearing perfectly good Irish names, who insist on the divorces so they may marry.

The picture has been splendidly produced and is very well acted. It looks as if it might be cut to advantage in the sequences devoted to showing why "oil and water won't mix," but also there is some comedy in these scenes that are sure of getting over with audiences.

Acting honors go to Conrad Nagel and Leatrice Joy, probably because of more opportunities, and because their roles are sympathetic. The unusually large cast given place on the program is simply an oddity. Most of the parts except those of the first four players listed are only bits. Even Theodore Roberts appears in only one sequence. Length, 8,433 feet.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Revealing a society marital mix-up of exceptional interest, Cecil B. De Mille's "Saturday Night," will be shown at the ———— theatre next ————. The theme, which proves that men and women who marry outside of their own environment frequently find time to repent their rashness is said to be admirably presented. The plot revolves around a young man and woman of high social standing in life and another couple of humble origin and surroundings who by a peculiar twist of fate are led to the altar by a reversal of the usual scheme of things. The fashionable young man weds the daughter of a laundress and the aristocratic girl elopes with her chauffeur. The wealthy youth cannot bring himself to the level of his spouse who delights in trips to Coney Island. On the other hand, the chauffeur has the conventional idea of the middle class and lower strata that a bath should be indulged in only on Saturday night. In fact he is of the same cloth as the poor girl who married the wealthy scion.

How they come to realize their error and ultimately are brought together in more congenial ties, makes a thoroughly satisfying story—one filled with human touches, and typically De Mille action. Leatrice Joy, Conrad Nagel, Edith Roberts and Jack Mower are the leading players. The story was written by Jeanie MacPherson, one of the most gifted writers for the screen.

PROGRAM READERS

An intimate story of love that rushed too soon in marriage. One woman—his wife. The other—the wife of his friend. It is a novelty, this picture entitled "Saturday Night" directed by Cecil De Mille. It treats of an heiress who wedded her chauffeur, of a washerwoman's daughter who married a son of wealth—of these four, thrown together and facing a strange new world. See the breath-stopping rescue over the side of the railroad bridge! See the terrible tenement fire! See the sensational bathing dance of New York's revellers! See Coney Island's hosts at play and the accident that shocked society! It carries all the crash and tingle of the vividest melodrama and the poignant heart-tug of life. It is a picture of strange marriages—of four people endeavoring to upset the conventions. "Saturday Night." Colorful title isn't it? The feature will be at the ———— next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

This De Mille production should be exploited for its novelty. You should stress the features detailed in the Program Reader. Stage a fitting prologue—filled with color and imagination. Your lobby can exploit the stills—and you can put out compo-boards of the startling rescue. Bill it as another De Mille master picture. Emphasize that it carries a fine theme treated in novel and daring fashion. Play up the cast—the four leading players are all well known. And the title is colorful and unique. You should get a lot of attention from it in any manner which you exploit it. Play it up far in advance. Get people thinking about the title and what it suggests. Window card cut-outs will be furnished by your nearest exchange. Use them. Link up with stores for such co-operation. Bill it as a novel drama of life and romance, action and suspense.

CATCH LINES

A heart-stirring romance of every angle of New York life. With a brilliant cast and a dazzle of beauty and pleasure. See Cecil De Mille's "Saturday Night."

If an heiress eloped with her chauffeur and a millionaire married his pretty laundress—what would their wedded lives be like? See "Saturday Night."

"THE RULING PASSION"
(United Artists)

Great Entertainment; the Gem of the Season

HERE is a picture which didn't cost a million dollars, but it ought to gross a million which is a lot more important to everybody. Nothing quite so delightfully human, truly humorous, likable and entertaining has come through this season. There isn't much drama to "The Ruling Passion" and no heroics or thrills. It is just a simple little story about a business man who retires to rest and discovers that rest for him means not only rust but positive boredom combined with an alarming decline in health. Finally he goes into partnership with a young chap under an assumed name, regains his health, gets a fine young fellow for a son-in-law and has a good time beating an unscrupulous rival in the garage business.

Mr. Arliss as a comedian is a revelation. His pantomime is expressive and subtle; his characterization is sharply defined and always pleasing. However, the success of the picture is in no way entirely due to the star. There is a fine cast of types and a fine co-ordination of effort in every role. Doris Kenyon whose screen portrayals are well known to fans, does the best work of her career. Edward J. Burns makes a likable hero and Ida Darling, playing the part of the business man's wife, scores also.

"The Ruling Passion" is an adaptation of a S. E. P. story by Earl Deer Biggers. In its screen form it represents the kind of picture that press and public alike, in big towns and small ones, will not only approve but go out of their way to boost. There is no maudlin sentiment, no cheap thrills, no theatricals, no off color scenes, no domestic problem, to offend or with some, to disgust. It is as clean and sweet as any "Pollyanna" picture ever made without being trite or stereotyped. It carries interest from scene to scene simply by its narrative. You like the characters. You like the theme and you want it to come out just the way you know it is going to.

"The Ruling Passion" brings to the screen a new director in Harmon Weight, and what he has delivered indicates that a genius has been discovered, for "The Ruling Passion" is flawless technically. Continuity, lightings, tempo and camera angles are perfection. All in all, it is another "Skinner's Dress Suit" and that is saying a lot.—Length, 6,700 feet.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

James Alden.....George Arliss
Angie Alden.....Doris Kenyon
"Bill" Merrick.....Edward J. Burns
Mrs. Alden.....Ida Darling

Directed by Harmon Weight.
Photographed by Harry A. Fishbeck.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

George Arliss in a new role; in a characterization different from anything this famous star ever has portrayed either on the stage or screen. George Arliss as the star in a comedy-drama, with all the superb artistry, the speaking gestures, the deft touches and clear-cut pantomime for which he is famous. This is the promise of the management of the ———— theatre which announces the engagement of the new Arliss photoplay, "The Ruling Passion," founded upon Earl Derr Biggers' story "Idle Hands," which will be shown next ————.

The star has the role of a philanthropist, a retired manufacturer of automobiles, who refuses to remain idle in his retirement. Adventures multiply as James Alden assumes the name of "John Grant" by day and mends automobiles in a garage in which he is a half-owner with a young man who unwittingly falls in love with Alden's daughter. It is a picture marked for its deft shading of character, for its intimate comedy, for its snug romance. Mr. Arliss is supported by a cast that includes Doris Kenyon, Edward J. Burns, Ida Darling, J. W. Johnston and others. "The Ruling Passion" offers a good argument that it is better to work than to stay in retirement—and that working is better than rest for anyone in search of health.

PROGRAM READERS

You have heard of people living a dual life. Usually they have a dual existence which makes them honorable by day-time and criminal by night. The rich clubman and stock broker or man of affairs may pursue honorable dealings in the broad daylight. He may be a representative of the most sterling integrity. Yet he may be criminally inclined at night. But here comes a picture which presents a man leading a double life for the fun of it—or rather for the fun of retaining his health. George Arliss is the star—which is enough to state that it is superbly acted. He plays the part of a wealthy retired manufacturer of automobiles. At night he is the polished clubman, the man of social position. By day he is a worker in a garage. Thus his brushing with the common world makes him a philasopher and keeps him at balance with things. It is a change of environment. And he profits by it. So come and be royally entertained by this interesting feature, "The Ruling Passion." At the ———— next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is George Arliss again in a superb role—which he makes the most of with his exceptional histrionic gifts. Make mention that the star who flashed his talent in "The Devil" and "Disraeli" is here again, demonstrating his superb artistry. Make mention that a notable cast assists him—a cast including Doris Kenyon, J. W. Johnston and others equally well known. Your crowd is familiar with a few of them. So play up the personalities. Tell that the picture is a semi-humorous account of a man who refused to retire after he had announced his retirement. He discovered that rest would not do him as much good as work. But this work must be found in a different occupation. Play up this plot and emphasize its novelty. Tell that Earl Derr Biggers, author of many stories and plays wrote the story originally called "Idle Hands." A prologue carrying real novelty can be suggested from the theme.

"TEN NIGHTS IN A BARROOM"

(Blazed Trail Productions—Arrow Film Corp.)

Old Time Favorite Makes Vivid Melodrama on Screen

HERE is a picturization of the old-time melodrama that has been running neck and neck with "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in a popularity race during the past six decades. "Ten Nights in a Barroom" was first of all a short story, imported from England. Then it was a novel, and later a stage play that travelled through every hamlet in the United States, and now it is a screen melodrama, more colorful and more realistic than either book or play.

All the elements that made the play so popular have been left intact. The curse of drink, that dread appetite which comes near to ruining a man's life; the pathos of the death of his little daughter; the suffering of his family; his final reformation and the destruction of the villians and their saloon—all this passes across the screen vividly and impressively. Call it an old-time theme if you will, but you must also admit its certain appeal.

It is a rural drama, differing from the stage play in its locale. The action takes place in the north, in a logging country. This allows, in the climax, a sequence showing a log jam, which, when it is broken, carries down towards the rapids both the chief villain and the hero. There is a thrilling rescue of the latter. Romance is not neglected in the screen version. An interesting love story is kept before the audience. Oscar Apfel, the director, has been careful not to overdo his scenes of drunken degradation, but at the same time he brings in every iota of pathos when he shows the opening of the saloon, and the clever scheming of the villains to bring patronage to their new enterprise. He shows them trick the hero of his mill, after they have got him under the influence of liquor. The man sinks lower and lower, becomes useless as a workman. As usual, it is his wife and child who suffer. The child comes to the saloon to urge her father to come home. When a thrown tumbler hits her, she is taken home, and later dies. The man begins to realize the evil of drink, and then sets about to seek revenge for his daughter's death. This affords opportunity for the thrills. A huge, three-story frame building is burned to the ground. The log jam is the big punch, excellently photographed, the suspense of which is carefully worked up. The man abandons his idea of revenge.

Without doubt, Arrow Film has a melodrama in "Ten Nights" which is the exact type of thriller which pleases a huge number of picturegoers. It is effectively acted throughout, with John Lowell and Baby Ivy Ward bearing most of the responsibility. The comedy relief is not neglected.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Ten Nights in a Barroom," the big screen production which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— is a film version of the famous novel and play which swept the country some half century ago. Regarded as one of the classics of the American stage years ago, "Ten Nights in a Barroom" played in practically every town and city in the United States. It has been picturized for the first time, with the result that the worth of that story and play is proved conclusively. That such a masterpiece will never grow old is shown by the tremendous success which greeted this photoplay in every city in which it has been shown to date.

In this cast of this picture are John Lowell, playing Joe Morgan, and Baby Ivy Ward, playing Little Mary Morgan. The production was directed by Oscar Apfel. The picture follows the novel closely, but in it have been incorporated some of the most realistic thrills and exciting action that has ever been seen on the screen. A huge three-story frame building is burned to the ground, and there is a log jam which is the last word in screen thrills. Those who remember the old play will be impressed by the much wider range of realism which is permitted by the screen.

PROGRAM READERS

The unusual offering of the ———— theatre for ———— is "Ten Nights in a Barroom," the picture version of the famous stage play which is known to practically every man, woman and child in the United States, and which has been witnessed by a great number of them. For probably no other stage play had such an extended run in every large city and received such a universal welcome in the smaller villages as "Ten Nights in a Barroom," when it was first produced sixty years ago. It ranks with "Uncle Tom's Cabin" as one of the classics of the American stage.

The screen version is naturally much more elaborate than the stage version. It is enacted by an all-star cast including John Lowell and Baby Ivy Ward. Some of the most realistic thrills ever filmed are to be witnessed in this photodrama, and as a result it is one of the best rounded photoplays of the year.

CATCH LINES

A picturization of America's most famous melodrama. A story that will live forever.

"RECKLESS CHANCES"

(Playgoers—Pathe)

Snappy Railroad Story Should Please 'Em Everywhere

TRUST a railroad story to carry the brand of action which interests the red-blooded reader or spectator. Here is J. P. McGowan with "Reckless Chances," which may be catalogued as snappy entertainment. This director believes in incident. He will go to any length to incorporate it. And here he has revealed an outdoor drama visualizing a deal of adventurous action. While several of the situations have been used before, yet it carries such a full quota of thrills that no one is able to complain. It is a Western, this "Reckless Chances," and concerns a group of thieves robbing the railroad. The hero is under suspicion and when it is shown that he is in love with the daughter of a superintendent, you can see that the element of confiict is well established.

The actor-director, possessing a vigorous personality, is able to look the part of the section foreman. Whether he misses once in a while in measuring out logical detail does not matter just so long as there is added a hefty punch. The spectator may take a great deal for granted here, but he will admit he is seeing crisp action which contains enough incident to satisfy completely. The hero is arrested and escapes, to meet the heroine, and through her influence is given a job in the yards. A subsequent elopement occurs which is as thrilling as it is amusing. The sky pilot is thrown off a high bridge into the freight car containing the young couple. The fact that he bobs up none the worse for his experience sort of gives it a comedy angle of an exaggerated nature. However, it serves its purpose in adding one of the thrills. The section foreman is beset on several sides by the thieves, but he manages to vindicate himself and prove to the girl that her suspicions are wrong. It may be added that the robbers are caught.

Mr. McGowan, playing the lead, has known just how to direct himself in bringing out the incident. He has collected proper atmosphere as well as a personable leading woman in Dorothy Wood. Others who give good account of themselves are Andrew Waldron and Robert Walker. It is an obvious story—easy to anticipate from the beginning, but the value of fast-moving action offers full compensation. There are no pauses visible. McGowan gingers it up so that it travels on regular through train schedule.—Length, 5 reels. —Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Terry Nolan.....J. P. McGowan
Nora Murphy.....Dorothy Wood
Dan Murphy.....Andrew Waldron
Harry Allen.....Robert Walker

By Anthony W. Coldswey.
Directed by J. P. McGowan.
Photographed by C. Welty.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

In "Reckless Chances," the feature which brings J. P. McGowan to the ———— theatre as star and director next ———— the spectator is afforded a chance to revel in a thrilling Western melodrama. It is shown here that the course of true love does not run smooth—even on steel rails. It is a railroad story having to do with the modern West and robberies. Carloads of gold ore are mysteriously and regularly stolen, and it looks as though someone "on the inside" were in league with the thieves. Circumstantial evidence against McGowan as Terry Nolan causes his arrest. While making an escape from the sheriff he encounters a pretty girl in distress. After that no chance is too reckless to be near her.

The star is at his best as the romantic Irishman. He has added a full quota of thrills which include several picturesque fist fights; an automobile driven by a girl, smashing into a wagon; a unique and sensational elopement, in which McGowan sweeps the girl from the ground onto a moving train and other colorful incidents. The cast includes the charming Dorothy Wood as the heroine, Andrew Waldron and Robert Walker. The picture is said to entertain through every scene of its five reels. It contains adventure and humor.

PROGRAM READER

He was a fugitive from justice. But he forgot personal dangers to rescue a maiden in distress. After that he was Cupid's captive. Adventure-loving and fearless, for her he risked every reckless chance. "Reckless Chances" which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with J. P. McGowan as the star is a fast-moving western melodrama. It comes at full speed, revealing the outdoor, modern West, rich ore, daring, mysterious robberies, a blue-eyed damsel in distress, a fire-eating father, and an adventure-loving daredevil of fortune. The cast is well balanced, the leading woman being Dorothy Wood whose personal charm and zest for adventure enable her to acquit herself creditably in the feminine role of heroine. Mr. McGowan also directed.

SUGGESTIONS

As this is a rip-snorting western melodrama starring the rugged J. P. McGowan, it would be well to use picturesque adjectives in your campaign of advertising. Stress the fact that it is a fast-moving drama, revealing an array of sure-fire incidents which carry one thrill after another. Exploit the fact that there is a thrill in most every scene. Play up the heroine played by Dorothy Wood. State that this actress possesses considerable charm and talent. Use a snappy teaser campaign. Use stills and put over the picture with a bang. Cuts, mats and other details of exploitation can be obtained from your nearest Pathe exchange. Play up the star as a figure who is keen on adding a healthy and vigorous line of action to his pictures. The title can be used for snappy teaser ads.

CATCH LINES

He took reckless chances even when he was a fugitive from justice. See J. P. McGowan, the vigorous star in the vivid melodrama, "Reckless Chances."

Toot-toot, ding-dong! Here she comes at full speed. See the vivid, throbbing railroad story. See "Reckless Chances," a picture of thrills and action.

"WHY ANNOUNCE YOUR MARRIAGE"
(Selznick)

Pleasing Story on a Novel Theme

THIS Selznick picture, starring Elaine Hammerstein, is a version of the well-known bedroom farce which has served as a medium upon the New York stage. In all likelihood the author gained his inspiration from Fanny Hurst's novel scheme of matrimonial bliss—which has to do with husband and wife maintaining separate establishments in order that each may express life without any obligations. The picture because of this novel idea is something out of the ordinary. It gets away from orthodox channels and sparkles with fair brilliancy for a major portion of its action. That it offers a "let-down" in its development is to be expected, since there is no possible chance to add constant touches of variety.

"Why Announce Your Marriage?" contains the usual farcical complications which serve the domestic drama. The couple manage to keep their marriage a secret even from their most intimate friends, and, in avoiding trouble and "busybodies" and burglars and irate papas, they only succeed in finding themselves involved with one complication after another. The director has done pretty well in keeping it going to feature length. In reality it is not heavy enough to extend through three reels. The padding scenes do not intrude so they irritate. In fact, there is enough broad comedy supplied to take care of it whenever it gives evidence of fading out. The originality of the theme does not extend to the situations beyond the maintenance of the separate establishments.

It is embarrassing to the newly-weds when hubby, unable to remain longer away from his bride, secretes himself in her apartment. The guests misunderstand the situation, and there is much gossip and chatter concerning the wife's reputation. In fact, many are horrified. It is later that the young benedict and his spouse are surprised in his home. And he is under strong suspicion. The broad element of farce is introduced here. A burglar is trailed by an inebriated gentleman into the home being occupied by the couple. The first mentioned has collected various jewels and valuables through his skillful fingers. The latter has discovered the marriage license. And it is at this point that comedy values so familiar in the exaggerated pieces are given expression. In and out of bedroom doors the drunk and the burglar pass without being caught until the home is in a topsy-turvy state. Explanations develop, the drunk reveals the license and the newly-weds are forgiven.

The atmosphere is excellent, the exteriors and production end of the picture being highly attractive. Miss Hammerstein and Niles Welch play the central roles in spirited fashion. Arthur Housman is inclined to overact the drunk, giving too much stress to the comedy manner of Leon Errol. In all, this picture is a good bet for any house. Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Elaine Hammerstein in her latest Selznick picture, "Why Announce Your Marriage?" is announced as the photoplay feature for the ———— theatre beginning ————. The story is by Lewis Allen Browne and Alan Crosland, while the latter also directed. "Why Announce Your Marriage?" is a serio-comedy which deals with the ultra-modern method of separately maintained establishments by the contracting parties in marriage. The star plays the part of a successful artist, who refuses to give up her career to be merely a wife. But she's in love. And so she marries the man, but they keep it hidden from their friends.

Now there are many young couples who have kept their marriages secret, but only because someone would disapprove. In this instance, everyone is urging the couple to marry although they are married already. But the newlyweds grow careless. And the gossips get busy. And there's a deal of embarrassment for everyone until a burglar upsets everything. It's a sparkling affair well shaded with comedy touches and charmingly acted by the star and her assistants.

PROGRAM READER

It is the habit of most young people to keep marriages secret only when someone would surely disapprove. In Elaine Hammerstein's newest picture, "Why Announce Your Marriage?" which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— there is a marriage contracted by a pair of devoted lovers which they keep secret although their friends are constantly urging them to get married. The secret being that they must continue in their work without any matrimonial ties hindering them. It is a comedy story tinctured with romance and sentiment. And it furnishes food for thought in many of its situations. You will see whether a woman should abandon her career when she marries. Miss Hammerstein gives a charming performance assisted by Niles Welch.

SUGGESTIONS

There is a food for thought aroused by the inquisitive tone of the title. It can be made the main argument for your exploitation. A series of questions can be issued in Program Readers or throw-aways or door-knob hangers, asking your patrons if marriages are more successful when husbands and wives maintain separate establishments, or if marriage can be successful without a home and children, or if a woman should abandon her career for marriage. These ideas will stimulate a deal of thinking on the question. Bill the picture as a serio-comedy which contains a delightful romance, some dramatic moments and good heart interest. The cast is well known. So feature the players.

"EXIT THE VAMP"
(Paramount)

Ethel Clayton Puts Sparkle in This Conventional Story

HERE is a conventional story which has been done a score of times on the screen and which because of its familiarity has lost considerable of its charm since it was first used as the framework of a picture. Miss Beranger, the author, has dressed it up by treating it in a semi-humorous manner, thus disarming the spectator from being unduly analytical. It is all about putting the "skids" under the vamp and spoiling her pretty game of ensnaring a husband by a wife who adopts the conventional tactics. In other words she possesses enough ingenuity of mind to profit by the lesson. She simply combats the charms of the vamp by revealing some of her own.

The story is really of a single-track nature which carries no surprises or incident. In fact there has been little attempt to provide novel touches. The idea at first establishes some sure-fire theatrical moments, and sympathy is always for the heroine because of her efforts to maintain her home and happiness. Those spectators who have been witnessing a certain brand of two-reel comedies will recognize the story. In fact it is a two-reel comedy padded out to feature length, but where it surpasses the shorter subject is in the interpretation. Miss Clayton does some effective work as the wife and really shows that she is something of a comedienne. Looking resplendent in some exceedingly smart gowns it is no wonder that the erring husband, played in gingerly fashion by T. Roy Barnes, who, incidentally, supplies his peculiar brand of humor, returns to the domestic hearth. The importance of lovely gowns is not overlooked by Miss Beranger. And here is the lesson for the wife who allows herself to become dowdy.

Miss Clayton plays a devoted wife and mother who, discovering her home about to be wrecked by a slinky-gowned, long-eyed vamp, proceeds to study up on the latest methods of Eve and Cleopatra, and with the assistance of a young jewelry salesman whose life she has saved while serving as a Red Cross nurse, she succeeds in "revamping" the derelict husband.The interludes are filled with the little touches of domesticity—such as seeing to it that hubby never has a moment to compalin. The wife does these little domestic duties in such easy fashion that her worth is never appreciated until hubby realizes the utter worthlessness of the vamp.

The picture has its pleasing qualities and the exhibitor should exploit the cast which includes Theodore Roberts and Mickey Moore. It carries a snappy title, is well staged and the story is told in a smooth manner.—Length 5 reels.—Pearl Gaddis, Atlanta, Ga.

Directed by Frank Urson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Ethel Clayton, the Paramount star, will appear at the ———— theatre next ———— in her newest picture entitled "Exit the Vamp." This is a fascinating story written by Clara Beranger which tells of a family approaching the shoals of disaster, owing to an erring husband. The wife who is little appreciated by him allows herself to become a good deal of a drudge. Meanwhile he is playing the philanderer with a young woman who has no moral scruples. The wife, realizing that the family ties will be severed unless she acts promptly, proceeds to play the part of the adventuress—in fact to play it so strongly that her erring husband will return to the home. And she succeeds through many dramatic scenes.

The story contains no small amount of humor which is furnished by T. Roy Barnes as the husband. Miss Clayton, who surpasses the vampire at her own game, gives a creditable performance in the leading role, while Fontaine La Rue as the wicked siren gives a colorful portrayal. Theodore Roberts plays a small part with his customary finesse. Frank Urson directed this picture.

PROGRAM READERS

If you were a happy married woman, blessed with children and all the necessary requisites which compose a comfortable home—and a woman came between you and stole your husband's affections, would you sit back and pout, or would you create a scene? Would you become emotional and drive his affections away entirely? Or would you play the game of the adventuress and show to your husband that he has misjudged your qualities? If you played that game the chances are you would win him back. For he would appreciate that you knew how to be a good sport. If you played that game you would leave no stone unturned to accomplish your mission. Ethel Clayton plays a similar game in her new picture, "Exit the Vamp," and wins. The feature will be shown at the ———— theatre next ————. In the cast are T. Roy Barnes and Theodore Roberts.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a domestic story with considerable humorous flourish. Play up that it teaches a lesson in faithfulness on the part of a misjudged wife. The woman had lost her husband's affections and proceeds to win him back by playing the game of her rival. This is a good idea which will win the sympathy of the onlooker. More than one woman who is placed in an identical situation will profit by it. So stress this fact in your advertising copy. Get out the young married couples. Play it up as a lesson in domesticity which cannot afford to be missed. Play up Ethel Clayton as having an ideal vehicle. And mention that Theodore Roberts and T. Roy Barnes are in the cast. A dance prologue would be suggestive if you revealed a male dancer unable to choose between his partners—one given to siren display of passion—the other faithful.

CATCH LINES

"LITTLE MISS SMILES"
(Fox)

Human Interest Drama Is Shirley Mason's Best Bet

THE picture "Humoresque" is still lending its influence. Shirley Mason appears in an intimate sketch of Jewish family life in her newest release, "Little Miss Smiles." It suggests Fannie Hurst's classic in character drawing and atmosphere even though it fails to sound any big dramatic note. Its chief outstanding feature is its element of heart interest which is admirably blended with pathos and humor. Certainly it makes a good audience picture and one calculated to score for its humanities. Here is family life represented with the poverty angle strongly emphasized. Naturally it impels the spectator to extend his sympathy to the Jewish mother and her five children.

The location is a tenement district in the heart of the Ghetto and the opening scenes are filled with the intimate touches which put "Humoresque" over. The plot as it develops must be accepted as convincing, although it does not carry any pretentious outline. The humble life of the Aaronsons, with the mother dominant in most of the action is appealing to a degree, but the husband and father is not so clearly sketched. In fact he fails to register as a true type because of his lack of energy. The children are Esther, played by the star, and a brother, played by Arthur Rankin, who aspires to be the lightweight champion. We mention these because the other children are merely sketched in for atmosphere or background. Esther helps with the housework and smiles in the face of adversity. And when the doctor comes around to attend the mother's failing eyesight, he remains to fall in love with the good-natured girl.

It is this intimate touch which makes this story so attractive. On the surface it isn't much of a picture. It is easily followed and the outcome is apparent from the start. But the heart appeal keeps it going because it inspires the deepest sympathy. The dramatic note intrudes when the pugilistic brother overhears an ugly rumor connecting his sister with a crook. A murder follows, but the boy is cleared. Thus when the mother returns from the hospital and the bandages are removed from her eyes, everything ends well. Gaston Glass, who played a Jewish boy in "Humoresque," enacts the part of the doctor in convincing fashion. "Little Miss Smiles" is clean entertainment, not an inspired story, but one that is always sure to appeal to the emotions.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Shirley Mason is the star of this human picture of New York Ghetto life which appears at the ———— theatre next ————. The dainty star appears as Esther Aaronson who, as a member of the Aaronson family, is one who is constantly striving to smile through adversities. The story records the delicate touches of Jewish life, revealing in sympathetic strokes the strong family tendencies and the spirit of good-will and charity that permeates such an environment. The Aaronsons have much to be thankful for. Esther is beloved by a young doctor, although sorrows come when it is realized that the mother's sight is failing. The brother has pugilistic ambitions and such tendencies on his part provoke a deal of unhappy moments for the other members of the family. In particular Papa Aaronson is diispleased.

The boy becomes the associate of evil acquaintances and his determination to avenge his sister's insults at the hands of one of the gangsters invites a deal of dramatic complication. The story is saturated with homespun touches which register for their pathos and heart interest. Miss Mason is pert and pretty and pathetic at times and gives a good account of herself in the leading role. Others who contribute noteworthy performances are Gaston Glass, Arthur Rankin and George Williams.

PROGRAM READER

Do you remember "Humoresque"—that sterling picture of Jewish family life? Well, "Little Miss Smiles" is a vest-pocket edition of that celebrated offering. It also depicts Jewish family life—that life throbbing with human emotions in the heart of the Ghetto. The feature, starring dainty Shirley Mason, is the attractions at the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. It treats of the gladness and sorrow which are visited upon the Aaronson family. You sympathize with the little household, the mother ever gentle and kind, the father determined to bring his children up so that they will face the world proudly; you will sympathize with the little heroine who smiles when shadows eliminate the sunshine for a while. See "Little Miss Smiles," a captivating picture of human emotions.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a vest-pocket edition of "Humoresque." And it would be well to capitalize the fact. Tell that while it does not soar to the same heights dramatically speaking, it nevertheless tells a captivating story of human emotions—of a wonderful family life so characteristic of the Hebrews. Feature the fact that it treats of Jewish family life in an appealing manner. Bring out the pathos, sunshine, shadows of the story. A prologue can depict a slice of the Ghetto for a background—with the characters enacting their roles in pantomime if they are not gifted in dialect. Play up the star and tell that she has an interesting number—one containing a generous slice of heart appeal. Tell that Gaston Glass, who also appeared in "Humoresque" is the leading man.

CATCH LINES

See "Little Miss Smiles," an appealing study of Jewish family life. Shirley Mason is the star.

At the ———— next ———— will appear dainty Shirley Mason in "Little Miss Smiles," an appealing study of the home and hearth.

"RUSE OF THE RATTLER"
(Playgoers-Pathe)

Lively Western Reveals a Regular He-Man Hero

SO many Westerns have reached the screen with "posey" heroes carrying out the demands of lively action and incident—heroes whose only resemblance to the cowboy or the ranchman or the miner is in the manner of dress that it is restful for tired eyes to discover an actor who appears like the regular type. J. P. McGowan looks as if he might have grown up in the West. He seems to be a perfect representation of what he pretends. Naturally he makes the hero in "The Ruse of the Rattler" a regular he-man. Thus this lively picture takes on an appeal which would surely have been missing had it been played by the poseur. Since McGowan directed this feature it is safe to say that he has not neglected to provide snappy incidents. He is a firm believer in fast-moving action.

"The Ruse of the Rattler" is a Western which does not offer anything new in theme or characterization. It has appeared before under several titles. Spectators will appreciate that it is filled in many places with stock situations or the hokum that has proven reliable over a score of years. But if it lacks novelty it at least keeps moving. There is a generous sample of adventure and a goodly supply of thrills. And the element of suspense crops out time and again to keep you amply excited. The star plays a good-bad man, first introduced by Bill Hart. They call him the Rattlesnake because he gives warning before he strikes. And this reptile is the only honorable one of its kind. He is bad until he falls under the spell of the heroine's personality. And straightway his redemption is assured.

The villain employs him to embarrass the Sandersons, but the Rattler is unable to carry out his task once he feels the romantic urge. He discovers that the plotter double-crossed him and his object thenceforth is to bring him to justice. The girl with true feminine intuition realized that the hero would help them. The plot goes into complications which build up suspicion against the Rattler until the denouement is reached. He pursues the villain and it is all over. While the story revolves around an attempt to cheat a family out of property, the incident is so melodramatic and fast-moving that one has no time to remember that it is old stuff. McGowan works quickly. He covers his ground so well that you overlook familiar situations. The atmosphere is excellent.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A fast-shooting, rough-riding, heart-sweeping Western story about a good bad man, some bad men not so good, and a pretty, courageous and spirited girl is "The Ruse of the Rattler," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— with J. P. McGowan as the star. In the supporting company are Lillian Rich, Jean Perry, Stanley Fritz, Dorothy Wolbert and Andrew Waldron. Mr. McGowan portrays "The Rattlesnake," because like the reptile, he never struck before rattling a warning. He was a bad man but he played fair, and when he was commissioned by Henry Morgan (who never did any criminal work he could hire the other fellow to do) to turn the Sandersons out of their home, he resigned on the job. The reason was that he had looked deep into the beautiful eyes of Helen Sanderson, and read there such courage and truth that all his brute strength was powerless before her challenge. The picture takes the spectator on an exciting journey—one filled with intimate thrills, romantic touches and typical Western atmosphere. The backgrounds are truly picturesque. Mr. McGowan directed in addition to playing the leading character.

PROGRAM READER

They called him "The Rattlesnake" because he always gave warning before he struck. He was a good bad man—was J. P. McGowan. And when his eyes flashed with anger or when he drew his guns—well it behooved everyone to look out! It is a rip-snorting Western melodrama that is revealed in "The Ruse of the Rattler," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. It carries thrills in abundance, a fine flavor of romance, intimate touches charged with the keenest suspense and action which is constantly on the move. There's a railroad thrill in this, an added measure to other moments of suspense. The Rattler always played fair. But when he looked into the eyes of the girl—well. Come and see this moving melodrama. Filled with punches and atmosphere, action and suspense.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture is adorned by a colorful title which should be exploited for its "eye-catching" qualities. Tell that it is a vigorous Western—telling of a good bad man who resembled the rattlesnake in character since he always gave warning before he struck. He always played fair. So play up the plot as suggestive of this line of campaign. Bring forth that the picture is shot with thrills—one in particular showing a vivid train wreck. A compo-board detailing this would attract attention. Sepia lobby displays can be obtained from your Pathe exchange. So get busy and put them up in your lobby. News notes, briefs, etc., can be used for your paper campaign. Bring forth that it is a colorful Western—where there is something doing every minute.

CATCH LINES

He resembled the rattlesnake—he always gave warning before he showed his fangs. See "The Ruse of the Rattler."

Colorful thrills, fast-moving action, tense moments of suspense, sweet moments of romance—these are combined in happy fashion in "The Ruse of the Rattler," the colorful melodrama which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with J. P. McGowan.

"THE GRIM COMEDIAN"
(Goldwyn)

Theatrical Story Is Fair Entertainment Even With Faulty Situations

THE press book announces that this offering is Rita Weiman's first contribution to the screen, her other pictures being adaptations of published stories and plays. Since the author knows her subject matter as it pertains to theatrical life it is safe to say that she has not erred in saturating the story with proper atmosphere. It is a rather bold theme which is exposed here and doubtless in its original shape contained some vital strokes which have since been expurgated. The picture is told in narrative form, although the personal pronoun is not used, and has for its theme a "lily of the field" who will save her innocent convent-reared daughter at all hazards from the philanderer who has sponsored the mother on the road to success.

The introductory scenes reveal intimate life back stage with the central figure accepting the attentions of the wealthy roue. She maintains a sumptuous apartment which the spectator may believe is paid for out of her salary. This is logical since she is the star of the company. It isn't until the third reel is introduced that the daughter announces that she is coming East to live with her mother. And straightway the latter move heaven and earth to keep the girl innocent of her amours and to see to it that the daughter does not develop any unhappy affairs of her own. Where the characterization seems to falter is in the selfish attitude of the mother. She is unable to realize that the girl is grown to womanhood and is desirous of living her life unhampered by sentimental advice. The philanderer, seeing the innocence of the girl is genuine, experiences the first decent love of his life. He sends her flowers anonymously and when she discovers his identity she accepts his other attentions. The boyhood sweetheart who has also come East is relegated to the background. And he is requested to guard the girl from meeting the mother's former lover to the extent of watching the door of the room in which she is secreted. Indeed, the daughter's life is a troublesome one. She is treated like a bad little child. It happens that her rich admirer secretes her while he attempts to argue her mother into granting her consent for his marriage. But she doesn't trust him. Finally she shoots him in the hand. He answers: "I never realized a love could be so strong." The girl is given her freedom and rushes out the door as if the man was a mere acquaintance—rushes out straight into the arms of the faithful boy from the West. Thus the mother, if one may be allowed to deal in suppositions, is instrumental in sending the philanderer back to his old life. The situations arising from the mother's duty toward her daughter do not appear convincing even though she is guided by a powerful love. Perhaps had a more gifted actress—one who could express the emotions correctly—been entrusted with the role the development would ring more genuine. Jack Holt gives a polished performance as the social lion. The picture is excellently staged.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Grim Comedian," the new Goldwyn picture to be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days, beginning ————, is the story of an actress-mother's sacrifice of a life of luxury that her convent-bred daughter may not know of the means by which she was educated. The mother is a minor actress who has won the esteem of a Broadway rounder, and through his beneficence has been able to provide well for her daughter. But when the girl grows up and wants to come to her mother, the latter cannot go on with her former life.

The man in the case, however, is not to be disposed of easily, especially after seeing the daughter. Then a conflict between the mother's love for her daughter and the first genuine affection of the rounder for the unspoiled girl furnishes a thrilling climax to a most unusual dramatic story. The author, Rita Weiman, has written many stories and plays. "The Grim Comedian" is her first story written directly for the screen. The director has provided a fitting atmosphere and has handled the cast in an efficient manner. The players include Jack Holt, Gloria Hope, Phoebe Hunt, and John Harron.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a theatrical story which because of its authorship should be exploited as a picture which is true to life. Rita Weiman, the author, has contributed many short stories and plays. "The Acquittal" is one of her Broadway stage successes. You can bill the picture as an unusual one which features life back stage—the elements of action, suspense, romance and pathos being dominant. A prologue can feature a dancing number or a sketch symbolic of theatrical life. The cast includes Jack Holt and Gloria Hope and their names should be prominently exploited. The form letter should be used to acquaint your crowd with its merits. And snappy catch lines and teasers should be employed in your advertising copy. Play up the mother-instinct which is dominant in the theme.

CATCH LINES

An intimate glimpse of New York theatrical life is exposed in "The Grim Comedian." Don't miss this picture of heart-throbs, action, pathos and suspense.

"FRENCH HEELS"
(Holtre Productions-W. W. Hodkinson)

Dancing Scenes Best Asset of Irene Castle Picture

IRENE CASTLE, whose grace and lightness of foot raised her to dizzy heights of popularity with the American public from the time she first danced professionally, does not make an auspicious return to the screen after a lapse of two years. "French Heels" allows her to dance before the camera, and in this respect it is to be commended. But as a well-rounded screen story—the kind that holds a spectator by suspense or strength of plot—it is not so successful. Its lengthy footage is against it, giving it a slow start. The story stretches over a period of years, and no consequental action develops from situations which seem bound to bring about dramatic strength.

The story opens at the time of the return of American troops. "Palma May's" brother has been killed abroad, and her father has died. So she makes her living dancing in a New York cabaret. Here we are introduced to the villainous theatrical manager, but contrary to expectations, he concocts no villainy. After a lengthy courtship, she marries the son of a rich lumber king. There is some sort of labor trouble in the lumber camp, and a hurry call sends her husband flying to the North. She goes with him ,and there the honeymoon is spent. It appears that father-in-law is not quite satisfied with the match, so he leaves the couple in a crude log cabin, with no modern improvements, to "prove themselves." It is to be a test.

After a time the rigid wilderness life pales on the gay young bride, and she eagerly accepts an invitation extended by the theatrical manager to attend a dinner party at his hunting lodge, which is conveniently located. But again this villain does not run true to form. He behaves in almost heroic fashion and nothing develops. The titles hint that the girl is ready to rebel against lumber camp life and return to the White Way, when some sort of a mutiny among the men develops, and her husband is injured. This changes everything. Father-in-law relents, and there is a happy ending. The physical action in the climax is not over-realistic.

In the beginning of the picture—the New York cabaret sequence—there is rich scenic investiture. It is here that Miss Castle is allowed to dance, and in these scenes that her admirers will find plenty over which to enthuse. She is as graceful and as versatile as ever. Those who come to see her dance—and there will be a great number—will not be disappointed.—Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Palma May ..... Irene Castle
Keith Merwyn ..... Charles Gerard
Lieut. John Tabor ..... Ward Crane
Jarvis Tabor ..... Howard Truesdale
Camp Foreman ..... Thomas Murray

From Clarence Buddington Kelland's story.
Directed by Edwin L. Hollywood.
Adapted by Eve Unsell.
Robert Stuart, cameraman.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the best known personages in America is the star of "French Heels," the feature picture at the ———— theatre on ————. She is Irene Castle, known in every city and village in the United States as the most versatile exponent of the art of dancing that America has ever produced. From the time she first started dancing with the late Vernon Castle, this remarkable dancer has risen steadily in popularity, and looked upon as the final arbitrator in matters of the Terpsichorean art.

In "French Heels," the first picture which she has produced in two years, she proves once more that she is as splendid an actress as she is a dancer. It is a picture which allows her first of all to dance before the screen in the same inimitable manner which has made her favorite in vaudeville and in New York cabarets. It shows the star rising to fame as a dancer in New York, and then abandoning her career to marry the man she loves. But the lure of the stage and the cabaret is strong within her, and when all does not go serenely in her married life she is tempted to return to the old life of gayety. It is a picture of romance and when the action shifts to a New Hampshire lumber camp, of thrilling adventure.

A capable cast supports Miss Castle in this new picture. Her leading man is Ward Crane, a popular leading man, and others include Charles Gerard, Howard Truesdale and Thomas Murray. The picture is adapted from the story by Clarence Buddington Kelland by Eve Unsell. It will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days.

PROGRAM READER

Irene Castle, America's foremost dancer, has returned to motion pictures and is the star of "French Heels," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. Miss Castle is an American-born and American-raised girl, who won her way to fame through sheer ability when she first danced in public. She has been a favorite, almost an idol, with the New York theatregoers, and her name was sufficient to crowd any cabaret in the big city. In "French Heels" she is afforded by the entertaining story, an opportunity to dance before the camera, and this fact alone makes the production considerably worth-while. The story is an interesting one, the action shifting from New York's White Way to a lumber camp in New Hampshire. It presents an interesting tale of a successful dancer who abandons her career to marry the man she loves. But when all is not serene on the sea of matrimony, she is tempted to return to the gay life, where she was ever feted and honored. How she comes to realize that true happiness is with the man of her choice and not amid all the tinselled finery of Broadway, makes an interesting story.

Miss Castle is supported by an entirely capable cast, with Ward Crane, popular leading man, playing opposite her. The picture will run as the feature attraction at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————.

CATCH LINES

Irene Castle, the idol of all who dance, the favorite of the New York White Way, the queen of the ballroom, is again a picture star. She is appearing in "French Heels," an interesting photoplay of New York life, which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————.

Irene Castle is still the premiere exponent of dancing in the United States. She proves it conclusively in this picture. After a lapse of two years this favorite returns to the screen in an interesting, absorbing romance, which allows her every opportunity to prove her ability as a dancer.

"ANNE OF LITTLE SMOKY"

THE antagonism that exists between a ranger and a settler forms the background of this elemental story which bears the colorful title of "Anne of Little Smoky." Give this landowner a pretty daughter to provide the romantic conflict and you have the necessary ingredients to build an interesting drama—even though it is somewhat familiar in outline. Edward Connors who wrote and directed the feature has brought forth melodramatic incident so that it rings quite genuine. He has paid marked attention toward a vigorous line of action which is vital and vivid enough to keep one in suspense.

The story has a main plot and a few counterplots, the central idea being a romantic one, revealing the love of the ranger for the girl. The father, a hard-headed individual, brings the law down on his shoulders by poaching on a government reservation. Thus the ranger is forced to abide by his duty even though it interferes with the call of romance. This conflict is well brought out so that the hero does not appear to be unduly righteous. There is so much incident that it is not easy to guess the outcome. Consequently the picture possesses a force not found in the average Western where the campaign of action is marked out far ahead. There are a few characters that could be dispensed with as far as advancing the story interest is concerned. However, the introduction of the gypsy girl serves in bringing in the conflict of jealousy.

The action develops a situation which shows the ranger being trailed by bloodhounds because of the belief that he has killed a relative. The girl, realizing that she loves the government agent, attempts to throw the dogs off the scent. She rushes to his cabin, dons his clothes and rushes through the woods. But her action only defeats her purpose for she discovers that the dogs have located the trail. Eventually the ranger is vindicated. The storm scene unfolds some tense incident, for the gypsy girl is being attacked in her cabin by a half-breed Indian at the same time that the heroine is rushing to save her lover. Winifred Westover, who plays the title role, manages to inject plenty of spirit into the character. She succeeds in making the figure genuine. Frank Sheridan gives to the role of the father a forceful personality so characteristic of all his interpretations, and Joe King portrays the ranger in acceptable fashion. The backgrounds are effectively colored with the correct atmosphere. The physical element is compelling, revealing as it does a good fight, and the romance is well emphasized. With such a title and a cast comprising four well known players, and sufficient action—there is no reason why any exhibitor should not make money with proper exploitation.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is said to be a stirring, red-blooded drama of mountain folk who resent the coming of the law is revealed in "Anne of Little Smoky," the picture which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre ————. The plot is based upon the conflict between a fearless mountain clan and the law, as represented by a forest ranger. The fighting Brocktons held Little Smoky as their own before the government set it aside as a forest and game preserve. Resenting the coming of the law, they issued the challenge that they would hunt and timber where they pleased. The ranger was troubled by the threat, for he loved the daughter, Anne.

His close watch of this household was rewarded when he caught her father in a stealthy enterprise. The result is Ed Brockton engages the ranger in a fight. The mountaineer is reported killed, which is sufficient to start the family on a "death hunt" for the officer. The latter is discovered and Ed Brockton is revealed as very much alive and on the best of terms with the ranger. So it develops that the feud ceases. The picture is staged in picturesque settings and contains good action and suspense. Winifred Westover plays the title role in creditable fashion, supported by an adequate company.

PROGRAM READER

If you like your motion pictures full of big, two-fisted men and charming staunch-hearted women, playing the big game of life, love and hate in the great open spaces, then don't let "Anne of Little Smoky" get away from you. This is a mountain story of conflict between poachers and the law, involving the heart affairs of a forest ranger, a maid, a gypsy princess and others of colorful personality. Primitive loves and hates—primitive men and women—the kind of people who cut the paths to civilization—that's what you will see in "Anne of Little Smoky." In the cast are Winifred Westover (Mrs. William S. Hart), Joe King, Dolores Cassinelli, Frank Sheridan and Edward Roseman. The picture appears next ———— at the ————.

SUGGESTIONS

The title of this feature is fair enough indication of its plot. Your crowd, once they appreciate its meaning, will doubtless be interested in seeing this mountain feud story. Playing up Winifred Westover as the wife of William S. Hart is certain to attract attention. Bill the picture as a colorful melodrama enacted against a background of rugged mountains. Emphasize that it sparkles with a fine romance, carries plenty of crisp action and contains a good suspense. Use such expressions as "Two-fisted Melodrama"—"A Mountain Drama of Romance and Thrills." The cast contains Joe King and Frank Sheridan. Speak of the thrills. There is a chance for some good vocal number sung against an appropriate background.

"HEADIN' WEST"
(Universal)

Much Physical Action in This Western

THE chief characteristic of this picture is its wealth of physical action. After a rather slow start, "Headin' West" picks up momentum and crashes through to the tune of speed and incident. One has become reconciled to Hoot Gibson displaying a worthy sample of action. He believes in it to the extent of unbounded generosity. So when any one supplies him with a story, it must contain this vital ingredient. After all, one cannot expect more from a Western. Hoot is an ex-doughboy, who is hoboing his way West via the aeroplane route. He makes a descent with a parachute and bobs up amidst a group of cowpunchers. This scene is bristling with humor and incident. The cowboys think him a rube and proceeds to have fun at his expense. They give him a "bucker" to ride. And when he fails he is put to work washing dishes in the kitchen.

While the plot itself concerns cattle rustling, this idea is quite subordinated for the display of physical action in the shape of fights of the "knock-em-down-and-drag-em-out" variety. The foreman is the vicious enemy, and he would like to own the blooded cattle of the neighboring ranchman. He would also like to marry the pretty daughter, who has just finished an education at an Eastern boarding school. Because she has an air of refinement it provokes him to be repulsed. There is a good scene when the scullery man provokes the foreman to anger. But he stands his ground. And another joke is perpetrated. They would pass him off as the rightful heir, when in reality he is the missing youth. The first battle royal finds Gibson knocking a rough henchman for a goal. Oh, what a gruelling contest! No quarter absolutely. It is such realism as this that has builded Gibson's popularity. Whether he is a skillfull actor or not is beside the point. It is the object to supply the punch. And he measures it out with a big whoop of enthusiasm.

The cattle-owner is giving a party for the girl, and Hoot is the victim of another joke. But prior to this incident the heroine has to experience an insult because of her supposedly haughty manner. Her horse runs away, and the hero rescues her on the brink of a cliff. And he makes her tormentor eat his words and apologize for his practical joke. By the way, this is also a healthy fight. The picture contains good atmosphere, although many spectators will recognize a few of the backgrounds as having been used before. The types are good, especially Charles LeMoyne as the heavy and Jim Corey as his chief henchman. Louis Lorraine plays the heroine in spirited fashion. And maybe she doesn't know how to ride! 'Headin' West" is snappy entertainment. Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Hoot Gibson, the popular cowboy star, will be seen in his latest attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— in "Headin' West," an original story by Harvey Gates. It is the type of picture in which Mr. Gibson has full opportunity to display his rugged personality. His quaint sense of humor is well expressed in the role of Bill Perkins, a war veteran who is bumming his way across the country in an aeroplane without the consent of the pilot. He is forced to disembark via parachute when he wants to get off at a familiar place. He lands in the midst of a cow-puncher's argument.

Bill is given a job as dishwasher and learns that there is a scheme to steal the ranch from the absent heir. He allows the men to elevate him to the job of impersonating the missing youth, and then suddenly is disgraced by having them denounce him as an impostor. Whereupon he sets to work and cultivates his family tree intensively, with the ultimate result that everyone gets a grand shock. The picture contains good incident which reveals considerable action. The acting of the star is up to requirements, and the assisting players give creditable performances.

PROGRAM READER

You have heard of people headin' South to avoid the shock of winter. They all headed West in '49. But in this modern day Hoot Gibson headed toward the Rockies via aeroplane. He didn't care much in particular where he was going. In fact he was bumming his way. Then he saw a spot where he would like to disembark and he dropped via the parachute. And when he breaks into a cowpuncher's camp—well, he gets into all sorts of complications. "Headin' West" is the title of the picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Hoot Gibson as the star. It is a vigorous Western story, filled with characteristic Gibson humor, rich incident, and clever atmosphere. Those who have seen this picturesque star in his previous features will like him here.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a Hoot Gibson picture and must be exploited for the value of his name as a drawing card. If his offerings have gone in your locality, there is no reason why you shouldn't try this one. It starts out with a bang—showing Hoot traveling West via aeroplane. A few stills of this stunt will attract attention. But why not have your artist draw a plane on some compo-board and use it as a lobby display. It is possible that Universal can supply you with 24 sheets carrying this identical scene. You can advertise it as a snappy Western, filled with typical action and incident. Play up Gibson's previous pictures and tell that this one keeps up to the standard. The title can be worked out effectively in a teaser campaign.

CATCH LINES

"STRENGTH OF THE PINES"
(Fox)

Not Up to the Average in Western Action

THIS picture may prove disappointing to those who see something of value in the title and in the fact that William Russell is the star. For a story it carries an average theme—one having to do with proving a claim and righting certain wrongs established by lawless mountaineers. The plot is complicated with much legal talk concerning deeds and property and there is a profusion of captions. The star is represented as an adopted orphan, who, upon growing to manhood, receives word to come to the pine forests of some locality in the far West and straighten out the entanglements which have covered certain property. Years previously he had been taken away from his sister and it is to benefit her that he makes the westward journey.

It is discovered that she is harassed by a lazy group of mountaineers who have caused trouble with all their neighbors. He also discovers that she isn't her sister. Therefore the romantic element is more or less deftly introduced. The plot proper concerns a deed to property which her father had entrusted to his father. Both parents later became victims of the lawless Turners. It is the hero's duty to hunt for the deed to the property. The picture up to this point has carried very little incident, there being no display of the action anticipated from the title. The villains finally bring things to a head by lying in ambush with the determination to kill him. But he thwarts them through the aid of an old recluse, who executes vengeance upon the clan by killing one of the younger Turners. The hero and heroine barricade the cabin and lightning strikes a tree. Near at hand the missing deed is found.

There is another fight on the mountain side which carries a small amount of suspense. But for the most part the picture never arrives at any definite scheme of action. Indeed, it is the Kentucky feud story transplanted to the far West, minus the ingredients which build melodramatic incident. The director has not bothered much in collecting picturesque atmosphere. There are no colorful long shots. And the pathos, the loneliness of the central figures is never suggested. However, the hero conquers his enemies and the romance comes into its own. Russell has a few opportunities to indulge in fights. But the interludes of explanatory matter destroy their effectiveness.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The leading attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is William Russell in "Strength of the Pines," a Southern feud story written by Edison Marshall and directed by Edgar Lewis. In this picture the Fox star has ample opportunities to display his rugged style of acting, the role furnishing him with plenty of physical action. The plot concerns the efforts of the Turners to control the valuable lands of the community, some of which have been held by Bruce Duncan's ancestors. He comes home from the city and is confronted by these lawless mountaineers.

The story pilots the star through several tense scenes which carry the utmost in suspense. The romantic interest is well sustained and provides a happy balance for the melodramatic situations. Mr. Russell portrays the hero in an authoritative manner and his support consisting of Irene Rich, Lester Bates, and others is entirely adequate. The picture contains appropriate atmosphere, the scenes being suggestive of the locale of the story.

PROGRAM READER

What is more exciting than a Kentucky feud story with its dramatic physical action, its sharp conflict, its vigorous romance and the picturesque atmosphere which forms the background. John Fox, Jr., first made these feud stories famous. He encouraged the whole world to read them. As picture entertainment they cannot be surpassed for interest compelling scenes. "Strength of the Pines" which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— is a typical mountain feud story enacted against the strong pines of Kentucky and the Cumberland foothills. It bristles with exciting action, a fine flavor of heart appeal and a fragrant romance. William Russell is the star and he gives a rugged performance.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a Southern feud story and the public knows what to expect. They expect plenty of excitement in such picture fare. So you can exploit this feature as carrying all the well known elements which compose snappy and interesting drama. Feature the star as having an ideal vehicle for the expression of his rugged personality. Use stills of the backgrounds and for lobby display you can rig up a good suggestion of a mountain background—the set being made of compo-board, a log cabin, etc. A prologue can express a lonely cabin with the occupants singing Southern folk songs.

"WHY MEN FORGET"
(R-C Pictures)

In Factory Localities This May Get Over

THE labor note in this picture may interest those patrons who belong to factory communities, but owing to a lack of punch and action of any romantic or dramatic nature, even these spectators may not find it a means of entertainment. It is a British-made feature with players unknown to audiences on this side of the water. Hence it has its drawbacks as far as carrying some personality appeal. The story originally known as "Demos," written by George Gissing, may have contained some sound virtues, but translated for the screen it reveals stock situations and an orthodox line of development which never intrigues the imagination. However, it has a certain lesson which will undoubtedly have its effect with impressionable laboring classes.

It purposes to show that one of their members should not forget his balance when he suddenly becomes wealthy. He forgets because of his newfound fortune—forgets his ideals—forgets his promises—even forgets his sweetheart in his worship of the dollar and the manner in which it introduces him to society. The plot lacks a single outstanding scene of vitality, the interludes being filled with platform speech-making by the central figure and the little intimate details of his new home. There is nothing new or novel in the treatment. The capital-versus-labor formula is usually rich enough in situation and climax to interest the average patron. "Why Men Forget" never takes the spectator into any dramatic sequence. You do not identify yourself as a part of the story—you do not assume the identify of the hero because he does not make you feel his tragic circumstances when he climbs to the heights and fails in the end.

The characterization is poorly worked out, the feminine figures being almost negligible. It seems strange to see the discarded sweetheart take him up again after his brutal treatment. The climax reveals a storming of the mob to get at their erstwhile leader who has been entrusted with their savings. They pursue him through various byways and highways before they punish him in the home of his former fiancee. The story contains but a single character of any dramatic value, the others providing the background. Since there is no novelty of situation, it is easy to guess the outcome. The photography is rather uneven and the acting is uninspired. However, there is a lesson in the story which will be grasped by many. It shows that money is a curse when it destroys ideals. The title and the workingman's problem sugggest an angle for exploitation. It should score in certain communities where the program feature is the thing.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Based upon the celebrated British novel, "Demos," by George Gissing, "Why Men Forget," a Robertson-Cole feature, will be shown at the ———— theatre next ————. It is presented by a distinguished cast of British players, embracing some of the foremost screen artists of the Empire. The theme of the story stands forth as an attractive feature since it concerns the sudden rise of one of the workers, Richard Mutimer. He had been a leader among the men. Overnight he became a man of wealth. He quickly forgot his promises to help the workingman and neglected his sweetheart. In fact he changed completely. Moving in the higher circles of society he married a young woman of wealth and social standing.

Fate entered and upset all calculations. The will by which Mutimer inherited his riches was proved invalid by a later one which swept away his wealth at a single stroke. The young man returned to the mills and encouraged the workers to believe in him. They entrusted their savings with him and the climax reveals him completely crushed as it is shown that their money is stolen. The hero receives a punishment at their hands. The story carries the onlooker through tense scenes which are dramatic with suspense.

PROGRAM READER

"Why Men Forget" opens at the ———— theatre next ————. Based upon the memorable novel, "Demos," by George Gissing, it presents a powerfully dramatic story in which an all-star British cast gives a brilliant performance. The story is a tragic romance in an industrial setting. The feature unfolds a story of a young working man who rises in the world due to a rich inheritance. He forgets his promises to help his fellow-workers—even forgets his sweetheart in a new love. Then Fate enters and upsets all calculations. How he realized in the end that money cannot bring faith or love is told through five reels of interesting drama. The industrial background of mills and mill workers is picturesquely shown.

"THE LADY FROM LONGACRE"
(Fox)

Fairly Entertaining Picture with William Russell

ANYONE who is familiar with the George Barr McCutcheon type of story will appreciate this offering as having to do with mythical kingdoms, royalists, missing princesses and the inevitable hero from America or England. Where the author differs from McCutcheon is having the central character a product of English soil. Otherwise it is the orthodox pattern made famous in "Graustark." This type of story has served the screen in various guises since the early days of the nickelodion. Consequently it has lost some of its appeal. In the first place William Russell appears to be miscast as the royal blue-blood. There is nothing about his personality that suggests the titled Englishman, and dressed up in evening clothes will make many appreciate the fact that he appears more adaptable in the western regalia.

Once the characters are planted it is easy to see just how it will all end. The Englishman, as courageous and chivalrous here as any American, jumps into the plot and scatters all the trouble. The author has followed the Graustarkian formula faithfully. It all suggests a certain brand of comic opera which was in vogue ten or fifteen years ago. The heroine escapes from a loathsome marriage with the horrid king of the principality by running away to England. Here the hero is introduced as the determined rescuer. His people are much distressed over his gay escapades and when he encourages them to entertain the princess they rebel, thinking her an actress whom she strongly resembles. She returns to her own country accompanied by the Englishman and realizing that the country must be saved she consents to marry the horrid king. Here it is that the actress marries him and saves her for the hero.

Every scene is carefully thought out ahead, and the plot is so obvious that the element of suspense is largely missing. The action is cut and dried although it is enlivened here and there by complications and Russell's ability to incorporate a few scenes containing a punch. Though the virtue of surprise is missing there is a deal of color in the characterization which compensates for the plot shortcomings. The picture is adequately mounted and suggests the proper atmosphere. It should go well in program houses where audiences are easily satisfied. The star is capably supported by Mary Thurman, who appears in a dual role, Mathilda Brundage and other good character players. Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

This is a romantic story based upon the rescue of a fair princess by an intrepid Englishman. It is the type of story made famous by George Barr McCutcheon, and the author taking a leaf from "Graustark" has centered the plot around a mythical kingdom where the heroine is in distress concerning a loathsome marriage which she is to contract with the king. She makes her escape and arrives in England where a member of the nobility rescues her from her captors. His family objects to his wild escapades and they identify the princess as a notorious actress because of her strong resemblance.

The fair princess returns to her native land and she is compelled at the last moment to entertain the idea of marrying the king to save the country. But fortunately the king marries the actress, leaving the heroine to marry the man of her heart. The title of this picture is "The Lady from Longacre" and serves to introduce William Russell as the star. It will appear at the ———— theatre next ————. Prominent in the cast are Mary Thurman, Francis Ford, Mathilda Brundage and others.

PROGRAM READERS

"The Lady from Longacre" which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— is a romantic adventure story revolving around a fair princess who escapes from a principality and is rescued by a courageous Englishman. It is the type of story which has founded George Barr McCutcheon's popularity, although this author is not responsible for this tale. It is written by Victor Bridges who has incorporated a small principality for a background and peopled the story with colorful characters. William Russell, the star, has occasion to flash his well known brand of action.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a type of story which has been used dozens of times on the screen, so if you have any doubt of its reception, it would be well not to advertise the plot. In fact most everyone has read the McCutcheon tales having to do with mythical kingdoms and royalists and missing princesses. While McCutcheon didn't write the story it follows his formula. Simply state that it is a romantic adventure story which contains plenty of action and thrills and romance. Play up the star as appearing in a role far different from his Western type of hero. Use stills of the scenes. Emphasize that the star is capable of interpreting society romances. Mention that Mary Thurman is the leading woman. A tabloid comic opera, if you feel that the picture deserves it, suggesting the mythical kingdom plot would be suggestive of good atmosphere.

"THE SINGLE TRACK"
(Vitagraph)

Alaskan Story Entertains with Corinne Griffith as Star

HERE is a story having to do with a penniless heroine journeying to Alaska to recoup her fortune by developing her option to a right of way and fighting to maintain it against the disciples of villainy. While this thumbnail sketch of the plot indicates a certain type of obviousness, yet on the other hand a story which containes a courageous heroine fighting against tremendous odds always attracts the interest of the reader or spectator. Particularly when it revolves around railroad incident. While the earlier reels introduce considerable planting which destroys the spontaneity in a way, the climax quite suffices in revealing a dramatic punch. Besides there is revealed some good incident of a character.

The heroine, who upon the death of her father is left penniless except for an option for a right of way in Alaska, leaves the cultured paths of civilization and sets out boldly for the north country. The meat of the story is contained in the attempt of rival interests to frustrate her right to the option. She does not reveal her identity and assumes a position as clerk in the company's store. The young superintendent in charge of the engineering plans toward erecting the single track line saves her from the machinations of the villain. But the hero has his work cut out for him. And the same may be said of the heroine. Unless the road is completed by a certain hour the mines are worthless. So here is introduced a line of physical action which carries several thrills. The adventurous character of the plot contains a fair value of suspense, although you may have long suspected how it will end.

The rival forces conceive a dastardly scheme of floating a raft loaded with dynamite against the bridge. At the psychological moment the heroine runs the locomotive in a mad race and the property is saved. The director has injected some humorous touches as well as permitting the star to display her lavish wardrobe. Miss Griffith has a story which does not call for such a display of gowns, but this is a minor flaw in a story likely to entertain everywhere. The romantic element keeps pace with the melodramatic portions. Some of the action could stand a little more pep in places, for the story drags in a few spots. It is a good program offering, pleasingly acted by the star, although she appears more at ease in the society sets, there being nothing of the primitive woman in her personality. Richard Travers is the hero and others who add background are Charles Kent, Sidney Herbert and Jessie Stevens.. The exteriors are fairly colorful, though the big open spaces are not always revealed.—Length 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Corinne Griffith is the star of the Vitagraph feature which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This is an adventure story of a girl left penniless, who is forced to go to the wilds of Alaska to recoup her fortune. Her father has left her an option to a right of way and unless a single track is completed in a certain length of time the mines would be worthless. Upon her determination to put over this option and develop it hinges the dramatic values of the story. It is the type of picture which builds a deal of sympathy for the heroine owing to the tremendous odds which confront her. But Janette forgets her society ways and plunges into her new work with vim and vivacity.

It happens that the rival forces stop at nothing to embarrass her. They almost succeed in blowing up the bridge, but the heroine drives the locomotive and frustrates their dastardly scheme. "The Single Track," for such is the title of the feature, abounds with picturesque atmosphere and contains vital and vivid action. And the star plays her role in a charming manner, assisted by a clever cast that includes Richard Travers, Charles Kent, Sydney Herbert and others. The picture may be called an adventurous romance.

PROGRAM READERS

She was left penniless except for an option to a piece of property in far-off Alaska. Tossing aside the ways of society she plunged into the primitive life, determined to save something from the wreckage. She went to Alaska and developed the option to such an extent that the forces of evil were completely frustrated. This is by way of introducing the determined heroine in "The Single Track," the Corinne Griffith feature which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. It is a picturesque melodrama of New York society and the primitive life of Alaska. It details much physical action, plenty of suspense and several thrills. So come and see this interesting story of a plucky girl who fought and won against overwhelming odds.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have the colorful personality of Corinne Griffith to exploit. Present stills of her in her many costumes, telling that she is the best dressed woman on the screen. Make mention that she appears in an interesting melodrama which contains plenty of thrills and action. Tell that it is a story of Alaska with the heroine winning the fight against desperate enemies determined to obtain option to her land. The title suggests a deal of atmosphere for a prologue. You can put over some good lobby stunts. An elaborate tableaux can be presented of society life. A compo-board scene of a locomotive dashing over a high bridge would stimulate attention. Also the cast. Mention that Richard Travers appears as the leading man. Bill it as an adventure story finely balanced with romance.

CATCH LINES

See Corinne Griffith in the interesting melodrama, "The Single Track," a colorful story of a plucky girl who won against tremendous odds.

"A VIRGINIA COURTSHIP"

(Realart—Paramount)

Heart Interest Drama, Fairly Entertaining

THEY have gone back quite a time for this adaptation. Eugene Presbrey's famous old play of a decade ago which featured the conventional Southern romance has been modernized for the screen, yet with all its new trimmings it fails to be more than fairly entertaining. This is a good deal due to the familiarity of the plot which has served in various guises since the birth of the photoplay. "A Virginia Courtship" is slight material for the expression of May McAvoy's talent. Which is to be regretted after her memorable work in "Sentimental Tommy." Actresses less equipped with real ability to interpret studies and stories could protray the ward of Colonel Fairfax in as capable a manner. In other words it is a part which does not call upon the interpreter to be other than duly feminine in regard to registering charm and wistfulness.

The idea has not only been used for Southern romances but it has been employed in the orphan theme according to well established regulations. Since it is easy to penetrate, the value of suspense is missing. But in its favor are some charming backgrounds and a good suggestion of atmosphere. Furthermore, whatever Miss McAvoy does on the screen is compelling. The result is the offering has its moments of compensation. The tender plot discovers the ward of the fine, old Southern gentleman, suh, one Colonel Fairfax, trying to chase the shadows away from his life. This she does by virtue of her hoydenish temperament. The old man has remained single because of a misunderstanding with his neighbor, Constance Llewellyn, and the wistful-eyed heroine arranges matters so that they will be thrown together. The romantic element is the dominant feature of the story and it is charmingly expressed by the star and her leading man, Casson Ferguson.

There are some mild scenes which will please those who are not searching for stimulating drama. Indeed, the atmosphere is so well suggested that one cannot take offense at the story. Even though the plot is slight the backgrounds are highly pleasing. The picture is wholesome—an ideal offering for the young romancers and especially for the children. In the supporting company are Alec Francis who plays the Colonel with fine poise and adequate bearing. Others who lend their personalities for effective portrayals are Kathlyn Williams, Guy Oliver, and Richard Tucker.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"A Virginia Courtship," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— is an adaptation of the famous old play by Frank Presbrey. It has been thoroughly modernized and brought down to the twentieth century. Miss McAvoy, as Prudence Fairfax, has opportunities which allow her emotional powers full range: first as a tomboy, a kind of a little white Topsy, running wild over the Virginian plantation, and later as a young woman, having her first and last romance with the nephew of her guardian, and being saved by him from a band of criminals into whose hands she has fallen.

Prue is the adopted daughter of Colonel Fairfax, a bachelor who had never married because of a misunderstanding with his boyhood's sweetheart, Constance Llewellyn, who had lived on the adjoining plantation. Constance married another man, but comes back to her old home when she becomes a widow. Prue attempts to consummate that romance, and in so doing develops one of her own. The picture contains several dramatic scenes which support the romance in good fashion. The talented star is assisted by a competent cast that includes Casson Ferguson, Alec Francis and Kathlyn Williams.

PROGRAM READERS

The manager of the ———— theatre is pleased to announce that beginning next ———— he will present "A Virginia Courtship," starring the charming and talented May McAvoy, who has reached the peak of popularity through her gifted impersonations in "Sentimental Tommy," and other conspicuous pictures. The feature is a delightful romance of Dixie in the present day, an adaptation of Eugene Presbrey's famous stage hit of twenty years ago. It is the story of a little Virginian "wild-flower" who ran wild over her guardian's plantation until Cupid overtook her. Then she grew up and lent a hand at many stirring events. The picture is marked for its charm, sentiment and romance and is appealingly acted.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a romance with a Southern flavor since it depicts a love adventure of the present day rather than a story of "befo' de war." You might tell that it is an adaptatioin of Eugene Presbrey's famous old stage play dressed up in a modern setting. Feature May McAvoy as having a role which brings forth her ample talents—emphasizing that she again demonstrates her appealing qualities which were flashed in "Sentimental Tommy." Put on a prologue suggesting the Southern atmosphere. Southern airs should be played by your orchestra or organist. Bill it as a delightful romance which brings a fragrance of old-time glamour to the patron. Mention the cast. It includes several well known players.

CATCH LINES

She was a sort of white Topsy who ran wild over the plantation. Then one day she was overtaken by Cupid. See lovely May McAvoy in "A Virginia Courtship."

A story of a mad-cap's adventures with romance—a story with lovely settings—a story of modern Dixie. That is "A Virginia Courtship" starring May McAvoy.

CLEVELAND

Billy Leyser, motion picture editor of The Cleveland News-Leader, spoke before the Muncipal Committee of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce last Friday, against motion picture censorship. The Municipal Committee of the Chamber of Commerce is actively engaged in investigating motion picture censorship throughout the country. At this time, the Committee is not prepared to say just what attitude it will adopt, on the subject of film censorship. Suffice it at this time that the Chamber of Commerce is sufficiently alive to the dangers of the practice to look into it pretty thoroughly, and, if need be, to either limit it, or stop it altogether.

Charles E. Parry is the new manager of the Cleveland Select exchange. Mr. Parry comes to Cleveland from Pittsburgh where he was a member of the Famous Players-Lasky office in the capacity of special representative.

B. F. Lyons, field representative for Select out of New York, has been in Cleveland the past week.

The amusement tax in the Province of Manitoba will not be increased this year, contrary to early plan, according to an announcement made by the Attorney-General's Department at Winnipeg on January 19. Amusement tax tickets will be abolished, however, thus saving the printing of over 5,000,000 tickets in a year. This will mean a saving to the Government in expenses and saving of much labor to exhibitors and theatre employes. Churches and clubs will be required to pay the tax on admissions to concerts the same as theatres.

Harry Brouse, owner of the Imperial and Family theatres, Ottawa, Ontario, and an Eastern Canadian franchise holder of Associated First National, has purchased a downtown black in Ottawa, having a frontage of 66 feet, for $200,000. The site has a depth of 99 feet with a lane and right of way at the rear. The present three-story office and store building is to be torn down and it is believed that a large new theatre will be erected.

The Strand theatre at Kingston, Ontario, has arranged to reserve a block of seats for every performance at nights in future so that patrons may secure seats in advance as desired. The charge for these seats has been fixed at 35 cents, tax included. The house offers moving pictures exclusively.

Announcement is made at Winnipeg, Manitoba, that the local branch of Select Pictures Corporation will shortly be re-opened and that Danny Freeman, former manager of the Select exchange, will once more have charge of the office.

ALBANY, N. Y.

When exhibitors give a testimonial dinner to an exchange manager, it comes pretty near being the highest form of testimonial to the latter's business ability. Such took place in Albany, N. Y. On Thursday night, Jan. 5, when the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association played the part of host to Mr. Moran as guest of honor, and to the managers and others in the film exchanges of Albany, N. Y.

Bert M. Moran, manager since 1918 of the Pathe exchange branch in Albany, has been promoted to the management of the company's Pittsburgh exchange. James M. Loughborough, a former newspaperman, and who handled the publicity in connection with Marshal Foch's recent tour of the United States, will succeed Mr. Moran in Albany.

The Clinton Square theatre in Albany, N. Y., was entered by burglars last week, who drilled the safe and received about $30 for their work. Some time ago the house was also entered. On the same night the Clinton Square was recently burglarized, the Majestic, four blocks distant, was entered, but the only thing secured was a framed dollar bill.

Sunday motion picture shows are now to be permitted in Mechanicsville, N. Y., the residents of that city have just come out flat-footed in favor of Sunday shows.

Three new motion picture theatres have just been opened in the Albany district. They are the Casino in Schenectady, owned by G. W. Glenn, jr., 1,000 seats; the William Smalley house in Cooperstown, 500 seats, and the Senate in Chatham, owned by Nelson Aiken, 300 seats. In Albany, the Pearl has just been taken over by Walter Powers. It seats 500 and has been operated by Gardner brothers.

OKLAHOMA CITY

The Liberty theatre, at Oklahoma City, Okla., one of the finest and handsomest theatres in the entire southwest, closed down indefinitely last week. No announcement of opening date or future policy has as yet been made.

The Lyric theatre at Oklahoma City, has abandoned stock and resumed pictures and vaudeville, with popular prices of admission prevailing.

The popular Criterion theatre at Oklahoma City, and one of the finest theatres in the southwest, has reduced its admission prices to popular pre-war prices, and as a consequence is filling the big building to pleased capacity business daily. The reduced prices are on to stay, said Manager A. H. McLaughlin.

Nearly $300 in currency was stolen from the box office of the Dome theatre at Lawton, Okla., January 12. The manager was out at lunch and missed the money from the safe upon his return. No clue as to the identity of the thieves has been found.

The Lyric theatre which was damaged by fire at Brownwood, Texas, December 26, is being remodeled and will be ready for reopening in the near future.

Grand Central Amusement Company of Sapulpa, Okla., has been incorporated at a capital of $5,000. The incorporators are George E. Brooms, R. W. Simms, Will P. Davis, all of Sapulpa.

A. V. Wade has purchased the Queen theatre at Cuero, Texas, from Albert Miller, and will add many improvements in the near future.

The Bluebird theatre at Mangum, Okla., was purchased last week by George Slaten from Mr. Greasby. The theatre will be completely remodeled and practically made new in the near future.

M. L. Levine has purchased the Ideal theatre at Corsicana, Texas, from J. T. Smith and will make new improvements soon.

H. Andrews has purchased the Crystal theatre at Booneville, Ark., from Clark Porter and will add many new improvements soon. Mr. Andrews was former manager of the Joie theatre at Fort Smith, Ark.

KANSAS CITY

Numerous changes in the personnel of Kansas City exchanges were made last week. They are:

Roy Young, manager of the Standard Film Company, resigned to become manager of the Phoenix Film Corporation; F. J. Warren will be active manager of the Standard; H. L. Craig, formerly with Vitagraph, now is city salesman for Crescent-Federated; M. A. Tanner, former assistant manager of Realart, now working out of St. Louis as a special representative for that company.

W. E. Truog, manager of the Kansas City Goldwyn branch, was elected secretary of the Kansas City Film Board of Trade at a meeting last week. He succeeded Roy Young, who resigned.

Unusual co-operation and enthusiasm is being displayed by exhibitors in the Kansas City territory in R-C Pictures Week, according to Roy Churchill, Kansas City branch manager.

The following changes in management and new houses in the Kansas City territory have been announced during the last week:

Colonial theatre, Pittsburg, Kas., purchased by the Barbour Circuit; Princess theatre, Aurora, Mo., purchased by M. J. Mathes from H. Higgins; Empire theatre, Kansas City, purchased by the Stockdale Brothers from L. B. Douglas.

The Standard Film Company of Kansas City has purchased a series of nine western productions from the W. M. Smith Productions of Tulsa, Okla.

Two unmasked bandits held up Emil Umann, assistant manager of the Garden theatre, Kansas City, last Saturday and obtained $2,166 and escaped. The money was being placed in the safe by Mr. Umann as the bandits entered his office. A satchel containing $500 in dimes and nickels was dropped by the bandits in their haste to escape, the money scattering over the lobby of the theatre.

Various Effects May Be Obtained Through Colored Lighting

Persons Are Affected by Color in Two Manners, Directly and Through Association

By A. L. POWELL, Edison Lamp Works

Second of Series

Mr. Powell, in the second of his series of articles treating on "Colored Lighting in the Motion Picture Theatre," has here endeavored to point out the differences between the action of lighting and pigments; the composition of color; the fact that in practice we are not generally dealing with pure color; the necessity for examining colors and experimenting with the various combinations to secure the desired results, and finally, giving an example of the effect of color on scenery.

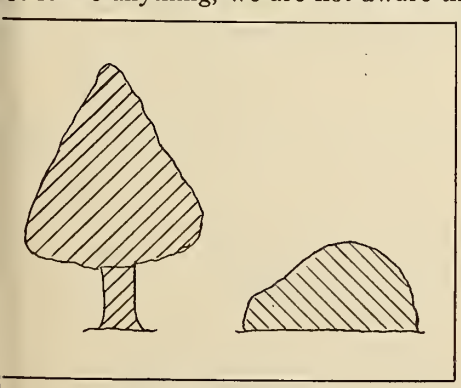
This series of articles should help the exhibitor in his attempt to present colored lighting in its most effective forms. The possibilities along these lines are unlimited.

In the previous article we discussed the hysical and mechanical means of obtaining colored light, and the next phase to be iven consideration is the effect of colored ght. This may be considered from two ngles, the psychological effect or the rection produced through our feelings, and he effect on the appearance of objects hemselves.

The first phase of our analysis, the effect of color on our feelings, can only be ouched on here, as it will be necessary to o into the question in greater detail when aking up light as a decorative medium nd the combination of light and music.

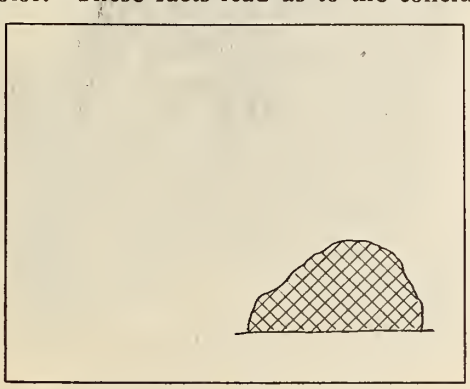
We are affected by color in two manners, one by association and the other the irect effect. We associate green, for example, with the quiet, restful wood or meadow; yellow with the warm sun; red with fire, danger, war and carnage; blue with the calm sea and sky. Aside from hese associated attributes or qualities, experience and experiments have proven hat color has a direct effect on our nerves nd emotions. Reds are exciting; yellows, timulating and buoyant; green, calm and uieting; blues and violets often make us epressed and subdued.

Before we can do much work with colred light, however, we must understand vhat makes a thing appear colored. We ee things by reflected light. If light does ot strike anything, we are not aware that there is light present. In the moving picture theatre we see nothing from the projection booth to the screen unless there is smoking in the house; then the tiny particles of smoke as they pass through the beam of light reflect and show the sharply defined edges of or path of the light.



If a room were finished in a dead black, and there were no objects in it to reflect light, if lamps were present and not directly visible, we could scarcely tell whether these were turned on unless we could see the light sources themselves. There would be no impression of light or color. These facts lead us to the conclusion that if we are to obtain the maximum effect of our light, the best color effects for a given expenditure for power, light colored surroundings which reflect well, are necessary.

As a practical illustration of this, we might refer to the practice of flood-lighting the orchestra pit during the music. If the musicians are clothed with dark material, a great deal of the effect sought is lost, for then their faces, the music, and possibly some of the furnishings, are the only objects which will give us the impression of color. With white clothing we would have a large area to reflect the light and receive the maximum sensation.



Objects appear colored because they pick out certain rays from the light and reflect these back to the eye, absorbing other rays. As mentioned in the previous article, white light is made up of all the colors of the rainbow. A red object in daylight or under ordinary artificial illumination appears red because it reflects the red rays back to our eyes. A green object appears green, because it reflects green light. A yellow object appears yellow because it reflects yellow light and will also reflect red, orange and green rays. The other colors and tints act similarly.

Now, what is the effect of colored light falling on colored objects? A pure red light falling on a red object will be re-

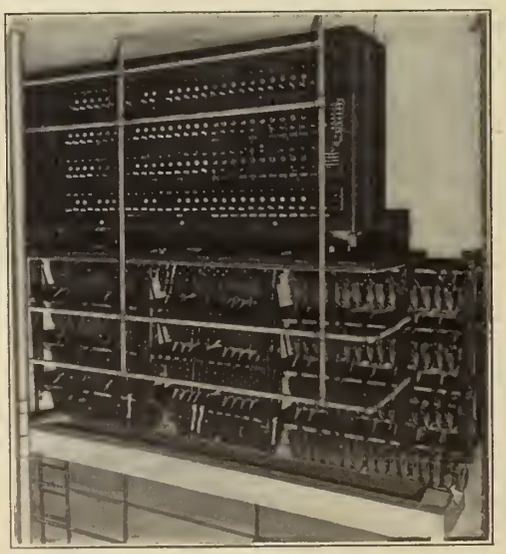
The Granada Theatre, San Francisco's latest theatre, shows wonderful design in both the general layout and details



San Francisco's Latest Creation, Granada Theatre, Opens Doors to Public

Commodious and Beautiful House Cost Two Million Dollars

The Granada theatre, which was opened in San Francisco recently, is the finest theatre for the exclusive presentation of motion pictures that has ever been built in the western part of America. This theatre, which is owned by the Granada Theatre Company of which Herbert L. Rothchild is president, was built at a cost of approximately $2,000,000 and embodies in its design all of the newest features in theatre construction. It is located on Market Street, which is the main business thoroughfare in the city by the Golden Gate. With a view to the future growth of the city, the site for the Granada was selected at the corner of Jones Street, which is a little farther out than the most congested parts of San Francisco's business centre, but which in a few years will be the heart of the newer growth which is fast making this part of the city its centre.

J. A. Partington and Eugene H. Roth are associate directors of the Granada theatre, while Partington is active as managing director. The house management is in the hands of E. N. Ayer, who was formerly advertising manager for the same company which controls the California, Imperial, and Portola theatres in San Francisco. The theatre was designed by Alfred Henry Jacobs, who is well known in the west as an architect who has considerable reputation for the work he has done in designing theatres.

The building is a reinforced concrete structure and is absolutely fireproof. It has a seating capacity of 3,500 seats that are divided so that about a half of this number are on the main floor while the rest are in a single baleony. Two-thirds of the balcony seats are loges and are elaborately furnished with wicker chairs of ample proportions.

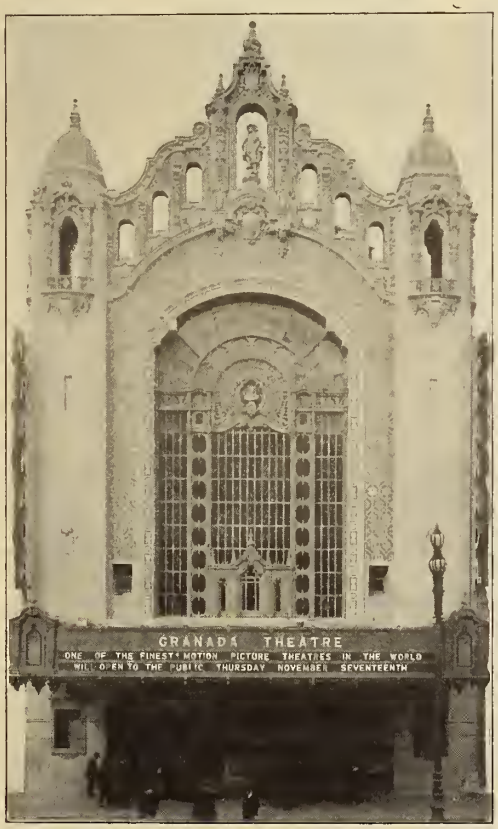
The name of the theatre was the inspiratio for the motif used in its interior design. Spanish-Moorish architecture characterizes the appearance of the building both from the inside and outside. The ceiling of the main auditorium reaches, unbroken, over an expanse tha is 160 feet long and 108 feet wide. This ceiling is richly carved and in the centre has a oval dome that can be lighted with a great vari ance of color and brilliance.

There are no columns or posts of any kin that support this ceiling from points in th centre of the building and there are no break under the balcony that may interfere with view of the stage. From any seat in the hous the view of the screen is perfect. The wall are lined with pilasters that divide it into panel that are beautifully decorated. The Orga Grille is an impressive thing. On either side o the Proscenium are two canopies that projec over the grille and give the appearance of tw towers done in richly carved plaster work. Th colors of the Granada theatre are taken fror the Panama Pacific Exposition and are all ligh cheerful colors, which combine to give a ros colored effect over the whole building.

Artificial ventilation is arranged so that eithe hot or cold air may be admitted under the seats The air passes through the Carrier Air Condi tioning system that has two eight-foot fa blowers. The organ is a Wurlitzer and was in stalled at a cost of $80,000. It is the larges orchestral organ that has ever been built any where. All floors are cement finished wit either wood or carpet covering. Carpets ar used everywhere in the building except unde the balcony seats where smoking is allowed.



The lobby frames are especially designed an are very unique. Each lobby card occupies show window that is four feet wide, five fee

Alfred Henry Jacobs,

Careful exhibitors, men who choose the pictures and music of their performances with great care, sometimes overlook one of the most important factors in every successful presentation—the lighting.

All of the recently constructed palaces of film entertainment have regarded the lighting of extreme importance and the great leaders, the Granada, the Chicago, the Tivoli and others have installed The Major System of Light Control to obtain the magnificent effects those theatres are now famous for.

Yours does not have to be one of the largest theatres to enjoy the extra profits the Major System will bring. The Major System is of Unit Construction and the smaller installations have every advantage—the pre-selection, the cumulative control—the extended remote control—the compact dimmer control, every one a point of superiority of the larger. The Major System reduces the fire and panic hazard and above all gives you the most beautiful lighting effects ever conceived.

Investigate today the possibilities of the Major System for your new house or renewing the present one—write today for a valuable outline of theatre requirements—"The Theatre Lighting Questionaire."

There are two entrances to the Granada theatre. The main entrance on Market Street has a box office with four cashiers and the Golden Gate Avenue entrance has one. The Dictograph intercommunicating system is used throughout the whole building with two master and twenty intercom stations. Vacuum cleaners are of the stationary type, with floor plugs in all parts of the theatre.

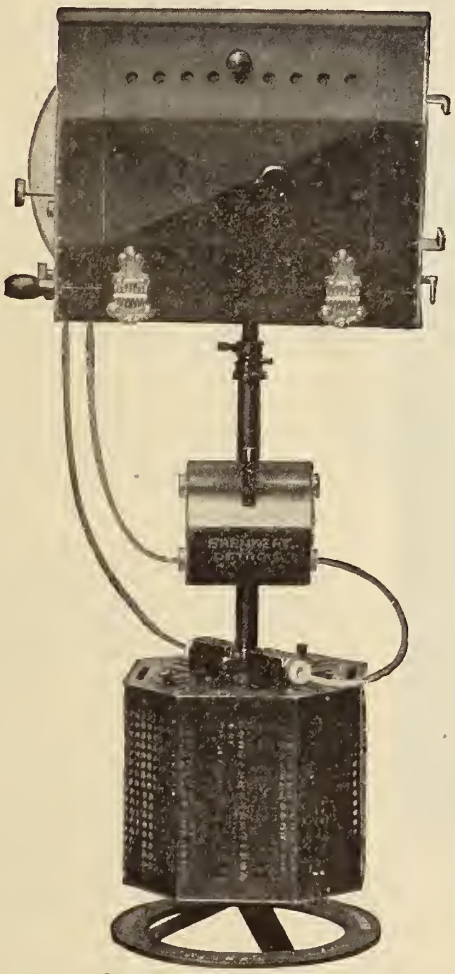
The projection room has three Simplex projectors of the newest design. The throw is 16 feet. There is also a stereopticon and a spot light in the projection room. The screen is the Diamond Crystal Screen, which is manufactured by the Hill Company of San Francisco. The phojectors are fitted with arc controrheostats.

The light control system is the Major Pr Selective System and the switchboard has dimmer system with 156 dimmer plates.

Sun-Light Arc Corporation to Equip Huge Italian Studio

It is announced that a huge film studio company, organized by Mr. Frank Elliott, vice-president of the Sun-Light Arc Corporation, and to be equipped by that concern, is now in course of construction in Rome. The plant is to be operated on the same lines as the Robert Brunton Studios in Hollywood, California, now known as the United Studios. The plant, which is nearing completion, is to be run on a rental basis, and will offer to the American producer the same technical facilities that he is accustomed to at home. It will naturally make a special appeal to the American director who seeks fresh fields. It is to be expected that the release in the near future of the huge production made by J. Gordon Edwardes for the Fox Company, also the new George Fitzmaurice Production, both made in Italy, will create great interest in Italy as a producing ground for certain pictures. The company which is imperatively a nominally Italian one, is capitalized for ten millions of lire. It is to be Sun-Light Arc equipped, and is to offer the American producer the same technical facilities he can obtain here in the United States. This is the first serious effort to attract the American producer and it has been up to an American concern in the shape of the very successful Sun-Light Arc Corporation, through one of its officers, to secure for the visiting American director the technical facilities without which it is impossible to make pictures to sell to the American public.

In addition to a first class laboratory, a very difficult thing to find in Italy, the concern will offer all the usual facilities in regard to casting, locations, construction of sets and up to date lighting equipment. This will be the first studio in Italy to have its own electrical generator for direct current.



Massive Organ Lost by Fire

Orangeburg's Third Theatre

PATENTED FRAMING SHUTTER

This patented framing shutter is the newest and most useful feature ever given a spot-flood lamp. When flood lighting the stage the operator can instantly set this patented framing shutter so that any area is exactly covered—and the operator can use this patented framing shutter as a rapidly operating dowser shutter. All the Old-Time Card Board and Sheet Metal Framers are Eliminated.

This patented framing shutter is built in so that it does not interfere with the operation of color wheel, iris shutter, stage effects or any other attachments. It can always be operated no matter what attachment is being used as the control lever is outside where the operator has easy and quick command of control lever.

HERE IT IS

A high powered spot-flood lamp that answers the prevailing demand for BRILLIANT FLOOD LIGHT AND A CRISPY WHITE SPOT.

This Brenkert Spot-Flood Lamp "Model C2" is of new design and rugged construction. The 40-60-80 ampere multiple unit type rheostat is instantly controlled while in operation to increase or decrease the amperage as desired.

All parts of arc lamp correspond in strength to the heavy jaws. A one inch perfect contact on carbons is maintained between jaw and positive carbon clamp. No arcing between parts of carbon jaw as the perfectly machined V to hold carbons is carried in same heavy metal piece to which cable attaches.

The large double lined lamphouse is freely ventilated—light-tight—and evenly balanced to afford free and easy motion for registering at any angle.

PATENTED FRAMING SHUTTER

Special mention is made of the Patented Framing Shutter above. It is one of the exclusive features of the Brenkert "Model C2" Spot-Flood Lamp. Every operator will readily observe the advantages of this Patented Framing Shutter feature.

MORE LIGHT—BETTER LIGHT

Theatres of today want more light—better light—and the Brenkert Spot-Flood Lamp "Model C2" is made to answer that prevailing demand.

National Anti-Misframe League Forum

Motion Picture News, 729 Seventh Avenue,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Editor:

I read in our Forum where there was an argument between "A" and "B" by my brother operator, B. C. Harrington. The following are my discussions:

There are several ways in which film can become scratched.

First: Dirt collecting on aperture has a tendency to scratch film. Second: The take-up sometimes scratches the film. Third: If the rollers, which admits the film in or out of the magazine, become stuck, they will cause scratches. Fourth: Most of all causes is the holding of one reel on the rewind and sliding the film on the other to tighten the film on the reel. This should never be done. If your rewind has a brake, set the brake so as to rewind the film evenly and film will be free from many scratches.

I am positive "A" is right.

Very truly,

James Bickel,

Dear Sirs:

I joined the N. A. M. L. some time ago, as my number, 1391, will indicate. I have used the labels sent me and would be pleased to receive more.

I am enclosing a drawing with explanation of a device to release the porthole doors in case of fire, its main object is to avert panic.

Explanation of Figure I.

A length of furnace chain (about 8 in.) is fixed to the end of cord.

One of the links of the chain is passed over the nail "B," which is held to the base board by coil springs.

When the handle is pulled the nail is pulled from the link which releases the cord.

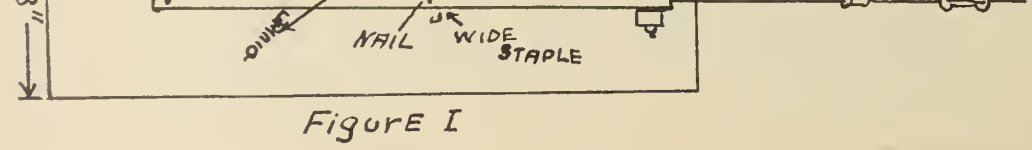

Figure I

Dear Sir:

Time and again I have received letters fro you advising me to send something in to t N. A. M. L. Forum, from this section. I mu confess that I have been somewhat backwar in this matter but I am now taking the o portunity of doing so.

I am projectionist at the above theatre in town of about four thousand population. have been in the game for over ten years an don't claim to know it all yet. I can remembe back when I used to run the film off in a larg goods box, didn't know what a take-up wa This theatre has a seating capacity of 25(Projection room is 8 x 10 ft. Equipment con sists of one Power's 6B motor driven projec tor with mazda light. I have been using th mazda for over two years and find it ver satisfactory under the conditions which I hav it working. Our throw is 60 ft. getting a pic ture 9 x 12 ft. through a Gunlach Lens 4¾ in E. F. Instead of using the corrugated con denser as supplied with the machine I hav reversed the stereopticon condensers, move the lamp-house back within one inch of th extreme point which it will work and get a extra good light. The condensers I am usin are 7½ in. back and 6½ in. front. This als gives me more space to work in between lamp house and head without having to move th lamp-house over. I know I have a little los of light but don't think it would justify me i making a change as I get a good light a 28 amp.

I have noticed in the forum that many o the N. A. M. L. members have in time "in vented" something (so to speak) that helps them in their work and enables them to get better results on the screen. I am glad to say that I have not been asleep along this line and have made several little things that help me very much. I have a little two battery light fixed inside the head of our machine with a push button fastened on a foot rest at the floor, when threading I can push the button with my foot and have my hands free. So you can see that all pictures at the New Theatre start in frame. I know that the late model Power machines have a light of this kind but do not work on the same principle as mine. I did not copy from them as I had my light on before I heard of theirs. My other "invention" is on my rewinding bench. I have a paddle fastened by a hinge to the side of the projection room over rewinding bench and held by a spring fastened to ceiling. I have a wire running from this paddle to a foot treadle under bench. On one side of the paddle I have a piece of an automobile tire casing fastened on with four stove bolts, this serves as my brake. I also have a glass on rewinding bench 4 x 5 in. with a ten watt lamp in a box under it to patch on. When the film is received at the theatre I take it out and inspect it. I have a comfortable stool which I sit on during the inspection. You see I have both hands free and believe me I can cut out misframes, bad patches, punch marks, and all other evils that do damage to the film without getting tired. I have stood over two hours many a time inspecting film. The glass I use to patch on is an old 5 x 7 in. photographic plate that has been light struck and not been developed. This gives a soft light and does not hurt your eyes.

Dear Sir;-

It affords me great pleasure to testify to the sterling merits of the Powers Cameragraph,which,as a manager of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse",I have thoroughly tested.

In each of the cities where I have put on this big Rex Ingram-Metro picture, I have had installed two Powers 6-B Type E latest model Cameragraphs,duplicating those used during the long run of the "Four Horsemen"in New York City,and can vouch for their strength and beauty of construction,the ease with which they may be taken apart and reassembled,and the remarkable excellence of their projection. It is really a wonderful machine.

Please permit me to thank you for the cordial co-operation afforded by your office in installing the show at the Curran Theatre in San Francisco,and the personal and untiring interest you and your associates have taken in the success of the engagement here.

graphic work, motion picture and commercial. I have taken several thousand feet of movies in the past two years. My last effort along this line was a one reel comedy which I wrote, photographed and directed. I am enclosing a newspaper clipping of a write up they gave me on it. I will appreciate it very much if you will return this clipping. I would also be glad to hear from other members of the league who are taking movies.

I have been a member of the N. A. M. L. for something like three years and cannot say too much for it. If a projectionist in striving for better projection will live up to its pledge he will surely reach his goal. The films I handle through this territory as a general thing are in good condition. Our Paramount and Realart prints are in a-1 condition.

I hope the suggestions which I have given may prove of some benefit to other members. I am sure I have been benefited very much by the suggestions in the forum and hope you will keep up the good work.

Under separate cover I am sending you two photographs, one of my projection room and the other of myself.

Here's wishing you and the N. A. M. L. a happy new year and if you don't hear often from me you can just say that "Old No. 797" of the N. A. M. L. is still on the job. I am,

Yours truly,
WALTER L. GREENE,
New Theatre, Morganton, N. C.

I know the other brothers will be interested in reading what the Morganton News Herald has to say about Brother Greene's picture.—ED.

"Isaiah's Off Day"

"Isaiah's Off Day" is the title of a delightful moonshine comedy, the scenario for which was written and the pictures made by Walter L. Greene. This is the first moving picture to be both written and produced in North Carolina. The characters are well taken by local people. The young producer has shown decided talent in this picture and when it is shown at the New Theatre next week will doubtless attract much attention.

NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE PLEDGE

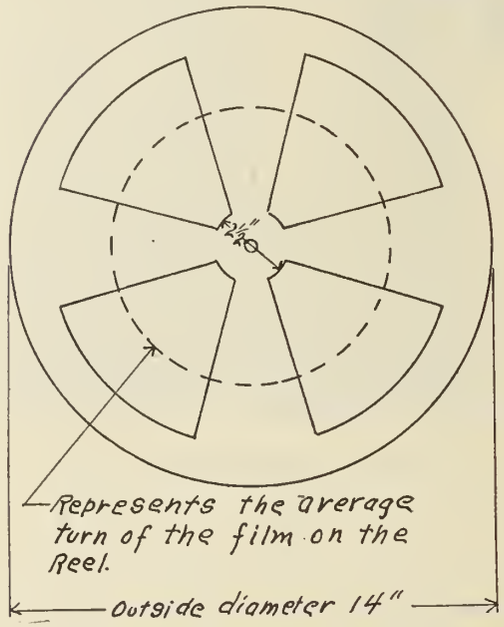
AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Dear Sir:

Thru constant reading of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and especially the Projectionists' Section, I have decided that I will place my application as a N. A. M. L. member before you.

I am at present employed as chief projectionist at this theatre and have held the position for the past fourteen months.

Though I am not a member, I have always tried to follow your rules and have endeavored to help my fellow workers in every way possible. Very truly yours,



JAMES SPARKS.

Gentlemen:

Will you kindly advise me how to figure out that a 14" reel 2½" hub holds 2,000 ft. of film?

Thanking you for the information.

Very truly yours,
W. H. GROSSE.

The distance around a circle is equal to the diameter of the circle (the distance across the circle thru its center) times 3.1416.

Then referring to the diagram, we find that the distance around the hub is 2½ x 3.1416 =7.85". Also the distancce around the outside of the reel is 14 x 3.1416 = 44".

Now, the length of film that it takes to go around the reel gradually increases from 7.85", the distance around the hub, up to 44", the distance around the outside. Then the average length of film to go around the reel is found by adding the distance around the hub and the distance around the outside and then dividing this sum by 2.

Projectionists:

The News will solve any technical problems, gratis.

The average turn around the reel is 25.92

By counting the number of layers of fil on a reel, we find approximately 81 to the inc We have 14" — 2½" equals 11½ inches layers of film on this 14" reel. Then 11 (inches of layers) times 81 (No. of turns p inch) times 25.92" (length of average tur around reel) equals 24.080 inches of film on th reel. Now to change this to feet we divide b 12 or 24080

We will be glad to solve any problems fo the fellows.—Tech. Ed.

Dear Editor:

Just a little suggestion to C. E. Of B. C. Harrington's letter on "Who Is Right," I say that "A" is right, because when rewinding a film and it is going at full speed, then suddenly stop it, you can hear a ripping sound, then look at the side of the reel and you will sometimes see threads of coiled emulsion, and if there is dirt on the film it is bound to be scratched. Worn gravity rollers also have a tendency of scratching the film. Hoping "A" and "B" won't get into a fist fight over this, I remain,

Very truly yours,
S. MESSINGER,

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

Has that pliable, reproductive sensitiveness that responds to the quality of the negative—that registers brilliancy in every detail of highlight, halftone or shadow. It carries quality through to the screen.

Eastman Film, both regular and tinted base, is identifiable throughout its entire length by the words "Eastman" "Kodak" stenciled in the film margin.

Narcey of Simplex Now Public Projectionist

It will no doubt be a surprise to hundreds of Simplex users as well as the many Simplex distributors, to learn that Dave Narcey, who for the past five years has been in charge of the Simplex Factory Service Department, has severed his connections, and is now operating with Hy Silverman, the Public Projection Rooms at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

Dave Narcey

Mr. Narcey entered the employ of the Simplex organization as a road and service man, and in this position his experience as a practical projectionist for 15 years stood him in splendid stead and earned for him an enviable reputation among Simplex and accessory circles. With the new policies of Simplex distribution, some years ago Mr. Narcey was placed in charge of the service division at the Simplex offices and in this position Mr. Narcey came in contact with thousands of Simplex users who all knew him as "Dave."

Mr. Narcey feels highly optimistic over his new venture and assures his friends that in the Public Projection Rooms where four Simplexes are rendering day and night service, they can be assured of the finest sort of treatment. "The projection," says Mr. Narcey, "will be under my personal supervision, and no expense has been spared to make our reviewing headquarters as fully up-to-date as possible. Facilities for the storage of films that are awaiting review, perfect adherence to fire laws, strict privacy, absolute confidences respected, and personal comfort, together with courtesy and permanent high grade service will mark the Public Projection Rooms as being entirely different. No job is too large or too small for us, and the wonderful training I received at Simplex makes me particularly realize the necessity for consistent courtesy and service." Mr. Narcey's host of fellow members in Local No. 306 Operators Union of New York, together with the entire personnel at the Simplex plant, unite in wishing him absolute success in his new enterprises.

Projector Sales Increasing

More activity in the purchase of projectors is being shown in the southern territory than for some time past, according to O. F. Spahr, general manager of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, who has just returned to his Chicago headquarters after a trip to Dallas and other southwest points.

While in San Antonio Mr. Spahr inspected the installation of batteries of new Motiograph De Luxe projectors in two houses controlled by the Southern Enterprises, the Pearl and the Wigwam theatres, and states that contracts have been closed for installations of the new De Luxe projectors in several other houses and that machines are in transit from the factory for these theatres.

Interesting Demonstration of New Screen

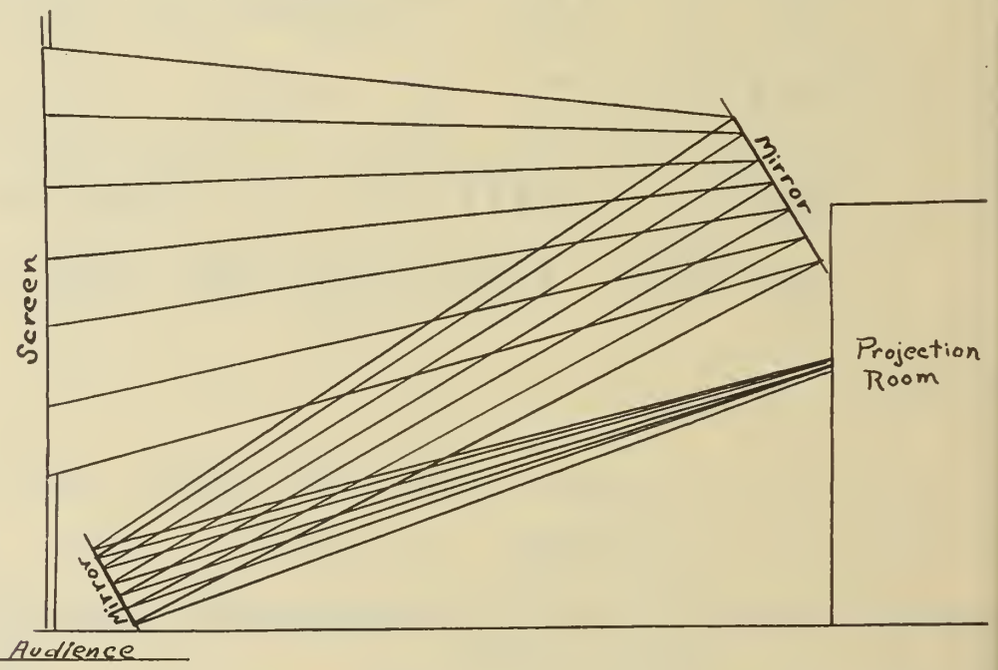
The Trans-Lux Daylight Screen was introduced through a demonstration at the Eltinge Theatre, New York City. The installation was made by means of a projection system invented by H. F. Victor, who is president of the Victor Animatograph Company and also an inventor whose devises are well known to the public.

Mr. Victor has given the following description of this latest innovation.

"The Trans-Lux Daylight Screen, of which an exhibition was given at the Eltinge Theatre on Thursday, January 19, was originally invented by John F. R. Troeger and subsequently improved upon by the technical staff of the American Lux Products Corporation at its factory in Brooklyn. The problems confronting the manufacturers in producing a perfect translucent screen, having corrugations of the prismatic type imbedded throughout its entire surface, have been tremendous.

"When it is realized that these screens are now being cast in one solid piece twenty-two feet in diameter, one begins to realize the almost insurmountable difficulties attending such an undertaking. Each screen contains, imbedded in the material, a seamless sheet of silk. In order to weave such large sheets of silk special looms were constructed.

"The manufacturing difficulties are, however, of less interest to the general public than the principle employed in sccuring clear, brilliant pictures on a screen, while the lights are on in the auditorium or even when daylight enters the room.



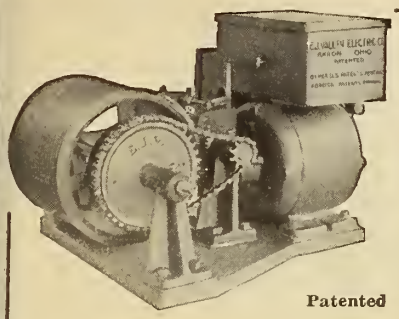
"The reasons such results are obtained is twofold. The material itself has the peculiar property of absorbing all front rays of light while the rays coming from the rear penetrate the material and are plainly visible from the opposite side. While this is true of all translucent surfaces, such as ground glass or a number of other surfaces these also reflect as well as transmit light and may not be used in daylight.

"The Trans-Lux Daylight Screen, instead of being white like a sheet of ground glass is practically black and it is due to this quality that pictures shown from the opposite side become so strongly contrasted. In fact, it is possible to project two pictures on the screen simultaneously, one from each side, each picture being clearly observed from the opposite side of the screen without interference from the image which is projected from the other side.

"This screen is corrugated and each corrugation acts as a prism, bending the rays so that the picture is visible from extreme wide angles, making it possible to see the pictures clearly from the front rows and boxes in the theatre as well as other parts of the auditorium.

"Back projection has never been practical in the past, even though a perfect screen was employed, due to the extreme short distance between the back wall of the stage and the screen line.

"This problem has been solved through the use of a series of mirrors. Take for example a distance of twenty-two feet from the back wall of the stage to the screen. The use of one mirror properly arranged, will double this distance and give an actual projection distance of forty-four feet. An additional mirror will add to this twenty-two more feet, giving in all sixty-six feet.



"It is found in practice that lenses of shorter focus do not give satisfactory images. As is known, the very short focus lens does not give good definition, the mirror providing the possibilities of using longer focal length lenses.

"The many advantages of rear projection are obvious, allowing the auditorium to be fully lighted thus giving easy access to the seats and avoiding danger in case of confusion.

"In many theatres a number of seats have been given up to the installation of the projection room. These are naturally saved by the employment of the Trans-Lux Daylight Screen since the projection apparatus is located on the stage and not in the auditorium itself.

Various Effects Thru Colored Lighting

flected in full value; falling on a green object will be absorbed, and the object reflecting no light will appear black. If it falls on a yellow object, the object will appear red, because, as mentioned above, yellow reflects red among other colors.

In light there are three so-called primary colors, which, mixed together, will give us white light. These are red, green and blue. Mixtures of two, or even the three, primary colors in varying proportions will give us all of the intermediate colors. Red and green will produce yellow; blue and green, blue-green; blue and red, purple; red and green, with more red than green, orange, and so on.

Some of our readers are no doubt saying to themselves at this point that we are wrong, for the three primary colors are red, yellow and blue. They are thinking of pigments or paints which work on a quite different principle. In pigments, green is produced by mixing blue and yellow, but we are talking about light.

Certain effects produced by colored light falling on colored objects were mentioned above, and it must be borne in mind that the term " pure " was used. It is rare in practice that we encounter pure colors either in light or pigments. The general effects are, however, of the order indicated.

If one desires to go into the matte from a scientific standpoint, it is necessar to examine the light emitted by the colore lamp or transmitted through the colc screen by a spectroscope. A spectroscop is merely a prism set in some sort of tub and has the property of breaking up th light into its component parts. Whit light examined through a spectroscop shows us the complete spectrum or rair bow. Red light shows only the red par of the rainbow, the rest of the band o image appearing black. This instrumer may also be used for examining the re flected light from colored objects. A ver simple form of spectroscope which can b obtained at a very low cost is adequate fo rough work.

The commercial reds (glasses, dips an gelatin screens) are usually quite pure the greens frequently contain blue, yellow and even a trace of red. The blues ar likely to contain all the colors, blue, o course, predominating. In practice, there fore, before making the actual installation it is desirable to experiment with both th colored light and the pigment intended fo use on the scenery or decoration. By manipulation and correct choice of mate rial a desirable effect can be arrived at.

The action of colored light on colorec material is of importance in decorative lighting and on the stage. Decorations can be enhanced in value by the proper choice of color or can be spoiled by the improper selection; for example, yellow rays falling on light blue make it appear yellow-green; green rays falling on red make it appear brown; orange rays falling on red make it appear scarlet.

On the stage, by the proper combination of colored light and painted scenery, it is possible to entirely change a scene without manipulating any scenery. This effect is based on the following principle.

If we have a red object on a white background and illuminate it with red light, the background and the object will both reflect red light in its full value. There will be no contrast or difference in brightness, and the object will be invisible. Similar, green light falling on a green object on a white background will cause the object to fade out. Suppose, therefore, as shown in figure 1, we have a tree painted with the proper color of green and a rock painted in red. If we illuminate this with white light the tree will appear green and the rock red. If we illuminate it with green light, the rock will show up in brown and the tree will be invisible. If we illuminate it with red, the rock will be invisible and the three show up as a reddish gray.

This, of course, is a very crude example purposely simple but with experimentation, the principle can be extended to produce truly marvelous and startling effects.

Would you run in winter—without HEAT?

Certainly NOT.

Of course, you wouldn't. You know the business you'd lose that way would be worth a good deal more than the coal you'd save.

Now, why doesn't that same argument hold good in hot weather? It's the same proposition exactly.

There's actually no saving in running without Monsoon Cooling System in summer—any more than in running without heat in winter. You lose more in business in hot weather than it costs for cool, refreshing Monsoon comfort.

Think it over—but not too long. Hot weather is coming along fast. Get ready for it. Write for Booklet A1.

New Screen Demonstration

In some theatres the projection is thrown at an extreme angle and this is overcome through this back projection. In houses where the projection distance is unusually long, occasional difficulties have been encountered and special provisions have been made. In the present instance, conditions are always the same, requiring no special arrangements of any kind.

"The screen is manufactured by the American Lux Productions Corporation and is now being placed on the market. Those interested in this company are Percy N. Furber, B. J. Greenhut, H. Harry Meyers and Alexander F. Victor.

"The distribution is in charge of Thomas F. Walker. A demonstration of the new screen will be made at the Ten Eyck Hotel at Albany, New York, during the week of February 13 at the meeting or the M. P. T. O. A."

A Practical Film Editing Rack

In a letter received from one of our cinematograph friends we found the following very practical idea:

"In this connection I am inclosing a photograph to show you a film editing rack which I have developed here in my work of editing and assembling my negatives after I have returned from a field expedition. The frame is of soft pine and allows sticking glass headed push-pins through the ends or perforations of a scene and thereby fastening it to the top rack. A long sheet of tracing cloth backed by a row of 100 watt Mazda lights provides an excellent illumination for the film—which can be pinned up in a row and the scenes shifted at will to form the proper order. A long trough or trench made from compo board, fifteen feet long and three feet deep—two feet wide, is lined with a soft dark cloth and catches the negative or positive film as it is unwound and their first ends shifted in assembling. I have never seen anything like it, while I have seen experienced assemblers laboriously working with a large number of small rolls, pulling out the ends and trying to assemble film in such a manner. I find this rack method very good, as I can handle 2,000 feet on the rack at once without any danger of scratching either the negative or positive."

Mr. Cowling's film editing rack

'21 Barren of Musical Events Says the London Times

Last year was barren of great musical events, thinks The London Times. It seems nowhere to have discovered a masterpiece or a genius likely to enlarge the general experience in music. "Future generations will not look back on 1921 as we look back on 1882, the 'Parsifal' year, for instance, or, to take a more local view, 1908, the year of Elgar's first symphony, or 1913, when Chaliapin and the Russians first introduced us to 'Boris Godounov.' We hardly expect events on that scale now, though even since the war we have had more memorable dates than this one; 1919, for example, when 'The Planets' first whirled their way into the field of vision. Besides these things the vagaries of the Parisian 'Six' and the divertimenti of Messrs. Bliss and Goossens seem slight. No, 1921, will hardly gain remembrance for any new music it has brought us."

Chicago Opera Company Season Shows Huge Deficit

The information that the Chicago Opera Company's season shows a loss of $800,000 seems not to have affected the opinion of its admirers in the least.

Chicagoan's still boast of its hustling energy, of its enterprise—even of the magnificence of its deficits.

But these admirers are willing to explain why an artistically successful season was not a successful season financially.

The chief cause of the deficit was the paying of expensive artists who did not sing and of big productions staged for a limited number of performances.

However, if those who pay are satisfied there seems to be small cause for the rest of the world to object.

Franklin Engages Two Conductors

Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, Inaugurates Innovation in Connection with Music Scores

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN has started an innovation at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. He has installed two conductors of the big symphony orchestra. One is Harry Wallace, the other Julian Caster. The conductors work in the pit every other week. Mr. Wallace spends seven days screening, laying out and synchronizing the score for the next week, while Mr. Caster conducts the orchestra. The next week Mr. Caster relinquishes the baton to Mr. Wallace and in turn devotes his time to preparing the music for the next production. Through this plan one conductor is with the orchestra while the other is preparing the musical setting for the coming attraction, conducting the score he prepared instead of turning it over to the assistant director. This scheme, according to Mr. Franklin will insure a smooth performance and the very finest synchronization possible. There is now time for research work—time to look for the best possible composition to express a certain emotion —time to dig up the unusual.

"The greatest difficulty in music synchronization at this time is the fact that in most instances the man who selects the music for the picture does not conduct the orchestra," said Mr. Franklin in commenting upon his new plan. "The result is that the fine points of interpretation are entirely lost. Under this new plan each conductor will have a full week in which to prepare a perfectly synchronized score and will have more than usual time for research work. He will have an opportunity to look for the little fine points that make a score human.

"It is too much to ask a musical director to prepare a score and at the same time conduct a performance. In instances where an assistant conductor is relied upon to play the performance the most valuable man in the orchestra is usually lost.

"The assistant conductor does not have any idea of what is coming next. All he can do is play the music before him. He takes chances. A distinguished feature of a fine orchestra or conductor is the interpretation given the music. It is a well known fact among music people that no two conductors have the same interpretation. A pause, an expression mark, the color is what gives an accompaniment its distinguishing quality.

"Our new system should give each score individually. It will eliminate the laborious feature of the score preparation.

"As a rule the members of the orchestra do not take their work seriously when the assistant conductor is in charge. He does not command the same respect as that given the regular director. Under the new plan we will have a regular conductor in charge at all times. The members will be on the job at all times.

"At the first performance of each picture under our new system, the conductor who is "off" will sit in the audience with me. Together we will criticize and try to improve the score. The conductor will supply the technical knowledge of music which I lack.

"The new system will cultivate a friendly rivalry between the two conductors with the result that each will try to outdo the other in the music setting. It will bring competition and results. It gives each conductor plenty of time to get a point of view and saves him the monotony of being on the job continuously which eventually turns him into an automatom."

Mr. Wallace comes to the Hippodrome from Shea's Criterion which has now passed into new hands. Mr. Caster has been conductor at Shea's North Park, where Leonard Blandon, first violinist of the Shea Court street theatre, is now conductor.

"School Days" Music Score

Leo Edwards Explains What Tunes Have Been Used for Barry Feature

THE trade showing of "School Days" at the Hotel Astor recently disclosed a musical score that expressed the tempo of the picture in a most unusual style, and registered with the audience as well away from the time worn and stereotyped musical synopsis that accompanies the release of many pictures.

Because the "School Days" score as played was unusual and most attractive, Motion Picture News has interviewed its composer, Leo Edwards, brother of Gus Edwards, whose name is synonymous with the vaudeville classic from which the picture was adapted, for the material contained therein and the reasons for their selection.

I have taken all the famous songs that my brother, Gus, has written for years, and I have interwoven them all through the picture.

"For the scenes where Wesley Barry is with the dog, I have used the theme of 'He's Me Pal,' which fits admirably for this scene. I have taken the 'School Days' melody and paraphrased 'Ma Cherie' and the 'Marseillaise.' I used this paraphrase in the city school room scene with the French school teacher; and I remember at the opening night at the Astor showing this 'School Days' paraphrase just carried the audience right with the play on the screen.

"In the dramatic moments, I have taken 'School Days' and paraphrased it into a heavy number, playing it in minors, securing a very symphonic effect. In the big scene where the boy comes back to meet his dog, I have taken 'He's Me Pal' and played it up to a crescendo climax, and this brought remarkable effects.

"Particular stress was laid on the brass and wooden instruments so as to carry the nature of the picture. I also found wonderful opportunity in the scene where the heavy of the picture turns out to be a confidence man to use 'Jimmy Valentine' to good effect. Such melodies as 'Sunbonnet Sue,' 'My Old Lady,' 'You Are Just the Boy For me,' 'Goodbye Little Girl, Goodbye,' 'He's Me Pal,' 'Sidewalks of New York,' 'Kidland,' 'If I was a Millionaire,' 'Morning, Noon and Night,' and 'Partners' were woven into the score and served to blend with the entire production into a harmonious whole.

Pictures to Fit Music Not Vice Versa

As motion pictures become more and more independent of the speaking stage and the written novel their kinship with music is being increasingly emphasized, it seems. For instance the presentation of a specially edited print of "La Tosca" to fit the music score, by Hugo Riesenfeld last November, has been followed by a similar presentation of "Carmen," also the work of Dr. Riesenfeld and also presented on the program of the New York Rialto theatre.

And this is not all. It is reported Philip Van Loan is in Italy at work on what is called a "film opera" entitled "The Soul of the Violin," and that Dudley Murphy, who produced "The Soul of the Cypress," which was shown at the Rivoli last year, has become President of the Visual Symphony Productions, Inc., and is now preparing a motion picture in which Adolph Bolm of the Metropolitan Opera House is to appear. Richard Strauss has been engaged to write a score for the Van Loan production, it is said, and Mr. Murphy's plan includes the pictorial interpretation of such work as the "Marche Slav" and the "Danse Macabre."

What "American" Offers The Independent Producer:

1. Intelligence
2. Entry into the better and the best theatres.
3. The respect, confidence and patronage of exhibitors.
4. An accurate and thorough knowledge of what materials should be produced.
5. Rapidity in making cash settlements with the owners of pictures.
6. No unfair and dishonest charges made against Producer revenues.
7. Capability and enthusiasm behind your pictures.
8. The best advertising and exploitation ever known in this industry.
9. An organization of managers and salesmen in the field with power and personal standing.
10. The oldest organization in this industry from the standpoint of an association of capable men with each other. New offices, yes—but a trained, tried, tested sales machine that can always look its customers squarely in the eyes without flinching.

We are ready to announce a score of completed productions of high calibre and sure appeal—all from independent producer sources.

DON'T BELIEVE

WHEN Alan Dale in The American says:

"Here is a picture that is a triumph of imagination—a scintillant example of adroit intelligence. It does what the stage can never do. It gets away from what we call 'movie stuff.' It would make a movie fan of the screen's bitterest foes. You must see it. It is so well done, it is such good fun, it is so clever. An overwhelmingly excellent story. Don't miss it. Take my tip. It is an achievement. It is a colossal surprise."

WHEN the Evening Mail says:

"Without hesitation, one of the pictures of the year. A masterpiece. Unlike anything that has gone before. Rare delight. Only superlatives can do it justice. A true triumph. Much more could be said, but it isn't necessary. Just take a tip, though. If you don't see it you will miss one of the rarest treats that the films have granted in many a day."

WHEN the New York Telegraph says:

WHEN the New York Herald says:

"A delightful skylark. One of the unique pictures of the season."

WHEN the New York Sun says:

"It stands in a class by itself, in an original vein. Excellent entertainment."

WHEN the New York Journal says:

"Broadway never before saw anything quite like 'One Glorious Day.' As comedy, as romance and as an example of what the screen can do for real entertainment it is illuminating."

WHEN the New York Telegram says:

"As a comedy it deserves to rank as one of the finest ever made."

WHEN the New York Evening Post says:

" 'One Glorious Day' leaves one with a chuckle in one's throat and new respect for the producer. It is whimsically conceived, finely photographed and chock full of humor which leaves memories of a highly entertaining character. It is an event of no little importance."

WHEN the New York Times says:

"Can anything imaginative come out of Hollywood? It can. It has. It is 'One Glorious Day.' Full of spirited comedy, the whole story moves briskly. A skilful and ingenious piece of work."

WHEN the New York Tribune says:

"Whimsical and altogether delightful. Something that has never before been done on the screen."

— don't believe it — UNTIL

You see and play "One Glorious Day" yourself. Then you'll agree that these criticisms, the finest the New York papers have ever run, are all actually deserved!

A Paramount Picture

THE CRITICS!

But read what they say—

Rivoli Has Glorious Spook Comedy With Will Rogers—Dog Star at Capitol.

"ONE GLORIOUS DAY" is Will Rogers running wild on spiritism. One reason why his comedies are always so irresistible is that, under their utter nonsense, he has always a solemn wink at human frailties—his last was a sly dig at the Romeos of life. In this latest he has the Maeterlinck idea of a stranger from the land of unborn souls offering the soul of a [illegible] scholar and retiring adventures which [illegible] original tenant. "I want [illegible]," muses the disembodied professor wistfully, as he watches the unearthly visitor [illegible] tired of this feeble body [illegible] deserts it for a more vigorous [illegible] leaving the professor to benefit [illegible] glorious day of havoc.

All these [illegible] absurdities are woven together so cleverly that the result has an undertone of eerie poetry. The spook itself is a masterpiece of conception and photography—it is a transparent pollywog creature, a cross

The picture also is in an original vein, and taken as a whole is excellent entertainment. When Rogers was here in the flesh he said something to the effect that the picture industry was ready to state that the company could make at least one film in a good one. "One Glorious Day" is the good one of the four, and we'll wager that it is far better than the other three.

ONE GLORIOUS DAY, with Will Rogers, Lila Lee, Alan Hale, John Fox and others, directed by James Cruze, written by Walter Woods and A. B. Barringer; "Western Ways," with Trumps, directed by Clyde E. Elliott; "A Rural Cinderella," a comedy; "Pierrot Dance," by Marjorie Peterson. At the Rivoli.

Can anything imaginative come out of Hollywood? It can. It has. It's "One Glorious Day," and is at the Rivoli this week.

Many people, the studiously unoriginal audience, have dreamed of both the plausible and comic possibilities of spiritism on the screen, but most of us have about given up hope of ever seeing any of these possibilities realized. We may now take heart, however, for a good many of the comic possibilities, at least, have been realized in "One Glorious Day." It is a spiritistic spree, and so it goes, with many sidesights and off-shoots into spirited comedy, the whole story moving briskly, with only the necessary dips into routine movie romance, and frequent flights into original fantasticality. And the best of it all is that the picture is imaginatively done. Such a story would be dreary without suitable settings, acting and cinematography. Everything depends on its treatment. So its high success is due, first of all, to the director, James Cruze, and his staff, including especially his cameraman. The production of the picture involved almost continuous double exposure, and some exceedingly difficult feats with it. But there doesn't seem to be a missed shot in the whole photoplay. It is a skillful and ingenious piece of work.

But this is not all. There's also the acting. Will Rogers, as Professor Botts, is a revelation. See him first when the Professor's spirit is at home, and then when Ek occupies his body, and you'll say again that Will Rogers can be a good deal more on the screen than just himself. In his hands, Botts is Botts, and when he is supposed not to be the real Botts any more, he certainly is not Botts. And John Fox as the disembodied Ek is a delight. His costume and makeup must have been designed by some one who had had a comic dream of spirits, and Mr. Fox—is he a boy or a man?—brings to the part all the sprightliness and space it needs. The others in the cast are also good.

Broadway never before saw a thing quite like "One Glorious Day." As comedy [illegible] ample [illegible] can do for real entertainment, it is illuminating.

Broadway has something new at the Rivoli theatre in "One Glorious Day." As a comedy it deserves to rank as one of the best made. As romance, it is charming. As an example of what the screen can do for entertainment, it is illuminating. And, because of an excellent fantastic story, inspired director and Will Rogers, he does that, the epigrams and the homely fare

Will Rogers of the "Follies" and Spiritualism—it sounds like a wild prank arranged by a "Follies" showgirl! Somehow one never thought of chewing gum and the psychic blending. Yet Rogers does it, making spirits jump through a hoop without once using his lariat.

This delightful supernatural skylark is a mingling of "The Return of Peter Grimm" and "Peck's Bad Boy." The

It's a treat to watch Rogers giving a real characterization in this new type of dual role, as himself and his own ready to wear spook. Credit should probably go to the director, Jame Cruze, for overcoming Rogers's usual tendency to kid a part. By numerous quaint touches in the early episodes he makes the abstracted Professor a real and lovable a figure as in Barrie's play. "The Professor's Lo[illegible]" and even when he is moonin[illegible] atavistic poetry there is no sugge[illegible] tongue slyly poked at the spec[illegible]. In the violent contrast, when Ek gets control of him, and he briskly [illegible]s off tables, bumping his nose in t[illegible] relief that he can still flit abo[illegible] palpably, and jumps on a saloon [illegible] with an impish leer, one would s[illegible] that another spirit had hold of him [illegible] that Rogers is the logical player for [illegible] Shakespeare's Puck.

Miss Lee [illegible] best work as the housek[illegible] daughter, and the rest of the [illegible]ding Alan Hale, throw themselves [illegible]—into the story. Though he has about too much sometimes, little John Fox as Ek gives a spirited impersonation of Ariel with a gnomelike Thanksgiving mask. The theme itself is not entirely new to literature—H. G. Wells once wrote a short story of a mischievous spirit seizing another's body—but it is new enough to the screen to make this one of the unique pictures of the winter, killing incredibility with a laugh. By its predominantly light treatment it succeeds, with a subject that many persons take very seriously, in mixing gunpowder and jam. And among other joyously whimsical touches is the final suggestion that when Ek finally does get born Dempsey had better watch out.

By ALAN DALE.

you chuckle a flam hoyantly and at the sincerity of which you register an earnest appreciation. Here is a picture that would make a "movie fan" of the screen's hitterest foes. You must see "One Glorious Day" at the Rivoli.

When the cynics laugh at the oft-repeated assertion that "the picture industry is still in its infancy" (like the infant Phenomenon it has taken a long time growing up!) force them to see "One Glorious Day" and they will recant. It cannot be otherwise.

"One Glorious Day" is a sort of comedy version of "Peter Grimm," with effects that are magnificent,

It is so well done. It is so satisfactorily presented. It is such an artistic achievement. It is such good fun. It is so clever. And yet, for those who know their subject, it is so perfectly relevant and possible. But—the majority does not know the subject. For the majority there is the ebullient humor; there is the delightful photography, and there is the overwhelmingly excellent story.

Don't miss "One Glorious Day." Take my tip. It is an achievement. It is a collossal surprise.

PROFESSOR [illegible] "JOY RIDE"

By HELEN ROCKWELL.

"One Glorious Day" is one glorious picture. It is more fun than anything in the cinema line we have been permitted to see.

John Fox is Ek, and with the aid of trick photography he makes him do the most incredible things. Incidentally, the camera work offers some startling double exposures and some rare views of the more secluded streets of infinity. The film is exquisitely made. If it carried a serious theme it would no doubt become the talk of the season. As it is, it will only be hailed as a wealth of gorgeous nonsense.

This is no time to be a Quitter!

Intelligent Effort, Courage, and Good Pictures Will Make Money for Your Theatre

EVEN if you are not showing the returns of two years ago, you can't be a Quitter. The motion picture business needs Courage to-day more than at any other time.

Keep in the game! And put more effort into your theatre. Do everything possible in the way of promotion and presentation before deciding that it's a dark, dark world.

Don't expect too much. The war appetite for pictures could not continue. It was abnormal. It is normal now—and the supply of money is below normal. That's why the public wants its money's worth. The public still likes motion pictures. But it is more discriminating. Necessity makes fine judges of us all.

Once anything went. To-day you must not only sell your pictures, but your patrons must be satisfied when they see them.

Week after week Goldwyn Pictures will make more money for you than any other pictures on the market today.

We repeat—don't be a wall flower. Don't be a quitter. Now is the time to fight for your returns.

The Modern Girl:

You have read that she is shockingly frank, reckless, and sophisticated. But do you know that under this studied exterior she is sincere, self-reliant, enterprising, devoted to the point of self-sacrifice when aroused to the defence of her ideals?

In a single day, this gay society girl became a cold, calculating woman; determined to bring retribution to the three big financiers who had wrongfully ruined her father. She drove them to their final reckoning with the same speedy sureness that she had driven her motor in the old days, until——but that's one of the uncertainties which makes life interesting.

Now that we have released quite a number of your FOLLY COMEDIES, featuring George Ovey and Vernon Dent, thought you might be interested to know that we are ourselves not alone very much pleased with them, but we have found that they give wonderful satisfaction in the better theatres, as well as in the neighborhood houses.
We are writing this letter to give credit where we feel it is due, and all we ask is that you continue to deliver us the quality of product which we so far received.

E. H. EMMICK of the PEERLESS FILM SERVICE, SAN FRANCISCO, SAYS:

We take pleasure in informing you that we consider the FOLLY COMEDIES superior to anything being released by anybody today.
Am writing you this letter unsolicited, as I want to encourage any producer that is trying to make films that will satisfy the public demand of today.
Keep up the good work and there is no question in my mind but what you will be the leading distributors of single reel comedies in a very short time.

HERMAN RIFKIN of the EASTERN FEATURE FILM COMPANY, BOSTON, MASS., SAYS:

We wish to advise that when we contracted for your FOLLY COMEDIES we viewed the first five, and on the strength of the five pictures and the sincerity of your Mr. Silcocks' statement, we entered into contract with you for the New England rights on the fifty-two comedies.
We have received the subsequent relcases—namely, the sixth and seventh—and had we seen those two first, we would have bought them on the strength of these two, meaning that your sixth and seventh are better than the first five viewed. We are pleased to advise that our contracts covering just a period of one month are most gratifying to us, and we look forward to excellent results on these comedies.
Thanking you for making them better each time and hoping you can keep up the good work.

CHARLES TRAMPE of the MIDWEST DISTRIBUTING COMPANY, MILWAUKEE, SAYS:

We have found the FOLLY COMEDIES a very profitable investment; in fact, we have been able to place our first run in one of the down town theatres, where they are being shown for a full week's run. We certainly pride ourselves on the fact that the management of this theatre cancelled bookings with one of the big releasing companies to make room for the FOLLY COMEDIES.
We have specialized in the distribution of short subjects for several years, and at no time has there been such a shortage of worth while one-reel comedies as at present; the FOLLY COMEDIES have therefore become a welcome addition to our service program.
We do not ask you to make them any better; keep them as good as they are now.

"WHY MEN FORGET"

Your patrons will welcome this different picture. It is just the story and just the cast that will satisfy the picture fans who want an "out of the rut" plot, filled with unique situations and a cast with new faces.

A great drama from the world-famous novel, "Demos" by George Gissing.

An R-C PICTURE

A Picture for All Who Want to be Rich

This unique drama tells a story that will interest all types of people. The hero is the leader of his fellow workmen. Over night he becomes a millionaire. The undermining influence of great wealth alters him. He thirsts for more wealth, more power and social position. He throws over his working girl sweetheart and marries an aristocrat. He becomes "superior" to his fellow workers,

Then the climax—and what a smash it is—a mob of workmen, his friends, attack him and the girl he abandoned gives him the safety of her home.

Scenically this picture is extraordinary. There are numbers of shots of the hero's castle and scenes showing envious society people helping him to spend his wealth. Their efforts to get some of his money and his attempts to seem accustomed to wealth provide plenty of humor.

The public cries for novelty. Give it to your patrons.

Motion Picture News

"For the Good of All"

THE first of the "Official Urban Movie Chats" carries the following declaration of the principles of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America:

FIRST: To encourage in every way possible the production of clean, wholesome and optimistic films.

SECOND: To take an active interest in the public welfare and cooperate with our community civic and social forces, in helping to maintain a high moral standard.

THIRD: To utilize our theatres and screens for the purpose of helping our boys and girls to become good citizens.

AND LAST: To do our part to the full measure in helping to re-establish a healthy condition throughout our country.

And the new seal we note of the M. P. T. O. A. carries the slogan, "For the Good of All."

WE extend our whole-hearted congratulations to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America upon the broadly constructive principle and purpose of these "Official Movie Chats."

We have spoken before of their character. They are devoted to interesting glimpses of industry, science, travel, history, sports, nature studies, etc. The first carries an expression of approval from President Harding; the second, one from Secretary of Labor Davis; the third from Secretary Hughes; other prominent statesmen will follow; and there will be statements from leaders of civic organizations, educational societies, women's clubs, the Boy Scouts and similar organizations for the public welfare.

The wisdom and high purpose of this association of the picture with education and good citizenship are apparent. Equally clear, we believe, to every exhibitor will be the opportunity to ally himself with the best social and civic forces in his community.

We need not tell the exhibitor how important this alliance is to him. He knows that. But we do want to say that from now on, in our estimation, the unrestricted development of the picture and the solid establishment of the picture theatre in every community will depend fundamentally and very largely upon just that close union with the best public interests everywhere that this sort of "tie-up" will assuredly bring about.

WE cannot but regard this progressive step by the M. P. T. O. A. as one of intense interest to the entire industry and one demanding its genuine support.

Shortly, we understand, these "Chats"—picture magazines they really are—are to serve also as a mouthpiece of and for this industry.

Not preachments, nor promises, nor specious propaganda; not labored expositions of any kind—any popular magazine, especially a picture magazine must be largely pictorial, always vivid and never dull. But just brief and catchy facts and figures, occasional only and truthful always—the kind that will drive home the fallacy of censorship, the autocracy of blue reform and the true scope and function of the new universal language of pictures.

What, indeed, more interesting under the head of "industry" than our own romantic one of motion pictures—its machinery and personalities and accomplishments—its struggles and ideals!

Never before has this industry used its own power in its own behalf. We defend or promote every other interest but our own. We tell about every other industry but our own. We have such enormous power, to quote so genuine an enemy as Canon Chase, as to elect Presidents and Administrations. What a screaming anomaly it is that we have never before made one single organized effort to elect ourselves upon our own screens let alone to answer with the simple truth the malice and ignorance thrown in our faces every day of the year!

THE "Movie Chats" as we see them, can continue to be put forth as the finest and most constructive step ever taken by an exhibitor organization. Alone it puts the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association far ahead of any previous exhibitor organization and upon a new plane of endeavor. It calls for the highest respect and full support of the entire industry.

"For the Good of All" we take to mean the good of all that is best inside and outside of this industry, and that it means more such constructive and progressive developments.

Motion Picture Engineers Membership Growing

The Membership Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers announces that the list of members has now reached over 125. These members are mainly among those interested in the technical end of picture equipment; as for example, projection machine manufacturers, carbon companies, lamp companies, manufacturers of motor generator sets, screen manufacturers, etc.

A campaign is to be inaugurated to obtain more active support from the studio men with the idea of standardizing light values—that is to say, when the pictures are actually being taken a certain aperture opening will be employed with a definite light value and the film will be labelled with these values for the particular scene. These pieces of film so labelled will be passed on to the laboratory where with these definite acknowledged standards the development can be regulated so that there is absolute assurance that the best possible negatives will be produced and the positive prints taken therefrom will portray the action and photographic values 100 per cent, with the result that the present more or less chance method which is being employed will be absolutely done away with.

The membership committee is at the present time active and will become even more so before the spring meeting of the Society, which will be held in Boston, definite date to be announced later.

The South Carolina Theatre League Organized

THE SOUTH CAROLINA THEATRE LEAGUE was officially organized at the Jefferson Hotel, Columbia, S. C., on Wednesday afternoon, January 25th. The meeting proved to be the most enthusiastic of any yet held to promote a state organization. A constitution prohibiting affiliation with any association outside of the state was adopted, and a committee on by-laws was appointed which will report back at a general meeting to be held in Columbia on March 12th. Officers elected are:

L. T. Lester, Columbia, president; Max Bryant, Rock Hill, first vice president; J. M. O'Dowd, Florence, second vice president; E. C. Haselden, Georgetown, treasurer.

All questions concerning activities of the organization methods of raising funds and contact with distributors were left in the hands of the committee on by-laws.

A secretary was employed who will canvass the entire state personally in an effort to gain as large a membership as possible.

Among those present were: A. C. Cowles, Spartanburg; T. L. Little, Camden; O. I. Shealey, Clinton; C. B. Hendrickson, Darlington; E. C. Haselden, Georgetown; J. E. Boiter, Greer; H. R. Berry, Hartsville; W. M. Schwitzer, Laurens; C. A. Stewart, McCormick; H. Wells, Newberry; H. T. Jones, Atlanta; L. Hall, New Brookland; M. M. Stewarts, Williston; J. H. Ziegler, Orangeburg; Albert Sottille, Charleston; L. T. Lester, Columbia; Curdts and McBee, Greenville; C. W. Irvin, Columbia.

Ohio Censor Speaks Before Cleveland Board of Trade

Mrs. Evelyn Frances Snow, head of the Bureau of Film Censorship of Ohio, spoke before the Municipal Committee of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce on Friday, January 20, at the invitation of the committee which is making a study of motion-picture censorship.

Mrs. Snow said it was her opinion that there were certain films of a broad and inclusive nature, films which took a producer many months to make, films on which there was likely to be a wide divulgence of opinion. In such cases Mrs. Snow believes that broadminded, intelligent people should be called in to see the picture and assist in passing judgment on it. This practice is now in operation in Ohio, according to Mrs. Snow.

Another point brought out by Mrs. Snow was the absence of rules by which to measure pictures. "Many censor boards operate according to rules" she explained to the committee. "All pictures are judged in proportion as they agree or disagree with these rules. I am opposed to this method of motion picture censorship. Pictures cannot be judged by rule. Incidents may be taboo in one picture and perfectly all right in another. It all depends upon the connection with the picture and with the thought it is trying to convey. It all depends upon the context. The only rule we have down in Columbus is to judge a picture on its merits."

PEOPLE AND PICTURES

ONE can well imagine the burden of woe that Harry Crandall bears these ys; and full sympathy goes ot to him from the many in the ilustry who know his fine and tstanding characteristics of nor, courage and business ide.

The New York newspapers ke the editorial stand that the lame for the terrible catasophe, as nearly as it can now placed, lies mostly with the ommunity.

Arthur Brisbane says in The American: "If Washington uld vote to protect itself and punish careless officials it ight have better building laws, better enforcement laws, bet- r enforcement of laws existing."

The Globe says: "Part of the blame, doubt, rests on them (the employees) t more on the engineers who built the ructure too weak and the community hich permitted them to do so."

In behalf of motion picture theatres it ould be stated that some three and one-alf billion people are housed in them very year in this country with remarkbly few fatalities. J. D. Willams subits records to show that the mortality ate among picture theatre patrons is ne in 36,000,000. And last year 1,982 otorists were killed in New York State!

But why let the trade paper only carry hese facts? Why haven't we the mahinery—as every decent sized industry as—to flood the country at once with acts about the safety of picture theatres?

We ran an article last week on a "Go To the Theatre Week."

Why not have a "Go to the Public Week" for the producers? Let them go to the exchanges and theatres—and study the public.

Looking over our files we find that we recommended this very thing eight years ago. It is even more necessary today.

Just nine years ago, when MOTION PICTURE NEWS was in the incubator stage, we could look straight across 42nd Street, New York, to a small office in the Times Building with "Famous Players Film Company" on the window. We say, "window" not "windows."

From time to time we heard of Adolph Zukor. He was a man with an idea—that the public wanted something more than the short films of the day; larger, more pretentious films of famous plays with famous players in them.

Later on, early in 1913, we carried a photo of Mr. Zukor with some words about this idea of his. But it is significant to note that in the same issue we carried half a dozen pages listing the film releases of the day—which were all short films.

In other words, the entire conviction and plan and machinery and investment and power and future of the film industry was solidly arrayed against Mr. Zukor's idea—and that's about all it was in those days. Just an idea.

Then the "Prisoner of Zenda" with James K. Hackett was shown at the Lyceum theatre, New York. Daniel Frohman made the curtain speech and invited the attention of the audience to the first fruition of Mr. Zukor's idea.

That picture was the wedge. And thereafter the whole industry twisted and untwisted with considerable creaking until the wedge finally became the main works.

It's a thrilling story. Mr. Zukor can tell it best. Fortitude and foresight—and a mighty large amount of each—was back of that idea. The size of the Famous Players-Lasky Film Corporation today is ample enough testimony.

The tenth anniversary of the big concern that has developed out of this idea is to be held in March; and it is justified.

You know him, but who is she?

We can't help wondering just what picture production would be like today if it hadn't been for Mr. Zukor's idea—and its development.

That publicity can be publicity, and yet be an informative aid to the reader, has long been a pet belief of William Ycarsley, Director of Publicity and Advertising for Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Upholding his theory—and incidentally our own belief—Motion Picture News elsewhere in the book this week presents an article prepared by John Emerson and Anita Loos which we believe merits, and will receive, close attention from those exhibitors who themselves "cut" and otherwise arrange the productions they book.

"Every theatre has its own quartet busily engaged in singing 'Blues'! But there IS business—and it can be had by the fellow who goes after it."

Thus speaks Joe Lee after a six weeks' sojourn in the Northwest on behalf of Swedish Biograph.

"Shoot your story at 'em and shoot it hard," he expatiated. "Tell 'em what you've got in big advertising space. It's a cinch no more can be lost than by laying down cold and calling in the undertaker. The fellow who cuts his advertising appropriation, cuts his prices, cuts the quality of his show, is gone—finished. The fellow who HAS something, doesn't hesitate to tell the world he has it, in big type, can bring a 20 cent crowd, to a 30 cent theatre—and make them pay a dollar admission and then go home satisfied. And that's that!"

Joe did it in Minneapolis—and is going back to do it all over again in St. Paul.

Robert C. Bruce, whose splendid scenic pictures are too well-known for comment here, comes to bat with an entirely new kind of "Bruce" film.

The new series is called "Robert C. Bruce Wilderness Tales." They are scenics half filled with human interest, that is to say they contain people and a story. And a mighty good story. It is short, of course, more of sketch, but it's real life and it rings true, which cannot generally be said of the more pretentious feature plot today. The story not only carries you of its own power but it takes you along scenic highways and byways that have the Bruce quality of making you want to be there.

We have seen three. The first " And Woman Must Weep " is to be released February 12th.

They are all fine. And the promise is excellent for more and a wide variety of the same " catchy " quality.

With inches of slush on Broadway's sidewalks and weather conditions semi-wintry " School Days " had 'em standing in line at New York's Mark Strand theatre by 3.30 Sunday. So much for good advertising and a picture that strikes the public's fancy.

Perhaps there is a better definition, but it would seem Charlie Burr tells the whole story in the shortest number of words.

" The trend of production? " he mused in answer to a question at the luncheon table. " Oh, just the trend of the public desire."

By the way, isn't it about time for a drama of the American Revolution? We've seen a lot about the French Revolution. Has every one forgotten America?

How about the midnight ride of Paul Revere—the flash of signals—the tramp, tramp, tramp of the long line of British redcoats—the tumbling out of the farmers, over fields and along stone walls—the rattle of pot shots—the volleys—the lone rider again along the black country lanes, cape flying in the wind—the lights in the houses—the gathering storm of freedom—the girl awaiting rescue—the lone rider again—the desperate battle—the rescue—crescendo, whoop, bang!

Here's Griffith suspense for you. And the American flag waving over it all!

Need we go abroad for historical drama?

" Keep after something long enough, and you're bound to catch up to it." Joseph Reddy, purveyor of Pathe publicity used to say it—and practice it.

Result: he now treks his way from the snow-bound East to the warm fastnesses of Hollywood, and as " personal representative " will handle the keys of a typewriter on behalf of Harold Lloyd.

Charlie Branham, erstwhile Lynch Enterprises special exploiteer and for the past year cavorting about Canada along with Ralph Ruffner and H. M. Thomas for the Famous Players, Ltd., of Toronto, caught the mid-night express for Gotham one day last week, not to see the sights, but to see the powers that be about bookings—and prices. Said " Hello " at the News office and surprised Tom Hamlin with whom he used to consort at Minneapolis.

The synopsis follows: Girl, 7½ lbs; born Jan. 29, New Rochelle Hospital; Blue eyes, dark hair, remarkably intelligent face; opposed to Prohibition.

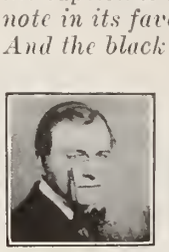
It seems timely to remark that, if prohibition was due to help motion picture attendance to a tremendous degree, now is a good time for prohibition to do it, and prove it.



Some time ago we were asked by the press bureau of the prohibition forces—a mighty good bureau by the way—to furnish figures as to increased theatre attendance since prohibition. Or, rather, a picture company was asked and kindly referred the matter to us.

We were compelled to ask first, and in return, for some actual figures as to the extent of prohibition.

Selznick claims it has scooped the field with its caption innovation for its News Weekly, and after looking it over, we are inclined to agree with them. In place of the title written across the celluloid, there is a representation of a newspaper clipping with only the leading " heads " featured. This suggests that the caption is authentic. It reads like a snappy paragraph. A note in its favor is the small amount of space used to present it. And the black background sets it off to advantage.

Randolph Bartlett and Selznick. Sort of hard to believe the two have parted company. For Bartlett and the Selznick organization usually have been mentioned in the same breath.

S'true, though. Randy has deserted his old love and attached himself to Paramount, with a " whale " of a job and the title of " Head of the cutting and titling department."

From now on he can be found in the Long Island studios of Paramount—and he goes there with the best of wishes from his many friends ringing in his ears.

Succeeding him as Advertising Manager for the Selznick enterprises is Watt L. Parker, who for five years has been affiliated with the concern.

Our hat is off to Joseph Snitzer and his organization. The announcement that Equity had placed " Where is My Wandering Boy " in a Broadway playhouse, as told elsewhere in this issue, will make the entire industry sit up.

Food for thought? We'll say so. Revolutionary? Sure. But Equity has never lagged, and they certainly are going to give that old banshee " Hard Times " a run for his money before admitting his right to live.

And, by the way, keep an eye on the irrepressible Nat Rothstein. He whispered a few of his ideas on advertising and putting this attraction over, to us. And he will deliver, too.

Harry Rapf writes and says we are correct in stating that revivals of old melodramas are going strong. We spoke of " Ten Nights in a Barroom "; and he sends an exhibitor letter showing that " Why Girls Leave Home " broke records recently

We know of the striking success of this picture and also of " School Days "; and we are looking immediately forward to another phenomenal run by " Where Is My Wandering Boy."

The public wants the old " pull-the-heart-strings " thrillers these days. There's no doubt about it. Perhaps they've always wanted them; and we never gave them enough of them.

Funny thing—the public taste. And yet not so funny—or rather not so mysterious after all.

Perhaps it surprises us right along because most producers don't study it closely enough right along.

Pretty difficult to make pictures on one side of the continent and sell them on the other. No connection between the two efforts. But there should be. The boys who sell pictures ought to know what kind the public prefers. But they don't get a chance to talk to the boys who make them.

And would they have any authority—if they did?

Speaking of " The Silent Call " in the New York World, Heywood Broun calls " Strongheart," the dog star, " the most beautiful of all male stars now appearing in the films," and he goes on " in intelligence also his rank seems high "—" practically all the heavy emotional scenes are reserved for ' Strongheart. ' "

We agree. " Strongheart " is above criticism as an actor, except that at times he seems to pose a trifle. However the best actors do.

Plan of Exhibitor-Producer Direct Partnership Announced by Gunning

Exhibitors to Help Finance Productions and Share in the Profits

AN outline of a revolutionary plan for exhibitor-producer direct partnership is announced today by Wid Gunning.

Under the plan as described by the Gunning headquarters, Mr. Gunning will personally supervise the work of three distinct producing units which, in the next year, will make four productions each. Instead of securing the loan of the necessary money from financial interests who would receive fifty percent of the net profits Mr. Gunning's proposition is to go direct to the exhibitors who wish to play these twelve productions and have them sign a contract wherein they agree to play the twelve pictures, each within ninety days after release date, between the period of September 1st, 1922, and September 1st, 1923, and he will pay to the exhibitors the profits.

Under the contract the exhibitor will pay in advance, on signing, for as many productions as he sees fit, this advance payment to apply against the last of the twelve productions. In addition to the pictures, the exhibitor will then receive a proportion of the fifty percent net profits, equal in ratio of the cash payment made by him on signing the contract to the total cost of the twelve productions, it is explained.

The contract provides that if there have not been twelve productions delivered on or before September 1st, 1923, that the amount of money advanced by the exhibitor which has not been applied against productions actually delivered shall be returned to him in cash with interest at eight percent, according to the Gunning statement. Full details of the plan are continued in this week's issue of the Wid Gunning house organ.

Each of the productions will be sold at a $300,000 national quota, it is announced, but as the maximum cash outlay per picture is set at $100,000 it is pointed out that only those exhibitors participating in the raising of the first $100,000 on each production will share in the eventual profits.

"It is time to quit talking about independence. It is time to act.

"For years creative brains and men who owned theatres have both been juggled and manipulated by men who sat at desks in New York and did no actual work but secured most of the profits.

"Now I am going to bring into actual partnership the directors who make productions and the theatre owners.

"I am going to stand personally responsible for the success of the productions and draw no salary for doing so.

"I am going to organize three production units to make four productions each, totalling twelve Class A special features.

"I am going to divide the profits, half to the theatre owners and half to the director and myself.

"I only entered distributing because I was forced into it.

"I am a producer.

"I immediately placed the selling organization I had to take charge of on a profit sharing basis, making every employee a partner. That was all right, but after all, the real problem is always good productions.

"I now present the simple solution of all film problems—direct partnership between producer and exhibitor.

"This is the only way to successfully defeat Wall Street's intention to completely dominate this industry.

"We must act at once."

Robert E. Walsh, of the Wid Gunning organization, speaking of the new plan declared, "It is certainly unnecessary to tell you that Wid can get the greatest directors in the world to work with him in this way.

"And remember, Wid knows his job!

"As an associate of George Loane Tucker and Lois Weber, he has realized several hundred thousand dollars for doing in the past two years what he is now offering to do without salary. He makes this offer because he knows the profits to be divided between the exhibitor, the director and himself will be great."

THE problem of the Independent Producer is an important one. Can he be encouraged—is he being encouraged—is he to be encouraged? The market needs this fountain-head of variety and originality in pictures. Wid Gunning makes a revolutionary statement in this issue. He has a plan. A profit-sharing one with exhibitors and directors. The statement doesn't mince words. Now for the sharpening of pencils, and the why's, and why-not's, and wherefore's.

W. A. JOHNSTON.

To Launch Welfare Service in State of New Jersey

THE public-service side of the Motion Picture Theatre will be formally presented at Dover, New Jersey, on Saturday, February 4, by State President R. F. Woodhull of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey.

Mr. Woodhull has arranged a public program of elaborate character which he will present at the Baker Theatre, in Dover, at 10 o'clock on the morning of February 4th. The program has been arranged under the direction of the teachers in the high school and has the approval of the school authorities.

The performance in question will constitute the formal opening of the public-service work of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in New Jersey, in accordance with the plans of the national organization. This showing will be followed by similar activities in all other cities and towns in the state.

Dr. Francis Holley, director general of the department of public service of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, will make a short address. He will be followed by L. O. Armstrong, of the Bureau of Commercial Economics in Washington, who will present a filmed lecture on "From Labrador to Alaska." Mayor William H. Hosking, of Dover, will also speak.

Cecil DeMille Due in Los Angeles February 8th

Cecil B. DeMille will arrive in Los Angeles February 8, according to cable information received at the Lasky studio. The producer sailed from England January 28 and is due in New York February 3. He will travel directly West to begin production work on "Manslaughter," the Alice Duer Miller story.

Inspecting N. Y. Theatres; Crandall Closes Houses

AS an aftermath to the Knickerbocker theatre disaster in Washington steps were taken by New York City authorities to inspect theatres and insure the protection of the theatre-going public. In Brooklyn, District Attorney Ruston of that borough, in a statement issued on Tuesday of this week, urged an immediate inspection of all theatres in the borough by competent engineers. In Manhattan, a staff of inspectors have been going the round of the city's theatres during the week under the supervision of Charles Brady, Superintendent of Buildings.

At Albany, N. Y., a bill was introduced last Monday in the Assembly, designed to prevent the recurrence in New York State of any such disaster as that of the Washington theatre. The bill provides that no building can be erected in a first or second class city, other than one or two-family dwelling houses, unless the work is under the supervision of a master builder who must have a certificate of qualification from the building department, for which a fee not exceeding $100 may be charged.

With the exception of the theatres controlled by Harry M. Crandall, all the Washington theatres are open. Mr. Crandall in announcing that his houses would remain closed until further notice explained that his action was not due to any doubt as to the safety of his houses, but merely because he did not wish to accept any revenue for amusement from the city's public while there was mourning for those who had lost their lives at the Knickerbocker.

Future Charles Ray Productions to Be Distributed by United Artists

Star Announces His Policy as "Fewer, Bigger and Better Pictures"

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Hiram Abrams, president of United Astists Corporation, that Charles Ray, prominent film actor and producer, has become affiliated with the "Big Four," comprising Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and David W. Griffith, through which organization Mr. Ray's future productions will be distributed.

Mr. Ray will continue to be an independent producer under his existing arrangement with Arthur S. Kane, who for the last two years has been presenting all the Ray features to the motion picture public.

Negotiations for this newest big contract in the film industry were conducted by Mr. Abrams for United Artists and Mr. Kane on behalf of Charles Ray, all final details being settled late Thursday, January 26, when confirmation was received by wire from Mr. Ray, who at present is in Los Angeles. In his message Mr. Ray said he felt "honored and delighted" at being associated with the "Big Four" in the production of photoplay features.

Mr. Abrams and Mr. Kane have both received many messages of congratulations as a result of this new connection, the former for having added such a popular star to the United Artists' list, and the latter for having made such an excellent connection for distribution of forthcoming Ray pictures.

Mr. Ray's plans are to make fewer, bigger and better pictures. This was his announced determination when he was in New York city a few weeks ago, at which time the negotiations which ended in the present United Artists' contract were begun.

"This is preeminently the day of big pictures," Mr. Ray said at that time. "For a long time I have believed this and now I know it, and for a long time I have been desirous of being able to give more time, thought and labor to my feature productions. In all probability I will cut my productions down to two really good pictures a year. And by really good I mean the very best that is in me—the very best that I can give to the public.

"Fewer pictures, but bigger and better, will be my slogan from now on. Bigger pictures from the standpoint of everything that can be put into them through additional time, additional cost and additional work, and better pictures from the standpoint of story, plot, direction, settings, photography—everything, in short, that goes to make a bigger and better production.

"I have long been an exponent of the open booking plan for pictures, for it is perfectly clear that the program system and the star series system are for the 'weak pictures' on release lists. I feel that exhibitors should not be forced to buy and play inferior films in order to get superior ones, nor should a really popular star be penalized by being made to carry the load of lesser attractions.

"Those stars whose features are being distributed through United Artists—or the 'Big Four'—know full well that each of their productions must be marketed individually and that each and every picture must, therefore, be the very best their art makes possible.

"I want to make pictures so good that every one of them will find a ready market. But to do that I must have more time for the individual production; must have time to find the proper story vehicle, time for its preparation in the best possible manner, and time for actually making the picture to the very best of my ability plus that of my working associates.

"Fewer, bigger and better pictures—that is what I aim to give to the industry and to the public from now on."

Charles Ray, whose productions will hereafter be distributed through United Artists

"Charlie" Ray, as this star is generally known to friends and public, was born in Jacksonville, Ill., but received his education at Needles and Los Angeles. As a school-boy he made up his mind to "go on the stage." Despite parental objection he joined a small repertoire company and travelled through the west and middle west playing musical and dramatic stock. Just before going into pictures he was playing a vaudeville sketch with Chester Conklin.

His film debut was with Thomas H. Ince in a short subject called "The Favorite Son," with Grace Cunard. He made good from the start, and was at once put into "stock," and worked hard for his "big chance," which came when "The Coward" was produced. In this film his acting showed to great advantage and he became a potential star overnight.

Among many other well known features Ray scored heavily in "The Clodhopper," "The Hired Man," "The Claws of the Hun," "Nine O'clock Town," "String Beans," "The Girl Dodger," "The Pinch Hitter," "Greased Lightning," "The Busher," "Hay Foot, Straw Foot," "Bill Henry," "Egg Crate Wallop," "Alarm Clock Andy," and "Paris Green."

In January, 1920, Mr. Ray formed the Charles Ray Productions, Inc., and became an independent producer, Arthur S. Kane presenting all these productions to the public. At that time he bought the rights to a number of well known novels, stage plays and short stories.

Mr. Ray's independent productions so far have been "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," by George M. Cohan; "Peaceful Valley," by Edward Kidder; "Nineteen and Phyllis," by Fred Stowers; "The Old Swimmin' Hole," by James Whitcomb Riley; "Scrap Iron," by Charles E. Van Loan; "A Midnight Bell," by Charles Hoyt, the celebrated dramatist; "R. S. V. P." by Rob Wagner; "The Barnstormer," by Richard Andres and "Gas, Oil and Water," by Richard Andres.

Neilan Not to Affiliate with Joseph Schenck

J. R. GRAINGER, New York representative of the Marshall Neilan Productions, denies emphatically that Marshall Neilan is considering an affiliation with Joseph M. Schenck. A letter addressed by Mr. Grainger to William A. Johnston, editor of Motion Picture News, follows:

"We understand there is a rumor afloat throughout the trade that Marshall Neilan is considering an affiliation with Joseph M. Schenck.

"On behalf of Mr. Neilan I wish to contradict this rumor as emphatically as I can. Mr. Neilan is not considering an affiliation with anyone, and intends to remain strictly independent at all times.

"I will thank you to publish this article so that this rumor may be buried once and for all."

Hostile Film Legislation Brewing in Many Sections of the Country

Censorship and Blue-Law Measures Are Proposed in Various States

TROUBLE signals for the motion-picture industry are up in many sections of the country. Censorship and blue-law bills, drastic exchange housing restrictions, and many other regulatory measures comprise the mid-winter crop of threatened enactments which the organized industry must combat during the next few months.

The fact that 1922 is an off year for legislative sessions in a large number of states has not lessened the industry's defense burden. Indeed, it has apparently added to the difficulty of simultaneously warding off blows from various angles, because the reformers have launched their attacks this year in cities and communities where the absence of legislative sessions have kept them away from the city capitols.

In Illinois, for instance, the legislature does not convene this year. But, according to advices just received by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, in the city of Chicago, the censorship agitation has been vigorously resurrected and an ordinance has just been introduced in the City Council providing for the establishment of a department of motion pictures, with three commissioners, including one woman, at an annual salary of $5,000 each. Under the terms of this ordinance, Chief-of-Police Fitzmaurice would be divorced from the control of motion-picture exhibitions in Chicago.

The Judiciary Committee of the Chicago City Council will consider the proposed measure on February 6. While several of the aldermen have denounced the censorship resolution, it is known that the same group of reformers who have been trying for many years to inflict a censor board upon Chicago are behind the measure.

From Cleveland comes word that the Chamber of Commerce, through its Municipal Committee, is investigating the entire question of motion-picture censorship. In a letter just received by Frederick H. Elliott, Executive Secretary of the National Association, from Dale Brown, Secretary of the Municipal Committee of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, he states that the Committee is investigating "the entire question of moving picture censorship with a view to making recommendations as to whether or not censorship is the proper method of correcting an existing evil, or if it is an improper method." Mr. Brown states further that should the Committee arrive at the former conclusion, it would make a recommendation as to "whether or not the municipality, the state or the national government should exercise this function."

"Our investigation has nothing to do with the present situation in Ohio," writes Mr. Brown. "We have gathered a considerable amount of data from various sources which has been made the subject of our studies. We have heard several speakers both for and against censorship, including the Ohio censor, Mrs. Evelyn Snow." For the purpose of presenting the industry's side of the argument before the Committee, arrangements are now being made whereby the National Association will be represented at the next committee hearing scheduled.

In Mississippi the present legislature has before it a censorship measure which was advocated by Governor Lee M. Russell in his annual message. In this message Governor Russell said, "We cannot too strongly urge the very great necessity of establishing by statute law a censorship of the motion pictures used in this State. The right kind of pictures should be encouraged. This new enterprise is possibly the greatest educator in the land, with the exception of the schools, and if properly censored, may be continued to the great entertainment and education of the whole people. * * * You can easily draft a law to have these pictures carefully censored before being presented to the public. The expense of this censorship should be borne by the exhibitors, who should be required to pay a small tax or license sufficient to meet all expenses of the censor."

In New York a blue law bill which would close every motion picture theatre in New York on Sunday has been introduced in New York Legislature by Assemblyman Clarence W. Hausner, of Montour Falls, Schuyler County. It provides that "the exhibition of a motion picture or pictures on the first day of the week, if a fee be charged for witnessing such exhibition, is forbidden. Every person aiding in such exhibition by advertisement, posting or otherwise, and every owner or lessee of any garden, building or room, place or structure, who leases or lets the same for the purpose of any such exhibition, or who assents to the use of the same, for any such purpose, if it be so used, is guilty of misdemeanor. In addition thereto, every such exhibition, of itself, annuls any license which may have been previously obtained by the manager, superintendent, agent, owner or lessees, using or letting such building, garden, room, place or other structure or consenting to such exhibition." The Lord's Day Alliance and the New York City League are both understood to be behind this measure.

In South Carolina the legislature is now in session. Three bills have been introduced which if passed would cost the industry several hundred thousand dollars a year in that state, it is stated. One provides for the imposition of a privilege tax on all motion-picture companies doing business in South Carolina. Under the terms of the bill $5.00 a reel would be charged for every original print shown in the state and $2.50 a reel for every duplicate. This legislation was recommended by the Governor of South Carolina. Another measure provides for a state luxury tax of one cent on every thirty cents admission. A censorship bill is also pending before the South Carolina Legislature and has been advanced to third reading.

In Massachusetts a serious situation confronts the industry. At its last session the Massachusetts Legislature enacted a censorship law which would have been effective January 1, 1922, had not the National Association in conjunction with the Allied Theatres of Massachusetts secured a referendum by obtaining and filing 25,000 petitions. This automatically stayed the operation of the law until it has been voted upon by the public at the next general election in November, 1922. This will be the first time the public of any state has been allowed to express its will regarding motion-picture censorship. The reformers in Massachusetts who sponsor the censorship measure are working assiduously throughout the state sowing the seeds of propaganda which they hope will sprout into a censorship majority at the coming election. The organized industry, however, is not inactive and plans are maturing to present clearly and forcefully to every voter in Massachusetts the "other side" of the censorship controversy. The necessity of this defense work is apparent.

In Washington, D. C., several measures of grave importance to the industry are pending. One bill provides that all theatres in the District of Columbia shall be closed on Sunday. Another, introduced by Senator Myers of Montana, provides for motion-picture censorship in the District of Columbia. A Federal motion-picture censorship bill, introduced by Congressman Bland of Indiana, is also pending, together with several unusual bills affecting the industry which were introduced by Congressman Herrick of Oklahoma. Then, too, there is Senator Myers' bill calling for an investigation of alleged "political activities" of the motion-picture industry.

In Maryland a bill is pending which provides for a referendum on the question of Sunday opening in the city of Baltimore.

First National Franchise Holders Meet in Denver

More than two dozen franchise holders of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., comprising the Colorado, New Mexico and Wyoming territory, unanimously endorsed the action of the First National Get-Together at Chicago last October and elected an advisory board of four members for the region, in conformity with the new policy outlined in Chicago. The convention was held at the Brown Palace Hotel, Denver, January 11.

The Denver meeting was characterized by the interest that prevailed, as evidenced by the numerous questions asked of H. T. Nolan, original franchise holder of the Rex theatre, Greeley, Colo., who presided.

The advisory committee of four members was elected by states, two going to Colorado and one each to New Mexico and Wyoming. The members elected to the Board were Alvah G. Talbot of Denver; L. G. Gerhart of Collins, Colo.; James F. Lynch of Laramie, Wyo., and Gus Kohn of Las Vegas, N. M. Of these Messrs. Talbot and Lynch had served as delegates to the Chicago "Get-Together" and were especially urged to serve on the advisory board because of their close contact with the national officers and their familiarity with conditions.

In asking the co-operation of an advisory board Mr. Talbot expressed the hope that any differences that might arise with franchise holders could be satisfactorily adjusted, as in the past, by Mr. Nolan and Mr. Ashby; but that the creation of the board would not only inspire greater confidence in First National's desire for fair play to all its exhibitors but also offer a guarantee for the elimination of any possible friction. Considerable time was spent in going over the minutes of the Chicago "Get-Together" and discussing and approving the action taken by the delegates.

Paul Brunet, whose fourth anniversary as the head of Pathe Exchange, Inc., is to be celebrated by the entire organization very shortly

A Reader Has His Say

"Mr. William A. Johnston,
"Editor, M. P. News,
"New York City.
"Dear Mr. Johnston:

"Once again I contend that one of your editorials may appear misleading. About a year ago you were kind enough to print my letter in answer to a similar editorial: I refer to your editorial which appeared in the January 28th issue—that business during the six months of 1921 was off just 14½ per cent. Those figures I am not questioning, but the thing that may mislead is the fact that it required a great many new theatres which were opened during the year to gross 14½ per cent less than the year before.

"Suppose that Detroit was to show exactly the same admission tax for 1922 as for 1921—one could naturally say business was just as good—1922 or 1921—but if one would stop to consider that the big new Detroit Capitol Theatre seating over 4,000 opened—also the Harmony seating 1,000—the Tuxedo seating 2,000—the Rivola seating 1,000—not to mention others in the course of construction—those figures take on a new meaning, for these new theatres are operating with a big overhead and if the total amount of business being done was the same as the year before when those new theatres were not opened—it means that the theatres that were opened the year before are suffering a loss.

"One hundred theatres doing a total gross business of, let us say, $200,000 a week, may all be operating at a profit, but if it required 110 theatres to do the same gross it might show a loss. So we must conclude that the mere figure of 14½ per cent does not tell the whole story.

"New theatres usually open up new territories; also theatres of the Capitol type induce some to attend who are not regular patrons. To consider business as being of the same level it would be necessary to show a fair percentage of increase over the year before, in keeping with the new theatres that were opened during the year.

"The fact that I take exception to this editorial does not imply that I think any less of the NEWS to which I have subscribed for years.

"Sincerely yours,
(Signed) "J. E. STOCKER."

Cosmopolitan Company to Hold Mask Ball

Employees of International Film Service Co., Inc., the company that creates Cosmopolitan Production, will hold a mask and civic ball the night of Friday, February 17th, at the Manhattan Casino, Eighth avenue and 165th street, New York city. A ten-piece orchestra will be on hand.

The committee in charge comprises: Miss Eleanor Williams, M. J. Connolly, E. S. F. Fennell and Edward Kane.

Albany Exchange Managers Advertising Convention

The Albany Theatrical Managers' Association is leaving no stone unturned in advertising the convention of New York state motion picture exhibitors in that city February 14, 15 and 16. The exchange managers of Albany held a meeting a few days ago, at which time it was agreed to carry a slogan in the way of a postscript on all letters leaving every exchange in this state up to February 12.

R. C. Fox, of Buffalo, chairman of the publicity committee among the exchange men in the western part of the state, and Joseph Klein, occupying a similar position among the exchange managers in New York city, with William E. Raynor, I. E. Chadwick and Samuel Eckman as assistants, have been asked to carry the postscript on all letters from exchanges in their respective territories.

All salesmen from the film exchanges in Albany carried striking cards when they left last Monday for their week's trip over the state. These cards will be placed in hotel and theatre lobbies.

At the same time, diamond-shaped cards are being used in all street cars in Albany, Troy and Schenectady, as well as suburban lines running out of these cities. Over 100 slides advertising the ball have been sent to as many theatres within a radius of 75 miles of Albany.

Twenty-seven exchanges have contracted for booths at the convention. Secretary Berman of the state association is notifying these contracting persons that all decorations must be in place not later than the night preceding the opening of the convention.

Prizma Officers Elected for Ensuing Year

At the January meeting of the Board of Directors of Prizma, Incorporated, producers of Prizma master pictures in nature's colors, the following officers were re-elected for the ensuing year:

Mr. C. K. D. Walsh, president; Mr. Carroll H. Dunning, vice-president; Mr. H. G. Stokes, vice-president; Mr. B. S. Hall, treasurer; Mr. George P. Kelley, secretary; and Mr. Wm. V. D. Kelley, technical advisor.

At the annual stockholders' meeting held January 17th, 1922, the following were elected directors of the company:

E. E. Loomis, New York; Francis T. Homer, New York; Rodman E. Griscom, New York; Marshall J. Dodge, New York; Carroll H. Dunning, New York; Thomas M. Pierce, St. Louis; H. Wilson Saulsbury, New York; Wm. V. D. Kelley, Jersey City; C. K. D. Walsh, New York; H. G. Stokes, New York; W. H. Woodin, New York, and George T. Ordway, New York.

Suggestions on the Savage Art of Cutting

By John Emerson and Anita Loos

WE didn't know exhibitors ever made cuts until we were asked to write this article. Here we've been sweating away in a studio trying to do for some one else what he's ready and anxious to do for himself. And so, if luck holds out, maybe we'll be able to teach the trade to you chaps and then ship you the takes and let you do the work.

Honestly, we don't blame exhibitors for wanting to touch up some of the pictures which hit the market. But there's a technique to that sort of thing which has to be followed; and with that in mind, we're going to try to tell you some of the things we've learned about editing and titling.

Cutting has always seemed to us a particularly inapt name for the operation of assembling a film. It suggests, incisions, amputations, eliminations—sort of a carefree wrecking spree, the object being to rid yourself of the presence of as much film as possible at the earliest moment. It is a word which has led many a well intentioned person to ruin his own picture.

Building would be a much better term. For cutting is a process of building, far more than a process of shortening. Here are the basic principles of cutting:

1. The success of almost every picture depends upon the quality of suspense, and the high point of that suspense is the climax, or big scene, which comes near the end of the picture.

2. To secure that essential suspense, you must first interest your audience in your characters; otherwise, no matter how terrible their predicament in the finale of the picture, no one really cares what happens to them. But this interest can only be aroused by a comparatively slow process of character building—by arousing sympathy with or hatred for these characters in a series of sequences at the opening of the picture. It is not enough to "program" the characters with an introductory title; the audience must be made to understand them thoroughly and to hate, fear or love them before the plot itself has ever started. Consequently—

3. A comparatively slow start often is the basic structure for a fast finish. By speeding up that slow start with cuts, you may remove this basic structure and so find that, in your fast finish, the suspense has vanished because the audience's interest in the characters has never been properly aroused. It is better to let your audience sit through a few slow scenes which build character than to lose the whole punch of the picture by removing them.

So if you must make your own cuts, work along these fundamental principles of dramatic construction. Remember that the elimination of a single scene may remove some element of character which it is essential to impress upon the audience for the sake of some other scene still to come.

There is a second side to cutting, and that is the matter of tempo—a highbrow term for the timing of the action.

You have all, at one time or another, experimented with the tempo of pictures by speeding up or slowing down projection in certain scenes. Undoubtedly you have perceived the extraordinary difference that this makes in a picture.

Well, expert cutting is very largely a matter of judging this tempo, and of balancing scenes and sequences so nicely that the audience never gets a chance to be bored. Shortening a scene or a fade sometimes helps it immeasurably; on the other hand, the whole force of a scene may depend upon slow, prolonged movements, which the audience follows eagerly because the significance of these movements is very great. If a scene is shortened too much it will not get across; the spectator has no time to see what you are driving at, or, if he does, to get the full force of your meaning. On the other hand, if he is allowed to ponder over the matter too long, he gets bored.

Believe us, this matter of tempo is no game to play in a hurry. "Red Hot Romance," the special production which Miss Loos and I have just finished took six or seven months to cut, not because we had three hundred reels or some other incredible amount of film on hand, but simply because it took that long to get the suspense, the tempo and the dramatic balance of the picture adjusted. After the second month, "Red Hot Romance" was complete in six reels. The last four months were spent in taking out a few frames—yes, literally frames—here, or putting in another two-foot flash there, and watching the effect.

We needn't say the obvious things about the necessity of making your long shots and close ups match, of avoiding jumps, and of using fades in the right places. We will warn you, however, against shortening the footage of titles, or of changing their wording, unless you are very sure of what you are doing. Every title in a well constructed picture has a meaning. Perhaps it foreshadows some scene which you have failed to take into account because it comes much later in the story. Perhaps it covers a jump in the continuity—and, in making your own cuts, you must always watch this matter of continuity. Perhaps it gives the character building sequence an essential touch which, if removed, would partly destroy the kick in the finish. Also, all titles are tested many, many times as to the proper footage and, if they appear over long on the screen, it is often because the thought is vitally important and must be grasped before the story can proceed.

Some exhibitors like to cut close ups because they add to the footage and consequently are thought to slow down the picture. Of course, if the close ups are merely views of the star, they can be removed without serious damage to the picture. But close ups are essential in bits of acting which cannot be gotten over at long range, and such moments are many in every photoplay. A lift of the eyebrow may make everything clear, whereas, if only the long shot is used, the whole reaction of that character is lost to the audience. Usually it is best to leave the close up in; if you must cut, cut the long shot.

As to cutting the billing—well, that is a matter for your own conscience. The people whose names are on the screen have worked pretty hard to make that picture, good or bad; and each one of them deserves the credit for it, no matter how unimportant they may seem.

Above everything, take your time about cutting films. Make your cuts and then run the whole picture through twice, and watch the effect, both upon yourself and others. Cutting and titling does not require a mental giant, but it does require an immense amount of patience and experience, together with an intimate knowledge of the story from scene to scene. Maybe you'll help the picture by cutting it. Our guess is that you won't, because the most experienced and able editors in the business can't get the "hang" of a picture under a week, and hesitate to make a single excision before they have practically memorized the scrip. In any case, here's wishing you all the luck in the world.

Expect Appointment of Six Inspectors for New York

THERE is a strong possibility that six inspectors will be added to the New York Motion Picture Commission, although probably not before next July, when the appropriation would become available. George H. Cobb and Mrs. Helen M. Hosmer and Joseph Levenson, of the Commission, were in Albany last week for the purpose of appearing before the Budget Committee in explaining how necessary it was to have a force of inspectors in making the work of the Commission effective.

The Commission had originally asked for twelve inspectors, with an appropriation of $30,000. The Budget Committee, it is understood, refused to grant this money, but finally conceded to the extent of granting one-half the sum requested. Each of these inspectors will receive $2,500 a year.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

Joe Friedman, president of Celebrated Players Film Corporation, has closed a deal with W. D. Russell, of the W. D. Russell Productions, Inc., whereby Celebrated acquired the rights to Illinois, Indiana, and Wisconsin for the major portion of the Russell "short stuff," as well as several larger features. The list includes sixteen two-reel westerns starring Fritzi Ridgeway, nine two-reel westerns starring Frank Braidwood, five two-reel westerns starring George Larkin, twenty-two one-reel comedies, and six five-reel dramas featuring George Larkin and an all-star cast. "Shadows of Conscience," the seven-reel American classic starring Russell Simpson, produced by Russell Productions, Inc., is being booked in northern Illinois and Indiana by the Pioneer Film Corporation, and in Wisconsin by the W. P. Gaskell Enterprises.

Ben Beadell, who with William Aschmann has been releasing the Dempsey-Carpentier Official Pictures in Illinois, has taken over the interests of Mr. Aschmann, and is now sole owner of the rights for this territory. He continues to be jointly interested with Mr. Aschmann in the rights for the Wisconsin territory. Mr. Beadell reports very heavy bookings in the Chicago territory on a flat rental basis and states that Ascher Brothers, Lubliner & Trinz, Gumbiner and Marks & Goodman and other important circuits will show the pictures, starting next week. He also states that contracts have been closed for showing of the pictures in all cities of over ten thousand in Illinois, and that key centers where the Dempsey-Carpentier pictures have been shown have reported excellent business to date.

On January 28 the beautiful Bluebird Theatre was opened by C. W. Bedell, and H. Stickelmaier in East Peoria, Illinois. At the opening of the house the audience was addressed by Mayor Jesse Hall, who was followed by Father Fennen. Remarks were also made by S. A. Dennis, one of the prominent business men of the city, and Wm. Schelm, owner of the property. The last speaker to address them was the Rev. Coleman, local minister. The building is of brick and concrete and equipped for indirect lighting. The theatre is beautifully decorated in soft neutral tints and has a carefully arranged seating equipment to insure the patrons of the house extreme comfort. It has five hundred seats. The opening was quite an event, the house was beautifully decorated with flowers contributed by friends, and music furnished by an excellent orchestra. East Peoria is rapidly becoming an important manufacturing center and is known as a progressive and enterprising little city.

Al Hoffman is now a member of the Superior Screen Service sales staff and will cover the northside of Chicago for the Weiss and Aiken organization. Mr. Hoffman formerly was with Gumbiner Theatrical Enterprises as manager of the Paulina Theatre.

The Germania Theatre has been opened at Freeport, Illinois, by the Germania Society of that city, and will operate on a policy of vaudeville and short moving pictures.

A newly organized company, known as the Community Motion Picture Company, has taken over the lease and will operate the Opera House at Mount Carroll, Illinois, after March 1st. It is understood that it will be operated as a picture house. C. E. Morton had been running this house for some time past.

H. A. Burling has opened up the new Lyric Theatre at Rock Falls, Illinois. This is now the only house in Rock Falls being operated, as the two other theatres there, in which Mr. Burling also had a controlling interest, are closed.

Lee W. Sargent, chief projectionist of the Newman Theatre, Kansas City, Missouri, was in Chicago recently on a visit of inspection to the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company's plant to learn the details of the manufacture of the Motiograph. Mr. Sargent remained several days and while here watched raw material come into the factory and saw it turned out into the complete machine. He expressed himself as very much impressed with the quality of material going into the Motiograph, as well as the splendid workmanship and praised the new de luxe machine highly.

"Foolish Wives," Universal's widely heralded million dollar picture, has been booked to open at Ascher's Roosevelt theatre on February 12th for an indefinite run. Ascher's publicity and production staff is busy with plans to make its run one of the most notable in Chicago picture history. It is understood that Carl Laemmle and a party of prominent New York picture men will come on to Chicago for the first night performances.

An important one day's sales conference of Famous Players-Lasky officials is scheduled to take place at the Drake Hotel on February 6th. Those expected to be present include General Manager S. R. Kent; Sales Managers Harry Ballance, George W. Weeks and Gerald Akers; General Service Manager F. V. Chamberlin; Exploitation Manager Claude Saunders, H. A. Ross and district and branch managers from all parts of the United States.

Jeanie Macpherson, scenarist for Cecil De Mille, stopped off in Chicago Tuesday en route from New York to the West Coast where she will take up work on "Manslaughter," the next De Mille picture to be produced. While in Chicago Miss Macpherson attended the Randolph, where she viewed the showing of "Saturday Night," for which she wrote the scenario and was very much pleased with the finished picture.

Captain Given, of Famous Players bowling team is again smiling, his expert "alley hounds" having trimmed Universal's "mysterious four" in a return game, and gotten revenge for the defeat recently administered on the Bensinger alleys.

Manager Clyde Eckardt, of Fox's Chicago exchange, has completed plans for the solid week's run of "Over the Hill" at forty-five Chicago theatres, starting February 5th, on which date it will open simultaneously at all these houses. A big advertising and exploitation campaign started this week to put the picture over and includes the use of fifteen thousand one sheets, sniping, window displays and a heavy newspaper advertising campaign which will start next Friday.

Buel B. Risinger, managing director of the J. W. and W. J. Dusenbury Circuit, of Columbus, Ohio, was a Chicago visitor this week. Mr. Risinger has made an enviable reputation for himself for his presentations and musical settings and while in Chicago looked over the principal loop theatres and attended the opening of "Orphans of the Storm" at the Great Northern. Business in Columbus at present is somewhat upset, owing to recent cutting of matinee prices by some of the theatres, according to Mr. Risinger, but is showing an upward trend.

As Superior Screen Service's sales contest neared its end, Salesman Ben Weissenbach was in the lead for the cash, which was offered as a prize for the biggest amount of new business during January. According to Harry Weiss, business has shown a general increase during the month and he believes the outlook is better than for some time past.

Steve Bennis, of the Lincoln theatre, Lincoln, Illinois, was a Chicago visitor this week and reports that he has about perfected plans for a new picture theatre for Lincoln that will seat 1,160 people. He expects construction to start in March on the building which will contain three stores and a large lobby, as well as the theatre proper.

Clarence McClish has taken over the Theatorium at Ashley, Indiana. Mr. McClish is very popular in his home town and it is reported business is looking up at the Theotorium under his management.

Charles Penser, of the Arista Film Corporation, New York City, was a visitor this week and while here conferred with Gollos & Gollos, who have the Illinois and Indiana rights to "Prejudice," Arista's interesting feature picture, which appeals particularly to the Jewish population. Gollos & Gollos already have booked this picture into the 20th Century for a two weeks' run and into the Crystal, Biltmore and other houses for extended showings.

F. A. Ferguson, former proprietor of the Lincoln theatre, Valparaiso, Indiana, reports having sold this house to W. S. Bush, a local business man. Mr. Ferguson will move to Fairmount, Indiana, where he plans to again enter theatre work, having purchased property at that point.

Herman Stern, district manager of Universal, with headquarters in Chicago, who has been seriously ill, is gaining ground even more rapidly than hoped for due to excellent care received at the Michael Reese Hospital, and will be able to return to his home during the week.

Frank Mayo was in evidence about the Universal exchange for a brief time between trains Tuesday. He was enroute to New York from Universal City on a six weeks' leave of absence. This is his first visit to the east in three years. Another Universal exchange visitor during the week was Miss Du Pont, who plays one of the principal parts in "Foolish Wives." A flock of press photographers were busy with their cameras during her stay at the exchange and she was also interviewed by numerous press representatives. It is possible that she will return to Chicago and make personal appearances at the Roosevelt theatre when "Foolish Wives" opens there during the third week in February.

Above is illustrated an extra elaborate example of the "chariot" idea for putting over "The Queen of Sheba."

* * * *

Page 974 has pictures showing three very fine lobby displays. The "Star Dust" lobby is not expensive and is a decided novelty. The "Wonderful Thing" and "One Arabian Night" displays show how cut-outs on these pictures may be used effectively.

* * * *

The story at the top of page 974 tells how Edward L. Hyman, of the Brooklyn Mark-Strand is putting over a new wrinkle with his musical program.

* * * *

On the same page is a recital of a good stunt for "Salvation Nell." The idea should appeal to the small town theatre, as the bakers can be induced to stand most of the expense.

* * * *

Frank Leonard, erstwhile News employee, now a Goldwyn exploiteer, has been working on "Theodora" at Utica, N. Y. The story on page 975 relates how thoroughly he did his job.

* * * *

Also on page 975 a cut of a lobby display on "The Sheik" is shown. It is especially good because it didn't cost a fortune and still has atmosphere and individuality.

* * * *

If you have a vacant store next to your theatre or near it the exploitation stunt which the Colonial theatre pulled for "A Sailor Made Man" as illustrated by the cut at the bottom of page 976 ought to appeal. It is inexpensive and novel enough to attract attention, especially in a city small enough so residents cover the same "routes" daily.

A big flash for a little money is explained by the cut at the top of page 978, showing what Louis K. Sidney, managing director of the Strand theatre, Denver, evolved in the way of a lobby display for "A Connecticut Yankee."

Likewise the bottom cut on the same page and the story accompanying will tell what the Howard theatre, Atlanta, did to exploit "The Queen of Sheba" and the prologue made a feature of the presentation of this picture.

Arthur G. Stolte, as the story on page 979 relates, has demonstrated once again that the tie-up contest with a newspaper is never to be overlooked in exploiting pictures. The yarn about Mr Stolte describes his drawing contest for "The Silent Call."

There is an attractive lobby poster idea on "The Silent Call" to be found in the cut appearing at the right-hand lower corner of page 979 also. Paul Noble, manager of the Liberty, is a past master at getting fine effects by the use of cut-outs.

Who said that violinists were temperamental? The Princess theatre, Troy, Ala., has one who can and will turn exploiteer. See page 980 for cut and story on the lobby display on "The Old Nest" which Mr. Moll originated.

A box at the bottom of the same page, left-hand corner, proves that "Molly O" exploitation is not to stop after the picture gets out of the big towns.. Laramie isn't such a big town, as cities are measured in the East, but it is a live one as this exploitation story proves.

There is a fine idea for "fillum" salesmen to ponder over in the story appearing on page 981, headed "Film Salesman Visits Small Town." Help the exhibitor make money and he will be your friend for life.

The story about John B. Snider's "potato show" appearing on the same page is also worth remembering. It is a great idea for Christmas time.

"Black Beauty" is still playing in the smaller towns and A. S. Kolsted, of the Rialto theatre, Hood River, Ore., gives the small town manager a fine idea of how to put it over. Hokum, of course, but good stuff.

"Music-Drama" Latest Wrinkle at Brooklyn Strand

MUSIC-DRAMA has made its appearance at the Brooklyn Ma Strand as a show opener. The departure from the stock ove ture orchestral number had its inauguration with the present tion of Wagner's music-drama, "The Valkyrie," presented by sy phony orchestra, grand organ, special scenic and lighting embellis ment, and, most important of all, a basso of operatic note. Samu Jurist playing the main singing role of Wotan.

Managing Director Edward L. Hyman, in opening his show wi this dramatic musical interpretation, gave full play to the Brookl Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra, the organ had its opportuni and there was wide field for lighting and scenic mounting.

This number was a relief from the standard overture, Mr. Hyma seizing upon the scene wherein Wotan bids farewell to his beau ful daughter, Brunnhilde, as the motif. As the curtain rose, tl organ alone had profundo position. As it swelled the stage settir showed a drop of the rock bound coast of Norway with the warri Wotan seated on an icy crag. The orchestra gave the backgrou melody for his farewell song.

Partello "Molly O's" Mansfield

JIM PARTELLO of the Majestic Theatre put over the biggest exploitation campaign Mansfield, Ohio, has ever seen, for his recent engagement of "Molly O," when every store on Main Street, which means about fifty shops, sold some "Molly O" something. The merchants of Mansfield were sold on the idea to a man. And every one of them gave his window to support the idea. It was the most comprehensive exploitation Partello has ever pulled, and he says he had the biggest week since the slump last spring.

"Salvation Nell" Doughnut Helps Herb Johnson

THE "Salvation Nell" doughnut was born, christened and eaten the night of January 9, at the Luna theatre, Lafayette, Ind., when "Salvation Nell" played Herb Johnson's house.

Costumed in the garb of the screen, "Salvation Nell," a pretty lass, stood in the lobby of the Luna Theatre presiding before an electric cooker and handing out warm and brittle doughnuts to everyone entering the theatre at the opening performance.

"Sin Flood" Plays Another Pre-Release Engagement

Among the stunts which A. L. Selih, publicity director, used was a ballyhoo that proved effective.

During the run of the picture a man on horseback, dressed in black, pointed hat, etc., with eye-holes cut in the hood—and with cabalistic signs of different colors all over the costume—quite similar to the Ku Klux Klan costume—rode about the city. From each side of the saddle hung an explanatory sign.

The local telephone office was induced to post a notice on the exchange bulletin board announcing the picture as a "hello girl" story and 120 of the local operators attended. The local newspapers gave this stunt a lot of free publicity also.

John G. Invins, manager of the Lucas, Odeon and Folly theatres, originated a highly effective prologue for the engagement.

The stage was completely darkened, showing only some lights in the windows of a house and on a lighthouse tower. As the lights gradually came up, the organ played from the Peer Gynt suite. After the lights were full up they were gradually darkened, while the effects back stage were used to induce the illusion of thunder, lightning and torrents of rain. The theatre was in absolute darkness while the storm raged at its most furious. The picture opened at this point. The prologue won applause at each showing. The rain and storm effects were used during the screening of the flood scenes in the photoplay, right up to the time that the waterproof doors and windows of the cafe were shut.

Leonard Sells "Theodora" to Uticans

Many-angled Exploitation Campaign Put Over by Goldwyn Exploiteer

The biggest bit of exploitation was a general tie-up with Frazer's Department Store, the largest in Utica. The entire store was turned over to him for "Theodora" exploitation. Mr. Leonard promised Mr. Frazer to give two tickets to the girl in each department who grossed the highest sales during "Theodora" week. About fifty snappy advertising cards, about 8 by 10 inches, were prepared and placed in different departments of the store.

Two large cards 1½ by 4 feet, "Facts About Theodora," were prepared. One was placed in the main entrance and the second in the principal show window. Cards nearly as large, "Theodora greets you," were placed at the elevator exits. In the store's main window were several "Theodora" cards, 25 stills and posters, tied up with the merchandise in the window.

A banner advertising "Theodora" was placed on each side of the four delivery trucks of the department store. Eight other banners were used on the motors of a trucking concern.

Seven shops along the main street were tied-up for window display. Included in the list were jewelry, millinery and women's clothing shops. Cards and stills were used in each of these.

A pair of tickets were promised to each person who brought in an overcoat to be given to the needy in Utica. So many were contributed that the theatre's parcel room looked like a second-hand store.

An announcement herald in English, and a similar one in Italian, telling the readers that "Theodora" was coming, that the Colonial theatre had to pay what was probably its highest rental for it, followed by figures as to its cost, the period of time required to make it and the number of persons appearing in it, was distributed to every home. The door-bell was rung and the person answering was asked please to read it.

Banners were placed on the buses which run the length of the valley in which Utica is located. A girl was kept busy for two days calling up persons in the telephone directory telling them that "Theodora" was coming. She also called up the school teachers and the clergymen to remind them of a special Saturday morning screening for them.

On the Saturday preceding the first screening, Mr. Leonard worked a ballyhoo stunt in which he used five persons, four men and a young woman. The young woman was costumed as Theodora, one of the men as the Emperor Justinian, the other three men as plebeians. The Empress and Emperor sat on an improvised throne in the rear of a motor truck which was driven about town. The three plebeians stood in the forward part of the truck. A large banner on each side of the truck proclaimed "Theodora" to be the greatest picture the world has ever known and gave the theatre and show dates.

The lobby was made attractive with posters, paintings, frames of stills and signs. The spectacle opened to big business and kept up a high average despite the sudden cold wave.

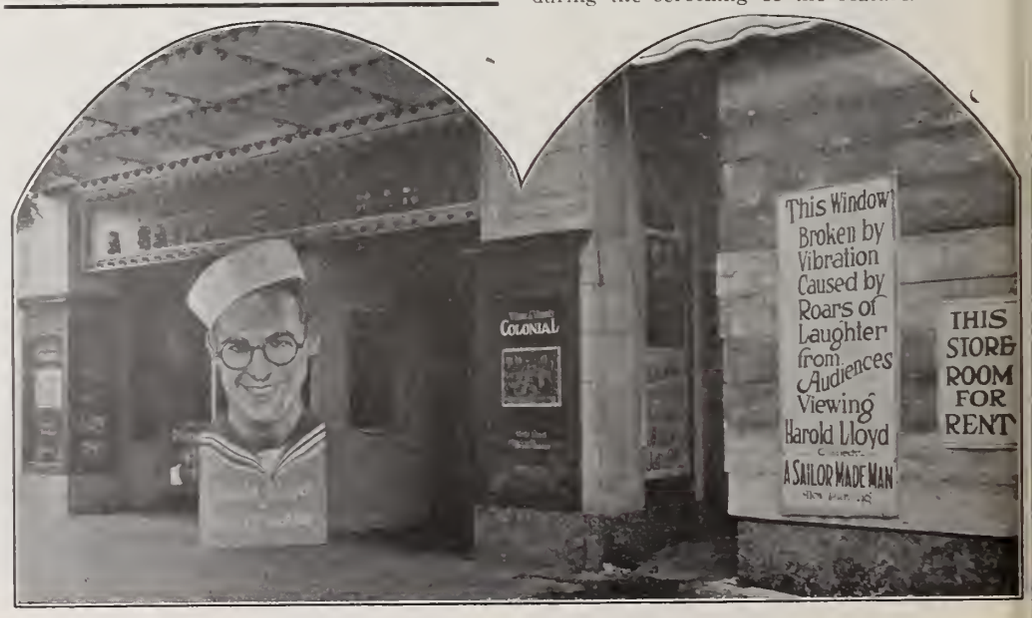
Explanatory to the story accompanying concerning the prologue for "Love's Redemption" presented by the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre

Indian Melodies Motif for "Love's Redemption" Prologue

Finden's Four Indian Love Lyrics gave the motif for a prologue introducing "Love's Redemption" at the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre, Managing Director Edward L. Hyman further accentuating the south sea atmosphere of the film with an outdoor tropical set, including cut-out palm trees, a star-lit sky and illuminated moon.

The curtain revealed the thatched roof with swaying palm trees, the night sky and a musing man seated before his door. The two characters employed were supposed to represent Miss Talmadge as the "Ginger" of the film and her leading man.

The man, Edgar Kiefer, baritone, in the conventional white of the tropics, sang "The Temple Bells Are Ringing," with accompanying bell effects, the girl appearing in time for the chorus. The girl of the film was portrayed in the stage prologue by Edna Burbans, soprano, who wore the fantastic costume of the island of Jamaica. Sonia Serova appeared during Mr. Kiefer's song in native dance costume.



The second number was by Miss Burhans, who sang Finden's weird love song, "The Kashmiri Song." The prologue was particularly pleasing because of the appropriate tone of the songs selected by Managing Director Hyman.

"Way Down East" Exploitation Novel and Different

"WAY DOWN EAST" was advertised a little differently in Spartanburg recently by Manager Charlie Amos of the Strand Theatre. Two weeks before the opening date Manager Amos secured the use of a 24-sheet signboard. The background of the signboard was painted pure white, with a large red circle painted in the center, which occupied about one-third of the board.

Here's Great Idea for "Sailor Made Man"

MANAGER RUSSELL ROGERS, of the Plaza theatre, of San Diego, Cal., pulled a good publicity stunt when he had his first display advertising for "The Sailor-Made Man" occupy the center of a full page, around which were arranged advertisements of various business houses who made special mention of things which sailors might want, while across the top of the page ran the line, "This is a page for 'Gobs' Only." The picture of Harold Lloyd showed him in sailor attire. San Diego is a big sailor town and the Lloyd comedy drew big houses throughout its engagement.

Canadian Theatres Play Up Scotch Atmosphere of Productions

The stunt of conducting a "Scottish Week" has been carried out by no less than four moving picture theatres in Canada during recent weeks and the "Scotch" flavor has been very much in evidence in each case, the atmosphere created proving to be quite invigorating, judging by the enthusiasm aroused.

Scotland was featured at both the Capitol and Garrick theatres, Winnipeg, Manitoba, during the week of January 9. At the Capitol, Manager Oral Cloakey presented "The Little Minister" and added a prologue in which the Winnipeg Police Pipe Band was featured along with a special "Auld Kirk Choir," as well as an "Overture from the Highlands," by the theatre orchestra and a Chester Outing scenic, "The Bonnie Briar Country." The stage of the big house was draped with huge plaided curtain to heighten the effect.

At the Garrick theatre, Winnipeg, Manager Wilson offered "The Bonnie Briar Bush" as the feature along with appropriate Scottish music and pictures of the Prince of Wales.

Scottish Week at the Imperial theatre, Montreal, during the week of January 9 also proved to be a lively affair. The film feature was "The Bonnie Briar Bush" and special attention included numbers by the pipe band of the Royal Highlanders of Canada, Highland dances by Jean Thomson, Scottish songs by Zilla Simpson, special soloist, and Scottish music by the orchestra. This programme was arranged by Manager Howard Conover.

Scotland was featured in song and story at the Regent theatre, Toronto, when "The Bonnie Briar Bush" was presented at that theatre. The numbers included an atmospheric prologue, a Scottish overture and Scottish incidental music during the screening of the feature.

After You Book It

YOUR next thought, naturally, is how to put it over. The country's foremost showmen help you solve this all important question when you use a copy of THE BOOKING GUIDE and MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Not by theory, but by exploitation ideas that have been tried out. They have used them in their theatres and can tell you of their success. The brains and ideas of many contribute to your aid. Why not take advantage of them?

Prison Cell on Wheels Exploits "Perjury"

"Mayor's Night" was an effective feature of the exploitation campaign conducted by the American theatre, Paterson, N. J., in connection with the run of "Perjury."

Arrangements were made for the presence at the Monday night performance of the Mayor and other city officials, and a number of county and state authorities. The theatre was decorated with American flags and bunting, and the orchestra played the "Star Spangled Banner" as the Mayor and his party entered. The event was announced in advance by the theatre in the daily press.

Further publicity was given the production by a unique street ballyhoo in the form of a prison cell on wheels. A large automobile truck, made to resemble a cell by the erection of steel-colored wooden bars, was driven about the city. On the truck was a man attired in the stripes of a convict, and large banners about the sides of the vehicle proclaimed the coming of the production to the Terminal theatre.

To get the attention of the great number of commuters, the management erected large canvas signs in the railroad stations. Several hundred letters were sent out to the names on the Terminal's mailing list announcing the week's program.

Espy Boosts "Connecticut Yankee" with Ballyhoo

A lobby display of motorcycles and armor also helped put the picture over. The motorcycles were obtained through a local agency and the armor was borrowed for the occasion.

THE TOLEDO AUTO SHOW was in full blast during the week Eddie Zorn, manager of the Temple theatre played "Peck's Bad Boy," so, as part of the exploitation campaign Billy Exton publicity director for the Temple had some orange diamond-shaped cardboard hanagers printed with the following text thereon: "You autoshow good judgment by racing to see 'Peck's Bad Boy' at the Temple."

These cards were used freely at the show and elsewhere about the city. It was a fine little stunt and went over for excellent results.

Fake Political Parade Advertises "Woman's Place" at Lafayette

It's about twenty years now since Lafayette, Indiana, has had a real red-blooded torch light parade and accompanying music, but recently Herb Johnson, manager of the Luna theatre, revived it for the opening night of "Woman's Place."

Shortly after dark on the evening of the picture's first appearance, the townspeople were animated by the strains of a rattling good brass band and the glow of red lights—then down the street came the parade, torches waving, red lights flashing and banners flying.

"Sample" ballots were distributed among the gaping crowds, each of the long strips containing the following verses:

Now where, or where is Woman's Place?
What domicile should she embrace?
The spinster murmurs—"In the home."
The bathing girl says—"In the foam."
The weary wife—"Oh, let us roam."
But they're all wrong—it's in the gloaming shades by rivers cool and sweet;
In nook, in cranny, dim retreat,
From e'en the moon's enquiring face—
Yes, there, oh there, is "Woman's Place."

Atlanta Theatre Pulls Many Stunts

"Queen of Sheba" Exploitation and Presentation at Howard Theatre

"THE Queen of Sheba" received extra attention in the way of exploitation and presentation during its recent engagement at the Howard theatre, Atlanta. The outer lobby received first attention. Around the top, above the storm doors, were miniature desert scenes—representing the time of the play—desert caravans, tiny black silhouettes against a compoboard background painted to represent a desert sky; the stone walls of the city were reproduced in miniature, the race-track with racers speeding down the course, and so on.

The huge pillars in front of the box-office each carried shields—with the battle-axe and spears. Above the box-office hung a battered silver-pot, with an Egyptian design in scarlet and black near the top. This pot, or urn had a decoration across the top of strips of scarlet paper, kept blowing by a concealed fan. And scarlet and yellow light bulbs hidden in the pot, gave the impression of an ancient brazier.

Inside, the main lobby had its decorations of shields, helmets, and two more "braziers" like the one in the outer lobby.

Musical Director Leide's prologue was a fitting accompainment, called "King Solomon's Bacchanale." There were six girl-dancers, in green, pink and cream-colored Grecian draperies, with the girdle and head-dresses of grape-leaves, with clusters of grapes. There were two boy-musicians in white draperies with flutes and "King Solomon" arrayed in all his glory, on a beautifully carven (adroitly painted) throne, at one side.

The girls danced to the music of the Bacchanale, from Saint-Saens "Samson et Delila," and, at the climax, the black-drop rose, to reveal a chariot race, in miniature—a mechanical affair, but very well-managed. The lights on the stage went out, all being centered on the race. But each of the dancers carried a battery, a light bulb and switch. As the lights of the front stage went out, to center on the chariot race, each girl was individually lighted by her own power, so to speak.

A lobby display the publicity value of which was enhanced rather than diminished by darkness was used by Louis K. Sidney, manager of the Strand Theatre, Denver, during a run of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

The lobby, which is semi-circular in form, lent itself admirably to the embellishment. From one end of the semi-circle to the other, and over the front of the box-office, was erected a beaverboard imitation of a feudal castle and battlements of old. Directly above the ticket window was a large cut-out of the head of Mark Twain, and across the castle effect were the words, "Mark Twain's Greatest Comedy." Hanging from the super-arch of the inner-lobby and a few feet below the large electric sign of the "Strand" was a ten-by-four-foot sign, framed in wood, carrying another message, the name of the production, and an enlarged still done by a poster artist.

The lighting scheme of the Strand's lobby was such as to fill out the unique adornment and make it a magnet for all who passed the theatre as well as for all attending the current attraction.

Sparks Has a "Family Night" That's a Winner

Friday, not Thursday, was the Jonah day with Robert Sparks, manager of the Olympic theatre, Wichita Falls, Texas, so it was Friday that Mr. Sparks picked out for his latest exploitation stunt, "Family Night."

By means of slides, heralds and newspaper ads Mr. Sparks advertises that there will be no charge for children under twelve when accompanied by parents.

After eight weeks of "Family Night" the Friday night performances are running a close second to Saturday, ordinarily the banner day in any small town.

Mr. Sparks advises that occasionally some one, usually a kind hearted lady who wants to slip by some luckless kid, shy an unoccupied parent or the cash, puts one over, but he lets them get away with it and calls it good business.

The majority of family trade Mr. Sparks notices are "strangers" so he doesn't feel that he is losing anything in the way of Saturday trade.

Chariot Advertises "Queen of Sheba" at Altoona

To exploit "Queen of Sheba," during a recent run at the Capitol theatre, Altoona, Pa., the management decided that a woman driving through the city's streets on a chariot with a team of imposing steeds would attract enough attention to break box-office records.

But where to get a chariot? A search through the entire list of property stores in Altoona and near-by communities failed to reveal the presence of a copy of this ancient vehicle. So a carpenter was employed and instructed to build something that would resemble one, at least. With an old wagon-tongue, a frame of woodwork for a bow, a few strips of canvas, and a bucket of paint, the craftsman improvised a chariot which withstood the thoroughfares' ruts and bumps in good shape for the three days' usage.

A woman attired as the Queen of Sheba guided the vehicle through the streets of the town and invaded adjacent villages from which the Capitol draws much of its patronage. The box office receipts proved the value of the stunt and the resourcefulness of enterprising showmen.

"Red Hearts" Advertise "Camille" at Sharon, Pa.

A number of big red hearts cut from card board was the basis of a lobby display on "Camille" originated by the Liberty theatre, Sharon, Pa. These hearts were also tacked all over town.

Tieups were arranged with stores and the novelty of seeing big hearts displayed among the offerings of the windows of haberdashery and modistes' shops got a lot of attention from the public.

Generous space was taken in the newspapers for display advertising and the papers cooperated with the Liberty theatre by running pictures of the lobby and of some of the advertising displays in the store window.

South Sea Lobby Display Attracts for "Passion Fruit" Run

One of the coldest days of the week before Christmas found Manager W. T. Murray, of the Alamo No. 2 theatre, Atlanta, booked to play "Passion Fruit"—and the cold weather aided his exploitation wonderfully.

With the aid of a lot of bamboo canes he masked the front of the theatre, transforming the bare walls into the semblance of a tropic jungle. A vivid green carpet in the center of the lobby gave the appearance of lush green grass, and on this carpet was placed a small wicker table and beside the table was a light wicker chair. Shading this was a very good imitation of a palm tree. Two or three magazines lay sprawled on the chair, and a bit of needlework was on the table. A big palm-leaf fan had dropped on the grass beside the chair.

At the side, near the top of the lobby, an arrangement of lights to simulate moonlight, through the leafy branches of the palms, had been made, and the whole thing was such an excellent imitation of tropic languor that it was hard to believe that the thermometer in the lobby really registered twenty above zero.

"Silent Call" Drawings Interest All DesMoines

Arthur G. Stolte, managing director of the Des Moines theatre, Des Moines, Ill., and the Des Moines Evening Tribune have put over a drawing contest on "The Silent Call" that garnered a bunch of free publicity and brought the engagement of the picture to the attention of every resident of the city.

Through the Tribune Mr. Stolte announced that prizes of $25, $10 and $5 and free tickets to every contestant would be given to the children up to 14 years who would submit drawings of "Strongheart," the dog star of the picture.

A two-column line cut of "Strongheart" was run in the Tribune for five successive days, the cut to be the model from which the children were to work. A four-column story also accompanied the cut, telling all about the contest and explaining about the picture in which the dog appeared.

Over two thousand drawings were submitted. Mr. Stolte states that there wasn't a child or his mother, father, brother or sister in Des Moines that didn't know "The Silent Call" was playing at the Des Moines.

Schade Exploits "Over the Hill" Within Radius of 25 Miles

An exploitation stunt original in every respect and executed with great success is recorded by the management of the Schade theatre, Sandusky, Ohio. The stunt was put over with the assistance of a Fox representative, in connection with the run of "Over the Hill."

Within a radius of 25 miles of Sandusky are ten towns, all on the lines of a local electric railroad. During the winter months travel between these communities is at its lowest ebb, and the income of the lines is greatly reduced.

When "Over the Hill" was to be exploited the showman determined to utilize this traffic condition. The traffic officials consented to cooperate, and as a result both theatre and road benefited.

All the expense of the lines, round-trip excursions from the ten towns were advertised. With each car ticket was offered a free pass to the Schade theatre to see "Over the Hill." To the management of the theatre was paid the full admission price by the railroad—the plan thus costing the showman nothing but the use of the name of the theatre.

Laramie School Teachers Help Lynch on "My Boy"

The schools, working with the principals and teachers, was the angle which Jim Lynch, manager of the Empress Theatre, Laramie, Wyo., adopted in exploiting "My Boy."

Lynch visited the schools, explained the theme of the picture to the instructors and enlisted their aid for a special Saturday morning matinee for the children. The result was nearly 1,000 youngsters attended and had the time of their lives.

Schmidt's Lobby on "Anatol" Pleases Atlanta Fans

Manager George Schmidt's lobby for "The Affairs of Anatol," when this picture played a return engagement at his Strand theatre, in Atlanta, Ga., aroused considerable comment, for it was an exceedingly artistic affair.

To begin with, the floor of the lobby had been covered with a brick-red covering which was painted to represent tiling. In the center was a fountain which played real water, on which a clever arrangement of lights, at one side of the theatre and concealed, threw rainbow colors.

Around the walls of the lobby were eight full-length posters of the stars in the picture, each one against a compo-board background which made the lobby wall look like a very smart studio. These posters were transparent, and an arrangement of lights behind each one added an effective note. The spaces between the posters were covered with a very narrow white lattice-work, on which trailed real smilax, with tiny electric globes concealed here and there among the dark leaves.

Across the front of the theatre huge cut-outs of the words "Affairs Anatol" were of white, bordered with red. Inside the "A" of "Affairs" the word "The" was printed in black letters, and on the letter "S" was the word "of." Thus, when you passed directly in front of the theatre you read "The Affairs of Anatol," but from across the street you read "Affairs Anatol." The word "Anatol" had its white spaces filled with photographs and stills from the picture.

For a week preceding the showing of the picture, five hundred feet of film depicting striking scenes from the picture was run.

"Molly O" Hat Sale Boosts Laramie Engagement

WHEN "Molly O" was shown two days recently at the Empress theatre, Laramie, Wyo., attention was called to the production by the sale of "Molly O" hats at a local store which made a display of the hats in one of its large windows, at a stated price, and offered a free ticket with each purchase.

Manager Lynch, of the Empress, displayed lithographs in the windows at the theatre, used extra newspaper advertising, and distributed small bills over the city.

Violinist Turns Exploiteer When Occasion Demands

FROM Troy, Ala., a town not so large by any means as Troy, N. Y., comes a lobby display picture on "The Old Nest," the work of Herman Moll, whose regular job is violinist for J. G. Crouch, manager of the Princess theatre, of Troy, but who turns exploiteer when occasion demands.

Southern smilax was used as vines around the house (illustrated in the cut) and the trees are plum trees. An orthodox bird's nest just as Madam Bird built it rested in the tree. Pine straw was used as grass for the lawn and the fence was built for the occasion.

"Two Minutes to Go" Ballyhoo Works Fine for Grand Theatre

Another good exploitation stunt for "Two Minutes to Go" has been put over by Mrs. E. L. Dilly, proprietress of the Grand theatre at Northfield, Minn. Mrs. Dilly tied up with a local football game and was rewarded with big business.

In hooking up with the game, Mrs. Dilly made capital of "Eddie," a well known hunchback character about town. Dressed up in football togs, Eddie paraded the streets with a sign with good results. In the afternoon he attended the football game and helped the band and cheer-leaders, causing a lot of the gridiron followers to attend the theatre that evening.

New Angle to the Free Show Idea

EVERY Saturday morning, Manager Wilson, of the Garrick theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, holds a free show for children 12 years of age and under when he gives an advance showing of the feature which is to be presented at the theatre during the following week. Each child is required to bring a coupon from one of local newspapers along with one cent for the amusement tax. Manager Wilson looks upon the stunt as excellent advertising because of the manner in which the children tell about the picture to friends and parents afterwards.

Old Folks' Mat Part of Brown' "Old Nest" Campaign

G. E. Brown, manager and publicity directo of Loew's Palace theatre, Memphis, when h played "The Old Nest," put over one of th most successful publicity campaigns the thea tre ever had. The campaign, covering practi cally every phase of exploitation work, wa featured by a newspaper tie-up for an ol folks' matinee during the run of the attractior

Front page publicity, with three column head and feature stories, was the result of the mati nee and hundreds of persons who were friend of the institutions and old folks, turned out t see the party.

Not alone did Mr. Brown invite all inmate of the institutions for the aged of Memphi but through the newspaper, sought to find ever person over 80 years of age, in the city, wh had never attended a motion picture perform ance.

Despite the widespread publicity, no old folk were found who would step forward and de clare they had never seen a motion picture

However, scores of old folks turned out anc were given a special treat, automobiles having been obtained through the aid of the newspape to carry them to and from the theatre.

It was the first old folks party ever given ir Memphis and created unusual interest.

Perambulating 24 Sheets Get Olean's Attention

Ned Nickum mounted two twenty-four sheets on a hay truck and with little expense informed all Olean, N. Y., that "The Sheik" played at the Gem theatre.

Nickum and Sladdin, the Paramount exploiteer, followed the float around town and even got into newspaper shots of it.

Film Saleman Visit Small Town and Deliver Movie Lecture

Salesmen who make stump speeches and sales managers who plan campaigns along the lines of political enterprises, are among the latest devices for getting business at the Chicago Exchange of First National.

Let E. J. Eichenlaub, Country Sales Manager at the Windy City office, tell it:

"We found the theatre at Manhattan, Ill., in a bad slump not long ago and decided we would take a shot at the civic pride of the entire community, instead of trying to build up the theatre alone.

"Every year at Christmas time Eugene Hoerrman, who owns the Manhattan theatre, puts on an annual complimentary show for the whole town, and we picked out that event for our stunt.

"The stunt itself was simple. We merely sent our salesman, A. C. Fox, to make a speech. It was what Fox told those small town people when he got up on the stage, that put the stunt over.

"Fox must have been waiting all his life for a chance to make a speech. He certainly had a lot bottled up in him, and he let the good people of Manhattan have the whole load.

"He told them that their moving picture theatre was as important as their church or their library or their city hall—and got away with it. He pictured the benefits to the children in educational and travel pictures; he told them how the drama had made the Greeks the greatest exponents of civic power in the world (or words to that effect), and points out similar possibilities for Manhattan, Ill. From Athens to Manhattan, a long jump, but every citizen took the hurdle.

"And with all this good talk on moving picturse, Fox was weaving in Associated First National all the time. He not only showed them that motion pictures were as necessary as breakfast food, but he showed them that the only motion pictures worth looking at are Associated First National Pictures.

"The talk went over big and the whole affair apparently has put the theatre on its feet. Mr. Hoerrman writes that he packed the house on two nights, even against the competition of a farmers' meeting and he thinks so well of the scheme that he suggests its wider use in other towns."

Sioux City Uncle Sam Exploits "My Boy" for O'Hare

A MAN dressed to represent Uncle Sam, who distributed small white cards bearing the picture title, theatre name and the dates on which it was to be shown, was used as a street ballyhoo for "My Boy," by Manager Wm. C. O'Hare, of the Princess theatre at Sioux City, Iowa.

For a prologue Uncle Sam gave short talks of a patriotic nature, on the comparative value of immigration, taking for his examples the little French orphan and the Italian organgrinder, as shown in the picture.

The measure for restricted immigration formed the basis of talks which Uncle Sam gave during the week of the regular meetings of all the civic organizations and at all schools and colleges, where he made mention of the fact that nowhere could a better comparison of the desirable and undesirable be found than in the picture "My Boy."

The poor children of the city were invited through the missions of the city to see the picture, with the Boy Scout patrols detailed to keep order. Manager O'Hare was host, at one show, to all the newsboys in the city. These free shows were given publicity by the newspapers.

Gersdorf Going Good, at Rialto in Macon

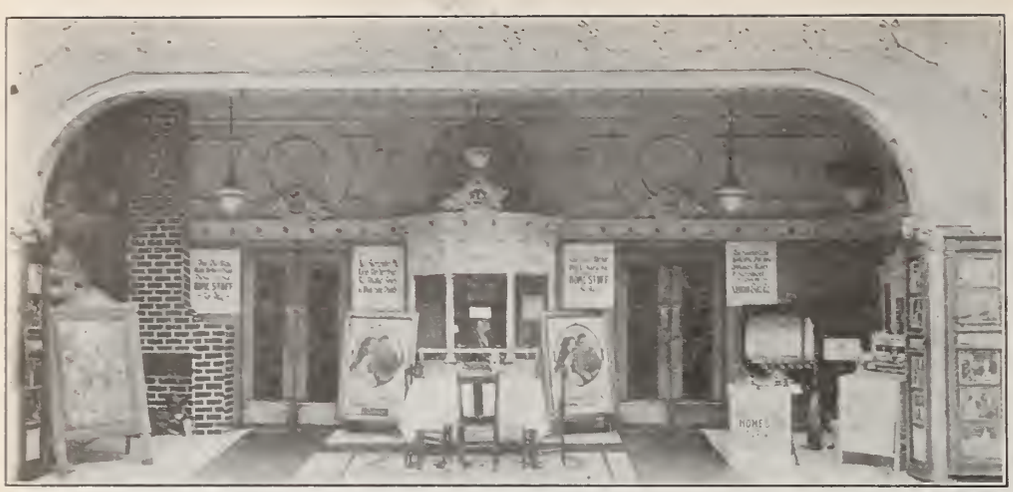
Phil Gersdorf, lately relinquishing the reins of the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., to grab hold of those of another Southern Enterprises house, the Capitol Theatre, Macon, Ga., is setting a fast exploitation pace on his new job.

One of his recent campaigns was on "Just Around the Corner,"

In all advertising, stress was laid on the fact that it was a Fannie Hurst story, the author of "Humoresque," and that like its predecessor, it was a wholesome and appealing picture of New York's East Side. Considerable publicity was also given Sigrid Holmquist, announcing this as her first American screen appearance, although she was known as "The Swedish Mary Pickford." Attention was also called to Lewis Sargent, the creator of Huckleberry Finn on the screen.

A half-dozen signs were made in the shape of broad arrows and attached to the same stands previously used for "Dangerous Curve Ahead," and lettered prominently, "Just Around The Corner," and with the name of the theatre in small letters underneath. As it was impossible to gain permission from the city to place these signs on the side-walks, Manager Gersdorf secured the consent of six merchants to place them in the center of their wide entrances, pointing toward the Capitol Theatre. Each location secured was a prominent one, one of them being directly next door to the opposition house, and pointing away from that theatre towards the Capitol.

The result of the "potato show" put over by John B. Snider, manager of the Grand theatre, Bessemer, Ala., and described in the accompanying story



Snider Uses One Worth Borrowing

The "tin can" show and the "horseshoe" show have been adapted into something more useful by John B. Snider, manager of the Grand theatre, Bessemer, Ala.

For four days before Christmas Mr. Snider admitted children to the Grand who brought five potatoes in lieu of the usual coin of the realm. In this way 82 bushels of "spuds" were gathered together and distributed from the theatre Christmas tree in proper size parcels to the needy persons of the city.

Mr. Snider garnered 42 inches of free publicity from his local newspapers on the stunt, all of which mentioned the show, "Bunty Pulls the Strings," which Mr. Snider was running at the time.

Street Parade Sells "Theodora"

Crown Theatre, Mobile, Gets Whole City Interested by Unique Exploitation Stunt

THE biggest street parade ever formed to exploit a motion picture was arranged by William R. Ferguson, Goldwyn Service representative, in putting over "Theodora" to record breaking business at the Crown Theatre at Mobile, Ala., owned and managed by King Brothers.

Over forty men and women were costumed and placed on floats, in chariots and on horseback. The "big King's Float" that trailed the parade was constructed especially for this occasion by J. W. Hines, who has been in charge of construction work for the Mobile Mardi Gras parades for the past fifty years. The float was thirty feet long and eighteen feet wide—twenty feet high. The daughter of Charles King, proprietor of the Crown, played the part of "Theodora" seated on a massive throne chair, under a gilded canopy.

Two massive vases were placed at the bottom of the stairs leading from the throne. On these stairs several little girls were seated as pages.

Other features of the parade were the chariot with costumed driver; eight Roman banner carriers following same. On each banner was a letter spelling "Theodora." Preceding the parade was a buglar on horseback, giving loud trumpet calls that brought hundreds of people streaming out of the stores and houses. The procession traveled through all of the principal streets, which were lined with thousands of people. The parade was given both afternoon and evening. Red lights were used extensively with the night showings.

A score of unemployed men were selected from hundreds who responded to classified ads, to pass large circulars and other advertising matter about the city.

The theatre lobby had real pulling power. On the marquise, dozens of lion cutouts from twenty-four sheets were placed in striking positions. A cutout of "Theodora" was placed above them, and real iron chains were extended from her hands to the lions, supposedly holding them in check.

In the presentation, Richard Manning appeared as a Byzantine warrior, giving a short synopsis of the story, and at the finish, pointed to soloist appearing on throne. At the end of her song, the warrior arose and announced the beginning of the story on the screen.

The school children on account of the educational value of the picture were given special reduced rates, which added greatly to the matinee receipts.

"Home Stuff" Lobby Transforms Rex Lobby Into Apartment

Manager Oscar White of the Rex Theatre, Augusta, Ga., has added another lobby display of real merit to his list in the decorations for "Home Stuff."

The Rex looked like a three-room apartment from the outside instead of a modern theatre during the run of "Home Stuff" recently. A lobby was built to give the people an idea of the old way and the new way. A fireplace was built out of beaver board and placed on one side of the entrance. A swinging arm projected out from the chimney's fireplace, from which hung an old iron pot as used in olden days. A pile of logs in the fireplace and red lights beneath gave an effect of fire. Many thought it was and came over and looked.

Many electrical things were used, including washer, range, carpet sweeper and many other time saving devices.

A table all set for a meal with electric waffle irons, plates, cups and silverware, was placed in front of the ticket window.

Around the lobby were appropriate cards saying something of the picture. As a whole the lobby was well liked and we received quite a few favorable comments.

Lloyd's Latest Inspires Comedy Song Number

AN original song number under the title of "I'm in the Navy Now," written by Clen Pope and set to music by Ted Henkel (both Symphony Theatre employes), was a feature of the exploitation campaign on "A Sailor-Made Man" when this picture played the Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, recently.

The cover page was devoted to some display advertising for the picture, while the fourth page carried some institutional propaganda under the caption of "Symphony Policy."

The "I'm in the Navy Now" song has been copyrighted by Messrs. Henkel and Pope.

Good Post Card Stunt Put Over by Frost

An effective publicity stunt for his showing of "The Lane That Had No Turning" was recently put over at Tampa by Jack Frost, who is Assistant Manager under C. D. Cooley, of the six theatres controlled by the Consolidated Amusement Co.

Money was sent to managers in Jacksonville, Orlando and Lakeland, with the request that they buy, and send in, 200 lithograph post-cards of scenes in their cities. When the 600 cards arrived, he had girls to address them to a selected list of names, and on each card a message was written, which read, "Be sure and see 'The Lane that has no Turning,' when it comes to Tampa. It is a dandy picture. MARY."

The cards were then stamped, the bundles shipped back to the three managers, who then mailed them in the usual way at their post offices, so they arrived in Tampa with the post-mark of the different cities. Six hundred women were wondering who "Mary" was, and anxious to see the picture she had thought so well of, and which appeared at the Strand a few days later.

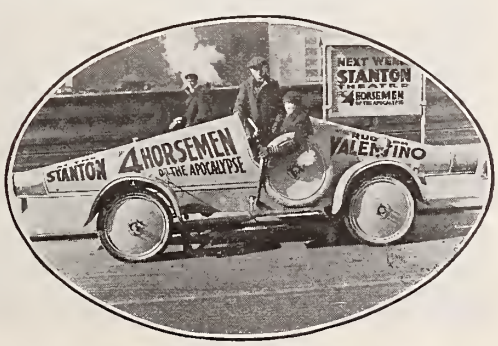
New Angle to Chariot Race Stunt

A new angle to the chariot race stunt in connection with the showing of "Queen of Sheba" was conceived by the management of the American theatre, Paterson, N. J., during the recent run of the production

Two days prior to the opening of the engagement the National Guard located in Paterson held its annual track meet in which prizes were awarded to the winners of various events. The armory is one of the largest in that section of the state and the size of the track permits the staging of bicycle and motorcycle races.

The management of the theatre arranged with the authorities to present a chariot race—an honest-to-goodness one—immediately preceding the first track event. This race was successfully conducted before a large audience. The chariots were bedecked with "Queen of Sheba" banners and the drivers of the two-wheeled vehicles wore the dress of the period when such races were in vogue.

"Rent Free" Stunt Has a Good Kick in It



Manager DeSales Harrison, of the Howard theatre, Atlanta, gained the maximum in results with a minimum of expense in exploiting "Rent Free"; which recently played a week's engagement at this theatre.

Although it would seem, at a glance, as if the word "free" had been worked to death by mail-order houses, and patent-medicine concerns, it proved to have a certain amount of "kick" in this stunt, anyway.

Posters half the size of a newspaper page, on thin white poster-board. At the top of this poster was a huge scarlet question-mark. Below it, in black letters, was the word "FREE!" and, below this, just a line in small type—"Howard theatre, week of January 16th." Five thousand of these cards were used, in the business district, tied to automobiles, and a few in the residential district, where they created considerable attention.

Manager Harrison's lobby was also worthy of notice.

Three enormous artists' palettes, of compo-board, colored to represent polished wood, were used. One completely masked the box-office, the "thumb-hole" by which the palette is held, being large enough for tickets to be sold through it. The other two were used on either side of the lobby, holding stills from the picture. The palettes were decorated with bright blobs of color, smeared on as if squeezed from tubes. In the two used in the lobby, the stills had been framed in these "blobs," just enough color being visible around each still to make the black-and-white picture stand out in vivid relief.

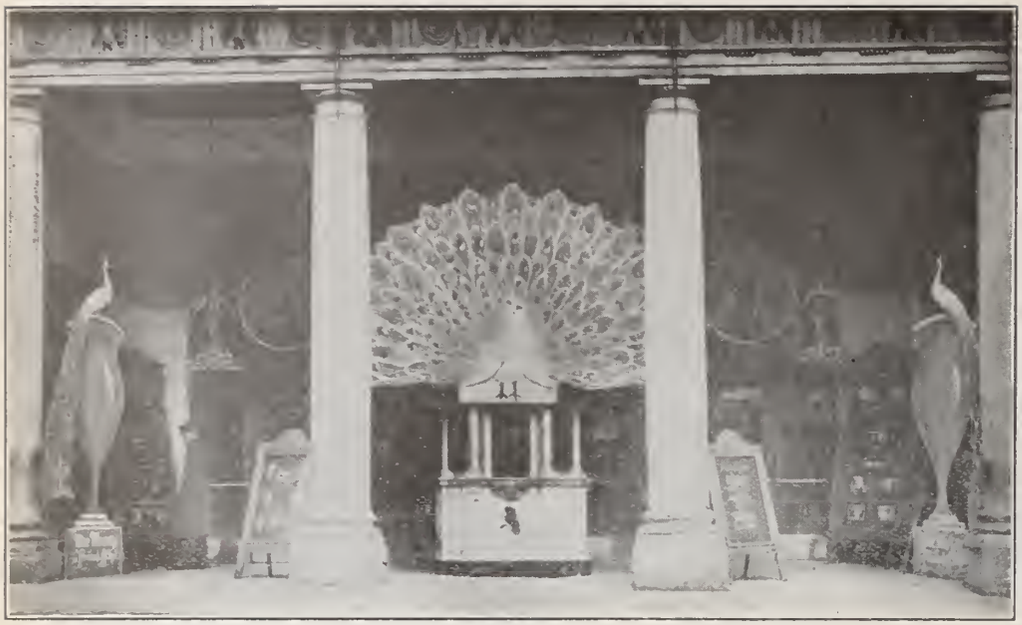
Exploitation for "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" put over for the Stanton theatre, Philadelphia showing

Meyer Gives the "Donkey Stunt" Original Twist

It's an old trick, but it still brings results, according to Manager Meyer, of the Royal theatre, Chillicothe, O., who "pulled" the donkey street ballyhoo in connection with a recent presentation of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

In conducting his exploitation stunt, however, Manager Meyer gave it an original twist by tieing up with a well-known character of his town. A wealthy farmer living near Chillicothe and celebrated for his fine breeds of mules and horses, possesses a freak donkey, the appearance of which on the streets of Chillicothe is always the signal for a large gathering of the curious. By the use of persuasive bargaining and a few free passes to the show Meyer was able to secure the services of the famous donkey for his street advertising. Leading the animal about town was an old negro well known about for many years and himself a "curiosity."

"Old stuff, maybe, but still effective," says Meyers.



Forlorn White Nag Advertised "Black Beauty"

From A. S. Kolsted, manager of the Rialto theatre, Hood River, Ore., comes a story of how "Black Beauty" was put over to satisfactory business by what Mr. Kolsted labels as the best and cheapest exploitation he has ever pulled.

The Rialto had "Black Beauty" booked for two days. Prior to the opening Manager Kolsted rented the oldest, most forlorn-looking, broken-down white nag that could be found in Hood River, and after placing on him a sign that covered some of the animal's protruding ribs and announced that "This is not Black Beauty," etc., sent the steed parading about the city as a ballyhoo.

Mr. Kolsted reports that many people didn't take time to read all of the sign and would jeer at the man who led the animal about, thereby providing an opportunity for a proper comeback.

Mr. Kolsted was able to arrange for the schools to be dismissed early, and in consequence ran a special matinee that was largely patronized.

Novelty Herald and How to Get It

Fred Greene, Paramount Exploiteer, Uses New "Lane That Had No Turning" Stunt

THE Missouri theatre, St. Louis, wanted to pull a novel herald stunt, so they wired Fred Greene, Paramount exploiteer in New York, to develop something there.

Greene went to the leading metropolitan hotels such as the Claridge, the McAlpin, and others, and sold them a proposition to provide picture post cards of the buildings, interiors and the like.

Most of the hotels had a supply on hand and were eager to distribute them. The McAlpin thought so highly of the proposition that they made up a special set.

Greene accumulated in all 12,000 post cards from six different hostelries, any one of which would have willingly supplied the entire amount.

These were shipped to St. Louis, where the theatre addressed them from the mailing list and put the following message:

"Staying at this hotel and strongly recommend it to you when you come to New York. Saw 'The Lane That Had No Turning' last night. It's a Paramount Picture which means it's the best show in town. Don't miss it when it comes to St. Louis. Ed."

When Greene received these he dumped them in the mail box and two days later the St. Louis post office had an awful mob.

It can be worked from the large cities by an agent or your local hotels can tie up to advertise their grills and banquet rooms.

It's a chance to make somebody else pay for your heralds.

Street Car Ballyhoo Used for "Four Horsemen"

E. Forrest Young, publicity director of the Rialto and Majestic theatres, Louisville, Ky., stirred up overflow business at the latter house on "The Four Horsemen." The first broadside was a special street car all plastered with paper and cut-outs which was a big puller because it is the first time in 15 years that the local electric railway folks have allowed this stunt! Very careful house to house circularizing of the whole city proved profitable, and his 6 column-10 newspaper ads, broke local records on theatre matter as the rule has been about 2 column-5. An augmented orchestra and a soloist from New York contributed to the success of the engagement.

Distributes Blotters as "Over the Hill" Exploitation

DISTRIBUTION of blotters was a form of exploitation used by the Sigma theatre, Massilon, Ohio, in the campaign on "Over the Hill."

Three thousand blotters were printed and distributed among the banks, schools and business offices of the town. Others were left each day at the local postoffice and at public places which a large portion of the city's residents visit frequently.

Loew's Theatre, Ottawa Turns Lobby Into Book Store

FOLLOWING the presentation of "The Sheik" at the Loew theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, the management of the theatre placed the book, from which the picture was taken, on sale in the lobby of the theatre. The theatre conducts its own candy store and newsstand in the lobby and, after the feature had made such a hit, copies of the book were displayed and advertised for sale during subsequent weeks.

Clever Newspaper Tie-up on "A Connecticut Yankee"

"A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" was given unusually effective exploitation at the Woods theatre, Chicago, by virtue of a clever tie-up with the Children's Department of the Chicago Journal. As a result more than 25 columns of free space have been devoted by the newspaper to the unique idea.

An organization known as the Junior Club was originated by the Journal many months ago. Its purpose has been to instill the junior readers with various educational thoughts from time to time. The management of the Woods theatre conceived the idea that, by making the Junior Club an offer of free Saturday morning performances, much beneficial publicity would follow in the Journal. Accordingly, beginning with the first Saturday of the indefinite run, the members of the club whose initials began with A and B were admitted free of charge to the morning showing, the next Saturday the C and D names were admitted and so on down the alphabet.

The newspaper delegated its so-called Senior to care for the children who attended unescorted and gave the event widespread publicity. The children who attended were then entitled to enter the essay contest on the life and works of Mark Twain. The Journal offered the prizes, which consisted of copies of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

Many of the Chicago newspaper were induced to run editorial advocacy of a more general use of library cards, and followed this up with lists of new volumes in the Chicago libraries—heading the list with Mark Twain's books, and in turn heading these with "A Connecticut Yankee."

FIRST NATIONAL

Her Mad Bargain—

The title, more than any other feature, drew good crowds, although the picture itself was pronounced good by patrons. (Middle West.)

The popularity of this star on wane at this house and business poor. (East.)

Fairly entertaining and good as a box office attraction. (West.)

Molly O—

On its third week here and still going good. (West.)

Originally booked for one week, the picture now is on its third week and still playing to good crowds. (Middle West.)

The Lotus Eater—

Exceptionally fine attraction. Did better than average business. (Middle West.)

The Invisible Fear—

Fair—not so strong with us, however. (Middle West.)

R. S. V. P.—

Not up to the usual Ray standard, but combined with Johnny Hines in "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" did fair business and we are holding the two features over for a second week. (Middle West.)

Greater Than Love—

Louise Glaum is a favorite in this city and the picture was of a type enjoyed by patrons of this house. Business excellent. (East.)

Hail the Woman—

One of Ince's most powerful productions. Characters well handled. Good business. (Middle West.)

Dinty—

On second run picture did better business than secured by quite a run of other second run features. Men and children especially attracted. (Middle West.)

The Child Thou Gavest Me—

Just broken about even on this picture on its second run. (Middle West.)

METRO

Peacock Alley—

Picture judged a gorgeous one with a gorgeous star but not a big drawing card. Star not generally popular. Cold weather judged to have affected first half of week after which business grew better. (Middle West.)

Fair picture. Good box office attraction. (Middle West.)

Big audience picture. Business fine during opening week, with fair opening and increasing every day. Going to hold it over a second week. (Middle West.)

The Conquering Power—

An excellent drawing card. Despite unusually cold weather for the week, the picture did a good business. (Middle West.)

Very pleasing feature which the popularity of Rudolph Valentino helps to put over big at this house. (Middle West.)

Alias Ladyfingers—

An entertaining picture with good box office attracting powers. Personal appearance of Bert Lytell help to bring them in. (East.)

The Fourteenth Lover—

Peppy picture of the kind that makes Viola Dana, the star, grow in favor. Well received. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Don't Get Personal—

Snappy picture that caught the passersby with the stills and drew them into the house. Business good all week. (Middle West.)

Fair as regards both picture and business. (West.)

The Guttersnipe—

Good program picture that will amuse generally. Increasing demand for Miss Walton's pictures. (Middle West.)

The Leather Pushers—

As an added attraction made a very strong program which pulled big business. (Middle West.)

TERRITORIAL SALES AND PURCHASES

In the Independent Field

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

Amalgamated Franchise for Bob Savini

CLOSELY following the recent decision of Warner's New York exchange, which holds the franchise for Amalgamated Pictures for that territory, to release the first two of the series of co-star productions, "Ashes" and "Any Night," at the same time, and the list of the big New York houses that would show them, comes the announcement of Franklin E. Backer that two more franchises have been granted frmly established independent exchanges east of the Mississippi.

The solid south goes to Robert Savini. Savini Films, Inc., of Atlanta, will handle the distribution of the Amalgamated company's product, which will cover the states of Georgia, Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Alabama and Florida. The Federated Film Exchange, of Baltimore, is the franchise holder for Amalgamated productions in Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

New Second Nat'l Release

"Her Story," With Madge Titheradge, Follows "David and Jonathan"

SECOND National Pictures Corporation, 140 West 42nd Street, New York City, announces "Her Story," written and directed by Dion Titheradge, as the second release of twelve productions to be offered exhibitors in the course of the coming season. The first, "David and Jonathan," picturization of E. Temple Thurston's popular novel, was released last month.

Madge Titheradge, who achieved a notable success on the speaking stage in New York as star of "The Butterfly on the Wheel," is featured in "Her Story," which was written for her especially by her brother, who directed the production. It is said to be an unusual picture in many respects, one of the most notable of which is provided by unique speaking titles. It deals with the experience of a millionaire steel man's wife placed in a startlingly compromising position through no fault of her own, who tells the true story of her life in an effort to offset a sensational account of the affair in the newspapers.

Other photodramas scheduled for early release by Second National are "The Night Riders," a story of mystery and adventure in the Northwest by Ridgewell Cullum, featuring Maudie Dunham, Albert Ray and Andre Beaulieu; "Brenda's Heritage," a story of life on a barge canal and in a home of wealth, featuring Marjorie Villis, James Knight and Bernard Dudley, and "Mr. Pim Passes By," visualization of the immensely popular whimsical novel by A. A. Milne.

Seventeen prominent exchanges in all parts of the country have obtained franchises from Second National Pictures Corporation, which also has established several branch exchanges of its own. Many applications for franchises have been received since the plans of the corporation were made known, and "David and Jonathan" was launched at the first release.

Ben Wilson Producing New Kyne Series

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, is in receipt of information from Ben Wilson that work has been started on "Back to Yellow Jacket," the second of a series of Peter B. Kyne Ben Wilson productions to be distributed by Arrow.

Peter B. Kyne, Arrow points out, is one of the most widely read and popular writers of the present day. The film version of "Kindred of the Dust" is just being released by First National and Mr. Kyne is just starting a new series of short stories in the Cosmoplitan Magazine with the March issue. He is also a frequent contributor to the Saturday Evening Post and many other of our most popular fiction magazines. All of his stories, which have been picturized, have proven unusually strong box-office magnets and "Back to Yellow Jacket" should prove equally popular.

New Sport Review Is "Self Defense"

The latest issue of Goldwyn's one-reel Sport Review, edited by Grantland Rice, produced by Jack Eaton and distributed by Goldwyn through an arrangement with Artclass Pictures Corporation, is one of the most valuable in this series of short films yet produced, states Goldwyn. It is called "Self Defense." It graphically illustrates some of the mighty wallops and knock-out blows of ring champions, showing them first at ordinary projection speed and then as revealed in detail by the slow-speed camera.

In wrestling the toe-hold, the half-Nelson, the full-Nelson, the hammerlock, the body scissors, the head scissors and the now barred front and back strangle hold are revealed in detail through the ordinary and the slow-motion cameras.

"Impulse" Is Neva Gerber's Third

Arrow Film Corporation announces that the third Ben Wilson—Neva Gerber production "Impulse" is shortly to be released. The picture is said to be Neva Gerber's most ambitious effort and is based upon heart interest story.

"What the Week Brought Forth"

By Matthew A. Taylor

IN this week's issue, on page 1028, the Motion Picture News carries a review of Alexander Film's Sherlock Holmes pictures. The old sleuth of Baker street is apparently as fascinating on the screen as he ever was in those well thumbed books. It is gratifying to note the way Alexander Film is going about putting over this series in a way that will be a practical aid for the exhibitor. The interest in the stories has been reborn with the syndicated publication throughout the United States. Mr. Alexander also has prepared as one of his many exhibitor aids, spoken prologues which will precede the pictures. There will be a special matinee for the trade in a New York theatre shortly, when three of the subjects and their prologues will be shown.

* * * * *

Three former executives of Famous Players-Lasky are on the list of officers of a new concern incorporated this week under the name of Di Lorenzo, Inc., for the purpose of distributing motion pictures on the state right market. The new concern states that it has already negotiated a three-year contract for twelve features a year and other contracts are said to be pending which will double this number of releases. Joseph di Lorenzo is president of the corporation. J. P. Burrows is vice president, and H. J. Jantzer is treasurer. W. Hughes Curran heads the production unit, and the first six pictures will star Guin (Big Boy) Williams. The first is to be released February 15.

* * * * *

Big things are expected from Joe Schnitzer, of Equity Pictures. Booking "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" in the Criterion theatre at Forty-fifth street and Broadway, is the pleasantest little surprise he has sprung on the trade in some time. The advent of an independent production in a Broadway house for an indefinite run should give an impetus to independent production, and strengthen the confidence of every state right man in the industry.

Novel Plot Structure in "Jungle Goddess"

In the making of the new Selig wild animal serial, "The Jungle Goddess," three distinct villains are met with and disposed of in the course of the plot which takes its players across three continents.

This new departure in chapter-picture making was a novel idea of the Colonel's used, it is said, to do away with the improbable situations usually confronted in episode dramas because of the necessity of having the same villain trail the hero and heroine throughout the fifteen chapters.

"Love Slave" Star May Visit America

Persistent rumors regarding an early visit to America of the emotional star, Lucy Doraine, add interest to her latest screen vehicle in this country, "The Love Slave," presented by Herz Film Corporation and released in the independent field by the Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc.

"The Love Slave" is a Sascha production and the second Lucy Doraine picture to be shown here, the first being "Good and Evil," from the same studios.

Galaxy of Stars Signed for Edwin Carewe Production

A STARTLING announcement of new stars whose picture will be released through the independent market is made this week by C. C. Burr on Affiliated Distributors, who states that the Edwin Carewe Pictures Corporation, of which he is an officer, has contracted for the services of a galaxy of stars which includes the names of some of the biggest screen players of to-day.

The report of this newest independent production effort will be hailed with enthusiasm throughout the independent field, especially so when the independent adherents learn that the following notable stars have contracted with the Edwin Carewe Pictures Corporation for their combined efforts.

The following telegram from B. P. Fineman, in charge of production, tells the story: "Have definitely closed with Kenneth Harlan, Alice Lake, Gaston Glass, Rosemary Theby, Noah and Wallace Beery. Everybody here of the opinion this cast has tremendous selling value. During my career in production field this group of players takes first prize for drawing power and ability."

Kenneth Harlan is considered one of the finest leading men in the profession. He has just finished a series of First National pictures, playing opposite Constance Talmadge, and it is only because of a special arrangement that it was possible to secure his services to head this unusual cast.

Next on the list is Alice Lake, who for the past year, has starred in Metro pictures. Her rise from playing opposite Roscoe Arbuckle in two reel comedies to stardom is sufficient proof of her talent. Notable among the productions in which she was recently starred by Metro were "The Misfit Wife," "Body and Soul" and "Should a Woman Tell?"

Gaston Glass made his big hit as the boy in "Humoresque," and has since played opposite Viola Dana and Shirley Mason, just finished the featured role in "The Song of Life," produced by John Stahl for First National release, and has risen to stardom in "Cameron of the Royal Mounted," now being released by Hodkinson.

Rosemary Theby needs little introduction to exhibitors. During the past two years, she appeared in ten special productions including "A Connecticut Yankee" and "Kismet," and has been first choice of the public in the "most popular woman type."

Noah Beery made his big hit with Douglas Fairbanks in "The Mark of Zorro," also prominently cast by Marshall Neilan in "Go and Get It," "Bob Hampton of Placer," with Nazimova in "The Red Lantern," Metro's "The Sea Wolf," in the star role "The Sage Brusher," for Hampton, starred by Metro in "The Mutiny of the Elsinore" and cast by Cecil De Mille in "The Whispering Chorus" and "The Squaw Man."

His brother, Wallace Beery, has been appearing in pictures for ten years and his best known work was evidenced in "Victory," "The Last of the Mohicans," "Romany Rye," "The Round Up," "The Unpardonable Sin," "The Golden Snare," "Behind the Door," and "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

Photoraphy will be in charge of Bob Curly, who has been associated with Carewe for the past three years. He was given special recognition for his camera work in "Isobel," and "Rio Grande."

Associated also with C. C. Burr and B. P. Fineman in the Edwin Carewe Pictures Corporation, are William Lackey and Benny Zeidman, who previously was vice-president and general manager of the Mildred Harris Chaplin Company, releasing through First National and manager of production for Mary Pickford in "Through the Back Door," and "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

Edwin C. Carewe, after whom the corporation has been named, and who is well known as the director of "Isobel," with House Peters and Jane Novak, "The Snow Bird" and "White Raven" for Metro and "Playthings of Destiny" with Anita Stewart for First National, is director in charge of production.

This formidable combination of a big cast, big story, big director, and the big men behind it, insures the independent exhibitor of pictures that will go over big, it is stated.

In an interview concerning this scoop for the independent market, C. C. Burr said: "This is such a feature that by the very quality of its whole makeup, by the sincerity of purpose behind its distribution, by the special endeavor in both production and distribution will make it a special production in the accepted sense. It will truthfully mark a new milestone in building up a market that will allow the independent exchange to stay independent and prosper. No financially unsound interests, no arbitrary attitudes of prices, no forcing of unjust franchises will live with the competition of such pictures.

"Those who fight for the life of the independent market must necessarily lose heavily in proportion to the sacrifice made, by letting slip by the chance of holding a real big picture for the national distributing companies. They must necessarily lose the additional chance of placing their product in the subsidized theatres to a large extent. On the other hand, such a policy, it is felt, will awaken the confidence among exhibitors for the independent exchanges which it is our ultimate and final desire to build up.

"If the motion picture industry is to be an open forum for all who make, distribute and show good films, then the independent fight must be carried on with fairness and good intent within the independent ranks, during the coming year.

"There is one way out and one only. Good pictures must be made and rational and reasonable profits must satisfy us all. Personally, I cannot conceive of any proof of a producer's sincerity of purpose in combating the present condition that menaces us, than to put his whole self and the supreme efforts of his organization into the makin of a real big photoplay.

"'Burn 'Em Up Barnes' has proved from its record, I think, that it has been our own contribution to the fight and this new Carewe picture with its galaxy of stars is the second.

"Affiliated will release another Carewe picture and two more pictures featuring Johnny Hines this year, which will be released to the independent exchanges, and as long as the market proves worthy of our efforts and can absorb our output promptly, we will continue to produce for independent release. Our experience with 'Burn 'Em Up Barnes' gave us great confidence in the independent market. The exchanges paid promptly, put our picture over in a big way, and evidently made some real money for themselves. They should be able to handle our next picture and make proportionately more for our price remains the same, but the picture is a bigger attempt. It is our aim to make money for our customers and build a permanent business, but where we find these exchanges buying poor pictures at foolish exploited prices, so that they cannot absorb our buying cheap productions that do not reflect credit on the exchange or our pictures and trying to use our pictures as a club to make the exhibitor buy the crap, we will have to find a new client in that respective territory.

"In order to prove we are worthy, and build up confidence we offer our picture at a low price to the exchanges giving them a copy of story, and telling them the cast and director. This is all a national distributor knows when he starts on a picture, so our franchise holders are placed in the same class. If the exchange prefers to wait until the picture is finished—and some of them do—they must pay after exploitation whatever the market says is fair, namely, all we can get.

"On 'Burn 'Em Up Barnes,' the Skirbolls in Ohio, Columbia in Pittsburgh, Louis Hyman in California, Roy Seery in Chicago, and M. A. Klausner in Denver, had such confidence that they gambled in 'Barnes,' got it very cheap and cleaned up. We only wish it could have been an even bigger picture, so that they could have made more.

"And we hope that on future pictures, the confidence we had created will spread to all the exchanges so that they will all make the same profit on our product."

Trained Bugs Act in New Series

A decided novelty is shortly to be introduced by the Pacific Film Company of Culver City, according to an announcement made by John J. Hayes, president of the company. The series will be known as Uneducational Comedies and will consist of six single reel subjects with trained bugs as actors. Frints of the first two of the series have been shown to Coast Exchange owners and resulted in bookings being made in the largest downtown first run theatres of both San Francisco and Los Angeles.

"Four Seasons" Sold for United Kingdom

Announcement was made this week that rights for "The Four Seasons" for the United Kingdom had been disposed of by the Kineto Company of America to Interest Films, Ltd.

H. J. Shepard acted for Kineto in arranging the transaction, and R. J. Pugh and Ben F. Howells acted for Interest Films, Ltd.

"Wandering Boy" at Criterion

Equity Feature Booked for Broadway House Beginning Feb. 5

WHAT constitutes a genuine scoop in the independent field is the news of the booking of Equity's "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight" into the Criterion theatre on Broadway at 44th st., by Hugo Riesenfeld, director of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatres.

"The selection of this picture for the Criterion," states Equity, "marks a new mile stone in the affairs of the independent field and shows clearly that independents can make just as big winners as the best of the regular producing and distributing organizations. But it goes further than that. It proves convincingly that the independent producers are getting closer to the pulse of the trade, with their ears closer to the ground, and are giving the exhibitors throughout the entire country that type of sure fire winner box office attractions that mean real money. Listed in this same class are such independent sure fire pictures as 'Why Girls Leave Home,' 'School Days,' and others of this type.

"Here are pictures that get down to earth, that go straight to the very heart of the motion picture business especially in its present standing and condition. Here are pictures with the box office titles that guarantee profitable exhibition in any and every community. The accomplishment of winning the preferential booking at the Criterion with all of the big competitive pictures now on the market gives no little satisfaction to the officials of Equity but to the producers of the pictures as well."

Elaborate plans are said to be under way for the staging of "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight" at the Criterion. Mr. Riesenfeld has in preparation at this writing a musical accompaniment, and an entirely novel and original prologue will be given.

A huge billboard campaign now in effect on 24 sheet stands covering Greater New York, started as a teaser, has been changed into direct advertising value by the simple addition of a six sheet cross top dater that can be seen and read many blocks away.

A special newspaper advertising campaign started this mid-week flashes the message of "My Wandering Boy" to all the four corners of Manhattan and environs. For the opening of the picture a very elaborate multi-colored print will be used, in which many of the beautiful photographic shots will be greatly enhanced in value.

As the Criterion is one of Broadway's best known theatres, and with the campaign backing up this picture, the run at the Criterion should prove of splendid proportions.

"Of one thing we may all be sure," says Equity, "and that is that this showing of 'Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight' will set a great many of the regular producing and distributing organizations thinking and thinking hard and perhaps instead of now leading the procession in big winning box office pictures, they may and undoubtedly will encounter stiffer competition as time goes on and as the independent field grows and progresses."

Further Sales on "His Nibs"

"Chic" Sale Feature is Sold to St. Louis and Detroit Exchanges

L. L. HILLER, the President of "His Nibs" Syndicate, Inc., has notified the Exceptional Pictures Corporation, producers of "His Nibs," that he has completed negotiations by which the Exhibitors Direct Service Exchange, of St. Louis, Mo., will show the feature at each of thirty theatres affiliated with the Exchange.

This transaction was consummated by Mr. Hiller and Sidney J. Baker, the general manager of the Exhibitors Direct Service Exchange. This exchange is said to be unique in the film industry, for it is the only exchange that is owned, controlled and operated by a local body of theatre owners, who are endeavoring to give their patrons features of the highest type. Through this cooperation they are able to choose the pictures they believe to be unusually entertaining, and so insure their patrons of always seeing a first-class show.

The following are the theatres and owners affiliated with the Exhibitors Direct Service Exchange: M. S. Schulter, Ashland theatre; S. Kaimann, Baden theatre; Rex Amusement Co., Broadway-Family theatres; John Kirzin, Casino; Fred Wehrenberg, Cherokee; Thos. James, Comet; W. O. Reeve, Eighteenth Street; R. A. Stierlin, Fairy; Fred N. Hoelzer, Ivory; Jos. Kotnik, McNair; McKinley Amusement Co., Majestic; Frank Spero, Marquette; W. O. Reeve, Maryland; Fred Wehrenberg, Melba; Mrs. M. G. Bourne, New Liberty; Ferd Warner, North Grand; S. Kaimann, O'Fallon; L. C. Hehl, Ozark; Rex Amusement Co., Peerless; Chas. W. Werner, Queens; S. Horwich, Red Wing; John H. Gentner, Retina; C. E. Efthim, Star; S. Sigoloff, Union; Ferd Warner, Zelphia; S. J. Baker.

Mr. Hiller also announces that in addition to signing contracts for the showing of "His Nibs" over the circuit of Butterfield theatres in Michigan, he has disposed of the rest of the Michigan territory to Mr. Wm. Hurlburt, of the Favorite Film Company, Inc., of Detroit.

Louise Lovely to Make Personal Appearances

Louise Lovely, who is featured with Roy Stewart in "Life's Greatest Question," the George H. Davis-Joe Brandt feature production, will appear personally in conjunction with the showings of the picture in a limited number of the big houses.

Starting Sunday, February 12th, "Life's Greatest Question" has been booked for a first run at the Strand Theatre, in San Francisco, at which time Miss Lovely will also appear throughout the engagement.

Aywon Reports Sales

Aywon Film Corporation announces the sale of six "Big Boy" Williams pictures, three Snowy Baker pictures, and "The Master of Beasts" to the Premier Pictures Corporation of Charlotte, N. C., for the territory of North and South Carolina.

Pacific Film Reports Territorial Sales

JOHN J. HAYES, president of Pacific Film Company, announces the sale of "The Forest King," "The Girl From Rocky Point" and "Able-Minded Lady," all five-reel features, to the South Western Film Corporation of Dallas, Texas, for the states of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. The sale was made by E. H. Silcox, sales manager of the company, who is now making a tour of the country.

The sales for Greater New York and northern New Jersey for the same subjects are also reported. This territory was purchased by the Arena Film Company, of 729 Seventh Avenue, the sale being made by Julius Singer, manager of the New York office of the Pacific Film Company, now located in the Godfrey Building.

Clinton M. White Joins Lee and Bradford

Clinton M. White has resigned from the Arrow Film Corporation where, for more than a year, he was one of their special representatives, to become sales manager for the Lee-Bradford Corporation.

Mr. White will shortly start on a trip to the key cities to put on special first-run presentations of the super-feature, "Determination," which will then be offered to the independent buyers for the various territories. While no publicity has been given out on "Determination," the picture had its premier presentation at Tom Moore's Garden theatre, Washington, D. C., where for two weeks it played to exceptionally good business.

Although less than a year old, Lee-Bradford have made considerable progress in the independent field and in addition to "Determination" they are offering "The Unconquered Woman," a Northwest feature starring Rubye de Remer; "Cloudburst," a sensational race-track story; "Flesh and Spirit," a highly dramatic feature, and a series of three dramas, each different in theme, starring Josephine Earle.

Carnival Comedies Sold

Carnival Comedies were sold this week to the American Feature Film Company of Boston by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation. This series of coedies features Polly Moran and "Smiling" Bill Jones.

"The Bootleggers" Ready

The much heralded picture, "The Bootleggers," is here. The Producers Security Corporation announces this new thriller now ready for release. The publicity department has completed the accessories and a remarkable campaign book is just off the press.

HUGO RIESENFELD of the CRITERION
Theatre—Broadway at 44th Street

BOOKS EQUITY'S BIG INDEPENDENT WINNER

"Where is my wandering boy tonight?"

On Sunday, Feb. 5th, at the exclusive CRITERION THEATRE, on Broadway at 44th St., New York City, occurs the World's Premiere of Equity's Big Independent Super Special—"WHERE IS MY WANDERING BOY TONIGHT?"

The presentation will be made under the personal direction of Hugo Riesenfeld, Director-General of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatres, and will include a magnificent prologue and very elaborate musical program, in keeping with the theme, beauty and bigness of the production.

Every exhibitor in America understands the meaning of a world premiere of any picture, irrespective of its producer or its size, when presented for its official opening at THE CRITERION. This is the Theatre that Mr. Riesenfeld uses exclusively for the presentation of the industry's biggest productions. The booking of "WHERE IS MY WANDERING BOY TONIGHT?" into the CRITERION for its world premiere stamps it as being all that the trade knows it to be—the genuine outstanding box office winner for 1922. Watch for further interesting announcements to come from

Second Nat'l. Pictures Sought by Exhibitors

Eager to get in on the ground floor, taking early advantage of the opportunity to book Second National Pictures Corporation productions as they are released, several theatres, according to a statement made by the officers of the concern at 140 West 42nd Street, have made application direct, by wire and long distance telephone, without awaiting the action of branch exchanges. In addition to booking "David & Jonathan," the first release, inquiries have been made regarding forthcoming releases, of which twelve are promised by Second National for the current season.

Kent Associated With Anchor Film

During his sojourn in New York last week Morris R. Schlank, of Anchor Film Distributors of Los Angeles, Cal., appointed John A. Kent as Eastern sales representative for Anchor Film, which will distribute on the state right market. Mr. Kent is well known in the independent field and has a large acquaintance among the independent exchangemen throughout the country.

Anchor is not a new producing company, but a new producing unit has been added, the product of which will be handled by Mr. Kent. After his return from a trip to all the important exchange cities a New York office will be established with John Kent in charge. Anchor Film now has in the course of production a series of five reel sea pictures starring Jack Perrin, a series of five reel race horse features with Peggy O'Day in the stellar role, 26 Alice Howell single reel comedies and other subjects suitable for the requirements of the state right market.

Climax Sells to Jans

H. F. Jans, president and sole owner of Jans Productions, Jans Pictures, Jans Film Service and Jans Enterprises, has just concluded negotiations with the Climax Film Corporations by which the Climax retire from northern New Jersey, relinquishing all of their features, comedies, etc., to Mr. Jans.

Nehls Has New Projects

General Manager of American Film to Offer New Manufacturing Plans

SEVERAL new and large film manufacturing projects are in contemplation by Richard R. Nehls, known to the trade through his activities as general manager of the American Film Company, following a long connection as manager of George Kleine and other film organizations for the past 23 years. No details of Mr. Nehls' plans have yet been announced but it is known that he has recently been spending considerable time on the Coast and a number of rumors have come from Los Angeles of large projects in connection with which his name has been mentioned.

After serving in practically every branch of the industry Mr. Nehls came to the conclusion that with all due allowance for such things as are termed "art," "atmosphere," "temperament" and "inspiration," the film business was subject to tremendous evils, weighted down with "overhead" which would cause any sound-headed business executive from some other field to gasp in amazement.

Quietly and without any hubbub or furore, he set about trying to overcome some, at least, of these evils. He saw no reason why real practical efficiency might not be inaugurated in the manufacture of pictures, just as similar problems have been solved in the production of automobiles or the building and sale of cash registers and typewriters.

Born and educated in Chicago Mr. Nehls is numbered among the real pioneers of picturedom, since as far back as 1899 he was supplying itinerant exhibitors with motion picture projection equipment and such subjects as were then available for screening. From 1907 to 1911 he spent in a managerial capacity with George Kleine and handled the products of 15 foreign manufacturers in the United States, adapting their creations to the needs of the American market.

Since 1911 he has been general manager of the American Film Company, supervising and directing activities not only in the Chicago office but also in the London office from which the export trade is handled, and the Santa Barbara office, where the studios are located.

Critics Praise New Serial

"The Jungle Goddess" Acclaimed by All Trade Paper Reviewers

COL. WM. N. SELIG'S claim that he would make "The Jungle Goddess," the new fifteen-episode wild animal jungle serial which the Export & Import Film Co., Inc., is state righting, his masteriece chapter-picture, has had ample substantiation this week in the extraordinary praise given the thrill-drama by the leading trade paper critics.

John Spargo of Exhibitors' Herald classed "The Jungle Goddess" as "A thriller of thrillers in the way of a wild animal jungle serial." He says, in part, "Probably few of even the wildest flights of fancy by writers of thrillers ever conceived as many or more intricate near death situations as did Agnes Johnston and Frank Dazey in preparing the script from which Col. Selig made 'The Jungle Goddess.' It should prove a lucrative booking attraction."

Roger Ferri of the Moving Picture World is of the same opinion. "If you liked Selig's 'Miracles of the Jungle' or 'The Lost City,'" he states, "you will go wild over 'The Jungle Goddess.' If this serial doesn't make your patrons boost your house nothing else will, for it is one of those episode productions that has a logical plot, plenty of human interest and is literally choked with hair-raising, recklessly sensational stunts in which wild beasts play a most prominent role. There are enough wild animals shown to terrorize the whole country if let loose. 'The Jungle Goddess' establishes a high mark in serials."

Clarence Reid of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS was also optimistic as to the serial's appeal to the public. He says in his review: "Serials have come and gone, will come and go again, but 'The Jungle Goddess' quite surpasses them all when it comes to measuring out thrills by releasing a bunch of wild animal stunts. The spectator is in for open-eyed entertainment. It is a fascinating story and exhibitors are certain to lug their money-bags to the bank after playing it. It is bound to attract the crowd."

"Pageantry of India" an Urban Classic

"Pageantry of India," an Urban Popular Classic now in its second week at the Criterion Theatre, in New York, is a pictured revel in Oriental magnificence. The gigantic work that goes into the preparation of a festival-promenade in India is almost beyond the imagination of our Western minds.

The elephants are groomed and decorated by their "mahouts"; are dressed in the richest trappings—blankets of cloth-of-gold. So, too, with the zebu and the camel and the other animals who have a place in this magnificen t promenade. The rajahs come attired in the richness which the Oriental masters so easily and so well; their solemn dignity expressive of the high regard they have for these festivals, which seem so curiously play-like to the European and American.

"Four Seasons" Showing for Trade

"THE FOUR SEASONS," the four-reel nature classic produced by Raymond L. Ditmars for the Kineto Company of America, and which is being distributed nationally, starting this week, by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, had a magnificent private showing last Saturday in Chicago.

The screening was at the new Apollo Theatre and was attended by scores of prominent civic, educational and society leaders, as well as by Chicago exhibitors.

Branch sales managers of the Hodkinson Corporation, working in conjunction with Kineto, are holding a series of special presentations in all the big cities of the country. A showing similar to the extremely fine one held in the Apollo Theatre was held last week at the University of Cincinnati in Cincinnati, O.

All the prominent theatres in the country are contracting to play this Urban Popular Classic, according to reports from the Hodkinson branches.

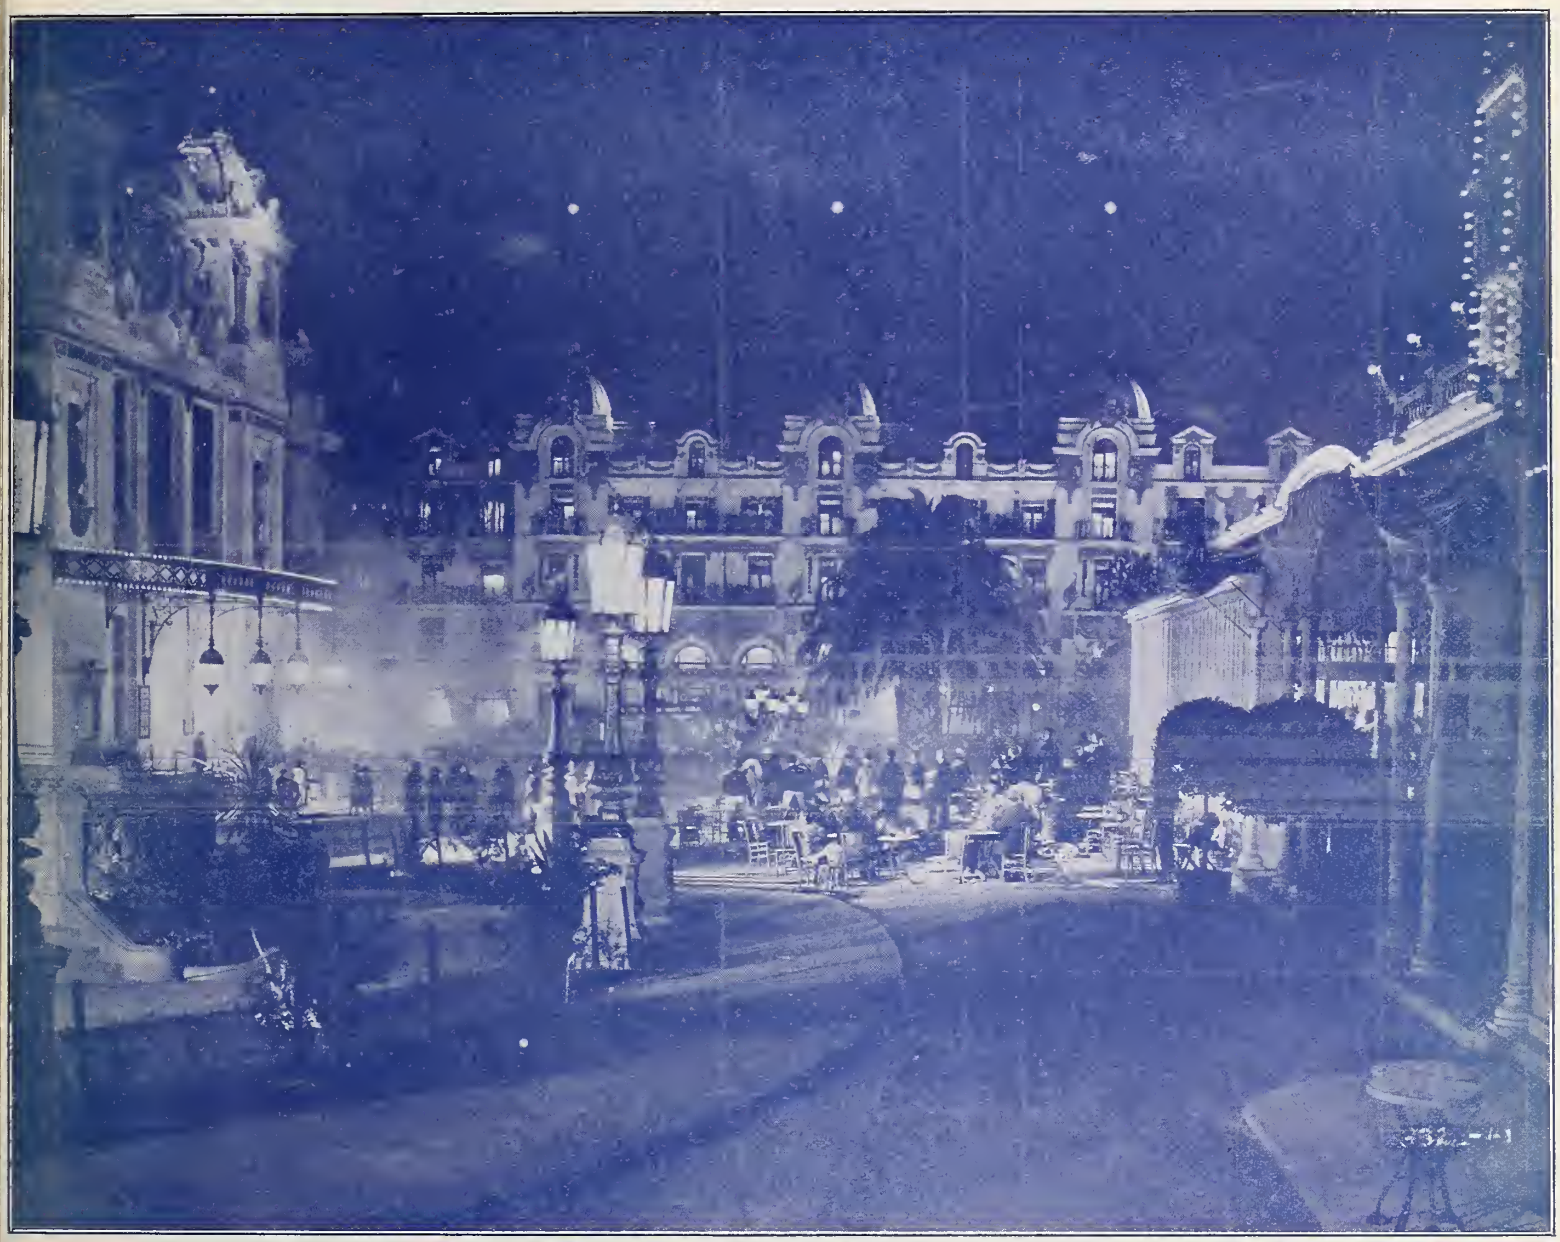
Arrow Advertising is Praised by Exchange

The Advertising Department of the Arrow Film Corporation is in receipt of a letter from Thomas A. Branon, manager of the Eltrabran Film Company, Atlanta, Georgia, in which he praises the current advertising campaign being conducted by Arrow through trade papers on the Eddie Lyons Comedies and the Arrow Comedy Franchise. He states in part, "I notice this splendid advertising in the journals received this week and we have already received several inquiries for the comedies from exhibitors, and I can definitely attribute these inquiries to your ads and the fact that you have announced that we were the distributors of the comedies in this territory."

Prologues to Precede Detective Series

A NOVEL series of prologues to precede the Sherlock Holmes pictures, is promised by William Alexander, president of Alexander Film Corporation, which is releasing the Sir A. Conan Doyle detective stories in America.

While in England recently Mr. Alexander induced the English producers to persuade the noted author to outline a spoken prologue, which might precede each picture. Mr. Alexander had in mind when making the suggestion that sensational business might be created by each of the features if the spirit, if not the characters of each tale could be realized in the flesh by capable players.



The acting prologues are furnished exhibitors as part of the service. Acting talent will be supplied by Alexander Film where desired.

"FOOLISH WIVES"

UNIVERSAL'S $1,000,000 SPECTACLE

THE STORY OF ITS MAKING

"FOOLISH WIVES"

WHY IT COST OVER A MILLION

A MILLION dollars is a lot of money. Before the making of "Foolish Wives" no picture ever cost that much money. But that did not prevent the moving picture industry from talking in million dollar terms. In fact, million dollar terms were so freely used that when at last a real million dollar picture came along it became necessary to give fact and figures and to tell why it was that "Foolish Wives" cost more than a million dollars.

When Erich von Stroheim projected "Foolish Wives" in his mind's eye, he determined to make it the most elaborate, lavish and complete chapter of continental life which had ever been made. He set to work with this end in view, meeting every obstacle as it came up, and overcoming every difficulty of typography, architecture, atmospheric condition and the uncertain human quality.

In the first place, "Foolish Wives" required an immense amount of detailed research work in order that there should not be a single flaw in this American reproduction of Europe's most lavish pleasure ground, Monte Carlo. Hundreds of books containing plates and informative material were brought from Paris and Monte Carlo and eagerly studied by the Production Department before any of the sets or properties were ordered. The configuration of Universal City, miles and miles away from the seacoast, made it necessary to construct the front of the buildings there and the backs at Monterey, California, the outline of whose coast approximated in a marvelous degree the characteristic coast line of the Bay of Nice. The cost of the sets at Monterey alone were over $160,000, and it was necessary to transport the entire company, an army of artisans, extras and electricians, 800 people in all, with all the sun arc paraphernalia which the moving picture colony of California boasts, before the Production Manager effect the acme of realism and gave the order to "strike" these palatial sets. It was here that the unique pigeon shooting scenes were taken and the scenes of the Count's villa overhanging the bay. It was in these sets, too, that San Francisco's four hundred disported themselves as extras in a Monte Carlo fete which added immensely to the realistic quality which runs throughout the picture.

The fronts of these sets, including the Casino, the Cafe de Faris, and the Hotel de Paris, were built in a rectangle on the back lot at Universal City. The construction alone of these tremendous sets occupied four months. Every cornice and architectural feature of the original was perfectly imitated by the Universal City artisans; all of the street lamps used were "practical" except that their voltage was twice as powerful as required in the original. Universal City for the first time in its career went into the railroad business in order to carried out with the most minute constructed a trolley line, an exact duplicate of the Monte Carlo trolley.

In accomplishing an exact realism for the front and back of the sets it often became necessary to go to very expensive lengths in creating the proper backgrounds. For instance, in order to represent a view of Monte Carlo from the sea, it became necessary to have majestic rows of cypress trees to partially conceal the pretentious structures, as viewed from the Mediterranean. To effect this illusion, eighty cypress trees were transplanted bodily from Del Monte to Monterey. Twenty thousand square feet of "practical" lawn were also transplanted from the front lawn of the studio to the back ranch, where the huge Monte Carlo sets had been built. Every bit of interior decoration, from the gilding of the huge gambling room down to the proper monogramming of silverware, napery and stationery, was attention to detail and fidelity to the original.

Another tremendous expense of "Foolish Wives" was the fact that a large portion of it was shot at night, when it required a tremendous amount of artificial illumination to light up the huge sets. In this work every sun arc lamp in California was used for weeks at a time. And, as everybody in the picture business knows, burning daylight can't hold a candle to burning arc light when the little old overhead is to be considered.

The production of "Foolish Wives" has actually cost $1,103,736.38. The preparation of story, cast, sets, effects, gowns, costumes and uniforms, properties which are correct and authentic to the minutest detail, and the actual "shooting" of scenes covered a period of time from July 12th, 1920, to June 18th, 1921.

From this date on, Mr. von Stroheim personally assembled and put into continuity the story as he had conceived it, which resulted in the cutting down of 320 reels (320,000 feet of film) to thirty-two reels, later reduced to 10,000 feet by Arthur D. Ripley.

The number of people actually employed as "atmosphere" at different times amounted to fifteen thousand.

The sets alone cost almost half a million. But when one stops to consider what they represent in time and effort and how genuinely they represent what they are supposed to represent, one is amazed that they could be obtained even for that price.

After looking at this marvel of the screen, one can only gasp at the power of the screen and the sheer audacity of the creator of "Foolish Wives" in attempting to reproduce Europe's most individual masterpiece of art and pleasure.

One can only marvel, too, at the financial security of a moving picture company which made a million dollar picture at such a time as this without mortgaging the future, or in any way impairing its operations in other directions.

Marvelous, too, is the courage of its president, Carl Laemmle, in releasing "Foolish Wives" as an exhibitor picture instead of "road showing" it or playing it in legitimate houses, where it had the possibility of returning him twice as much actual money as he will ever realize on it from exhibitors.

NATHAN ASCHER Says: "It is

"'FOOLISH WIVES' is the greatest picture I ever saw. I came to pick flaws in it, but could not find even one. It is perfect. In all my life this is the first picture I ever went out to buy myself. I never was happier than when I booked it for my ROOSEVELT THEATRE in Chicago. And never in my life have I given any picture such unqualified endorsement."

WIVES" Universal Super Jewel by and with Von Stroheim

HOW I WOULD PUT THE PICTURE OVER

By Will Page

THE keynote of the whole campaign should be dignity. "Foolish Wives" is not a stunt picture. It would be extremely foolish to undertake a series of stunts which might tend to cheapen it in the public's estimation. The picture draws the best class of people in New York. A long line of limousine cars bring fashionable patrons every night to the Central theatre, far more than for any picture of recent years. This is because by some undercurrent of thought or suggestion women of the better class are interested in this picture and know that it has a smart society atmosphere.

"Foolish Wives" is a picture that will appeal especially to women, and for that reason a speeial campaign designed to interest women is the best display medium to exploit the picture. In this connection special attention should be paid to women's elubs. In every community there is always an organization of the more intellectual type of women who are probably affiliated with the National Federation of Women's Clubs. If the presidents of these clubs can be invited to a private showing it is almost a certainty that each of them will recommend the pieture as worthy of interest to all of their members. For the first public presentation in each city it seems highly desirable to have the best known club women and leaders of advanced thought to occupy the boxes. If some of these prominent elub women could be induced to write letters expressing their approval of the picture, these letters should be prominently reproduced (by permission) in the loeal newspapers and displayed on posters in front of the theatre.

A good feature in which to interest club women in "Foolish Wives" is to point out the fact that it is high time Ameriean women wake up to the folly of going to Europe merely to be dazzled and fascinated by titles of nobility owned by scions of ancient families who put on frills and furbelows that are offensive to all honest Americans who have red blood in their veins. We have had so many unfortunate international marriages and so many beautiful American women who have been made unhappy by the lure of foreign titles that it is about time that foolish American women realize that the best place for them is home.

There are many other angles which can be worked. One is the fact that gambling, whieh is exploited as the great evil of Monte Carlo in this picture, is a fascinating subject even for those who don't gamble. People who have read about roulette and the enormous sums won and lost at Monte Carlo will be greatly interested in knowing how it is done, even though they may never have gambled a single dollar. For this reason it might be possible in many 'cases—if local censorship doesn't prevent—to place in the lobby of the theatre a real roulette wheel, with an attendant who will spin the wheel and the ball at intervals after the fashion at Monte Carlo. Probably not ten persons in a thousand have ever seen a roulette whcel in operation, because gambling is practically a lost art at the present time in Ameriea owing to church influences.

At the same time there is something romantic and fascinating in knowing how roulette was played before reform suppressed it. It might be possible to secure from the local chief of police a roulette wheel which might have been seized in some raid several years ago, and which might still be in the property room of police headquarters. In any city there are many large department stores that sell a small wheel such as is used in some private homes for amusement only. In case such a lobby display is prepared banners or three-sheets should announce that this is the way the game is played at Monte Carlo. Get some stout, elderly gentleman to spin the wheel, acting as the croupier. Most of them in Monte Carlo are elderly bald-headed gentlemen with pointed beards.

A touch of local color could be added by having two attendants dressed in the uniform of French gendarmes, with white cork helmets, such as are worn at Monte Carlo. They could stand at each side of the table. Or perhaps the Chief of Police could detail special officers to be present to watch the table and to prevent the spectators from actual gambling—a temptation which might prove irresistible to some people. If the Chief of Police detailed special officers for this purpose it should be worthy of a good story in every local newspaper.

If this display showing the actual roulette wheel in operation is in the theatre lobby for at least twenty-four hours, it will not only attract a great deal of attention but it is sure to lead to an investigation by a delegation of ministers. This will lead to further newspaper stories if they make a protest to the Chief of Police because of such a public demonstration of gambling paraphernalia. If these worthy elergymen could be persuaded to carry their protest to the City Hall, it is a certainty that any mayor who knows the value of personal publicity will order the wheel taken out of the lobby. This will then give the loeal manager an opportunity to come out with a card, signed with his name, explaining his great regret that in his zeal to give publicity to the picture, "Foolish Wives," he had unwittingly given offense to the church-going element. His letter of regret could be published as an advertisement in the paper and he would make new friends by taking such a firm stand against exploiting gambling paraphernalia—although he should carefully point out that since gambling was permitted to be shown in the picture, which had already been passed nationally and by the local censors, he didn't think he was doing anything wrong.

The preliminary advertisements for "Foolish Wives" are all based upon the educational idea of "What Is Love?" Certain advertisements might suggest that since love is the all-compelling motive in the world, what is it that makes some women, under the stress of a great emotion, leave their husbands and commit all kinds of foolish indiscretions, only to come to their senses later and realize that they were wrong? This, however, should be followed by other advertisements, pointing out the folly of being fascinated by foreign titles, and the realization that home is the best place for all Amcrican women.

When the pieture is shown, however, emphasize the bigness of the production—the enormous eost—the size of the scenie settings—and the nature of this marvelous reproduction on the rocky coast of California of the great eity of Monte Carlo in every essential detail. If it had been possible to take the picture in Monte Carlo, the eost of this big Universal production might have been cut to a quarter of a million; but as the Prince of Monaeo was opposed to having any moving pictures taken of his principality, Universal spent $1,104,000 in reproducing the principal buildings, the palaee, the hotels, the Casino de Paris and the public square of the original eity. Engineers spent three months in Monte Carlo taking still photographs and making aecurate measurements of the buildings to be constructed, and securing the actual details of the interior of the Casino, where the gambling takes place. Therefore, the reproductions are absolutely correct in every single point, and this faet should be brought out by catch lines such as "Actual reproduction at a cost of one million dollars of the most famous playground of the world—Monte Carlo—the capital of the World of Chance."

Although "Foolish Wives" is not a stunt picture, there are many ways by which you can attract attention to it without resorting to hokum of the worst type. Universal is supplying an unusual amount of high class accessories with the pieture which may be used very effeetively in building up your eampaign of exploitation. The posters are novel and highly effeetive. They have an appeal which eannot be equalled and which, since posters are your greatest salesmen, will be found invaluable in drawing patrons to your theatre.

It is of special interest to note that almost every one of these posters provides the possibility of a eut-out. Have you ever tried using a poster cut-out on your regular poster stands? Of course, this entails a certain amount of trouble and pre-arrangement with the bill posting company, but used within reason on some of your poster stands, they will attract great attention.

Considerably out of the ordinary are the mile-post strips put out with this pieture upon which are the words: "24 Miles to Foolish Wives" and so on down, mile by mile. With a good supply of these an energetic bill poster can plaster the countryside around your eommunity in a day or so. These mile-post signs form a novel display to people traveling by ear, by auto, interurban or by other means along the out-skirts of your locality. An exploitation idea originated by Mr. R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, and used with great success prior to the opening of "Foolish Wives" at the Central Theatre, New York City, may be adapted to Another dramatic moment in "Foolish Wives"

"FOOLISH Wives" besides being a remarkable demonstration of directorial ability and clever acting is also notable for the many other factors, such as sets, costumes, lighting effects, etc., which entered into its production. And following its completion as a motion-picture production, the problem of its advertising, exploitation and presentation to the public still remained to be coped with. In the following will be shown some of the work that has been entailed in preparing to launch the million-dollar production on the screens of the country.

Lithographs Prepared

To the Morgan Litho organization befell the task of printing the largest assortment of posters in the history of the film industry. These posters involve a striking variety of color schemes, as many as six colors being used in some of the posters. The color combinations are said to be unusually attractive and representative of the spirit and atmosphere of the production itself. There are seven varieties of one-sheets; five three-sheets, two six-sheets, three twenty-four sheets, two half-sheets, and two window-cards.

Tinted Photographs

The showing at the Central theatre, New York, is accompanied by an unusually attractive lobby display made up in part of tinted lobby stills and scenes from the production arranged in glass panels for transparent lighting. This work was done by the Photo-Repro, and though the job itself was an emergency one the results have proved to be excellent. The Photo-Repro made the sets of twenty-four 11 x 14 black-and-white lobby photograph sets—six of each—of 11 x 14 lobby photos in yellow, in amber, green, and red tints; and also the set of twenty-four 8 x 10 black-and-white stills. The lobby photos were squeegee on extra-heavy paper.

Cut-Outs and Novelties

One million cut-out heralds in various color schemes have been prepared by the Monroe Press for the exploitation of "Foolish Wives." These cut-outs are made up in irregular shapes suggested by leading players in the cast or the action and atmosphere of the production. One cut-out follows the shape of von Stroheim's Russian cap used in the picture and is finished off in attractive colors. Each of these novelties embodies pertinent details concerning the production or its players and include striking scenes of the action or the immense Monte Carlo sets found in the picture.

Hand Colored Photos

The Wyonake Publishing Company has turned out an exceedingly attractive group of hand-colored gelatin photographs for "Foolish Wives." They have prepared the 22 x 28 hand-colored, gelatin photographs, three in each set, which make up the natural color lobby-scenes to be used in connection with the Universal production. Another group of natural-color lobby-scenes made by the Wyonake Publishing Company for the picture is the 11 x 14 hand-colored, gelatin photographs. One of the features of the new Universal million-dollar picture is the marvelous night scenes of the Monte Carlo set and the colorful settings in which the action proceeds. These features of the picture are faithfully brought out in these Wyonake hand-colored, gelatin photographs.

Rotogravure Section

Among the most important accessories provided by Universal for the advertising and exploitation of its "Foolish Wives" is the big art rotogravure newspaper magazine section arranged as a special insert for newspapers. This section comprises four pages of art scenes from the production and striking poses of the principals in the cast. The scenes and photographs are artistically arranged on regular newspaper-size stock and can be readily inserted in the local dailies of the exhibitor's town. More than two million of these rotogravure sections have been printed. They constitute probably one of the most attractive accessories ever prepared for a motion picture production. They are entirely the work of the Neogravure Company and represent a distinct achievement in this line of work.

The Neogravure Company has also made a rotogravured herald—6 x 26—which is a highly artistic and attractive product of its kind.

Bill Posting Campaign

The bill-posting campaign in New York City was the work of the Ivan B. Nordhem Co. The campaign, launched in preparation for the premiere of the picture at the Central theatre on Broadway, proved a striking demonstration of efficiency and co-operation. The campaign was of the teaser variety and accordingly demanded frequent changes in the posters shown to the public. The stands—236 in number and situated in prominent places throughout the Metropolitan Boroughs—offered a task of unusual proportions, especially in view of the required frequent changes. However, despite the difficulties presented, complete changes were made within the short space of three days. In following out the teaser plan of poster advertising three changes were made within two weeks' time.

Miss Dupont, leading lady, and Eric Von Stroheim in a scene from "Foolish Wives"

Lobby Display

The elaborate lobby display at the Central theatre consists of 11 large paintings, 3 sets in deep relief, and 2 portraits, one each of Von Stroheim and Miss Dupont in bas relief, was made personally by Kassel of the Kassel Studios, whose work as an artist of such displays is too well known to need any comment here.

It is a task to describe the beautiful color schemes and effects produced in these paintings. Over the street doors leading into the lobby, covering a 16 foot stretch are 4 heads of the Stars, each 40 inches in height set off against a dead black background, giving a striking effect. On either side of entrance is a life size group painting. Inside the lobby are 5 large paintings depicting various scenes of "Foolish Wives" and the Stars. Besides there are 3 unusual novelty sets in deep relief and cut outs. One for instance is Von Stroheim crawling into the window at night with the Casino illuminated in the distance. There are in these sets real curtains, draperies, shutters, windows and vines on the outside buildings true to nature.

Kassel is now at work making elaborate displays for every premiere showing in the United States on "Foolish Wives," and he has also made the special showings at the Central Theatre, on "Conflict," "Nobody's Fool," "Sure Fire," "The Rage of Paris," "The Fox," "Moonlight Follies," "No Woman Knows" and "Outside the Law."

Not only has he made the Universal special displays, but also the premiere showings within the last year in New York and other cities on "The Queen of Sheba," "Connecticut Yankee," "Shame," "Perjury," "Footfalls," "Checkers," "Over the Hill," "Theodora," "The Old Nest," "The Virgin Paradise," "The Three Musketeers," "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

Production's Costumes

Fulfilling a definite and required need of the film producing industry in the West, the Western Costume Company by its continuous expansion of service departments has come to be looked upon by producers as the mecca of photoplay building material; and as such its work in connection with the production of Eric Von Stroheim's "Foolish Wives" for the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. fully demonstrates its position in the industry.

Since the expansion of this firm it has been the intention and desire of Louis L. Burns, the president, and J. E. Parsons, manager, to be more than a mere cog in the wheel in the upbuilding of the industry in the West. From the first the two men found they could be of great aid to producers in supplying information that would tend to improve pictures and make possible correct detail as well as build "atmosphere."

Since the organization of the company in 1913 the business has been materially increased annually as all costumes, properties and wigs have been made and furnished on a rental basis, thus the stock of the company has been increased with the supplying of needs for each production.

The magnitude of the enterprise can be more fully appreciated when it is known that an army of 3,000 could be equipped with all of the accoutrements of war, costumes, shoes, boots, etc., at a few minutes' notice, the only time required being that of collecting the various articles from different storage departments.

Lighting Effects

The lighting effects in "Foolish Wives" are among the most remarkable ever presented on the screen. The great night scenes taken on the Monte Carlo set are the equal of anything of their kind. The Casino and the Hotel de Paris bedecked with thousands of incandescents are a blaze of glory. The interiors of the Casino and the Duke's palatial residence are likewise dazzling in their beautiful lighting effects. The credit of interior lighting effects go largely to the Cooper-Hewitt organization, while the exterior night-scene effects mark another distinct achievement for the Sun-Light Arc.

use in any community. Universal had posters printed bearing the following words: "January 11 Should Be Declared a National Holiday, 'Foolish Wives'." This was used as a teaser poster for a week or so before the regular line of paper on "Foolish Wives."

January 11 was the opening day for the picture. Any exhibitor can have black type posters made along this line, using the date when "Foolish Wives" opens in his particular theatre. For other exhibitors who do not care to go to the expense of having posters made, the slogan can be used in ads, window cards or throwaways with excellent results.

One of the most effective accessories supplied with "Foolish Wives" is a four-page roto-gravure; an elaborate fullsize magazine section with space left for the local paper to imprint its name or mast head and for the theatre to include its name and play date at slight expense. These art sections can be distributed throughout your locality as a part of the regular Sunday paper or of your Saturady paper, in case there is no Sunday edition. Even should the newspaper not wish to tie up with this to the extent of using its own name on the art section, it will not be hard to sell the advertising or distribution manager on the idea to distribute them with the papers for whatever benefit you may offer in the way of increased advertising.

Type Set Ads. "Foolish Wives" permits of unusual effects in carefully prepared type set ads. The advertising campaign as put on in New York for the Central Theatre consisted mainly of colorful and punchful type set ads which not only had drawing power and patron pulling appeal but tended to give a very dignified cast to the exploitation of the picture. Any exhibitor can get the same effects by following the same plan.

For instance: One ad was based on the headline "What is love?" It discussed the mystery of heart reaction and the fact that women will leave their fireside impelled by some mysterious urge and that men will throw their ideals to the winds because of the same mysterious force. This was tied up with Von Stroheim, the most perfect lover of the screen, and who knows the psychology of women. Another ad can be built on the caption, "Lost, a husband!"—with the explanation of how a man falls victim to the adventuresses around Monte Carlo. A third can be on the caption "You couldn't guess in a thousand years," referring to the plot twist at the end of "Foolish Wives," with some copy concerning the exotic setting and plot of this picture. Another can be built around "Hell's Paradise" with descriptive matter concerning the gorgeous, wicked, beautiful, heartless people and life of Monte Carlo.

Exploiting the Title and Theme. When von Stroheim conceived, enacted and directed "Foolish Wives," he did not have in mind simply the pleasure-loving, heedless wife of the envoy to Monaco whose indiscretions with the bogus Count Sergius form the plot of the picture; nor merely the American women lured by the suave gallantry and debonair gayety of foreign noblemen; he had in mind the lure that attracts women, married or otherwise, from their natural surroundings and causes them to forget the true value in her striving to obtain something which appeals to her by its novelty as being desirous; whether it be the smiles of suave adventurers or the hectic gayety and bright-light life. It is this theme that has the greatest appeal for your patrons, men or women. They will come and see what constitutes foolishness in a wife. Many will go with a silent dread lest they recognize their own frailties. By arousing curiosity along these lines you will stimulate the greatest possible appeal among your prospective patrons. These ideas can be utilized by ads based on such captions as "There are one million foolish wives in America." "Have you cut your wisdom teeth?" or "Do you know your husband?"

In using this type of appeal the grandeur of the Monte Carlo scenes and the exquisite beauty of the photography, the startling delineations of the wickedest character ever seen on the screen and the other drawing points which make "Foolish Wives" a masterpiece, must not be forgotten.

Tie-Up. There is an excellent opportunity for exhibitors to tie-up with local merchants in advertising based upon "Foolish Wives." There are several ways of doing this. One is for the exhibitor to make arrangements with his local newspaper to take a page or two pages of advertising space the center of which will be devoted to his own theatre display. The rest of the space be can sell to various local merchants at such prices as are commensurate with the value involved and his own advertising appropriation. Each merchant's ad should be built around the title, "Foolish Wives" as for instance: "Foolish Wives do not realize what they can save by trading at Blank's Dry Goods Store," or "Foolish Wives do not trade at Blank's Dry Goods store—That's why they are foolish," etc. What is done in New York successfully can be done in any city or town successfully. During the opening week of "Foolish Wives" at the Central theatre, New York, one of the leading Broadway restaurants had a "Foolish Wives night." It was announced in advance in the restaurant and in the theatre program and was signalized on the night of the affair by an unusually attractive menu card, bearing data concerning "Foolish Wives," the idea mainly being to attract the theatre goers to the restaurant before or after that particular night's performance.

The "Foolish Wives" idea may also be used in local campaigns such as fire prevention, auto and trolley accident prevention or spring clean-up week. This last has a particular appeal to wives and should get co-operation with the local Board of Health.

Lobby Display. There is no limit to excellent lobby effects possible to "Foolish Wives." In case you can not arrange the roulette lobby effect heretofore, you might rig-up by a small wheel operated by motor backed by a group of cut-outs to give the suggestion of a group of men and women clustered around the roulette table in the Casino at Monte Carlo. Men and women cut-outs may be obtained from the 11x14 lobby cards, if necessary, and the entire group seated in a miniature stage arrangement with startling effects. This will prove an unusual novelty and can be easily set up.

Another idea for a striking lobby effect is to use cut-outs from the lobby cards in small window boxes so lighted to give the effetc of looking in the window at them. The thickness of the box need only be a few inches. The windows can have practical shutters cut out of paper, composboard or even from wood. The posters supply excellent material for lobby cut-outs. In one of the 24 sheet posters the exhibitor will find full length figures of five foolish wives. They may be cut out and set up in strip in the lobby with the Cafe de Paris of Monte Carlo in the background as it is in the poster. Startling head cut outs of von Stroheim may also be obtained from the posters, ranging from small heads in the one's and three sheets to an immense head in one of the 24 sheets. This big head from the 24 sheet can be used for the theatre entrance with startling effects. By having changing lights play upon it, first red, then green, this effect can be considerably heightened.

In case an exhibitor wishes to give an additional colorful touch to his lobby and foyer he can put his ticket-taker and other male attendants in uniform. The uniform suggested is that of the Gendarme at Monte Carlo. This consists of dark blue coat and trousers with a white cork helmet and with fourageres hanging from the left shoulder. This uniform is the same as the Parisian Gendarme uniform except for the cork helmet. It may not be a bad idea to have one, presumably the head usher, dressed in the striking uniform of the Russian cavalry officer as worn by the bogus Count Sergius of the picture. This consists of dark blue riding breeches with broad white stripes down the leg, riding boots, white blouse and white forage cap and a Sam Browne belt. Various medals are worn with this uniform.

Attention of Mr. W.C. Hubbard.

Gentlemen:

Because much of the enthusiastic comment which followed the premier of "FOOLISH WIVES" in New York had to do with the photography and the beautiful lighting effects, I am moved to express my appreciation to you for not only the excellent service rendered by your company, but for your product.

We depended upon Cooper Hewitts for some of the most striking scenes in the picture, and they did not fail us. Interiors and close-ups are always successful in our studios when done with Cooper Hewitt lights.

"FOOLISH WIVES" represents an investment of well over one million dollars, and needless to say, every element which would tend to make it a super-picture was utilized. Cooper Hewitt service and lights were vital among these elements.

Sincerely yours,

THE UNIVERSAL MILLION DOLLAR PRODUCTION

There's A Reason

Jessen's Studio News by Wire

UNIVERSAL

The cast for "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe" includes Harry Myers, as Crusoe; Noble Johnson, as Friday; Josef Swickard as Crusoe's father; Gertrude Claire, as the mother; Gertrude Olmsted, Percy Pembroke, Emmett King and Erin Edwards, who appears as the author, Daniel De Foe, in the prologue.

Neely Edwards has been placed under contract for a series of comedies. His first is "Inheritance Taxi." Gilbert Pratt will direct and Laura La Plant plays the lead.

The stage play "The Top o' the Morning" has been bought for Gladys Walton.

The continuity is being written from Louis Joseph Vance's novel, "The Black Bag," for Herbert Rawlinson.

"Out of the Silent North" will be the next vehicle for Frank Mayo.

Marie Prevost leaves for a visit to New York next week.

Friiz Bruner, formerly Luna Park Zoo superintendent, has been placed in charge of the Universal zoo, and is supervising the animal work for "Stanley in Africa."

In production are "Kissed," with Marie Prevost, under the direction of King Baggott; "Lass o' Lowrie," starring Priscilla Dean under the direction of Hobart Henly; "The Storm," under the direction of Reginald Barker; "Days of Buffalo Bill" (sixth episode) directed by Edward Laemmle; "With Stanley in Africa" (seventh episode) directed by Edward Kull.

FAMOUS PLAYERS

William DeMille is completing "Bought and Paid For" this week.

Constance Binney and May McAvoy are in New York for six weeks.

Bebe Daniels is to be co-starred with Jack Holt in "Val of Paradise," soon to be put into production.

Lila Lee will play opposite Reid in "The Dictator." James Cruze will direct.

"The Gilded Gage" will be the next vehicle for Gloria Swanson, under the direction of Sam Wood, who is now finishing "Beyond the Rocks."

May McAvoy will play opposite Valentino in "Blood and Sand." The continuity is now being prepared by June Mathis. It gives Valentino the role of a toreador.

UNITED STUDIOS

The Jackie Coogan subject has been given a final title of "Trouble."

Ten days will be required to complete the Norma Talmadge subject, "Duchess D'Langasis."

Milano Tilden, for ten years stage manager for Guy Bates Post is here to aid in the picturization of "The Masquerader."

Allan Holubar and Dorothy Philips are at San Diego filming "The Sooul Seekers." For exteriors they are using the former German raider Oregon.

A steam heating plant is to be installed to seat the six stages at the United Studios.

A royal ball room set used by Norma Talmadge last week taxed the largest stage in the studio, which is three hundred feet long and half as wide. It is considered the most pretentious interior built on the Coast. The period is 1860. Five hundred people are on the stage.

FIRST NATIONAL

The Ince production "Skin Deep," was previewed last week. Prints have been shipped.

Chaplin has completed the filming of his next release.

John M. Stahl has completed "One Clear Call" for Louis B. Mayer.

Anita Stewart has completed her contract with Mayer, after finishing "Rose of the Sea."

"Smilin' Through," the Norma Talmadge subject partially made here, is now completed. Prints are now being made.

Marshall Neilan is back from taking scenes at San Quentin prison and San Francisco for "Fool's First."

BERWILLA STUDIOS

Four subjects are now being edited for Arrow Film.

Ben Wilson, who has finished directing "Chained Lightning," starring Ann Little, is now finishing "Back to Yellowjack," by Peter B. Kyne. It features Kathleen Kirkham, Roy Stewart and Earl Metcalf.

Roy Clements is now completing "A Desert Bridegroom," with Jack Hoxie.

GOLDWYN

The Rupert Hughes story, originally titled "Sent for Out," featuring Coleen Moore, has been given the release title of "Darlin'."

"This Way Out," a comedy drama; "Captain Blackbird," a South Sea romance, and "Women Love Diamonds," a society drama, all by Carey Wilson, are being put in continuity form for early production.

ROACH

Upon his return from New York, Hal Roach advises that he will make four series of comedies for Pathe. Lloyd will appear in six feature comedies in addition to "He Who Hesitates," now being finished. "Snub" Pollard will make a series of thirty-six two reel comedies, and Paul Parrott comedies will be in one reel. There will also be a series of children's comedies and possibly others with animals.

Comedies shipped last week were: "Full of Pep," with Snub Pollard, a monkey gland comedy; "Call the Witness," Pollard's travesty on divorce, and "Our Gang," a children's comedy directed by Fred Newmeyer.

WESTERN PICTURES

The Rogell-Halperin Productions is working in Black Wolf Canyon making "No Man's Gold," co-starring Maryon Aye and "Bob" Reeves, and with the following cast, William White, Lew Meehan, and Kitty Bradbury.

The Irving Cummings Company, making "The Man from Hell's River," by James Oliver Curwood, is enroute home from Yosemite Park where snow scenes were made. Interiors will be made at Universal City.

H. H. Van Loan has been retained by Hugh B. Evans, Jr., to write titles for "Ridin' Wild," the Van Loan story which Evans produced with Roy Stewart and Marjorie Daw in the principal roles.

Lester Cuneo is cast as a young physician in his forthcoming production, "The Pride of Terror Mountain." Scenes will be taken in Yosemite and in one of the lumber camps of the North.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

"Tol'able David" Acclaimed by Critics

"TOL'ABLE DAVID," Richard Barthelmess' first starring picture for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is bringing down an avalanche of favorable criticisms from every part of the country upon the producers. Not only have the well known newspapers and critics outdone themselves in praise of this feature, but dailies that hitherto have paid scant attention to the offerings of the silent screen have been moved to words of laudation by this picture, states First National. Evidences of broken box office records and spellbound audiences continue to point out that the star's initial venture for himself has created a veritable sensation in the enthusiasm it has evoked from all classes. Typical case occurred in Los Angeles, where all the papers gave the picture anywhere from two-thirds to an entire column of favorable reviews during its first run at the Kinema.

Title of Harry Sweet Comedy Is Changed

Harry Sweet's Century Comedy release, which was called "One of the Four Hundred," has been changed to "Two of a Kind." In this comedy Sweet plays a double role and impersonates a young member of the idle rich set whose chief worry is what color of spats to wear and what pattern of cane to carry. This is a departure from the usual type of rube part Sweet has been featured in.

Filming of "If Winter Comes" Abandoned

Plans for the production of A. S. M. Hutchinson's widely-read novel, "If Winter Comes," as a Paramount picture have been abandoned for the present, it is announced, because John S. Robertson, who was to have directed the picture in its original locale in England, is now on his way to Hollywood to make Paramount pictures in the Paramount-Wilshire studio. Mr. Robertson, as soon as he arrives in Los Angeles, will begin production on Vincente Blasco Ibanez's novel, "Blood and Sand," starring Rodolph Valentino with May McAvoy heading the supporting cast.

"White Hands" on B'way

Max Graf Picture, Starring Hobart Bosworth, Opens in B. S. Moss House

"WHITE HANDS," the Max Graf production, featuring Hobart Bosworth, and distributed by Wid Gunning, Inc., opened to a crowded house at B. S. Moss's Broadway theatre, New York City, on January 30. The management reported that the audience liked the picture immensely, according to the Gunning office, particularly its thrills, of which there are a number, and its beautiful Sahara Desert scenes. Lambert Hillyer directed the production, which was made at San Mateo, near San Francisco, while C. Gardner Sullivan, dean of scenarists, was responsible for the script.

Many big bookings have been signed up so far for "White Hands," and others are reported every day to the Gunning home office. The Riviera and Flatbush theatres, in Brooklyn, played the picture. After its first run on Broadway "White Hands" is to play over the United Booking Offices circuit.

"White Hands" gives Bosworth the best chance he has had to portray the type of two-fisted seaman he is noted for. He plays "Hurricane" Hardy, a ship captain adventuring into the Sahara for spoil. He comes across a helpless American girl and takes her to the seacoast with the purpose of keeping her for himself. He battles with divekeepers and his own conscience, but the girl is rescued from his own evil nature by the efforts of a young American adventurer and a little white waif, who helps in "Hurricane's" regencration.

New Rupert Hughes Film

Goldwyn Says "Come on Over," Just Finished, Will Prove Most Popular

GOLDWYN has what it promises to be one of Rupert Hughes' most popular photoplays in "Come on Over," the screen original which was tentatively called "Sent for Out," and which Mr. Hughes directed, cut, titled and assembled in addition to writing, adapting to the screen and casting.

At its test screening in Los Angeles the audience, containing many prominent screen personalities, were enthusiastic over it, laughing and applauding throughout, declares a statement from the Goldwyn offices. The photo-comedy met the same kind of a reception when tried out before a theatre audience in New York, it is stated.

"Come on Over" is the simple and diverting tale of a young Irish lad, Shane O'Mealia, who comes to New York, leaving his sweetheart, Moyna Killiea, behind till he can send for her out. He gets a job as soon as he reaches New York, but through no fault of his own he loses jobs about as fast as he gets them.

Unknown to Shane, his sweetheart is brought over by a friend and her hot temper flames out when she discovers Shane and Judy Dugan have an appointment to meet the priest. She believes Shane has deserted her for Judy, who is in love with him. But in the end she is convinced that Shane was only helping her to get her father to take the temperance pledge and the comedy ends in an old-fashioned Irish folk-dance in the parlor of an imposing New York home.

New Vehicle Chosen for Pauline Frederick

Following the completion of Wm. J. Locke's "The Glory of Clementina," now in production at R-C Pictures' Hollywood studio, Pauline Frederick will begin work on an original story called "The Woman Breed," written especially for the star by Louis Stevens, prominent screen writer of the Pacific Coast.

Emile Chautard, who is supervising the production of "The Glory of Clementina," will serve in a similar capacity when Miss Frederick begins work on "The Woman Breed."

"Foolish Wives" Not to Be Used As Club

CARL LAEMMLE, president of Universal, has made the following important statement concerning the distribution of "Foolish Wives":

"'Foolish Wives' is not being, and shall not be, used as a club to make exhibitors buy other pictures. 'Foolish Wives' is being handled as a totally separate and distinct unit of the Universal company's business. It is standing on its own merits, just as other Universal product stands on its own merits. If we have any pictures that the exhibitor considers not good enough for his theatre, or pictures which for any reason he does not or cannot use, that is his business. It will have no effect on his dealings with us when it comes to booking 'Foolish Wives.'

"To be brutally frank, we are going to get—and we are getting—every possible dollar we can get for 'Foolish Wives.' We've got to get it. But there is no beating about the bush. There is no attempt to make an exhibitor believe he is going to get any reduction on 'Foolish Wives' just because he books something else with it."

Viola Dana Busy on Personal Appearance Tour

Viola Dana, the Metro star, who is making a countrywide tour of personal appearances in motion picture theatres during the winter shut-down of Metro studios in Hollywood, this week completed her engagements in California. She was seen in Oakland, San Jose, Stockton and Sacramento. Her schedule for the rest of the month includes appearances in the Loew theatres at Salt Lake City, Kansas City, Memphis and New Orleans. In February she will appear in Birmingham, Atlanta, Baltimore, Washington and New York, where her tour will end. She will then return to Hollywood to start work on a new picture at the re-opening of the Metro studios.

R-C Obtains "The Bigamist" for Release

"THE BIGAMIST," Guy Newall's big dramatic picture which is stated to have achieved the most sensational success in the history of motion-pictures in Great Britain, has been secured for distribution by R-C Pictures and will be released shortly.

"The Bigamist" was produced by the George Clark Company, Ltd., and has at its head, Ivy Duke, said to be the most beautiful woman who has appeared before a camera and a prime favorite with the reigning Royal family.

Guy Newall, who wrote the scenario, directed the film and plays one of the important roles opposite Miss Duke, is credited with having made a more artistic, and withal, dramatic film, than Europe has ever sent us and comparable with the finest productions in every sense.

"The Bigamist" was staged at Nice, in Southern France, and at Monte Carlo and in the suburbs of London. It required nine months to make and has in its cast, Julian Royce, Bromley Davenport, Roy Carruthers and other noted Continental players.

R-C contemplates the special release of "The Bigamist" during the next six weeks, previous to which it will be given an ambitious advertising campaign, it is announced.

"Hills of Missing Men" for Early Release

Playgoers Pictures state that their J. P. McGowan features are proving so acceptable in the theatres that arrangements are being made to follow "Reckless Chances," which was released January 18th, with another outdoor McGowan feature, entitled "Hills of Missing Men," during February. Playgoers contend that the demand for spirited Western features, built around good fiction stories, is as great as ever, and that the exhibitors are finding this demand admirably fulfilled by this J. P. McGowan series.

Arrow Serial Is Welcomed

"Nan of the North" in Great Demand in All Sections of U. S.

ACCORDING to W. E. Shallenberger, of the Arrow Film Corporation, word received from exchange men and exhibitors all over the United States indicates an unusual amount of interest in Arrow's big serial, "Nan of the North," produced by Ben Wilson and starring the popular serial star, Ann Little.

One of the most unusual points about this serial is the fact that the majority of the action takes place in America's famous Yellowstone National Park and this proves an unusually strong drawing card, for people seem anxious to see the beauties of this famous play-ground on the screen.

It has proven of great interest to educators and in many instances schools have requested showing this serial at special performances for pupils, in order that they may be visually instructed in the beauties and wonders of this most famous of all National Parks.

This, Arrow points out, is a most unusual happening for a serial and one that should be capitalized by the exhibitor playing the picture. Serials of the past have not always met with the approbation of educators, due to the fact that they were more or less "wild and woolly," and rather than giving the youth of the nation an idea of the way they should go have tended to instruct them more in the ways of villainy and crime. This being the case, endorsement of schools and educational institutions is an angle which no exhibitor should overlook in playing this serial.

An idea of the wide range of its appeal may be gained from the fact that the Eltabran Film Company of Atlanta, and McConville and Patten of Boston report it among the most successful serials they have ever handled, thus proving that Arrow's serials are one point upon which both the North and the South agree.

New William Fox Pictures

Johnnie Walker and Edna Murphy in "Extra! Extra!" Just Completed

JOHNNIE WALKER and Edna Murphy, youngest of Fox stars, have just completed "Extra! Extra!" at the Fox Hollywood studio. The story is by Julian Josephson and was directed by W. K. Howard. "Elope If You Must" is the title of Eileen Percy's newest starring vehicle, adapted from a story by Joseph Poland and directed by C. R. Wallace.

William Fox has just purchased a novel as material for a coming picture by Tom Mix. The novel is "Free Range Lanning" by George Owen Baxter.

Under the title "Iron to Gold," Dustin Farnum has begun work in a new picture at the Fox Hollywood studio. The story is by George Owen Baxter, and the adaptation for the screen by Jack Strumwasser. Margaret Marsh is supporting Farnum as leading woman. Frank Campean is also in the cast.

According to announcement from Fox Film, William Farnum will continue work at the New York studios—thus setting at rest rumors, circulated since the recent completion of Mr. Farnum's "A Stage Romance," that the Fox star would be sent to the West Coast for his future work. The newly planned production with Mr. Farnum is to be a photoplay of big business and will be directed by Herbert Brenon, who also directed "A Stage Romance."

Having completed "Nero" in Rome, Director J. Gordon Edwards and the Fox players comprising the foreign company are now down in Egypt shooting scenes for another big picture that is to be released in the Fox super-production program during the year. At last accounts Edwards was up the Nile taking water and desert scenes.

Casting Director in New York Seeking Talent

ROBERT B. McINTYRE, casting director for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation at the studios in Culver City, Calif., is in New York for two or three weeks to renew acquaintance with stage and screen players whom he has seen in the past and to meet and appraise those who have come into prominence in the two years that he has been on the Pacific Coast.

Mr. McIntyre expects to put in some very busy days before returning to Culver City, attending plays and picture screenings in the evenings and interviewing players during the daytime. He will be glad to see screen lyaers and those desirous of entering motion pictures at the Goldwyn offices, 469 Fifth avenue, between the hours of 9 A. M. and 5 P. M.

"Goldwyn wants new faces in its pictures," declares Mr. McIntyre. "Not only faces of established screen personalities for the biggest roles in its productions, but faces that are entirely new to the screen. I believe that many of the big motion picture players of the future are now in private life and must be recruited from the ball room, from the school room, the factory and the home."

Baby Peggy Makes Personal Appearance

Baby Peggy, the little three-year-old star of Century Comedies, was requested by Sid Grauman to make personal appearances at his million dollar theatre in Los Angeles in conjunction with "Chums," which was playing there to packed houses.

The size of the theatre did not dismay Baby Peggy in the least and closely following the director's orders, she smiled, laughed, cried and portrayed grief, sympathy, anger, hate and joy, on a moment's notice.

Here is the picture we've been looking for a long time.

We've tramp — tramp — tramped from one movie house to another for a picture which would have real, clever, subtitles; which would tell its story without resorting to old stale camera tricks: whose characters would express their feelings like human beings—and so on. In short, we have been looking for a picture that would omit all the conventional failings of the film without sacrificing any of its merits.

"The Son of Wallingford" seems to be such a picture. It is the personal work of George Randolph Chester and his wife, Lillian. Chester created the character of Wallingford, and now he has spent more than a year putting his famous character on the screen as he wants him put. The result of his efforts is notable.

"The Son of Wallingford" deals principally with J. Rufus' son, but the genial figure of the swindler and his accomplice, Blackie Daw, really dominate the story. The early part of the tale is effervescent with youth and romance and has enough good direction and original work to stand alone as a superior production.

Then along in the middle of the film the great J. Rufus rides into town, and from then on the tale races along at breakneck speed. The plot is particularly effective in this section of the country, for it concerns oil wells. The oil element leads up consistently to the spectacular finish, the burning of a line of tanks and a lake of oil.

"Prodigal Judge" Opens

Vitagraph Picture Well Received at Pre-Release Showing on B'way

"THE PRODIGAL JUDGE," the Vitagraph special production which had its initial performance at New York City's newest metropolitan-district playhouse —the Cameo theatre—on last Saturday, will continue at that attractive B. S. Moss house for at least another week. The story is based on the novel by Vaughan Kester. The Cameo presentation is a pre-release showing; the picture will be regularly released in February.

The opening performance at the Cameo on Saturday night was a gala occasion, despite the howling blizzard outside. The theatre was jammed at the evening performances, and a distinct "first-night" atmosphere prevailed. Jean Paige, who is a featured member of the all-star cast of this special, was in the audience, as was Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph; B. S. Moss, head of the Moss Circuit controlling the new jewel-box theatre; Maclyn Arbuckle, who plays the role of the judge; Ernest Torrence, who plays his faithful friend, Mahaffy; Earle Fox, who appears opposite Jean Paige in the picture, and a number of others well known in the stage or screen world. There were numerous members of the Lambs Club in the audience, to do honor to their fellow-members, Maclyn Arbuckle, Ernest Torrence, Earle Fox and Horace Braham, who is also a member of "The Prodigal Judge" cast. Maclyn Arbuckle made a brief address between the first and second evening performances of the picture. His comments were confined to certain little experiences during the filming of the special, and he stated it was a distinct pleasure to have taken part in a film of this special sort, clean, human, American.

Practically every New York newspaper critic, in subsequent reviews, agreed with this characterization of the picture. The New York Evening Telegram said that "it was eminently successful because it is a clean, wholesome American story, and earned the applause the capacity audience gave it." The New York Sun commented upon its excellent casting, acting, direction and faithfulness to scenic and costuming details. The Mail called the picture the best of any bill which has been presented thus far at the Cameo, describing it as "a really excellent example of how a written novel should be screened." The New York Tribune praised the authentic atmosphere of the original and the reflection of "that whimsicality in Kester's work which is too often apt to shrivel under the glare of studio lights."

"The Splendid Lie" Ready

New Grace Davidson Picture is Now Available for Exhibitors

The second J. G. Pictures Production, starring Grace Davison, is announced available for immediate release by the Arrow Film Corporation. It is titled "The Splendid Lie," and it was written and directed by Charles T. Horan, who was also the author and director of Miss Davison's first starring vehicle, under the Arrow banner, "Love, Hate and a Woman."

In "The Splendid Lie," Miss Davison is said to have one of the strongest stories she has ever had in her career, it being one which affords ample opportunity for the display of her undoubted histrionic ability and one which is, according to Arrow's officials and those who have reviewed the picture in the private projection rooms, said will be extremely popular from a box-office angle.

It is a story of the small town girl in the big city; a misunderstood woman who, forced to earn her own living, is touched by the tongue of slander, which falsely accuses her of treading the primrose path.

The part affords Miss Davison opportunity for some exceptionally fine acting and also enables her to display to advantage some beautiful gowns which will captivate the hearts of the women in the audience. Mr. Horan has given some splendid direction in this picture and has provided some exceptionally fine settings. The art direction of the picture is in the hands of Charles Osborn Seessel, who has been responsible for the art direction of many of the most notable successes of the past year.

Director Lauds Work of Scenario Writer

Contrary to the oft-quoted opinion that directors and scenario-writers are more often in dispute than agreement, comes the word from United Artists that Kenneth Webb, directing "Fair Lady" for Whitman Bennett, is highly pleased over the work done by Dorothy Farnum in adapting Rex Beach's novel "The Net" for production on the screen under the title of "Fair Lady." Here is what Mr. Webb has to say:

"This script is clear, concise, smooth-running and workable in every detail.

"In the case of the 'Fair Lady' production, many changes in the original story of 'The Net' were suggested by Mr. Beach that would improve it as a screen medium. Miss Farnum's handling of these changes and her deft weaving of the new twists into the original story was a work of art that became more and more evident as the production advanced. The finished picture will be found to follow more closely her text than any picture made so far."

Otis Skinner Continues Successful Tour

While the majority of the reports being sent in from theatrical companies on the road tell of poor, or only fair business, Otis Skinner, the Exceptional Pictures star, who is spending the winter on the speaking stage in a dramatic version of Blasco Ibanez's "Blood and Sand," has been meeting with great success during his tour of the Middle West.

Mr. Skinner has cancelled his original route, which will probably allow him to close his season earlier than originally planned, and if so, the shooting of "Mister Antonio," the Booth Tarkington play which will be Otis Skinner's second motion picture, will be started earlier than originally planned, possibly early in April.

Supplies Prepared for "The Offenders"

In spite of the intervention of the holidays, of the engravers' strike, and attendant delays, Russell Clark, of the Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc., announces the completion of all supplies for the first of the four Margery Wilson productions which, presented by Fenwicke L. Holmes, he is releasing in the independent field. These exhibitor helps, advertising props, etc., are becomingly displayed by printed word and artistic illustration in a handsome press book, printed in orange and black, which heralds the release of Margery Wilson in "The Offenders," a youth and love romance from the magazine story of the same name by Katherine Eggleston.

Rights to "The Offenders" as well as to the three succeeding pictures of the series, "Miss Paul Revere," "Insinuation," and "Woman's Woman," now in production, have been acquired as follows: New York State and Greater New York, First National Exchanges, Inc.; California, Turner & Dahnken.

To Release Charles Ray Films on Open Market

As the result of new arrangements that have been consummated between the officials of First National Pictures and the Charles Ray organization the five remaining Ray pictures to be delivered to First National, according to the star's contract, will be released upon an open market basis. They will thus be available to all exhibitors.

This will include "The Barnstormer," scheduled for release January 23; "Gas, Oil and Water," to be released March 20; "The Deuce of Spades," "Smudge" and another production at present untitled. No release date has been set for the last three.

The change in releasing arrangements will not affect his earlier pictures: "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," "Peaceful Valley," "Nineteen and Phyllis," "The Old Swimmin' Hole," "Scrap Iron," "Two Minutes to Go," 'The Midnight Bell" and "R. S. V. P.," which will continue to be distributed as franchise releases.

Conway Tearle Subject Released Feb. 10th

The fourth in Selznick's Conway Tearle star series, distributed by Select exchanges, brings "A Wide-Open Town" to the screen on February 10 with that popular star playing a decidedly different role than has been assigned to him in previous releases. Tearle essays the character of a professional gambler who comes under the spell of the mayor's daughter, abandons his lazy life and becomes a hero through an interesting twist in the plot.

Expect Big First Nat'l Week

Four Thousand Exhibitors Are Already Enrolled

An early check up of theatres that have enlisted for the celebration of First National Anniversary Week, February 18-25, reveals an enthusiastic response from exhibitors in every section of the country, more than four thousand of whom have already pledged themselves to run First National pictures during that period. The number, based on early reports, is all the more significant states First National, in that it includes not only franchise holders and sub franchise holders but also a large percentage of motion picture theatre owners who have never before been consistent users of First National productions.

From the standpoint of being the first nation wide anniversary week that First National Pictures has staged it promises to eclipse in magnitude any similar undertaking ever put on in the motion picture field. Although a First National Week was celebrated in many localities last year, the movement was not simultaneous throughout the country being left, by virtue of local conditions to the discretion of exchanges or franchise holders in the different territories. The initial First National Week this year promises an auspicious start for a movement that it is planned to make an annual event. The enthusiasm with which exhibitors have flocked to the support of a First National Week is held as a tribute to the list of sterling productions that will be released during the intervening time. Among them are such pictures as: Marshall Neilan's "Penrod," Norma Talmadge in "Smilin' Through;" R. A. Walsh's "Kindred of the Dust;" Anita Stewart in "A Question of Honor;" Katherine MacDonald in "The Woman's Side" and the Emerson-Loos production "Red Hot Romance."

Some of the more recent releases that will be featured during Charlie Chaplin revivals of "A First National Week include: Dog's Life," and "Sunnyside;" Charles Ray in "R. S. V. P." and "The Barnstormer;" Jackie Coogan in "My Boy;" the John M. Stahl production "The Song of Life;" Constance Talmadge in "Polly of the Follies;" Richard Barthelmess in "Tol'able David" and "The Seventh Day;" Norma Talmadge in "The Wonderful Thing" and "Love's Redemption" the Selig Rork superb production of "The Rosary" and J. L. Frothingham's massive feature "Shattered Idols" as well as the Buster Keaton and Mack Sennett short comedies.

Free advertising paper and accessories that have been promised to exhibitors participating in First National Week will soon be available at all exchanges and are proving a magnet in arousing interest in the anniversary celebration. From every quarter promises have come in of unstinted co-operation and stupendous exploitation campaigns to put First National Week indelibly before the public eye.

"Turn to the Right" Scores Hit

B'way Opening of the Film as Memorable as That of Play

For the four hundred and forty-fourth time "Turn to the Right" brought applause from a Broadway audience, when Rex Ingraham's production of the John Golden stage hit was presented in motion pictures by Mr. Golden and Marcus Loew at the Lyric theatre, New York, the evening of Monday, January 23.

The film premiere of this play by Winchell Smith and John E. Hazzard was perhaps even more suspicious declares the Metro office, than the initial spoken performance several seasons ago—a performance, it will be recalled, which was to be repeated until the total number of enactments had reached four hundred and forty-three.

Those who regard theatrical openings with an eye to their box-office stamina hazarded the prophecy that "Turn to the Right" would remain on the screen on Broadway as long, if not even longer, than the play did on the stage of the Gaiety.

The cast, which includes Alice Terry, Jack Mulhall, Lydia Knott, Harry Myers, George Cooper and Edward Connelly, all scored individual hits. As in the case of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," the skillful hand of June Mathis, who, with Mary O'Hara adapted the piece to pictures, was apparent. John F. Seitz, the photographer, was also highly praised for the artistry of the backgrounds.

Motion Picture News:—Rex Ingram has turned to that successful crook play of a few seasons ago, "Turn to the Right," for his latest screen expression. The subject, rich in the elements which build popularity, was destined for the silver sheet. The inspiring theme of redemption, coupled with the vivid characterizations and plot incident have been excellently caught by the camera. June Mathis and Mary O'Hara have made an adaption which carries the fidelity of the spoken version, and Mr. Ingram has embroidered it with deft touches, providing happy balances, well-rounded character sketches and a subtle vein of humor. . . . It is a splendid picture, painstakingly achieved, and with a convincing moral.

Exhibitors' Trade Review:—The box-office appeal of this picture is perfectly easy to recognize. It is small-town atmosphere, with marked types and a series of surprise situations, plus the right mixture of pathos. We cannot imagine how any audience can resist the scenes and titles, which show a couple of crooks just out of Sing Sing, aiding the hero in concealing his own prison record, unjustly suffered, from his mother and helping him to prevent a conscienceless old deacon from getting possession of the old lady's farm. Situations of comedy and pathos are intermingled here in excellent fashion, with an appeal to the spectator that is sure-fire. In the handling of the material which made "Turn to the Right" a big stage success, Mr. Ingram has demonstrated very great skill and understanding. . . The cast is excellent. Its work shows the director's restraint and remarkable grasp of dramatic values. . . "Turn to the Right" is an unusual type picture. . . a genuine box-office attraction.

Morning Telegraph:—"Turn to the Right" has reached the screen via the Metro route. . . The Winchell Smith-John Hazzard success is practically picture proof. . . The picture will undoubtedly be a great success. It bears all the earmarks of a 100 to 1 shot. It's another feather in Rex Ingram's cap. . . It is all human, all wool and a yard wide. . . Its appeal is universal.

Moving Picture World:—It is the exquisite combination of human interest and comedy; the blending, in fact, of all the tried and proved elements essential to the success of drama that give Rex Ingram's "Turn to the Right" the flattering distinction of being the photographic parallel to the great stage success. . . Rex Ingram has realized the importance of making the comedy uppermost and using the sentiment appeal only as a background, when the temptation with many directors would have been to emphasize the sob strains and use the comedy only as "relief." He knows intuitively where the chances for fun are and he proceeds intelligently to build for laughs. The effect is that he has postponed getting serious as long as possible and when a bit of pathos does come, he gets it over with amazing swiftness and realism.

"At the Cameo Theatre 'The Prodigal Judge' tops an interesting programme. The plot of the story is laid in Tennessee in 1835. It divides its interest between the love affairs of dainty Betty Malroy and the drollery and quaint appeal of old Judge Slocum. The picture has been made in pretty Southern background, with some of its night photography especially notable.

"The cast has been carefully selected, with Jean Paige as the appealing heroine, and Maclyn Arbuckle scoring in the role of the Judge. Ernest Torrence, Earle Fox and Peggy Shanor do nicely."—NEW YORK EVENING WORLD.

"Foolish Wives" Booked for 8 Big Cities

The first theatre outside of New York City which will show the picture is the Criterion theatre of Buffalo, N. Y. Max Spiegel, the owner, is preparing for an indefinite run of this picture. The picture will open at the Criterion February 5th. Miss Du Pont will make several personal appearances at the Criterion.

Frank Rembusch, owner of the Ohio theatre, Indianapolis, has negotiated an engagement of the big special for his house, to open there on February 12th. On the same date, "Foolish Wives" will open at the Roosevelt theatre, Chicago, operated by the Ascher Brothers. It is planned to have Miss Du Pont appear in person at both the Indianapolis and Chicago theatres during the engagement of the picture at these houses.

On February 13th, the Felt Brothers will present "Foolish Wives" at the Aldine theatre, Philadelphia. On February 15th, it will open at the Mission theatre, Los Angeles. On the 19th, it will open in Freuler's Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee, and also at the Criterion theatre in Oklahoma City. Provision for the opening of "Foolish Wives," following March 6th, has been made by Jake Laurie of the Park theatre in Boston.

Big Bookings for "Sin of Martha Queed"

Reports from many first-run houses indicate that Associated Exhibitors' Allan Dwan production, "The Sin of Martha Queed," is being booked extensively. This production has been described as combining the artistry of Mr. Dwan's direction and the appeal of the highly dramatic story. Exhibitors are laying considerable stress upon the all-star cast of "The Sin of Martha Queed," which includes Mary Thurman, Niles Welch, Jos. Doling and others.

Another Fox Special to Be Filmed Abroad

J. Gordon Edwards, the Fox director who recently completed the filming of the super-production "Nero," at the Rome studio of William Fox, has started work on "The Shepherd King," another super-special, according to word just received from the Fox headquarters. Several exterior scenes of the new picture have already been made in Egypt, where the Edwards company has been for the past three weeks. Wright Lorimer wrote the story.

Violet Mersereau, the Fox actress, who as the feminine lead in "Nero" had the role of the Christian martyr, and recently returned from Europe, will sail for Italy on February 15 to rejoin the Edwards group when it returns to Rome. She will be assigned the leading feminine part in "The Shepherd King."

Robt. Vignola to Start New Subject Soon

Preliminary plans for the big special production of "When Knighthood Was in Flower," which Robert G. Vignola is to make for Cosmopolitan, are nearing completion and actual shooting is expected to begin within a week or ten days. Owing to the magnitude of the production and the fact that the sets and costumes must be historically perfect, Director Vignola has done a tremendous amount of preparation and study so that now he is familiar with every phase of the period within which the action of the story takes place.

According to the plans, "When Knighthood Was in Flower" will probably be released in ten reels or more. It is stated that this will be the biggest production Director Vignola has made and also the biggest sponsored by Cosmopolitan.

"The Prodigal Judge"

"IT is probable that every one knows the story of the prodigal judge who went to the devil after his wife was stolen from him. The production has been beautifully directed by Edward Jose; the titles are excellent, and Miss Paige and Mr. Arbuckle have been furnished with an excellent supporting cast. Ernest Torrence is one of the screen's best heavy comedians. He proved that in 'Tol'able David,' and as Solomon Mahaffy in this picture he is equally good. Earl Fox makes an attractive hero, and Arthur Carew, Horace Braham, Charles Kent and Charles Eaton are excellent in their roles."—NEW YORK TRIBUNE.

Pathe Schedules Releases for Feb. 12

PATHE EXCHANGE, Inc., announces a notable collection of releases for the week of February 12th. Heading the list is the latest Pathe playlet, "Via Wireless," a photo-dramatization of the stage melodrama of the same name written by Winchell Smith and Paul Armstrong. Gail Kane is co-starred in the offering with Bruce McRae. George Fitzmaurice directed the production.

"Look Out Below" is the current re-issued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd. The spectacled comedian appears as a love-sick youth who is enamored with Bebe Daniels. "The Mysterious Voyage" is the seventh episode of "White Eagle," the new Pathe serial starring Ruth Roland.

"Stage Struck" is the title of the latest Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard. The moustached comedian appears as a Stage-Door Johnnie, and is assisted by Marie Mosquini, who plays the role of the leading lady. "The Villain in Disguise" is the current animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables," produced by Fables Pictures, Inc., and created for the screen by Cartoonist Paul Terry. The story illustrates the moral that, "a villain may disguise himself, but he will never fool the wise."

Pathe Review No. 142, Pathe News No. 14 and 15 and Topics of the Day No. 6 complete the week's releases.

Preparing for Pauline Frederick's New Film

The technical staff at R-C Studios, Hollywood, is engaged in preparations for staging the filming of William J. Locke's novel, "The Glory of Clementina," with Pauline Frederick in the star role. The first set represents the interior of an artist's studio of the better sort. It was designed by Art Director W. L. Heywood and erected under his personal supervision.

Vitagraph to Film "Magnificient Ambersons"

Vitagraph will produce "The Magnificent Ambersons" for the screen with Jean Paige heading an all-star cast. Edward Jose will direct the production. The story written by Booth Tarkinton was generally hailed by reviewers at the time of its publication as the long-looked-for great American novel. It is understood that "The Magnificent Ambersons" will be released by Vitagraph in March.

"The Barnstormer" to be Chas. Ray's Next

Charles Ray will appear in a new comedy role in "The Barnstormer," which is announced by the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation as released through First National on January 23rd. In the new production in which Arthur S. Kane again presents the star for First National distribution, Mr. Ray plays the role of a farm-weary country boy with stage aspirations. The star directed the picture which was adapted from an original script by Richard Andres.

"Why Men Forget" Gets Pre-Release Showing

Booked for pre-release exhibition at Loew's State theatre, Broadway, and other houses of that circuit in the New York City territory, "Why Men Forget," created widespread interest among exhibitors of the metropolitan district last week, according to Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution for R-C Pictures by which the production is being released.

"Why Men Forget" also is reported to have received a most enthusiastic reception in other cities, especially in the East and Middle West among the industrial centers. It was directed by Denison Clift, who formerly was associated with Cecil De Mille. Milton Rosmer is featured.

"Smilin' Through" Has Premiere on Coast

"Smilin' Through," recently completed by Norma Talmadge and hailed as the greatest production of this most popular motion picture actress, was given a pre-view showing—its first—at the California theatre in Venice, Calif., last Monday night, and won unanimous acclaim from the spectators who crowded the house, states First National.

"Smilin' Through" was adapted from the famous stage success, in which Jane Cowl starred on Broadway and is still playing in other large cities of the country.

The supporting cast in itself is important enough to carry any picture to success, including such well known players as Kenneth Harlan, Harrison Ford, Wyndham Standing, Alec B. Francis, Glenn Hunter, Grace Griswold, Miriam Battista and Euene Lockhart.

Chinese Minister Visits Fox Studio in N. Y.

The William Fox Studio in New York was visited last week by the Chinese Minister of Finance, H. E. Chow Tsuchi, who was on his way home from the Washington Conference. Mr. Tsuchi was accompanied by Mrs. H. E. Chow Tsuchi, Miss Amy Chow, Miss Susie Chow, Mr. H. H. Bowling, and Mr. W. C. Kwong.

Victor Schertzinger to Film for Gunning

THE GUNNING announcement says that Victor Schertzinger already has three of the four stories which he intends to film for distribution by the Gunning organization. He is now in Santa Barbara, where he has taken over the American studios, and is now organizing his forces. He will begin work on the first of the productions in about two weeks.

Of the three stories already decided on for picturization, two are the work of Louis Stevens and one is by Kenneth Clark. The fourth will be selected within the next few weeks.

Cullen Landis, Joseph Dowling and other members of the cast have already been signed.

The announcement of the signing of the contract with the independent directors comes on the heels of the statement that Wid Gunning, after completing the reorganization of his sales department, had once more turned his attention to production, in which lies his great interest.

It is known that Wid Gunning had spent a number of weeks recently on the Coast, and that during that time, he had been in conference with independent producers, with a view to carrying out production plans he has long had in mind.

Complete Cast for New Marie Prevost Film

The entire cast has been chosen for Marie Prevost's new story, "Kissed," which has just been started at Universal City. Frank Glendon and Lloyd Whitlock carry the two male leads. Lillian Langdon plays the part of the star's mother while others included in the cast are Arthur Hoyt, Harold Miller, Marie Crisp, Harold Goodwin and Percy Challenger.

To Observe Brunet Anniversary

Pathe Forces to Unite in Elaborate Celebration

JUST as all departments in the Pathe organization are uniting in an elaborate celebration of Paul Brunet's fourth anniversary as executive head, their zest for the occasion is quickened by Pathe arrangement with Harold Lloyd. They consider the constructive character of the specifications of the new Lloyd contract to be highly advantageous not only to Pathe and Lloyd but to the great multitude of picture patrons.

On March 6th Paul Brunet will have served four years at the head of Pathe Exchange, Inc.—two years as Vice President and General Manager, and two years as President. In recognition of the facts that during this period the growth of the business of Pathe Exchange has been greater than during its entire previous career, its independence as a purely American concern consummated, and that Mr. Brunet's many other achievements have practically benefitted everyone in and connected with the Pathe organization, the Pathe forces have united in an elaborate celebration of the Brunet Fourth Anniversary.

The nature of this testimonial, as announced by General Manager Elmer Pearson, will be an elaborate variation on prior annual "Brunet Anniversary Contests," with prizes for the winning branch exchange to teams in each of the five divisions ranging from $2,500 down to $500.

The actual contest in sales and collections will open on Monday, February 27th, and close on Saturday, March 25th. But in this instance there will be a preliminary contest covering six weeks, which will determine a new division classification—not geographical, as heretofore, but based on the standing gained by each branch in the preliminary contest. Thus, all branch exchange teams will benefit by a "running start."

"The executives and employees of the thirty-three Pathe branch exchanges," announces Pathe, "willingly admit the existence of special reasons why they should give their most energetic and loyal support in the carrying out of any plans which are developments of President Brunet's sound and highly creative administration. In the four years dating from his designation as General Manager they have enjoyed a sense of security never for a day interrupted by the conditions of epidemic and protracted seasons of bad business which have caused other similar concerns either to make sweeping reductions in salaries or to temporarily close their offices."

Even before he had become the executive head of Pathe, Mr. Brunet had perfected the machinery of the big organization down to the last detail of bookkeeping and accounting efficiency, evolving an exchange system operating with the smallest degree of friction and productive of the highest routine results at the lowest average expenditure consistent with good service.

On becoming General Manager of Pathe, one of Mr. Brunet's first acts was to insure, as far as possible, the constantly profitable operation of the highly efficient exchange system which he had already perfected. To the Pathe products were added for distribution those of independent producers which were of a quality necessary to gain Pathe approval.

These and other achievements of Mr. Brunet's were so well understood in the film world that when he was elected to succeed Charles Pathe as President of Pathe Exchange, Inc., the news was accepted as a matter of course. Neither was any surprise manifested when, a year later, it was officially announced that President Brunet had successfully negotiated control of the concern by the American stockholders and the existing American management. This event was accepted as a logical consequence of characteristic Brunet efforts in the direction of conservation of energy to be applied in clearly marked channels of efficiency.

Educational Sales Meeting

First of Series is Held in New York on January 30th

THE first of a series of district sales conventions was held by National Film Exchanges, Inc., in New York Monday, January 30, nine branch managers from the Eastern part of the United States and Canada meeting at the Pennsylvania Hotel for an all-day discussion of sales problems and the outlook for the coming year.

The series of meetings of which this is the first are to precede a trip to the Pacific Coast by E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., on which Mr. Hammons will confer with producers and make arrangements for product for the season of 1922-1923.

Following the Eastern meeting, conventions will be held in Chicago and in Kansas City before Mr. Hammons goes to Los Angeles.

The district managers who attended the New York meeting were George T. Ames, New York; John J. Scully, Boston; B. A. Simon, New Haven; J. H. Morgan, Albany; E. G. Dodds, Buffalo; C. S. Goodman, Philadelphia; Howard Beaver, Washington; Joseph Kaliski, Pittsburgh, and O. R. Hanson, Canada, whose headquarters is at Toronto. The meeting was conducted by Mr. Hammons and Henry Ginsberg, domestic sales manager for Educational.

One of the principal objects of the meeting was to get the views of the district managers as to the wants of the exhibitors. Mr. Hammons desires to get the latest reports from the theatre owners and managers all over the country before he begins negotiations with producers as to new product.

A feeling of optimism pervaded the meeting. Reports from the various districts were unanimous that Educational Pictures on the whole were serving the short subject needs of the exhibitors as no other organization has ever served them before.

Captain G. McL. Baynes, head of the Kinograms Publishing Company, addressed the meeting and described the efforts that his organization had made to build up the best type of news reel during the year that Kinograms has been handled by Educational. He promised the same effort to keep up the advance during the second year with Educational, which has just started. The managers replied that the progress made by Kinograms was such that it stood at the very top of the news reels and they assured Captain Baynes of a big year ahead.

Following the business session the managers viewed "The Battle of Jutland" and the first three pictures of the new Robert C. Bruce "Wilderness Tales," after which they attended a dinner at the Pennsylvania.

Mr. Hammons and Mr. Ginsberg will leave New York on February 18 for Chicago, where the second of the series of district conventions will be held on February 20 and 21. Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Indianapolis, Louisville and Chicago branches of Educational Film Exchanges will be represented at this gathering by their managers.

After this meeting Mr. Hammons and Mr. Ginsberg will travel to Kansas City, where the managers of the branches at Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha, Des Moines and Denver will meet.

Mr. Ginsberg will then proceed on a tour of the Southern branches, working his way through the key cities back to New York, while Mr. Hammons will go on to Los Angeles. He plans to spend two weeks there in conference with the producers and the local Educational management. After the completion of next year's plans with the producers, Mr. Hammons will return by way of San Francisco and Seattle.

Fox News Reel Shown to Conference Delegates

UPON request of Secretary of State Hughes, rangements were made through the Washington representative of Fox News for an official showing of several hundred feet of film which were embodied in the Fox News reel released during the first week of the Disarmament Conference. Invitations for the showing were sent to every member of the various foreign delegations attending the international conference, and the film was shrown Wednesday, January 18th, in the Navy Building at Washington, under the auspices of government officials.

The film, entitled "War or Peace," illustrated the destruction wrought by war in contrast to the accomplishments and progress realized in time of peace.

As a result of the private exhibition, several of the delegates have written their appreciation to William Fox. Lord and Lady Lee of Great Britain were especially enthusiastic in their written approval transmitted to Mr. Fox.

Howe's "Runaway Train" Returns to Broadway

"Lyman H. Howe's Famous Ride on a Runaway Train," one of the most popular novelty pictures ever released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., is on Broadway for the fourth time, playing a two weeks' engagement at the Criterion theatre.

The "Ride on a Runaway Train" began its remarkable history at the Capitol theatre, where it attracted unusual interest, when, after a week's run, it was brought back for a return showing. It was the first time that the Capital had ever given a short subject a return run, and Sam Rothafel, managing director of the Capitol, declared at that time that he considered it the best short subject he had ever seen. Under these conditions the picture created a mild sensation when the Capitol a short time ago recalled it for a third engagement.

Selznick Completes Cast

Elaine Hammerstein Has Strong Support in Cosmo Hamilton Story

AT the Selznick studios in East Forty-eighth Street, New York, work on Elaine Hammerstein's presentation of a Cosmo Hamilton story began Monday, January 30, under direction of Ralph Ince. Myron Selznick, vice-president in charge of production, had completed the cast that morning by selecting Constance Bennett for the last of the supporting roles that then remained open.

The announcement had previously been made that Niles Welch would again appear as Miss Hammerstein's leading man, and with the selection of Huntley Gordon, as the heavy man, Frank Currier, for a character role, and Louise Preussing and Myrtle Steadman, the cast of principals was made complete. The assignment of Niles Welch to the lead was an accordance with Myron Selznick's earlier decision to keep Welch opposite Miss Hammerstein in a series of releases that began with "Remorseless Love" and has continued through to "Why Announce Your Marriage?", the issue now current with Miss Hammerstein the star.

Both Huntley Gordon and Frank Currier have supported Miss Hammerstein in earlier releases, Currier having made a distinctive success in "Pleasure Seekers," while Gordon is with her in "Why Announce Your Marriage?" Louise Preussing has also previously appeared in several Selznick releases but Constance Bennett is new to the screen.

"Show Shop" Due Soon

Prints of Semon's Newest Comedy for Vitagraph in Exchanges Soon

LARRY SEMON'S newest and biggest comedy—"The Show Shop"—has finally arrived in the East, and prints will soon be shipped on to Vitagraph exchanges.

The actual camera work on this new comedy was finished a number of days ago, but Larry spent considerable time on the coast cutting and editing this comedy, and, for once, was not working out the plans for another comedy.

From the very beginning the new comedy was based on great proportions. First there was the erection of a magnificent theatre interior, which called for the skill of every member of the Vitagraph mechanical and building force. A huge stage was used to house this interior. Nothing that a genuine theatre calls for was overlooked, from orchestra pit to proscenium arch. Then came the long and wearisome training of the best professional dancing girls obtainable for the big dancing revue act.

Larry Semon plays two parts, one in the backstage region and one in the audience. Lucille Carlisle is seen in a prominent role.

All of the action is not in the theatre. The comedy is climaxed with a great railroad scene. An express train fairly hurtling along is the principal setting. There are comedy fights on top of the train. Flivvers, motorcycles and human beings figure in a wild panorama of action.

Nine Productions Unde Way for Paramount

WITH nice new pictures in preparation or in the process of production activity at the Paramount West Coast studios in Hollywood is at high tide.

Among the new productions under way now in Hollywood are "Over the Border," with Betty Compson and Tom Moore in the leading roles, and "The Cat That Walked Alone," a George Melford production, featuring Dorothy Dalton and including Wanda Hawley and Milton Sills. Pictures to be started during the month of February are: Cecil B. DeMille's "Manslaughter," "The Dictator," starring Wallace Reid; Thomas Meighan in "Our Leading Citizen," story by George Ade; "Val of Paradise," with Jack Holt and Bebe Daniels; Agnes Ayres and Conrad Nagel in "The Ordeal," "The Gilded Cage," starring Gloria Swanson, and "Blood and Sand," with Rodolph Valentino and May McAvoy.

Paramount pictures completed during the last month include "The Green Temptation," "The Red Challenge," "Beyond the Rocks," "Across the Continent," "The Proxy Daddy," "Bought and Paid For," "The Heart Specialist," "The Sleepwalkers" and "Through a Glass Window."

"The Prodigal Judge"

"FOR the third bill at his new Cameo Theatre, B. F. Moss is presenting a motion picture which far outshines both of the previous offerings at that house. This is "The Prodigal Judge,' a picturization of Vaughan Kester's novel, which is a really excellent example of how a written novel should be screened—a most enjoyable piece of work, perfectly cast with but one or two exceptions, exceedingly well played and beautifully photographed.

"One is almost moved to believe that Vaughan Kester had Maclyn Arbuckle in mind when he wrote 'The Prodigal Judge.' It is extremely doubtful if there is any one else in the picture firmament who could have given so perfect an interpretation of the judge."

Arthur Statter Heads "U" Serial Dept.

ARTHUR STATTER, Los Angeles newspaperman and scenario writer, has been given charge of the serial and short reel feature department at Universal City.

He replaces William Lord Wright, who recently resigned.

Statter will bring to conclusion two big historical serials and prepare to start another.

"In the Days of Buffalo Bill," and "With Stanley in Africa," are the historical productions now under way. A serial based upon "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe" is ready for production.

Edward Laemmle is directing "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," with Art Acord starring.

Leads Engaged for New Millarde Production

Two leads were engaged this week in the persons of Charles Richman and Barbara Castleton for Harry Millarde's new production for William Fox.

Mr. Richman is an actor of distinction whose chief successes in the spoken drama have been made under the direction of David Belasco and William A. Brady. At various times he has appeared on the stage with Blanche Bates, Ada Rehan, and Mary Mannering.

Miss Castleton also has been a stage favorite, and leading woman in such screen productions as "Sins of Ambition," "On Trial," opposite William Faversham in "The Silver King," "Peg O' My Heart," "The Tower of Ivory" and "Dangerous Days."

Hutchison Unit in Fla. for New Thrills

Hardly had Charles Hutchinson and the company supporting him in "Go-Get-'Em Hutch," thawed out from their frigid stay at Saranac Lake, making snow scenes for the newest Pathe serial attraction, when Director-Producer George B. Assd. Exhibitors' Attractions

List Headed by "Hills of Missing Men" a Playgoers Film

COMING attractions announced by Associated Exhibitors include "Hills of Missing Men," a Playgoers' production; "Woman, Wake Up," starring Florence Vidor; a new Leah Baird picture, "Don't Doubt Your Wife"; and "Lady Godiva," adapted from Tennyson's poem.

A new J. P. McGowan feature was released by Playgoers Pictures, January 26th, entitled, "Hills of Missing Men." This is the fourth of a series made by Herald Productions; the others are "Discontented Wives," "The Ruse of the Rattler" and "Reckless Chances." Playgoers says that exhibitors are using these five reelers to splendid advantage and that J. P. McGowan, who both directs and stars in them, is working up a tremendous following among the fans. They are distinctly what might be termed action features and, according to the reviewers, have been designated as of sure-fire audience appeal.

"Hills of Missing Men" is declared to excel its predecessors in the variety and costliness of its settings, and is built around a very unique story, which deals with the efforts of a powerful yet eccentric dreamer to set himself up as absolute monarch over the peninsula which is now Southern California, by cutting off all communications from the North. J. P. McGowan is depicted as the leader of a band of outlaws, whose support is sought for the enterprise. In reality he turns out to be an army officer sent by the War Department to stamp out the insurrection.

The cast of the "Hills of Missing Men," in addition to Jack McGowan, includes Gene Perry, Andrew Waldron, James Wang and Charles Brindley. The female roles are played by Florence Gilbert and Helen Holmes. The production is from a story by John B. Clymer.

Playgoers Pictures state that posters for this feature will be particularly dramatic, and the campaign book of distinct service to the exhibitors.

An advance announcement from Associated Exhibitors states that "Don't Doubt Your Wife," the first feature of a series starring Leah Baird, will be released in March. A sample print has been received in New York, and has met with the complete approval of officials of Associated Exhibitors, who declare that the exhibitors are sure to find it a splendidly successful offering, of distinct box office appeal. Notices from the producers have described "Don't Doubt Your Wife" as a feature which boldly attacks the divorce evil and shows a practical method of its solution. It was directed by James W. Horne, under the supervision of Arthur F. Beck.

Leah Baird plays the wife, Edward Peil the husband and Emory Johnson the "other man." Other principals in the cast include Mrs. Mathilda Brundage and Catherine Lewis.

According to Associated Exhibitors, their forthcoming March feature, "Lady Godiva," will be greeted by more pre-release bookings than any feature they have offered, with the possible exception of Harold Lloyd's "A Sailor-Made Man." Their statement says in part: "The producers of 'Lady Godiva' have made a sincere interpretation of Lord Alfred Tennyson's immortal classic, and the film is a dramatic and romantic spectacle suited for every theatre which boasts that it shows the best in motion pictures."

Florence Vidor's first production for Associated Exhibitors will be a light drama entitled, "Woman, Wake Up." It is a story wherein a young bride finds her husband slipping away from her through his liking for "jazz," and promptly retaliates for his lack of attention by learning to go his jazzy friends one better in everything they undertake. Her husband's best friend is, unknown to him, chosen as her aid in arousing the husband's jealousy. It is said that in no way is this theme treated seriously or heavily dramatic but, on the contrary, is a sprightly piece of humor and psychology, enlivened by punchful subtitles, and set in the very tasteful home environment which characterizes the Florence Vidor productions. It is understood that "Woman, Wake Up" will be presented by Associated Exhibitors in March.

"Peacock Alley" in Demand

Metro Reports Heavy Bookings for Picture Among First-Run Theatres

"PEACOCK ALLEY," Mae Murray's picture of the white ways of New York and Paris, has been booked in the first-run houses of practically every large city of the country, according to an announcement this week from Metro Pictures Corporation, its distributors.

In addition to the first-run houses, contracts have been closed with a number of companies for the picture to be shown over their entire circuits, it is stated.

Most of the exhibitors in contracting for "Peacock Alley," notified the various exchanges that they wished to have the privilege of booking it for extended runs, so confident were they that it would prove a tremendous drawing card at their houses, declares the statement from the Metro headquarters.

Among the first of the circuits to wire in for dates for their entire number of houses were the Southern Enterprise, Wilmer & Vincent, and Finkelstein & Ruben circuits. These three big amusement companies operating in the South, East and Middle West, have all contracted for early showings.

First-run houses where "Peacock Alley" will be shown are the Blackstone, in Pittsburgh; Coliseum, Seattle; Rialto, San Antonio; Walnut, Cincinnati; Columbia, Washington; Valentine, Toledo; Dome, Youngstown; Randolph, Chicago; Dome, Akron; Rialto, Denver; Strand, New Orleans; Park, Boston; State, Los Angeles, and Loew's, Cleveland. In other key cities throughout the country the bookings have been just as heavy and the exchanges are kept in a rush aranging for dates so that the first-run houses may all be supplied, according to Metro.

"Peacock Alley" is presented by Robert Z. Leonard, who directed it for Tiffany Productions, Inc.

Geo. Mann in East for M. P. Utility Corp.

GEORGE M. MANN, vice-president in charge of distribution for the Motion Picture Utility Corporation, the organization representing San Francisco financial interests to support producers making pictures in the Golden Gate territory, is due at the Astor Hotel, New York City, on the first of the month, to arrange for the disposal of product now in the making or to be made by subsidiary companies of the financial corporation or organizations whose productions it is handling.

According to information from the Coast, the Motion Picture Utility Corporation has arranged for the financing of several director's productions and will arrange for their distribution as well.

One of the objects of Mr. Mann's visit is to arrange for the handling of the big super-production of the famous historical-romantic novel "Scottish Chiefs" which will be made by an all-star cast in and around San Francisco starting in about three weeks, at a cost of approximately $350,000.00 and under the business supervision of the Utility Corporation, it is announced. Mr. Mann also has the first of a series of productions made by Director Harry Revier.

Cabanne Editing New R-C Production

After "shooting" several big winter scenes at Lake Placid, Director William Christy Cabanne began cutting and titling his latest R-C special, "Beyond the Rainbow," which is scheduled for release February 19, early this week.

It is said that "Beyond the Rainbow" is one of the most ambitious and pretentious offerings which Director Cabanne has recently brought to the screen.

"Daughter of the Night" Arouses Interest

Exhibitors' interest is being aroused by a picture that L. & H. Enterprises are now putting on the market. "Daughter of the Night" is an historical story of Russia and is enacted in such a forceful and dramatic manner that those to whom it has been shown are predicting for it great success. In order to speed up the action, the feature which in its original form was fourteen reels, has been cut to six and the picture benefited accordingly.

"Bride's Play" Booked for B'klyn Strand

Following a highly successful presentation at the Rialto theatre in New York, "The Bride's Play," starring Marion Davies, will be shown by Edward L. Hyman at the Mark Strand theatre, Brooklyn, the week of February 5th. In addition to the feature picture Mr. Hyman has arranged to present Geraldine Farrar and Wallace Reid in a condensed version of "Carmen," to which has been set the musical score of the opera.

"The Bride's Play," a Cosmopolitan production released by Paramount, was written by Donn Byrne. The picture was directed by George W. Terwilliger and the scenario was prepared by Mildred Considine.

Elks Beauty Winner Makes Screen Debut

The many branches of the Elks lodge are taking great interest in "Shadows of Conscience," the seven-reel American classic being sold on the independent market by Russell Productions, Inc. This interest is occasioned by the presence of the beautiful Gertrude Olmstead, who plays her most important role in this picture.

Miss Olmstead was chosen queen of the Elks' Convention in Chicago in 1920, after a beauty contest for the selection of the sovereign which stirred the entire middle west. The thousands of Elks who had the time of their lives at the whirlwind convention remember the gracious little seventeen-year-old beauty who reigned as queen of the festivities, and have been anxiously awaiting a picture in which she has an opportunity to display her talent as an actress.

"A Wife's Awakening" Scores at Tally's

Tally's Broadway theatre, Los Angeles, concluded its run last week of Gasnier's "A Wife's Awakening," an R-C Picture, with gratifying receipts for the week, according to advices received by Charles R. Rogers, manager of distribution for R-C Pictures. The Los Angeles dailies gave the production and its presentation very favorable reviews.

Loew's State theatre, Los Angeles, has signed for the entire Doris May series, with the current release, "Eden and Return" scheduled for its premiere during R-C Pictures Week, February 5 to 12.

Weiss Returning to U. S.

Max Weiss, President of Adventures of Tarzan Serial Sales Corporation, sailed for New York this week from Paris, France, following an extensive tour of Continental Europe and the British Isles. During his trip Weiss disposed of Adventures of Tarzan starring Elmo Lincoln to Sir William Jury for the United Kingdom.

Burr's Novelty Review Continues Popular

Burr's Novelty Reviews are finding popularity not only in the big picture houses but in the town and village theatres there is a cry for a good short-reel following a feature picture. These short reels, as gotten up by Charles C. Burr, president of the Affiliated Distributors, Inc., are not only novel but topical. The coming film showing the historic battle of Zeebrugge in animated drawings by the famous English artist and naval expert, Dudley Buxton, will be of historical value to every boy and girl of school age, and personal interest to all readers of history. The blocking of the harbor of Zeebrugge, the German submarine nest, by the sinking of the battleship Vindictive at the mouth of the mole has afforded the artist a thrilling subject, which he has taken advantage of and made historically correct.

Publicity Tie-Up for "Rent Free"

"Rent Free," Wallace Reid's latest picture, is to be given unusual publicity. The February issue of The Designer contains the first installment of Izola Forrester's novelette, "Rent Free." Advance stills of the motion-picture are to be used in illustrating the novelette. The first installment of the story will reach the readers of The Designer simultaneously with the release of the picture. The March issue which will contain the second and final installment, will again present scenes taken from the picture itself. The Designer is one of the foremost women's fashion and fiction magazines.

Envoy Pictures to Make Features Abroad

With the announcement this week from the home office of the Envoy Pictures Corporation, at 1520 Broadway, New York, of the increase in its capitalization from $800,000 to $3,000,000 officials of the company made known the new expansion policy. In outlining the new policy it was explained that the company had practically completed arrangements for a number of big super-special productions to be made in Germany in addition to its regular program releases.

Under the enlarged production program the Envoy Pictures Corporation will cover the entire field of motion picture entertainment. The proposed schedule will embrace in addition to the big spectacular features from abroad and the regular program releases, illustrated cartoon news weeklies and a series of Harry Williams comedy dramas.

"Molly O" Wins Praise from Exhibitors

"Molly O," the Mack Sennett special comedy being released as a First National attraction, is not only breaking various house records in every State in the Union, but it has set another precedent, states First National. Probably no picture has ever won so much praise from the exhibitors themselves as this production. Wires from enthusiastic showmen are reaching the First National home office every day, that company states.

First Run Bookings for "The Four Seasons"

Contracts for first runs of "The Four Seasons" are being made in all the major cities of the country by the branch exchanges of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, which is distributing the nature-classic for the Kineto Company of America, Inc.

The interest excited by the pre-release run in New York has spread all over the country, states Kineto. In a few cities the pre-release idea carried out at the Rialto in New York has been duplicated. One of these cities was Baltimore where it played at the New theatre.

Among the prominent theatres that will play "The Four Seasons" in the very near future are Sid Grauman's theatre in Los Angeles and the entire group of theatres on the Stanley circuit in Pennsylvania and New Jeresy, with a pre-release at the New Karlton in Philadelphia.

Select's N. Y. Office Now in Godfrey Bldg.

Announcement is made by the Selznick Enterprises headquarters that the New York exchange of the Select Pictures Corporation has been moved to the fourteenth floor of the Godfrey Building at 729 Seventh Avenue, corner of 49th Street, New York. The newly equipped offices at this address were taken over January 27th.

Rivoli Premiere for "Bugs" Baer Cartoon

"Bugs" Baer, nationally famous humorist whose wise cracks on sports and current subjects are enjoyed by millions of readers of newspapers throughout the country, made his debut to picture patrons this week when his animated cartoons released by Envoy Pictures Corporation were shown at the Rivoli theatre.

The humorist's initial screen offerings went over big with the Broadway audiences.

Screen Talent Sought in Goldwyn-Photoplay Plan

IN conjunction with Photoplay Magazine, the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is about to launch a plan the purpose of which is to secure additional screen talent for its productions. The full details of the Photoplay-Goldwyn Screen Opportunity are to be explained to the motion-picture fans in the March issue of the Photoplay Magazine.

The first choice of the judges, among those participating in the Screen Opportunity, will be given a year's contract to appear in Goldwyn pictures, states Goldwyn, and her transportation and that of her mother to and from the studios at Culver City, Calif., will also be paid for by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. By the terms of the plans laid down Goldwyn will have a three years' option on her services.

Other entrants, in addition to the winner, will be considered for use in Goldwyn pictures, it is stated. Motion picture tests will be made of those selected as the best screen possibilities. The tests will be made at the Goldwyn exchange nearest the residence of the entrant, it is explained, transportation charges of those chosen to be paid by the company.

Christie Comedy Co-operates with Legion

Christie has just finished a comedy for Educational release called "Oh Promise Me," which was made in close cooperation with the Hollywood Post of the American Legion. Many of the scenes were taken in and around the Legion Clubhouse, which is near the Christie Studio, and virtually every male part was enacted by a member of the Legion. Neal Burns has the leading role.

"Stardust" a Big Success

Hope Hampton Picture Pleases Audiences in All Sections of U. S.

BALTIMORE and Pittsburgh are the latest cities to capitulate to the charms of "Stardust," the First National attraction starring Hope Hampton which has met with success in many sections of the country, and which has fulfilled the promise made at its premiere in Louisville, where the management of the Kentucky theatre held it over for a secoond week.

At the close of the showing in Baltimore Guy L. Wonders, the most prominent exhibitor of that city, sent the following telegram to the First National headquarters in New York:

"'Stardust' just finished phenomenal week's business at Rivoli, turning them away at every night performance. Saturday, last night of week's engagement, both box offices stopped selling tickets at 7:45 and hundreds were turned away. Compelled to ask for extra police to keep those waiting in line for a block and a half at the box offices. 'Stardust' unanimously declared a great picture by the press and public, and in my opinion an audience picture that every franchise holder should lose no time in booking to stimulate his business. My personal congratulations to Miss Hope Hampton."

Harry Davis, of the Grand Opera House, Pittsburgh, shot this wire: "Hope Hampton's personal visit to the Grand Opera House, Pittsburgh, and simultaneous showing of her First National photoplay, 'Stardust,' were highly successful from both attendance and entertainment viewpoints. Miss Hampton combines beauty with a delightful personality and possesses wonderful screen possibilities. The large crowds which gathered at the Grand were strong evidence of her growing popularity, and there is no doubt that with the proper stories and presentation she will attain a success equal to that of any other star. Miss Hampton is without question a hit both on and off the screen."

The presentation of "Stardust" at the Regent theatre, Pittsburgh, won this telegraphed paean of praise from James B. Clark, of the Rowland & Clark organization:

"'Stardust' proved exceptional box office attraction. Turned them away at every evening performance. Crowds enthused over Hope Hampton and were much pleased with her artistry. Is picture every exhibitor shoould cash in big."

At the Pastime theatre, Union Hill, N. J., it also enjoyed unusual success and played to such tremendous business on Thursday and Friday that it was brought back for Sunday.

Paramount Names Releases

Feb. 5th Schedule Presents Three of Biggest Pictures for Season

THREE of the biggest Paramount pictures of the season appear on that company's release schedule for February 5. They are Cecil B. DeMille's production, "Saturday Night;" Betty Compson in the Penrhyn Stanlaws production, "The Law and the Woman;" and the special comedy, "One Glorious Day," with Will Rogers and Lila Lee.

Leatrice Joy, Conrad Nagel, Edith Roberts and Jack Mower play the leading roles in "Saturday Night," which was written by Jeanie Macpherson. The cast also includes such screen luminaries as Julia Faye, Edythe Chapman, Theodore Roberts, Sylvia Ashton, John Davidson, James Neill, Winter Hall, Max Fisher, leader of the famous Ambassador Orchestra; Zelma Maja, Betty Francisco, Lucien Littlefield and Lillian Leighton.

The story, which is said to have a wide human appeal, treats of the subject of mismated marriages. A young man and woman, engaged, suddenly break their engagement and marry beneath their station. All four live to regret and repent.

The late Clyde Fitch's fine drama, "The Woman in the Case," was scenarized by Albert Shelby LeVino for Paramount and under its screen title, "The Law and the Woman," presents Betty Compson as its star. Miss Compson's leading man is William T. Carleton, while Casson Ferguson also plays an important role. Cleo Ridgely, former Paramount star, is seen in the heavy role, and others in the cast are Henry Barrows, Helen Dunbar and Clarence Burton.

When audiences see "One Glorious Day," Paramount says, they are bound to declare it one of the most unique things ever seen in pictures.

A. B. Barringer and Walter Woods wrote the story and the latter adapted it for the screen. James Cruze directed the production. The leading parts are taken by Will Rogers and Lila Lee. Allan Hale appears in the heavy role.

"Handle with Care" Off to a Fine Start

The demand for "Handle With Care" by exhibitors who have seen its great exploitation possibilities is cited by officials of Associated Exhibitors in support of their contention that this Al. and Ray Rockett production will be a notably successful offering during the coming months.

Laura Jansen with Palmer

Laura Jansen, for some time a member of the Selznick Scenario Department, and more recently identified with R-C Pictures, has arrived in Los Angeles. Miss Jansen has joined the Palmer Photoplay Corporation on the West Coast.

A Trip to the Coast for "Dollar a Week Men"

NINE enterprising exhibitors are to be given a job by First National. That ought to help relieve the unemployment some. Term of employment: one week or thereabouts. Pay: one dollar a week (That's fifty-two times better than being a "Dollar a Year" man.) Duties: To engage in a trip to the Coast, spend one week in Los Angeles, and meet First National's stars, directors, producers and artists. And have your traveling expenses and your week's hotel accommodations in Los Angeles paid for by First National. Can you beat it?

Now here's how the nine are to be determined upon: Exhibitors participating in First National Week, February 18th to 25th, who conduct advertising and exploitation campaigns in connection with the Anniversary week, are invited to send into the First National publicity department—not later than March 20th, 1922—complete descriptions of their campaigns, accompanied by photographs. To the nine best exploiteers will go the jobs and the trips. Simple enough!

An abundance of advertising paper and accessories have been prepared and shipped to the exchanges to be available without charge to all exhibitors who participate. Three of the temporary jobs will go to managers of theatres seating 2,500 or more; three to managers of houses seating from 1,000 to 2,499; and three to managers of houses with less than 1,000 seating capacity. Applicants must specify in what class they are to be considered.

Don't forget! The dead line for all "dope" to be in is March 20th.

Real Job to Cut "Beyond the Rainbow" Footage

Having completed the filming of his new R-C production, "Beyond the Rainbow," with one of the biggest super all-star casts of the year, Wm. Christy Cabanne has turned his undivided attention to the task of cutting the picture from about fourteen reels to the seven reels in which it is scheduled for release by R-C Pictures on February 19.

The job of reducing the footage is proving far more difficult than was anticipated, owing to the many dramatic sequences and the mystery theme woven into the narrative. Moreover, Mr. Cabanne and his company obtained many beautiful snow shots on their recent trip into the mountains of Northern New Hampshire, and he hesitates to sacrifice any of them to the cause of reduced footage.

The group of players includes George Fawcett, Edmund Breese, Lillian (Billie) Dove, Helen Ware, Diana Allen, Marguerite Courtot, Macey Harlam and Rose Coghlan.

Selznick to Introduce English Star Here

AN early boat from Merrie England will bring to the United States as an important passenger Evelyn Laye, distinguished English stage star, who has been engaged by Vice-President Myron Selznick, of the Selznick Pictures Corporation, to be introduced to the American photoplay public through the medium of Selznick Pictures. The time of Miss Laye's arrival has not yet been definitely set, being dependent upon the completion of English contracts under which she is now working.

While Miss Laye has not previously appeared in this country, she can scarcely be said to be unknown here, since her success has been much too big to be confined to the British Isles. She is one of the acknowledged "finds" of recent years in the amusement profession.

Just now Miss Laye has the stellar role in the big C. B. Cochran production, "The Fun of the Fayre,' which is running at the Pavillion theatre, London. Earlier appearances were as star in "The Shop Girl," which ran successfully at the London Gaiety theatre which has become as famous throughout the British Isles for its beautiful girls as has Ziegfeld with his "Follies" in the United States. Miss Laye also played the title role in George M. Cohan's English production of "Mary," which is still so pleasantly remembered along Broadway.

N. Y. to See Same Story on Stage and Screen

Goldwyn's screen adaptation of Henning Berger's world-famous drama, "Syndafloden," bearing the translated title of "The Sin Flood," will be shown in New York while the stage adaptation made by Frank Allen and produced by Arthur Hopkins is on at the Plymouth theatre, where it is called "The Deluge."

"The Sin Flood" has been seen in a few special pre-release showings in the country, but its first New York screening will take place at the Capitol theatre some time in the near future.

Many R-C Week Bookings

Advance Reports Presage Success of Campaign from Feb. 5th to 12th

THE record number of day and date bookings reported by the R-C sales forces for R-C Week from February 5 to 12, not only guarantees the success of the business drive on which that organization has been concentrating but reflects the popularity of such special week-long events among exhibitors throughout the country, according to Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution for R-C.

Response from the exhibitors has been spontaneous and enthusiastic and almost two weeks before the opening of the R-C Week the number of theatres which have booked a solid week of R-C productions has surpassed expectations, states the R-C home-office.

Considerable impetus has been given the bookings of R-C attractions for R-C Week by the national fan magazine advertising campaign, in which R-C Pictures is reaching more than 8,000,000 readers throughout the country. Double truck adds carrying the story of R-C Week and describing the productions offered for that occasion have already been published in all of the important fan publications.

Of still further aid to exhibitors showing R-C attractions is the letter contest, in which $1,000 in cash prizes will be awarded to persons who write the best description of any R-C production. Still another exhibitor aid to be put into effect during R-C Week is a supply of free advertising accessories to every theatre that books a solid week of R-C attractions. These will include special posters, heralds and other materials to be used to advertising and exploitation the productions booked.

Included in the list of R-C Week attractions are "Two Kinds of Women," starring Pauline Frederick; "Five Days to Live," starring Sessue Hayakawa and directed by Norman Dawn; "Silent Years," directed by L. J. Gasnier; "Eden and Return," starring Doris May and directed by William A. Seiter; "At the Stage Door," produced by Wm. Christy Cabanne and featuring Lillian (Billie) Dove; "Possession," the big romantic and adventure production based on Sir Anthony Hope's famous novel "Phroso" and produced by Louis Mercanton with Malvina Longfellow and a distinguished cast. And many other R-C releases will be available, including Pauline Frederick's big drama in a South Sea setting "The Lure of Jade," Sessue Hayakawa in "The First Born" and "The Swamp," in which he is supported by Bessie Love; Wm. Christy Cabanne's "Live and Let Live," featuring the beautiful Harriet Hammond, and another Cabanne attraction "The Barricade."

N. Y. Critics Praise Arliss

Reviewers Favorable in Comments on New Vehicle, "Ruling Passion"

UNANIMOUS approval from the motion-picture reviewers for the New York newspapers and frequent outbursts of spontaneous applause from capacity audiences at the Strand Theatre, marked the Broadway premier on Sunday, January 22, for George Arliss in "The Ruling Passion," second of the Arliss film productions for United Artists.

"The Ruling Passion" is a picture that will please the most captious," says Gertrude Chase, in the Morning Telegraph. "It is a comedy with a new and delightful plot, and it is George Arliss's newest and most surprising achievement on the screen. He has exchanged his old bag of tricks for an automobile kit and opened the kind of garage that for years motorists have been looking for. In satin knickerbockers George Arliss is impressive, but in overalls he is lovable."

"Once again George Arliss wins the honors and provides the entertainment for those who go to see 'The Ruling Passion,'" says the critic for the New York Times. "On the whole, the picture consists of many bright flashes. Sometimes the flashes come in rapid succession, and whenever they come they are genuinely enjoyable and well reward the spectator. Mr. Arliss is a pantomimist."

"George Arliss by his restrained yet almost inspired acting raises the film comedy, 'The Ruling Passion,' to the point where you feel that the things that happen in it might happen almost around the corner," says the reviewer in the New York Herald. "It is one of the uniquely delightful comedies of the winter, raising Mr. Arliss to the pinnacles of the screen, and providing chuckles for the elderly as well as the young to take home with them."

"George Arliss's acting in 'The Ruling Passion' is of a high order," says Quinn L. Martin, in the New York World. "It is distinctive and finely drawn. There is no opportunity here of making comparisons with others of his profession. Not since his own characterization of 'Disraeli' in motion pictures have we seen a photoplay performance of such really human quality."

Syndicate to Publicize "Leather Pushers"

Through the instrumentality of the United Features Syndicate "The Leather Pushers," the Universal-Jewel-Colliers series of H. C. Witwer's ring stories produced by H. L. Messmore, will receive nation-wide publicity in the leading newspapers of the country. Already eleven dailies have arranged to publish the twenty narratives.

The series first received national publicity in the pages of Colliers, wherein it was featured as being the outstanding literary effort of 1921-1922. Immediately following its release by Colliers, "The Leather Pushers" was published in book form by G. P. Putman and Sons. Arrangements have been completed between Universal and Grossett & Dunlap to re-issue the Witwer stories in a popular-priced edition. illustrated with "still" pictures taken directly from the film itself.

"Four Horsemen" Booked by N. Y. Capitol

"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" will be the attraction at the Capitol theatre, New York. beginning February 5. This great motion picture, a Rex Ingram production for Metro, had an extended run last season at the Lyric and Astor theatres. "The Four Horsemen" will have for company on Broadway another film by the same director, "Turn to the Right," now at the Lyric, adapted from Winchell Smith's and John E. Hazzard's play, which John Golden brought out with record success a few seasons ago.

"THE PRODIGAL JUDGE," which opened at the Cameo, starts with everything in its favor. That it ends in much the same way is largely due to Maclyn Arbuckle. He might very well have been in Vaughan Kester's mind when he wrote his novel of Tennessee and the Mississippi in 1835, for Arbuckle looks as if he were a natural born member of the fraternity of the mint julep. . . . Moreover, he brings to the screen the assured poise and certainty of a well-seasoned player on the stage. He is facile and lovable as the old gentleman who found the world almost too much for him.

"The cast as a whole is excellent. Under the direction of Edward Jose they not only reproduce the authentic atmosphere of the original but catch and relay some of that whimsicality in Kester's work which is often too apt to shrivel under the glare of studio lights. . . . Torrence is one of the treats of the picture, along with the Mississippi River."—NEW YORK HERALD.

Short Subject and Late Feature Reviews

"The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes"

(Two-Reel Individual Episodes—Alexander-State Rights)

THOSE fascinating "Adventures of Sherlock Homes" which have charmed every youth and which carry a wide interest for the mature reader so fraught are they with mystery are probably the most popular form of fiction which has ever been published. Rich in adventurous exploits, teeming with hair-raising suspense, wonderfully picturesque in characterization and charged with keen atmosphere—the Conan Doyle stories of the great London detective and his physician friend, Dr. Watson, are perfect studies in imaginative fiction. Characters following the profession of detectives or law breakers ever intrigue the mind, but "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" outclass them all.

It is a feather in Alexander Film's cap that they have these Doyle stories as screen contributions. Classics of literature, they automatically become classics of the silversheet. The mystery, suspense, vital action, melodrama—these are all intact. The writer sat through four of the stories "The Dying Detective," "The Devil's Foot," "The Man With the Twisted Lip," and "The Beryl Coronet." Each took him back to the days when he was sprawled upon the floor unmindful of other attractions—so eager was he to be absorbed completely in the fascinating exploits of Holmes. The stories have been translated to the screen with remarkable fidelity. Since they were made in London by an English cast, the director has been able to catch the proper environment and atmosphere.

Murder is the base of one episode, a dual life the background of another, theft and revenge the theme of another. And you follow the adventures of Holmes and Watson with the keenest interest. Every thing they do is touched with reality. That's how close the director, Maurice Elvey, has reached the spirit of the printed page. A great deal of the success of the offerings is due to the remarkable impersonation of Holmes by Eille Norwood. Really the resemblance to the figure of the imagination is uncanny. It is much more genuine than William Gillet's characterization. The overcoat and cape, the cap, the pipe, the slenderness of the detective—these little touches are remarkably lifelike. Norwood is Holmes in countenance, personality and conduct. And Hubert Willis fits the picture as Watson, Alexander should clean uphandily with these fascinating stories. If we owned a house we would bill them for specials.—LAURENCE REID.

"Official Urban Movie Chats of the M. P. T. O. of A."

MR. URBAN'S "Official Movie Chat," which is destined to spread the message of the M. P. T. O. throughout the country, proves to be a reel which any exhibitor should be proud to show, even if it had no connection with the national exhibitor organization. The first two issues, which were screened recently for the trade, prove this without a doubt.

The opening reel announces the object of the weekly "Movie Chat"—to keep the public in touch with the art, sciences, industries, travel, historic scenes and worth while phases of life. A declaration of the principles of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners follows. They are, briefly, to encourage the production of clean pictures; to take an active interest in the public welfare; to help, via the screen, to produce good citizens from the growing generation; and lastly, to aid in the re-establishing of a healthy condition throughout the country. After President Harding's message is flashed on the screen, the "Chat" proper begins.

Some of the interesting scenes, for instance, are: views of the linotype machine in operation; scenes showing the beautiful effects produced by various chemicals; a flume for the transporting of logs down an Oregon mountain side; the art of landing a huge salmon from a stream; the reindeer as a domestic animal in Norway, and elephants sporting in the water. These scenes are divided under the heading of "industry," "science," "the great outdoors," and so forth. At the end of the reel there is a "Public Forum"—an invitation to the public to write suggestions and criticisms on the "Movie Chats."

The second of the series does not re-affirm the purposes and principles in full. After a message from James J. Davis, Secretary of Labor, the pictures start immediately. The Eiffel Tower in Paris is shown. Then follows scenes of ice harvesting; of the making of whole wheat bread; a kangaroo boxing with a man; and some fresh air hints for children. The Rotarians send a message at the end.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"And Women Must Weep"

(Robert C. Bruce's "Wilderness Tales"—Released Through Educational Exchanges, Inc.)

MR. BRUCE does not label this series as "scenics" and he is justified in so doing. They are more than scenics. There is present every element that distinguished his past series, but in addition there is something that can be no more definitely characterized than "theme." It is hardly a story, as motion picture folk understand the term. But there are characters who are made personalities, instead of simply walking across a background of lovely scenery. Although there is no plot, there is coherence, and a central thought. It is a story of fishermen—of their laborious work, their risks. It draws, in bold strokes, portraits of these sturdy men and courageous women. And all this against a background of sea scenes which picture the untamed ocean in all its grandeur and all its wild beauty.

The idea is taken from Robert Kingsley's poem, "The Three Fishers." Quotations furnish the sub-titles. Mr. Bruce shows three fishermen putting out to sea. The women folk, two old wives and one young wife, watch them disappear into the blue. A sudden storm comes up. The women watch from the cliff. Then in the morning the bodies are found. "For men must work, and women must weep . . . and the harbor bar is moaning," reads the poem.

Excellent photography, including some silhouette scenes, mark the reel. Mr. Bruce makes the ocean that lures and then destroys, seem very real. This and the remainder of the series, if as well done, should make short subjects which will add greatly to any bill.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Able Minded Lady"

(Pacific Film Company-State Rights)

THERE is genuine entertainment in "The Able Minded Lady," produced largely by the excellent suspense created and partly by the humorous characterizations which are faithfully transcribed to the screen from the Saturday Evening Post stories. It is a simply-made production, with no pretense towards elaborate settings or effects, but which will be satisfactory in any theatre where Western pictures are popular. For it contains an element which is lacking in many Western pictures. It has a story—not the conventional cowboy story, but one which contains distinct characterizations, and not a little heart interest.

Henry B. Walthall is cast in a role that is reminiscent of Will Rogers' cowboy characters He is an easy-going bachelor who works on a ranch for a widow who has already buried three. husbands. She is the "able minded lady," and her scenes with the cowboy contain some humorous moments. There is a second romance between two young people, one of whom is Elinor Field, cast as a city girl sent to the ranch as a means of forgetting a young man who is considered undesirable by her family. The young man, however, follows her to the ranch, posing as a bandit. The audience must take a lot for granted in this development of the plot, but they will be perfectly willing to do so, when there is rich incident to keep them happy. The boob cowboy catches the real villan and, though he has his fingers crossed, must finally capitulate to the matrimonial designs of the "able minded lady."

The feature was directed by Don Gamble, and photographed by Ollie Sellers. Helen Raymond plays the widow in an efficient manner. Mr. Walthall shows that he is not lacking as a comedian, and is responsible for a considerable part of the fun which the feature contains. Elinor Fair makes a very attractive heroine. Length 5 reels.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Miller and the Donkey"

(Aesop's Fables-Pathe)

OLD man Aesop hands out some good advice here which is "Don't take too much advice" when you are in trouble. The same rule applies when there are too many cooks in the kitchen—they might spoil the broth. The aged farmer learns that a circus will pay handsomely for a dancing donkey. He goes out to the barn intent on harnessing the stubborn mule. But a few resounding whacks send him volplaning through the boards. The cat advises him to treat him gently. And the donkey is as temperamental as ever. The dog tells him to harness and drag him out. When he meets a few disasters, a stranger informs him to carry the tantalizing hee-haw. Just as he is walking a narrow bridge over a chasm the farmer loses his balance and the donkey takes a funny spill through space. The final shot reveals the exasperated owner ascending to heaven when the donkey gives him the rebound. The Aesop parallel brought up to date shows an auto owner taking advice from the sidelines on how to start the car. In the end he is seen sitting on a junk heap, built from the parts of his auto. The outfit is for sale. Length ⅔ reel.—LAURENCE REID.

"ONE GLORIOUS DAY"
(Paramount)

Decided Novelty and Cameraman's Triumph

"ONE GLORIOUS DAY" is a decided novelty, utilizing a most unique and satirically fantastic idea concerning spiritism and presenting what is without doubt the cleverest trick and double photography ever attempted in a multiple reel picture. Karl Brown, the camera man, must have "counted until he was blue in the face." Certainly what he has developed stamps him as a genius.

The picture begins with the announcement that in the occult world there are spirits waiting their turn to come to the earth to occupy the body of a mortal, concurrent with the advent of the stork. One of these, designated as "Ek," a mischievous and energetic spirit, is a fraction of a minute late when a baby is born and is left on earth without a body. He wanders about listening to earthly conversations and imbibing worldly information for a time and then when a professor of spiritualism succeeds by an exercise of certain powers, in sending his regularly ordained spirit to a meeting, with his body remaining at home, "Ek" takes the absent spirit's place and as a result the professor is completely transformed as to character. From a mild mannered, shy, "nut" he becomes the opposite, performing all sorts of stunts contrary to his former ways. He beats up the villain who has insulted the girl he loves and who loves him too, although he doesn't know it, mixes in with the gay crowd and makes a great hit with the voters who previously have not taken his candidacy for mayor seriously.

After a strenuous evening, the professor's overtaxed body gives out and he faints. His regular spirit which has been wandering around looking for its body has a chance to resume its rightful place and of course the professor becomes the same old "goof" as before.

However, his evening's metamorphosis has given him a reputation and also been instrumental in properly adjusting his romance, so everybody is satisfied except the society of spiritualists which is scandalized by the reports of his actions and the villains whom he has discomforted.

The picture, as will be imagined, is somewhat slow in getting started owing to its unique story and at times loses its farce comedy tempo but as a whole it is fine entertainment for the discriminating, carrying suspense and action and a marvelous thing from the photographic angles.

Will Rogers as the eccentric professor does a creditable piece of acting and Lila Lee is a pretty heroine.—Length, 5,100 feet.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Who and what is "Ek?" Has it a meaning? Is it the name of a person, place or thingé What's it all about anyway? These are some of the questions fans will ask concerning "One Glorious Day," a new Paramount comedy directed by James Cruze with Will Rogers in the leading role, which comes to the ———— theatre next ————.

The story, which is by Walter Woods and A. B. Baringer, is one of the most unique ever written, while the role of Professor Botts is one of the greatest novelties ever screened. Lila Lee plays opposite Mr. Rogers in the leading feminine role of Molly McIntyre. John Fox plays the mysterious character "Ek," which it is said will be in the nature of a complete surprise for screen patrons. "One Glorious Day" is genuine comedy. Alan Hale plays the villain lover of the girl and other characters of importance are portrayed by Emily Rait, George Nichols and Clarence Burton.

PROGRAM READERS

Ably assisted by several talented players, Will Rogers is featured in "One Glorious Day," a Paramount comedy which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. Lila Lee, dainty and magnetic, is the leading woman. Alan Hale, recently seen in "The Great Impersonation," John Fox, a small boy, Emily Rait, George Nichols and Clarence Burton complete the roster.

SUGGESTIONS

Advertise this as a novelty laying stress on the highly original story and the camera work. Give them the general idea of what it is all about. Hokum exploitation will be good and don't let them get the idea that the picture is to be taken seriously. Also use every effort to make your patrons see the show from the beginning even if you have to lock them out at certain times to do it. Use stills plentifully and capitalize "Ek." A teaser campaign based on "Ek" should go great. Unless Will Rogers and Lila Lee are more than ordinarily popular don't star them. Sell the picture as a novelty or even as a "freak."

CATCH LINES

"Ek" was a spirit that no bootlegger ever handled, but which made Ezra Botts cut up like a two-year-old.

Ek was a mischievous and wayward spirit among a whole universe of good little spirits and when he arrived on earth just two jumps behind the stork things began to hum. See Ek and Will Rogers in this novelty of the season—a picture that has never been equaled for originality and uniqueness.

"NANCY FROM NOWHERE"
(Realart-Paramount)

Conventional "Slavey" Story with Bebe Daniels

BEBE DANIELS has returned from light comedy to comedy drama, and evolved from a mischievous society girl to a Cinderella.

"Nancy from Nowhere" is not heavy drama or complicated. It is simply a "slavey" story without a novel feature. Running true to form from reel to reel, it is not a picture which will excite much comment. One knows as soon as the millionaire hero makes his appearance that the little orphan nobody will somehow be whisked from her sordid and dull surroundings into a world of fancy motor cars, liveried servants, and elaborate evening gowns. Her manner of getting into this enchanted land, and the length of time it takes her, is the only suspense which can possibly be built up. For the sake of contrast, Nancy's drudgery is emphasized. She is beaten and abused by her mistress and made love to by the disreputable man of the house.

All sorts of coincidences are made use of to bring her into a better world. She has been having a romance, developed at great speed, with a young millionaire, and when she runs away and steals a hitch on a passing auto, she finds herself at the door of this very young man. The family is away, the young man takes her in, and the housekeper dresses her. Then the family comes home and induces the young girl to make the conventional sacrifice. She will ruin the boy's life, they say, if she remains. So Nancy is packed off into a big limousine and returns to the little shack to receive more beatings and have more love made to her. The millionaire's son, however, changes all this. He braves the paternal wrath, tosses aside his society fiancee, takes Nancy out of the arms of her persecutor, and the local minister is brought from his bed to finish the picture.

With Miss Daniels in the stellar role there are many conventional scenes made appealing by her winsome personality. In the running away escapade, for instance, Nancy takes such clothes as she can carry, and wears the remainder so that she is inside of three or four dresses. She is unpacked like a china doll from its wrappings.

During her brief stretch of life spent in luxury, Miss Daniels wears pretty clothes with her usual charm. In rags and tatters she presents a unique appearance to her admirers. Her leading man is Edward Sutherland, whose chief asset is his youthful appearance. Vera Lewis and James Gordon are the cruel pair for whom Nancy drudges. They are splendid types.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bebe Daniels is the star of "Nancy from Nowhere," an appealing screen story, rich in heart interest, which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. Miss Daniels is a screen player who worked her way from the ranks or unheard of picture artists to the heights of stardom. She has an attractive personality which has won her many admirers in every city and town in the country.

"Nancy from Nowhere" provides her with a piquant story which is admirably suited to her talents. She plays the role of an orphan asylum nobody who has lived, since her earliest childhood, with a slovenly family. Into her life there suddenly enters the son of a wealthy family. They are in love; they want and need one another, when poor little Nancy is persuaded to go back to her old life, rather than spoil the career of the man she loves. But sometimes oil and water can mix, and sometimes a millionaire's son can be happy with even a poor little nobody.

"Nancy from Nowhere" is enacted from a capable cast which includes Edward Sutherland, Vera Lewis, James Gordon, Myrtle Stedman and Alberta Lee. The picture was directed by Chester M. Franklin, and adapted to the screen by Douglas Doty. It has been hailed as one of the most delightful screen comedy dramas of the new year. It will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————.

PROGRAM READER

Young millionaires are not supposed to go about the country advising young ladies to run away from home. But then Nancy, the girl in the case, was an ill-treated orphan who had known but few happy days in her young life. So Jack Halliday became a philanthropist, and found it a lot of fun. Almost before he knew it, he was in love. But rich mothers do not want to see their young and handsome sons married to Nancys from Nowhere. So they packed Nancy off—persuaded her to return to the life from which she had come. But persuading Jack was a different thing altogether.

Bebe Daniels has a new type of role in "Nancy from Nowhere," the delightful screen comedy drama which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. The public has seen her as the mischievous "good little bad girl," but never as a raggedty, taggedy maid—a little Cinderella drudge, who finds her fairy godmother is none other than a handsome young rich man's son. "Nancy from Nowhere" is a story by two women, Grace Drew and Kathrene Pinkerton. They have provided a delightful human document, which in Miss Daniels' hands, becomes one of the most entertaining screen comedy dramas of the new year.

"THE PRODIGAL JUDGE"
(Vitagraph)

Vibrant Personalities and Rich Atmosphere in This Picture

"THE PRODIGAL JUDGE" will be remembered as a picture for its clearly defined characterization and its rich and quaint atmosphere. Certainly no feature reaching the screen this past season has contained more vibrant personalties than those of the Judge, his friend, Solomon, the appealing Betty, who looks as if she might have stepped from an old miniature; Bruce, Cavendish, Hannibal, Yancy and the other memorable figures of Vaughan Kester's romance of the old South befo' the war. The story is not one that can be easily caught by the camera. For one thing it carries such a wealth of background and incident that only the written word could properly convey. However, the sponsors have done a praiseworthy task in arranging the salient episodes and bringing them forth with appropriate atmosphere.

There may be a note of confusion cropping out here and there as you follow the adventures of a dozen characters, each one of whom, apparently, has a definite place in the plot. To leave one out would be cutting the thread to pieces. The narrative must contain them all in order that the story interest may not be lost. "The Prodical Judge," however, is dominated by a single character in spite of the other sketches. And here is where Macklyn Arbuckle comes into his own with one of the richest studies ever flashed on the screen. He has seemingly stepped from Kester's book, his personality harmonizing perfectly with the figure of the imagination. His mobile expressions are gems of pantomime. He loves his liquor. He is true and loyal to his friends.

There is a melodramatic flavor to the story which has to do with the vicious guardian of the heroine kidnapping her when she refuses to entertain his advances. Her moment of happiness is short when her husband is killed, but the youthful lover and the Judge and Solomon work harmoniously together to bring order out of chaos. The picture is remarkably appealing in its atmosphere, the director, seemingly, going to extreme length to catch the proper setting. The placid river, the quaint boats, the manse, the faithful retainers, the costuming, the spirit of the old South—these are admirably reproduced with quaint and charming color. It is like peering through an old album and then following it up with some old prints of a bygone age. Incident seems to be the point upon which the director has fashioned his story. There is a wealth of it—some of which is not easy to follow. It possesses humor. Macklyn Arbuckle sees to that precious value. The derelict Judge is a character study that dominates this story from beginning to end. The romance or rather the array of romances are rich in local color and quaint sentiment. It is a picturesque story even if dramatic unity is missing. Nothing has been spared to make it a colorful adaptation. Painstaking care has been spent to visualize the South of another age. —Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Prodigal Judge," Vitagraph's spectacular special production of the old South of 1835, which will be shown at the ———— theatre next ————, was made by an all-star cast under the direction of Edward Jose. Many of the scenes were taken in Virginia and parts of the South where the story is laid. Every effort has been made, apparently, to reproduce the foliage and surroundings described in Vaughan Kester's stirring novel of the same name upon which the picture is based. The story abounds in quaint, picturesque and lovable types who appeal both to the heart and the sense of humor.

"The Prodigal Judge" is easily adapted to the screen. The offering presents many big scenes—some of a spectacular character. And there are many opportunities for powerful acting. A pretty love story is connected with the feature and what is more rare, a wonderful friendship between two men, the Judge and Solomon Mahaffy, which provides not only some of the humor, but tender scenes that pull at the heart-strings. The role of the Judge is portrayed by Macklyn Arbuckle, and that of Mahaffy is in the hands of Ernest Torrence. Jean Paige who made such a hit in "Black Beauty" has the leading feminine role.

PROGRAM READERS

What is considered by many as the greatest picture of the year is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in "The Prodigal Judge," the Vitagraph feature which presents an all-star cast including Macklyn Arbuckle, Ernest Torrence and Jean Paige. The story is by Vaughan Kester and is laid in the South of 1835. It has been translated to the screen with all its vital parts intact. The charming atmosphere—the fragrant backgrounds, the fine romance, the warm friendships, the hundred little intimate scenes as well as those which are more spectacular —these are all found in this highly entertaining picture. The book enjoyed a huge success, and as a picture we feel certain that it will duplicate its former popularity. Mr. Arbuckle is a distinctive type as the Judge. He is the perfect character as Kester drew him.

"WHITE HANDS"
(Wid Gunning, Inc.)

Good Audience Picture From Every Angle

AUDIENCES know what to expect from Hobart Bosworth whenever he graces the screen with his forceful personality. "White Hands" introduces him again in one of his characteristic roles—that of a brutal sea captain whose regeneration is slow but sure, once he encounters the refining influence of an appealing girl. The author's name is sufficient guarantee of its story interest. C. Gardner Sullivan has written a subject which abounds in the necessary elements to intrigue the imagination. The title, the remarkably good atmosphere, the lighting, the forceful acting of Bosworth and the polished villainy of Robert McKim, the melodramatic incident, the fast-moving action suggesting good suspense—these are the qualities which are certain to please audiences everywhere.

The hero journeys into the desert with his retinue and encounters a girl, the last white survivor of her people. She is the daughter of a missionary who perished from fever. The captain sees in her an object of lust but she conquers him for the moment through her courage. The hot sands are everywhere and the caravan takes up its slow journey to the coast in order that the heroine may find a boat which will take her back to civilization. Once the seaport is reached the melodramatic touch takes on a vivid form. Such capable actors as Bosworth and McKim see to that. The latter is proprietor of a vicious dive and in his keeping are a young American, the victim of poverty and drugs, and a tiny white girl called Peroxide. When the girl sees the destitute condition of the youth her sympathy is aroused. When the brutal captain sees the little child approach him unafraid he realizes his sin. Straightway his redemption takes form and ultimately he has to fight for his new friends and for his very life against the dive-keeper and his vicious henchmen.

It is a story which touches a sympathetic chord, not only for its juvenile appeal, but because it shows the regeneration of a brute—a sure-fire plot. If you don't believe it look at the box office success of Bosworth's other pictures—most of which have been based upon an identical theme. Lambert Hillyer, the director, has collected some first rate atmosphere and the lighting effects, the fights, the intimate scenes within the dive when love triumphs—these are all effective in giving "White Hands" an appealing quality. The titles are well worded and perfectly timed to give value to each scene accompanying them. Elinor Fair plays the heroine with admirable restraint. Her pathos is well registered. The picture because of its title, star, and author suggests good exploitation talk. It travels straight ahead to its climax with little waste of scene.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

"Hurricane" Hardy ..... Hobart Bosworth
Leon Roche ..... Robert McKim
Ralph Alden ..... Freeman Wood
"Grouch" Murphy ..... Al Kaufman
Peroxide ..... Muriel Frances Dana
Helen Maitland ..... Elinor Fair

By C. Gardner Sullivan.
Directed by Lambert Hillyer.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"White Hands," a vivid story of the great Sahara Desert and the romantic North African coast will be offered at the ———— theatre next ————. This story is from the fertile pen of C. Gardner Sullivan, whose list of screen successes are many. It is a thrilling tale of adventure in the African sands, having to do with "Hurricane" Hardy, the tyrannical captain of a trade schooner. He encounters the last white survivor of a missionary band in the desert and with the cunning of a snake he plans to take the girl as his own. But Fate takes a hand and guides the girl to safety and also brings about Hardy's regeneration.

The story abounds in tense scenes of action and suspense. Hobart Bosworth has an unprecedented opportunity for keen dramatic acting in the role, and he takes advantage of every situation as Hardy. His support consisting of Robert McKim and Elinor Fair is excellent. The production angle of the picture is above reproach, the story abounding with realistic scenes whih suggest appropriate atmosphere. Lambert Hillyer, long an experienced director, has constructed a drama which thrills with its note of adventure.

PROGRAM READERS

A drama of white-heat passion. A two-fisted Hobart Bosworth story in which this virile actor outdoes himself—that is "White Hands," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This vigorous drama from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan is certain to interest and entertain everyone in search of lively adventure. Romance, thrills, passion, fear. White hands, brutal hands, loving hands, threatening hands, caressing hands—the hands that rock the cradle and the hands that rule the world. See this picture of a powerful romance—a picture of stirring drama steeped in adventure and action. A picture of tense realism. "White Hands" is the type of picture in which you feel keenly alive. It stirs the pulse and quickens the mind. Don't fail to see it.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a big audience picture written by one of the most skillful authors of the screen C. Gardner Sullivan. After you get through exploiting him and the star—for both are worthy of special advertising notices on billboard and in the papers—after you are through with this angle, then turn to the "guts" of the plot. It carries crisp action of the most adventurous kind. Play up that it is tense with realism. Emphasize that Bosworth always gives one his money's worth. Bill it as a two-fisted picture. Dress up your lobby with the stills, the cuts and mats obtainable at the nearest Wid Gunning exchange. Get out slides and run them in advance. Get the 24 sheet announcing "A woman alone, on the edge of Sahara in a nest of crime."

CATCH LINES

A powerfully vivid and vigorous drama—packed with thrills, rich with romance. See Hobart Bosworth in "White Hands."

Hobart Bosworth, the most virile actor on the screen, is coming in his most vivid picture. See "White Hands" by C. Gardner Sullivan.

"KINDRED OF THE DUST"

(R. A. Walsh—First National)

Splendid Direction; Acting as Good; a Varied Appeal

MR. WALSH'S latest Coast-made production gives certain proof, if any was needed, that he not only knows direction and the necessary touches for audience appeal, but that he understands and appreciates the value of originality of treatment. It is this fact that makes "Kindred of the Dust" a rare piece of entertainment. It stands forth, not as a Northwest drama, but as a colorful romance. As such it will be hard to equal. Sharing honors with Mr. Walsh for the success which should greet this feature, are first of all the players. The photography also is exceptional. And not a title is hackneyed. They catch the spirit of the romance, but they do not gush with conventional phrasing.

No better story could be selected to feature Miriam Cooper than "Kindred of the Dust," by Peter B. Kyne. Without the aid of studied close-ups she finds the pathos of her part; she makes it rich with tender emotion. Her scenes with Ralph Graves are finer than anything she ever made under Mr. Griffith's direction. W. J. Ferguson runs a close second for the acting honors, in a character role. This veteran does not allow a solemn moment while he is before the camera. Ralph Graves is the leading man, capable throughout, and especially impressive in his heavier moments. Lionel Belmore as the stern Scotchman is true to type and acts excellently.

"Kindred of the Dust" is primarily a love story. "Nan" returns to the logging camp with a nameless child. Her childhood sweetheart alone believes in her, understanding that she has been deceived. His father tries to separate them, and the girl agrees to make the sacrifice. But only her presence can save the boy when he is dying of fever. The action continues. The two are married and the son disowned, and the remainder of the story shows the weakening of the father, and the reception of the young couple into the noble old family.

"Kindred of the Dust" is Mr. Walsh's masterpiece; it shows Miriam Cooper at her sentimental best; it contains splendid photography, including a novel "focus-out" instead of a "fade-out." Mr. O'Donohue's scenario allows for a varied appeal. There is sentiment, humor, rugged exteriors, a fine thrill, tense suspense and a fight realistic enough to startle anyone. It is a well-rounded—high-class feature—every class of audience can appreciate it.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A film version of Peter B. Kyne's story, "The Kindred of the Dust," picturized by R. A. Walsh, is announced as the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. "Kindred of the Dust" was one of Mr. Kyne's most successful and popular novels, and he has a long list of successes to his credit.

Miss Miriam Cooper, who will be remembered by consistant picturegoers for her work in "The Birth of a Nation," "The Honor System," and more recently, "The Oath," "The Deep Purple" and "Serenade," is the featured player in "Kindred of the Dust." She is supported by a capable cast including Lionel Belmore, Ralph Graves, Eugenie Besserer and others.

"Kindred of the Dust" is, perhaps, one of the most romantic love stories which has ever been seen on the screen. But it is a love story laid in the logging country of the north. It tells the pathetic tale of a girl deceived and later outcast by the village gossips. The son of a wealthy man loves her—loves her better than the wealth he leaves for her. It is the type of clean love story that enthralls all from the youngest to the oldest. It is the highest type of screen entertainment.

The picture will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days. The management is confident that it will be among the most popular features that has been shown at the ———— theatre this season.

PROGRAM READER

"Nan of the Sawdust Pile" was the village outcast. Because she returned to her home with a nameless child, the village spurned her. They never knew of the man who deceived her and deserted her. Only one in the little logging town befriiended her. He was the son of the town millionaire. Theirs makes one of the sweetest love stories ever seen in screen romance. The story is "Kindred of the Dust," one of Peter B. Kyne's most successful novels, and the picture was directed by R. A. Walsh, one of the best known of motion picture directors who has already produced "The Oath," "The Serenade" and "The Deep Purple." Featured player is Miriam Cooper, who was starred in these other productions, and will be remembered for her work in "The Birth of a Nation" and other leading pictures.

"Kindred of the Dust" will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————. It is a picture which the management takes pleasure in announcing, for it has been pronounced by critics to be one of the most entertaining and touching stories of romance and adventure that has reached the screen.

CATCH LINES

Peter B. Kyne's stirring romance in picture form. Miriam Cooper, the dark haired beauty of the screen, directed by R. A. Walsh, photodrama creator of the highest class.

A story of the logging camps of Oregon. Romance and adventure combined in a delightful picture.

"TRUST YOUR WIFE"

(First National)

Conventional Triangle Theme Presented With No Variations

THERE are no variations attached to this conventional triangle theme which forms the background of the Katherine MacDonald picture, "Trust Your Wife." In fact it goes back to the oldest conception imaginable — the jealous husband, the trusting wife and the wealthy philanderer. The feature was shown in conjunction with a Zane Grey story and the latter appeared to the writer to win all the plaudits. Perhaps this is due to the obvious development of this hoary theme. You can see the outcome from the minute the adventurer is introduced. The "scare-head" title will doubtless bring them in. Really it serves more in teaching a lesson than the drama itself. For in the first place it is difficult to reconcile yourself to a husband who at the supreme test refuses to trust his wife. That he afterwards admits his mistake does not bring him any sympathy.

The central figures come from the Middle West to New York, the young architect intent upon raising the necessary money to make him rich. The man from Wall street is interested in the project because it means placing him in the atmosphere of the home with the wife the real magnet. There is no vital action displayed. Every scene is cut and dried and mapped out in advance. The contrasts are sharp. The wife is trusting, slightly coquettish with strangers, exceedingly fond of her husband and to all appearances happy and healthy; the husband is rather suspicious of his spouse because of her beauty. When his scheme fails to materialize he becomes a brooding figure. The magnate is an overbearing self-centered individual except where women are concerned. And this story is interesting only through its contrasts. It is "Paid in Full" and a hundred others done over with the big scene a climax where the husband mistrusts his wife for appearing unchaperoned with the other man. The story is told on a single key.

The woman keeps an appointment with the philanderer aboard his yacht. He feels sure of his power once the boat leaves the dock. But in the meantime she convinces him that his attitude is wrong, and straightway his conscience is awakened and his regeneration is complete. When the vengeful husband would kill the interloper and accuse his wife, it is the wealthy interloper who informs him of her faith. These wives who give up so much sacrifice for their husbands are deserving of better mates. The picture is adequately staged and the acting of Charles Richman as the magnate is suggestive of the human wolf in sheep's clothing. Miss MacDonald looked lovely in the close-ups. "Trust Your Wife" is slow of action and scarce of incident, but the title and the star's personality will doubtless act as magnets.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Margot Hastings.....Katherine MacDonald
Dick Hastings.....David Winter
Slater T. Holcomb.....Charles Richman
Claire Bodai.....Mary Alden
Helene, the maid.....Miriam MacDonald

Adapted from Harry S. Sheldon's play "Conscience."
Directed by J. A. Barry.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Katherine MacDonald, the American beauty of the screen, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in her latest feature entitled "Trust Your Wife," an adaptation of Harry S. Sheldon's play, "Trust Your Wife." The theme of this picture is based upon the eternal triangle and the tragedies which ensue when husbands and wives do not place trust in one another. Miss MacDonald gives a splendid characterization of Margot Hastings, the bride of a young western architect who goes to New York to put over a money-making scheme on a "shoestring." The couple take an expensive apartment and the husband seeks to interest Holcomb, the financier.

The latter is much more interested in Margot than he is in the business scheme but he promises to advance Dick the necessary money. The latter finds himself involved in financial difficulties—all of which have been planted by the scheming Holcomb so that he might intrigue the wife. But she awakens Holcomb's conscience and is instrumental in bringing her husband around to a state of mind where he is willing to have implicit trust in her. The picture is filled with dramatic scenes and is well acted by the star and her capable assistants, Charles Richman and David Winter.

PROGRAM READER

Trust your wife to want to see "Trust Your Wife" at the ———— tomorrow. Trust your sweetheart, if you're single, too. This vital story portrays a girl who dared the New York idea and beat it. It shows two men the strength of a woman's faith and why you should TRUST YOUR WIFE. Sharp against her husband's denunciation came the defense of the other man. "You fool—you are not worthy of a good wife." What had happened that he should defend her? She had dared everything for her husband—and he refused to believe her sacrifice. Come to the ———— tomorrow and see the American Beauty, Katherine MacDonald, in her latest picture, "Trust Your Wife." It's a story of a reawakened conscience and reassured love.

SUGGESTIONS

This is an eternal triangle story of husband, wife and other man. State that the wife had dared everything for her husband and that he refused to believe her sacrifice. Teaser ads would be good exploitation if worded with the title. Bill the picture as a dramatic one revealing the charm, talent and loveliness of Katherine MacDonald. You might state that Miss MacDonald is Ex-President Wilson's favorite actress—the one he desired most to see when visiting the motion picture screen. Use catch lines in your copy. Play it up as a domestic story bound to interest every young married couple or those contemplating marriage. Mention that Charles Richman is in the cast. The title lends itself well for snappy advertising.

CATCH LINES

Three A. M.—and later than that, too, before the wife knocked at the door. Her husband opened it; and she faced him determinedly. What she had done had been for him. See "Trust Your Wife," a story of a woman's sacrifice.

"TWO KINDS OF WOMEN"

(R-C Pictures)

Pauline Frederick Scores in a Western

IT may seem strange to picturegoers to discover Pauline Frederick in a Western. That she is able to give color and personality to the character of a breezy ranch owner goes without question. One naturally expects her to shine in any portrayal. Indeed, he star makes "Two Kinds of Women" more vital than it would ppear with a less capable actress. The story is one of conflict etween this girl, her champion, a rough and ready cowboy, or, ather, horseman, and the villainous henchmen who are the secret ools of a rich lumber company whose object is to undermine her roperty so that she would sell for a fraction of its value.

There is some good incident established when this Eastern girl rrives on the ranch and determines to manage it in her own way. he owns two-thirds of the ranch in association with a wealthy Easterner who appears later on the scene and becomes the uncon- cious tool of the discharged foreman. The boys take exception to his Eastern girl bossing them around. And it isn't until she gives hem a display of horsemanship that most of them accept her as a worthy employer and good fellow. The crooked foreman is dis- harged on the spot and the cook in the ranch house is thrown out odily by a rough champion of the heroine. The plot then takes up he complications with the villains determined to embarrass her in very way possible. Interspersed with the intimate scenes are a roup of marvelously beautiful long shots—one in particular showing lake silhouetted against the distant mountains.

The heroine fits up the interiors of the ranch-house like a Fifth venue drawing room. Which is in good taste if you remember that he is a product of the effete East. A counter-plot introduces the ther owner arriving with some of his society friends and he comes nder the domination of the crooked foreman. The love interest s merely suggested, but it comes into the open when the new fore- nan discovers that his ideal can bedeck herself in the manner be- itting society. He expresses his love in a crude manner and is umiliated over his lack of refinement. The big scene has the eroine kidnapped by the villains and the hero rescuing her from a nountain cave after a day or two of hardship and starvation. The villains are duly punished and the girl, out of gratitude, shows her ove for her faithful foreman. The picture is a colorful Western even though it goes over the beaten track in its development. There s a big assortment of characters all of whom are interpreted by a worthy cast that comprises Jack Curtis, Otis Harlan, David Winter, Charles Clary and Eugene Pallette. The exteriors are marked by good photography and the tempo of the story is adequate enough to keep one interested. The leading male role is played by Tom Santschi in his customary vigorous fashion.—Length, 5 reels.—Laur- ence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A story that is said to bristle with thrilling incident and glow with the warmth of romance is Pauline Frederick's latest picture entitled "Two Kinds of Women," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This story is based upon Jackson Gregory's novel, "Judith of Blue Lake Ranch," and gives to the emotional star ample opportunity to flash her abundant talent. Mr. Gregory is famous for his stories laid in the West and this particular vehicle is in his best vein. "Two Kinds of Women" introduces Miss Frederick as part owner of a cattle ranch. She hustles out West, suddenly appears at the ranch, discharges the fore- man and takes the management of the big place in her hands. From that moment on things begin to happen with dramatic swiftness, and how Judith with the help of a mysterious cowboy checkmates the ex-foreman's attempt to ruin the ranch makes an absorbing adventure story. The star is supported by a large cast of com- petent players that includes Tom Santschi, Charles Clary, Dave Winter, Eugene Pallette, Billy Elmer, Jack Curtis, Lydia Titus, Otis Harlan and many others.

PROGRAM READER

Brilliant in characterization vivid with the life of the open country of the West, "Two Kinds of Women," with Pauline Frederick in the stellar role, stands forth as one of the really big productions released during the last several months. The picture is an adaptation of Jackson Gregory's novel, "Judith of Blue Lake Ranch," and gives to the emotional star a splendid vehicle for the expression of her abundant emotional talents. The picture offers several thrills, good incident, and a fine romantic flavor. It also presents one of the largest and most capable casts ever assembled—a cast that includes Tom Santschi, Charles Clary, Dave Winter, Jean Calhoun and many others. "Two Kinds of Women" will appear at the ———— theatre next ————.

Have you a system of winning and holding the fair sex? See "Handle With Care." If you ask Dad and he ought to know, he would say to you "Handle With Care." Perhaps your system is all wrong.

"HANDLE WITH CARE"

(Rockett-Associated Exhibitors-Pathe)

Intimate Study of Domestic Life Is Interestingly Told

HERE is a domestic comedy of a satirical turn, which, because of its abundant humor and its well arranged situations, which have been developed to get the most from ever scene, is bound to be entertained by the public as a highly inter- esting offering. The Rockett brothers emphasized the human note before with "The Truant Husband"—a sparkling little domesic comedy. "Handle With Care" shows that they still possess a sense for comedy expression without eliminating the little humanities. Some may say that the humor is stressed too often to make it ring genuine. In our opinion the picture because of its constant sugges- tion of satire shows up the little incidents which make for trouble in matrimonial circles. Treated too seriously one would be inclined to accept it as a sermon in the art of maintaining a home. One can take it now as pure entertainment or as a lesson in morals.

Because of the straining of credulity in the plot the humorous twist really saves it. This little theme reveals a wife very much neglected by her busy husband. So far it is quite conventional. Unhappy over her loneliness she decides to get a divorce. In the background are a quartette of former admirers. The busy husband agrees to grant the divorce provided that the erstwhile swain proves himself worthy. There is a wholesome development of the plot which twists and turns with comedy touches and intimate sketches of romance and sentiment. It happens that the suitors prove unworthy. The husband keeps on pretending that he is eager for a divorce, but in the end capitulates to her charms. The usual reconciliation follows and all ends happily. Business is kept for the office and romance for the home.

There is a fine lesson suggested for impressionable women who are inclined to harbor resentment over the lonely hours spent at home. They are apt to weigh matters a good deal before they take the big plunge into the divorce court. The comedy-drama is spirited in treat- ment—the taming of the wife being rich in polite satire. This is not to say that the serious side of the affair is neglected; on the contrary, the pathos of the situation is brought forth on several occasions. The picture is as human as "The Truant Husband" and should establish the Rocketts as producers striving for the slices of life. The cast includes Grace Darmond, Harry Myers, James Morrison, Landers Stevens, William Austin, William Courtleigh and Patsy Ruth Miller. All give creditable performances. The picture sug- gests a deal of novel experiment in exploitation.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

It is said that picturegoers will appreciate "Handle With Care" for many reasons. First, because it is the story of a beautiful and popular woman and of men's efforts to manage her—a subject always popular and full of appeal for men and women, young or old, married or single. Second, it is pictured in a frothy, satirical sparkling vein. Third, it is acted by a cast that is headed by the beautiful Grace Darmond, one of the best dressed women identified with the screen, and includes Harry Myers, James Morrison, William Austin, William Courtleigh and Patsy Ruth Miller.

The picture may rightly be called a comedy-drama and is writen by Charles Belmont Davis. Miss Darmond plays a popular debutante who marries a man who knew all about law and nothing of love. After two years, during which he pays more attention to business than to his wife, she decides that any one of her ex- suitors would have made a better husband than David. He agrees to give her a divorce if she can get any of the old lovers who had sworn willingness to die for her, to live up to their rash promises. He proceeded to handle her with care. The picture is charmingly staged and acted.

PROGRAM READERS

Here is a novelty romance which contains an original twist to the marriage angle and tangle. It carries a new slant on the ever interesting topic of woman. "Handle With Care" which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— is a pic- ture to cause giggles, gossip and gayety about the methods of managing the female of the species. Who knows? Is the rough or gentle lover successful? Which one do you think would die for her? The cave man, the gentle lover, the brainy boy or the wealthy suitor? The lover said "Treat 'em rough." The husband said, "Handle with care." Who is right? When you see this sparkling comedy-drama, you will have a good laugh. Bring your better half. If you'd remain a loving pair, see "Handle With Care."

SUGGESTIONS

A series of pertinent questions of a comedy nature would be a good angle for advertising this feature. These can be expressed in the style of "Is woman in love with love, or in love with her husband," or "Do you tell women every- thing or just make love to them?" A snappy line of teaser ads would stimulate a desire to see this domestic comedy-drama on the part of your patrons. It is a picture for plenty of stunt and idea exploitation. Throw-away tags, tie ups with stores, daring bally-hoos and novelty prologues are suggested. The cast is a clever one and is headed by Grace Darmond. Others well known are James Morrison and Harry Myers. So feature their names. Bill the picture as a merry comedy-drama.

CATCH LINES

How would you go about managing the ladies? Would you use a whip or a good strong cave-man arm or would you give her sweet flattery? See "Handle With Care."

"SMILES ARE TRUMP"
(Fox)

Railroad Story Is There With the Action

"UP AND AT 'EM" would be a much better title for this picture than "Smiles Are Trump," which suggests a more or less pleasant afternoon with Pollyanna. To say that it is entirely logical is comparable to hunting for the needle in the w. k. haystack. It strains credulity to the breaking point. But in the array of fast-moving events which pile upon one another with the speed of well managed circus acts you forget all about the far-fetched incident. You look only for action and more, and then some more. Frank L. Packard knows how to write a railroad story insofar as filling one with stirring incident. This one adapted from his "Tempered Steel" hits the bull's-eye for action which outdoes the serial for compact punch scenes.

There isn't a single wait. That doesn't seem to be Maurice (Lefty) Flynn's way. Built for work, possessing a magnetic personality, willing to smile when danger looms up as black as death—he gives this vivid melodrama a great deal of its appeal. He makes his tasks look easy—probably because he is big and strong enough to get out there and deliver the goods. And, believe us, he has to deliver them here. First we find him acting as assistant paymaster and entrusted with the envelopes to pay off the section gang on yonder division. It is a frame up that he will be compromised as a thief and beaten up in the bargain. Flynn doesn't hesitate. He rushes around the end and through the middle before the signal is given. And the bad men bite the dust. Yet don't stop to think that a romance must intrude eventually. Two reels have gone by and Lefty is busy knocking the crooked paymaster for a goal. The latter is rendered hors-de-combat with the emphasis on the "bat." He succeeds for a time in casting suspicion upon his discharged aid by making out to the town up the road that the hero has departed with the payroll.

Flynn rides away via the "blind baggage" route and bobs up to save the president of the road from a beating. The daughter takes an immediate interest in him and when the detective comes to arrest him he rides away in a speeding gasolene handcar. The subsequent thrill discovers the crooked section foreman switching him upon a blind track—the end of which is a jumping off place into space. The hero sees his danger and leaps a healthy distance to safety. Is he badly bruised? Well no—just slightly damaged. Then comes the punch scene—a vivid race between the crooked villains in one engine and Flynn, the girl and the president in the other. When the speeding locomotives are abreast the star jumps to the other and beats up the crooked foreman. We might add that he is amply rewarded with love and a good job for life. The picture is crammed with smashing, crashing, two-fisted action. Flynn qualifies for the most sensational type of serial, with the punch he puts into this feature. The customers are going to cry for more like it.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Frank L. Packard, whose railroad stories are considered the last word in exciting adventure, is the author of "Smiles Are Trump," the Fox feature adapted from his novel, "Tempered Steel." It comes to the ———— theatre next ———— as a starring vehicle for Maurice Flynn. The new Fox star made a favorable impression in his first feature and in "Smiles Are Trump" he will establish his popularity upon a strong foundation. The role gives him plenty of opportunity to flash his athletic talent acquired upon the football field. It also presents him with moments which reveals him as a natural born actor. As Jimmy Carson his duties are to punish the crooked paymaster of the division and bring him to justice. Jimmy is given many unpleasant tasks such as paying off the men on the section gang. It is the duty of the crooked paymaster to palm Carson off as the thief in order to hide his own scheming work. Action calls upon Flynn to reveal his athletic ability. The outstanding features are a series of rescues and a mad race between two locomotives—one of which is carrying the villains, the other the disciples of virtue. "Smiles Are Trump" is filled with exciting moments and there is always a big sample of suspense which keeps pace with the stirring adventure.

PROGRAM READERS

What is described as one of the best railroad pictures ever seen is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— when the new Fox offering "Smiles Are Trump" is shown. This is an adaptation of one of Frank L. Packard's famous railroad stories. It is the typical action story and gives Maurice Flynn, the new Fox star, ample opportunity to flash his athletic ability. Mr. Flynn, who has achieved fame upon the football field, has in the role of Jimmy Carson, a fighting figure. It is the kind of role which instantly wins favor because of the fact that there is something doing every minute. "Smiles Are Trump" begins with a roar, and crashes through as genuine entertainment.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture being an adaptation of a story by Frank L. Packard, author of "The Miracle Man," it would be a good idea to capitalize this fact. Again Mr. Packard is famous for his railroad stories. And this picture is a railroad story. Play it up as a smashing, crashing, adventurous, actionful story with Maurice Flynn as the star. This actor won fame upon the gridiron as a full-back for Yale. And he knows how to score touch-downs in the picture field. Stills of him would prove attractive and any mention of his football prowess wuld help a great deal. Bill it as an exciting picture—filled with action and suspense. A snappy catch line campaign would be a good angle.

"MAN TO MAN"
(Universal)

Physical Action in Carey's Latest

A SIMPLE melodrama based upon the conflict between a persecuted hero who comes into his inheritance and a vicious villain determined to harass him at every opportunity is "Man to Man," Harry Carey's latest release. The opening scene is well planted to show Carey a derelict at some retreat in the South Seas. Word reaches him that he has inherited a prosperous ranch and after adopting a native child he sails for San Francisco. From this point onward the story lives up to its title. Carey is hardly settled in his new home before the vicious "heavy" played in dastardly fashion by Charles Le Moyne attempts to frustrate his plans. There is a heart interest touch added in the hero's pal who is represented as blind. And it is this figure who acquaints the ranchman with the plotting schemes of his enemy.

The love interest is introduced with a coquettish touch, the heroine humiliating Carey for daring to express an opinion or two. "Man to Man" is a type of picture which could get along very well without any romance. Whenever it does intrude you feel as if it was lugged in for the sake of balance. What is important is the wealth of physical action. The first fight comes when the boys are seated around the mess table and Le Moyne bites the dust in a regular old-fashioned brawl. The villain bides his time and attempts to steal a snug fortune secreted in the house. Carey surprises him and gives him another terrible beating when he knocks down the blind man for interference. This story is not rich in variations. But to its credit let it be said that it carries some remarkable long shots. One in particular reveals a gray soft focus of droves of cattle grazing on a mountain side. Again when the stampede is reached in the climax the spectator is treated to a marvelous array of interesting scenes. The director has caught the maddened steers coming straight into the camera. He has placed the camera at a dozen angles. Rear views, side views, long shots, close-ups and what not multiply rapidly before your gaze. It is Carey's task to reach the frightened beasts before they stampede over the cliff. A huge grass fire is started and the steers turn in their course. The big punch which carries out the force of the title finds Carey and Le Moyne fighting hand-to-hand in the caves and crevices of a rocky cliff. Here the director has brought forth some good shadow photography as well as some effective lighting. It all suggests good suspense. The element of physical action is ever dominant.—Length, 5,629 feet.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Man to Man" is the title of Harry Carey's newest picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This is an elemental story of personal conflict—a conflict born from a grudge. The hero, a derelict in the South Seas, is acquainted with the news that he has inherited a wealthy ranch. So he comes home. Arriving there he finds himself the object of suspicion by the vicious foreman of the ranch. The latter is discharged but he returns to make things unpleasant for the hero. When he insults a helpless blind man, it is Steve, the hero, who champions the unfortunate victim and administers a healthy punishment. The villain, not to be outdont in his desire to harass Steve, comes back to steal a snug fortune secreted in the house. The blind man interferes and is struck down. And so Steve renews his gruelling battle and finally subdues his enemy after a severe trial. The enemy is not finished. His next task is to rustle cattle and he has them stampeding but Steve with the aid of the girl saves the precious steers. And the ensuing scene discovers the two men fighting again—this time in secret caves and nooks of the cliffs. This picture is marked for its array of action scenes and remarkable samples of photography. Harry Carey gives a good performance, and he is ably assisted by Charles LeMoyne and Lillian Rich.

PROGRAM READER

It came right down to a battle of man to man. And the upholder of the law conquered. He had much to contend with. He had been railroaded to prison on trumped up evidence. And upon his release he found himself a derelict. Returning to civilization he suddenly discovered that he was wealthy. And because he was a stranger in the camp the vicious forces attempted to embarrass him at every opportunity. What did he do? Well he stood his ground. He gave no quarter in his attempt to live up to the law. He fought and conquered—but only after severe trials. Come to the ———— theatre next ———— and see "Man to Man," a vigorous melodrama—a vivid picture of the West—showing a great deal of physical action. Who is the star? Well, who could be the star but Harry Carey? So come early and see a he-man picture.

SUGGESTIONS

This Harry Carey picture is marked for its physical action. Why not emphasize this note in your advertising copy. The title suggests that it is a he-man picture. You can mention that it offers a full hour of crisp melodrama of the fast-moving variety and that it offers a good thrill in several of its scenes. Play up the remarkable photography. Emphasize that it is of the same high order as "The Fox" when it comes to measuring out action and suspense. A good prologue can feature a ranch house constructed of compo-board and appropriately painted—with the boys eating or singing. The title is a good angle and should be played up in teaser ads and through sheets of the 24 brand. A catch line campaign would stimulate interest.

CATCH LINES

It was a fight of man to man. He gave no quarter. He fought with his fists. See Harry Carey in the action story, "Man to Man."

"THE LAST TRAIL"
(Fox)

Vivid Western Remarkable for Its Action and Suspense

TO see this vivid Western with all the interest creating elements running neck and neck is to feel a genuine thrill tickling the pulse. It carries everything to make you sit on the edge of your seat. Action in volumes, and ever-increasing suspense. And if this were not enough there is a vein of mystery attached to the figure of the stranger whose identity is not disclosed to the spectator. You think for three or four reels that he is the famous outlaw, "The Night Hawk," because he prefers to keep silent regarding his mission. He is suspected and because of his mysterious entrances and exits executed with quickness and dispatch—he is always fascinating.

This Zane Grey story is about the most vivid ever recorded by the camera and this is taking in consideration the William Farnum offerings of a few seasons ago. There is good story interest, well drawn characterization and enough incident to satisfy a dozen Westerns. The opening scene reveals this mysterious rider upon whom a reward is placed for his capture, stepping into the hotel and taking life nonchalantly. Everyone is eager to share the big prize but he eludes them easily and gracefully. Yet there is a punch as big as Jesse James ever measured out when he was defying the law. He rides away on a pinto pony. And this pony is the only sure sign of identification. He escapes, to be harbored by the heroine who resides far up a mountain side in the immediate vicinity of a huge concrete dam. And here comes the elemental issue.

The contractor is in reality a villain. He has built this dam to profit by its poor workmanship. And the subsequent scenes are given up to his chagrin in seeing his sweetheart entertain the advances of the Stranger. The hero is captured and imprisoned but escapes in mysterious fashion. Meamwhile there is counterplot revealing incident after incident near the dam. The real outlaw is caught by the engineer who, realizing that things are breaking against him, attempts to encourage the girl to flee with him into Mexico. But the Stranger intercedes and finally his identity is penetrated. He is a government inspector sent to the dam to investigate the construction. The engineer succeeds in dynamiting the dam. And the final scene sees a replica of the Johnstown flood with the Stranger, the girl and the villain riding like mad to the valley below to warn the villagers. The pent-up waters come rushing down, taking everything before them. It is a remarkable shot of real action balanced with some first rate miniature shots of the flood-swept valley. The director has kept it moving at vigorous pace—each element well balanced throughout.

Maurice Flynn makes a real hero of the Stranger, playing his part with abandon and athletic enthusiasm. Wallace Beery is in there giving reality to his villainous action, while Eva Novak enacts the hero with creditable spirit. The atmosphere, the locations, the photography, the punch, the acting and story interest make "The Last Trail" a true top-notcher. They were sitting up in their seats at the Academy.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Last Trail," one of Zane Grey's celebrated novels, has been adapted to the screen by Fox as one of the specials of the year, and will open an engagement at the ———— theatre next ————. It is a story virile in plot, sensational in situation and fascinating in incident—a story that "screens perfectly." In the sustained mystery attaching to the work of a solitary outlaw it holds an engrossing interest for the spectator up to the final climax—which is startlingly effective in a scene showing the blowing up of a great dam and the sweeping away of a village by the flood.

"The Last Trail" unfolds one tense scene after another—all of which greet the spectator with fast-moving action. The element of suspense is ever dominant. The romance is unusual in its development. The picture is a typical Zane Grey offering. Which means that it carries tremendous story interest. In the cast are Maurice Flynn who, as the Stranger, gives a splendid performance—one marked for its virility, courage and deft shading, Eva Novak as the heroine and Wallace Beery.

PROGRAM READERS

You know what to expect in a Zane Grey story. You know that his stories are crammed with the most striking kind of action—that there is plenty of crackling suspense, that the characterization is unique—that there are any number of startling incidents. The Fox feature, "The Last Trail," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— is adapted from Zane Grey's dramatic novel of the same name. It is a smashing, crashing picture filled with tense scenes and dramatic climaxes. Don't forget that the biggest scene in this super-special is the bursting of the great concrete dam and the destruction of a distant village as a result. This picture is packed with so many thrills that you cannot count them. But keeping pace with action is a clever romance. In the splendid cast are Maurice Flynn, Wallace Beery and Eva Novak.

CATCH LINES

He mounted his horse with the intent of warning the country-side of the approaching flood. Did he beat the mighty torrent? See "The Last Trail."

A smashing, crashing, stirring, moving, dramatic picture is "The Last Trail," adapted from the novel by Zane Grey. Don't miss it.

"ACROSS THE BORDER"
(Aywon- State Rights)

Conventional Western Carries Good Incident

WHILE there isn't noticeable any novelty in this Western yet it carries a sure-fire brand of action calculated to please anyone who likes to see hectic fights, snappy horsemanship and the rescuing of a damsel in distress. "Across the Border" is Big Boy Williams' latest feature and it is a fitting companion piece to "Western Firebrands." Certainly it keeps moving even if its incident is along orthodox lines. The atmosphere is particularly well suggested. The sage-brush country is there with a vengeance just like a Remington painting. Somehow this suggestion of background rings more genuine than the usual scene of mountains and cliffs. The long shots embellish the plot and bring it out as a picturesque feature.

The plot, itself, is cut from the pattern which discovers a hero rescuing the girl and being under her suspicion as a desperate character. The story opens upon this hero surprising a gang of desperadoes and rescuing one of them from certain disaster. For this generous act he is made a member of their gang, the emblem of which is a green band worn around the forearm. Naturally the girl sees it and the result is—suspicion. The interludes are filled with typical cowboy touches—such as fights and arguments in the ranch-house—a few wild rides over the burning sands—and a stirring climax in which the hero is beset on all sides by the husky villains before he is able to rescue his sweetheart. Many of the outlaws don't recognize him yet the chief conspirator forgets his duties because of his passion for the girl. He finally tries to put over a pleasant surprise, disguised as the sheriff, but the heroine's father penetrates his identity and the story is over.

The picture relies upon its fast-moving action for success. The romantic vein crops out here and there to fill in the lapses, but the chief support of the story is its incident. "Across the Border" may be catalogued as average entertainment. Yet on the credit side let it be stated that the atmosphere is the best that has been recorded in some time. Again Big Boy Williams enacts his role with picturesque touches. He knows how to fight and also how to ride. He is not a camera hero. Therefore his work rings more genuine than if he was recruited from an actor's club on Broadway. Patricia Palmer is an appealing heroine and her "clinging-ivy" type of acting stands in good contrast to the star's portrayal.—Length 5 Reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Big Boy Williams
Patricia Palmer

By Charles R. Seeling.
Directed by Charles R. Seeling.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature picture at the ———— theatre next ———— is "Across the Border," a vivid Western written and directed by Charles R. Seeling and starring Big Boy Williams. Mr. Seeling will be remembered as the author of this star's recent releases, and it is said that "Across the Border" is up to the standard which paved the way for the star's popularity. The plot revolves around a daring cowboy who surprises a gang of robbers and proceeds to save one of them from disaster. Thinking him a good fellow they make him a member of their secret society. Since the emblem of this order is a green stripe around the arm, the girl who discovers it around her lover's arm believes him guilty. While on her way to the sheriff she is captured by the outlaws and taken to a deserted cabin which stands on the border of four states.

The ensuing battle is a thrilling one as the cowboy hero undertakes to rescue her. He has to fight the entire gang and succeeds in effecting her release only to be captured in the end by the sheriff. There is a surprise in store for them as well as the audience when it is discovered that the sheriff is the leader of the gang. The girl's father reveals his true identity—he being a government agent. Thus the hero proves his innocence. The picture carries typical action and atmosphere.

PROGRAM READER

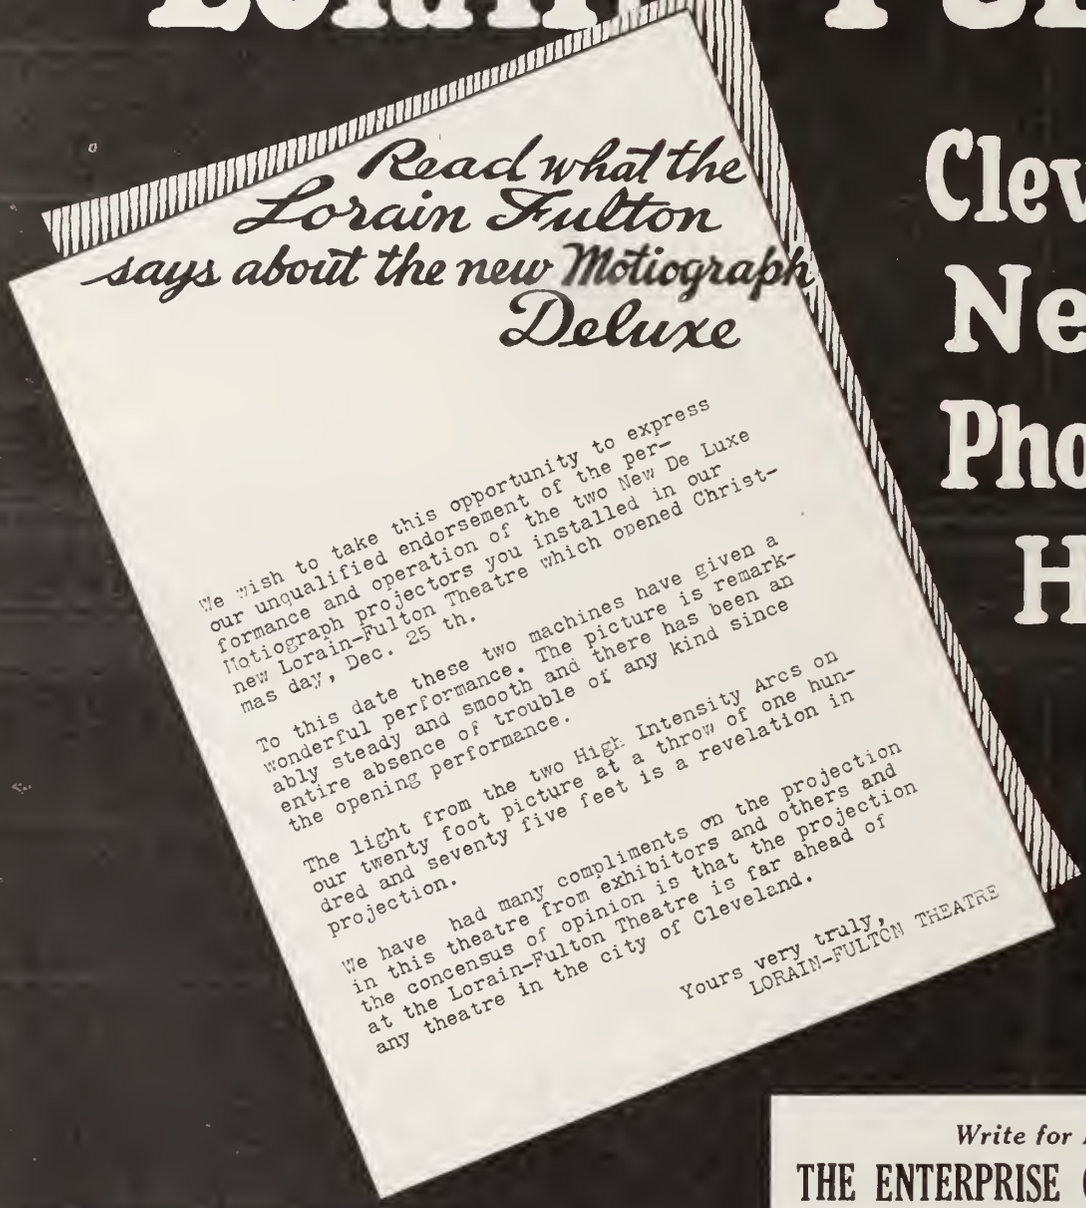
A vivid, vital, stirring, romantic adventure story of a courageous cowboy is "Across the Border," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— as a starring vehicle for Big Boy Williams, the cowboy actor who made such a favorable impression in his earlier releases. It is a tale of a girl in distress who is rescued by the hero even when she suspects him to be the leader of a gang of desperate outlaws. The action pilots the players through many hazardous exploits—action which reveals typical Western atmosphere and incident calculated to provide a healthy sample of suspense. The romantic element is well emphasized. Big Boy Williams is the type of actor who endears himself to the picture fan. Possessing a likeable personality and keen for adventure, he makes the hero a vigorous figure indeed.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a vigorous western which is certain to entertain all the patrons in search of stirring adventure. Bill it as a he-man type of story—which, while not offering anything new—yet carries enough elements to entertain anyone for the hour. Mention the star's name and capitalize on his past features. He has gotten across through his appealing personality and his sincerity to enact all his roles with creditable fervor. Use stills of him and state that he is a newcomer to the screen. Place emphasis upon the fact that he is a skillful rider—that he cannot be surpassed in his horsemanship. Patricia Palmer, the leading woman, should be well known to your steady patron. Use her personality and popularity for good display. Talk about the action, the fights, the crisp action.

CATCH LINES

See "Across the Border," a picture of the West. Action a-plenty. And keen suspense. Thrills, rescues and fights. See this vital and vivid picture.



See Big Boy Williams, the cowboy star, in his newest Western entitled "Across the Border," a picture of action and suspense.

He rescued the girl and fought like a demon. Whoopee! Come and see the rollicking melodrama, "Arcoss the Border."

Read what the Lorain Fulton says about the new Motiograph Deluxe

We wish to take this opportunity to express our unqualified endorsement of the performance and operation of the two New De Luxe Motiograph projectors you installed in our new Lorain-Fulton Theatre which opened Christmas day, Dec. 25 th.

To this date these two machines have given a wonderful performance. The picture is remarkably steady and smooth and there has been an entire absence of trouble of any kind since the opening performance.

The light from the two High Intensity Arcs on our twenty foot picture at a throw of one hundred and seventy five feet is a revelation in projection.

We have had many compliments on the projection in this theatre from exhibitors and others and the concensus of opinion is that the projection at the Lorain-Fulton Theatre is far ahead of any theatre in the city of Cleveland.

Yours very truly,

Suggestions for Lighting Various Parts of the Theatre

Eventually Illumination Will Be Applied With Greater Ingenuity or Skill Securing Delicate Effects

By A. L. POWELL, Edison Lamp Works

In the first two articles of this series, respectively, the methods of obtaining and the effects of colored light were discussed. We are now at the point where we can begin to make some practical use of the principals which were outlined.

Colored light has a large field for producing purely decorative effects in the entrance, foyer, lounge and auditorium itself. It can be applied in a broad general way or delicately with delightful contrasting touches.

General lighting in color can be effective in controlling our emotions, while the special color lighting attracts our attention and appeals to us by its novelty.

By general lighting we mean the uniform illumination of the entire room, obtained in the same manner and with the same fixtures that would be used for "white" light. We have shown that certain colors depress us, others excite and others are restful. Advantage should be taken of these qualities.

How do you want to influence your patrons? At the entrance you wish to attract the attention of the passing public, stimulate their desire and have the theatre stand out from its surroundings. For this you need a high intensity of fairly brilliant illumination. The light from the Mazda C (gas-filled) lamp has a predominant yellowish tone, is inviting and warm and color modification is unnecessary here. Of course, the unshielded filament is too bright to be visible and some diffusing medium (opal glass globe) must be used to eliminate glare which is annoying.

At the entrance the intensity of light provided will depend upon the competition of surroundings. In New York, for example, extremely high illumination is often demanded under the marquee and at the entrance, in some instances running to over one hundred foot candles. This is obtained by studding the beams of the marquee with bare diffusing bulb lamps and having high wattages Maza C lamps in diffusing globes at frequent intervals. In other communities a lower intensity will produce the same effect as the standard of surrounding illumination is of a lower order.

Looking Into the Future

Mr. Powell, in the third of his series on "Colored Lighting for the Motion Picture Theatre," points out the probable course along which lighting methods will be carried in the future. Comment is made on the present practice of studding huge fixtures with colored lamps so that the fixture becomes the center of attraction. Also the attempt is made to point out that in the future more delicate subtle effects will be secured. Mr. Powell believes that the motion picture theatre will undergo the transition that spectacular lighting of all sorts has experienced. The beautiful lighting effects obtained at the Panama Pacific Exposition are indicative of what we may look forward to when a really sincere study has been made of lighting.

Then, again, a study of the lighting is necessary to insure the comfort to the patrons as they enter from the brilliantly illuminated marquee or entrance of the lobby into the relatively dark auditorium. If we accustom our eyes to a high intensity of light and then suddenly pass into a much lower intensity of illumination the change is unpleasant.

By following the various principles and suggestions that are being outlined by Mr. Powell in this series it is quite possible for the progressive exhibitor to perceive the changes that would benefit his theatre. Lighting is to-day one of the most important factors in the theatre and as this subject is further studied it will steadily become of more importance. The exhibitor should never miss an opportunity of improving any part of his house, especially as in this instance, where good taste and judgment will produce the desired results at little cost.

The pupil of the eye is of course contracted when subjected to this high, bright illumination and unless the foyer is fairly well lighted, it will appear very dark by contrast. The eye requires a certain period of time to accommodate itself to changes in intensity. We must therefore, gradually reduce the brightness of illumination as we proceed from the entrance to the auditorium, in order that the picture may be view in comfort. In attaining this end, it seems desirable to provide a moderate intensity of about five foot-candles in the foyer. A golden yellowish tone is attractive. The hangings and wall decorations should be planned with due consideration to this yellow illumination, in other words, the fabric should be examined under the light from the lamp before it is finally selected. Under yellow light, a deep blue appears green slate, a red appears orange, a green, yellowish green and so on. It is therefore possible to enhance the decorative value by the proper combination of color, or to materially distort the appearance.

In the lounge, a still lower intensity of illumination is desirable, from one to two foot-candles, and a reddish amber tint is quite appropriate. Here the special lighting effects, which will be taken up at a later point, can be applied with good results.

In the auditorium it is quite feasible to provide sufficient general illumination for patrons to find their way to the seats and even read the programs without interfering with the appearance of the picture. Intensities in the order of .2 foot-candles at the rear of the house and .1 foot-candle at the front meet these conditions. Bright light sources are disastrous if comfortable conditions for viewing the picture are desired, and the indirect systems of illumination are of especial service here. There are many sides of the question which are outside of the province of this article, but from color considerations alone, blue or green general lighting is restful and quieting.

In many of the larger houses, elaborate systems of colored lighting are installed. Huge clusters of lamps of pure color are visible and the lighting fixtures themselves rather than the lighting effect, become the center of attraction. The novelty appeals, but this method of illumination is scarcely subtle enough to endure. Eventually light will be applied with greater ingenuity or skill and delicate effects, rather than an obvious crude method, will come into use. Light will be used in connection with

Looking down the long spaceous lobby of the Imperial theatre, Asheville, North Carolina

The Imperial theatre has all the seating layout on one floor permitting excellent projection

Asheville's Latest Theatre Imperial One of Carolina's Most Beautiful

Striking Effects Secured Through Details and Color Scheme

Asheville, N. C., can now boast one of the prettiest motion picture theatres in the territory, for the Imperial opened on Monday, January 2, to a packed house.

The Imperial seats twelve hundred and ninety-eight people, and is sponsored by the Southern Enterprises, Inc. This firm, or corporation has a reputation for good houses, and the Imperial will add lustre to that reputation.

The theatre has a fine location, in the heart of the best business section of the city. The color scheme is a soft creamy tint and the outer lobby with its polished brass railings, the brass-and-plate-glass of its modern up-to-date box-office and the specially designed lobby-frames, give just a hint of the attractive interior.

There is a big marquee, plentifully studded with electric lights. The artistic molding on the outer lobby is of cream, with a shade deeper for the medallions.

Inside the spacious lobby is tiled in black and cream, the walls also cream, and the numerous lobby-frames are of polished brass. There are half a dozen beautiful standing lamps, of polished mahogany with golden-yellow silk shades. Down the center of this lobby are placed half a dozen square black and white boxes holding growing plants, and also a quantity of potted plants scattered about the lobby add an attractive note.

The doors, opening from the lobby into a corridor from which one enters the theatre proper, are curtianed in a transparent material that is of a rich brown color, in harmony with the cream-colored walls.

At the right of these entrance doors is the ladies' room, one of the most artistic and complette in the Southeast. This room is quite large, with cream-colored walls, and a pile carpet of rich, soft brown. The furniture is mahogany—great over-stuffed divans, easy-chairs, and rockers, upholstered in mahogany-and-brown brocaded velvet. Opening out from this sitting-room is a lavatory that is a marvel of shining tile and nickel-plate, where there are plenty of mirrors, always fresh towels, and a maid in constant attendance on the comfort of the feminine patrons.

Below this ladies' room, and further down the black-and-whitte tiled corridor, is a men's smoking room, similar to the women's, but paying attention, of course, to masculine comforts.

The auditorium of the theatre has four entrances, all opening from the corridor. The carpet here is of brown, and the seats are of the latest wooden model, without upholstering. The walls are the same prevailing cream-color, the ceiling, ornamented with cream-colored moldings, is of washed gold. The "cove" or indirect system of lighting is used, three primary colors as a base, and by their various blendings, most impressive effects are gained.

At either side of the theatre are big fire-exits, large enough and properly arranged to empty the house in a very few moments. On either side of the stage, and overhead, are the radiators—covered by an ornamental grill-work.

The orchestra pit at present accommodates seven musicians, but is arranged in such a way that it can easily be adapted for a larger number. A Robert-Morton Pipe Organ has been installed. This organ is of the double-manual construction and was installed at a cost of approximately $10,000. Jack Lewis is the organist under whose manipulation the big organ was given its try-out.

The draperies of the stage are of royal blue and gold.

The stage is large enough to accommodate prologues, or special acts, but at present the policy of the house will be strictly motion pictures, with an occasional vocal selection of particuar merit.

The projection booth is an ideal one, in which the comfort of the projectionist has not been overlooked. Two Simplex machines have been installed.

Mayor Gallatin Roberts, Rev. Willis G. Clark, and Curtis Bynum spoke during the special dedication ceremony, which began at eight o'clock and lasted well over two hours. Rev. Dr. Clark spoke of the great need for clean pictures, and moral entertainment.—PEARL GADDIS.

Newman Manufacturing Company's new home

Montreal to Have New House

Montreal, Quebec, is shortly to have another new and attractive moving picture theatre. This is the Plaza theatre which is being erected by the Independent and United Amusements, Limited, of which Mr. Ernest Cousins is the president. This company now controls five local moving picture theatres, including the Strand, Regent, Moulin Rouge, Belmont and Papineau. The two last named are large new houses which have been in operation for about a year.—GLADDISH.

Invests $125,000 in Plant

In preparation for a general resumption of business and to take care of orders expected, the Newman Manufacturing Company, 717 Sycamore street, last week invested approximately $125,000 in the former plant of the Gibson Art Company, 416 and 418 Elm street, the sale being made through William Reehl, real estate broker.

Officials of the company expect, with the advent of 1922, 100 per cent increase in production facilities. Its present staff consists of 78 operatives. This number is to be increased to 160 as soon as the plant's equipment is installed.

Motiographs for New R. & R. American Theatre

The one thousand seat R. & R. American Theatre, recently opened at Bonham, Texas, is the equal if not the superior of any theatre in a city of one hundred thousand, and contains within its walls all the latest devices for the comfort and entertainment of its patrons.

The R. & R. organization gave particular attention to its projection room installation with the result that the pictures are unusually bright, steady and of unusual depth. A battery of new Motiograph De Luxe machines is the principal equipment of the projection room itself, which is of large dimensions, being 12 x 16 feet with high ceiling. A separate room is provided for the resistance devices, while the ports are so arranged that spot lights and animated prologues can be handled without interfering in any way with the projectors.

A Gardiner Velvet Gold Fibre Screen with a special optical system, installed under the personal supervision of R. D. Thrash and C. K. Goss, together with the mercury arc rectifier and an emergency resistance device, complete the projection equipment.

Messrs. Robb and Howley report that many patrons have complimented them on this feature of the projection.

Capitol Theatre, Davenport, Iowa, Artistic Masterpiece Costing $750,000

Equipped With Most Modern Ventilating, Heating and Cooling System Permitting Comfort Under All Conditions

One of the most magnificent motion picture theatres in the middle west is the Capitol of Davenport, Iowa, one of the string operated by A. H. Blank of Des Moines, Associated First National original franchise holder.. In every particular it is conceded to be an artistic masterpiece and one of the finest theatres between Chicago and San Francisco. It was erected at a cost of $750,000.

It is constructed of white enamel brick and stone, and the interior resembles in many respects the Capitol in Washington, from which it gets its name. The main floor and one balcony have a total seating capacity of 2,400.

On entering the stone lobby one is captivated by its striking beauty and stately architecture. To the right a marble stairway leads to the mezzanine floor and a large rest and lounge room, fitted with reading lamps, writing desks, and overstuffed davenports and easy chairs, upholstered in ivory and gold fabric.

From either side of the mezzanine floor stairways lead to the balcony, off which are retiring rooms for men and women, and even a play room for the kiddies equipped with slides, hobby horses, trains and almost every other kind of toy for their amusement. A lounge and reading room also occupy the space to the left of the theatre entrance from the lobby.

The auditorium is a visual delight, the color scheme of ivory and gold enhancing the luxurious vista. Three mural paintings can be seen in the dome, which is supported by six Colonial pillars. The organ and piano, both being finished in ivory, are in box-like compartments on each side of the orchestra pit.

The Capitol is equipped with the most modern ventilating, heating and cooling systems and is comfortable at all times. A Moeller organ with four manuels, a grand piano and a twelve piece orchestra furnish music in keeping with the

Successful Opening for Kingsbridge Theatre

The Kingsbridge theatre, Kingsbridge Road, New York City, opened January 26 to a capacity house. The house has accommodations for 1,600 persons and is so constructed to permit excellent projection. Joe Hornstien of Howell Cine Equipment made the projection installation. The Simplex machines have Peerless Arc Controllers, the power being supplied by a Westinghouse generator, controlled through a special panel board. To insure good clear definition of the picture the Kollmorgen Snap Light Objective Lenses were used in conjunction with a Gardiner Gold Fibre screen. National Carbons are being used in both the projection and the new design of Bruckert Spot Lamp. The projectionists operating this outfit speak very highly of the excellent results they are obtaining and the ease with which the installation can be handled.

Charles A. Goldwyn, owner, is exceedingly well satisfied with the outlook in general, his house so far playing to steady capacity.

Ventilating

What preparation are you making looking toward the comfort of your patrons during the warm weather of the coming summer?

This is the psychological moment to take up ventilating problems and the time in which you should secure specifications and prices for installations to be made during March and April.

Motion Picture News is in a position to give you some very valuable advice on this subject if you will write and let us know your requirements.

New Theatre for Homer, Minn.

With "The Old Nest" as the premier attraction, the Homer Theatre at Hibbing, Minn. was officially opened late last month. The Homer, which is said to be one of the finest in the state, was constructed by Percy R. Webster at an approximate cost of $50,000.

A theatre party celebrating the opening of the theatre was given by Mr. & Mrs. Webster at which all the ladies were presented with roses. John Gaymen of Hibbing made the opening address.

Equipped with every modern appliance that makes for comfort and convenience of patrons, the Homer is a model small town theatre. The seating capacity is 400. Blue and gold are the colors used in the interior, with harmonizing draperies of blue silk plush. Harold Larsen of Minneapolis decorated the theatre. A Bartola organ is one of the features of the house.

The operating booth which is fitted with two Power's cameragraphs is said to be thoroughly complete with latest modern improvements. The Standard Theatre Equipment corporation, Minneapolis furnished the equipment for the theatre.

Projectionist Has Miraculous Escape in Washington Disaster

UNION Moving Picture Operators throughout the country have cause to be both proud and grateful concerning the miraculous escape and heroic rescue work of Brother James Hamilton, who was the projectionist on duty in the booth of the Knickerbocker Theatre, Washington, D. C., when the roof of the building crashed through on Saturday evening, January 28th, resulting in a death toll of more than a hundred persons who were part of a fashionable audience gathered to witness a performance of "Get Rich Quick Wallingford."

Hamilton's life was saved due to the location of the projection booth, which had been added on the outside of the building after completion.

On the lower floor of the theatre two apartments were added to the original building and these were occupied by the families of the house manager and of the janitor. Above these was built the brick booth, approximately 10 x 12 feet, projection being effected by cutting through the two-foot fire wall of the building into the auditorium.

Scarcely five minutes before the crash of the roof on its death-dealing fall through the theatre Hamilton had left the rewinding room, which was located in the rear of the balcony midway between the floor and the ceiling, and had re-entered the projection booth to begin the second showing of the feature film.

Hearing the deafening noise caused by the collapsing roof and balcony, followed immediately by the cries and groans of the injured, Hamilton peered through an opening in the front of the booth and witnessed the terrible scene on the orchestra floor. With great presence of mind he immediately shut off the power on the projector and made his way through the intricate mass of wreckage to the street, carrying the film with him.

Once on the street Hamilton assisted in hastily rigging up an emergency lighting system to be used in exploring the debris of the disaster and in heroic fashion brought out from the ruins several of the dead and injured, making several return trips into the house at the peril of his life.

Hamilton, who is a charter member of the Washington, D. C., local, was reticent in discussing the part he played in the rescue work following the tragedy and particulars were supplied over the long distance telephone by an official of the I. A. T. S. E. and Moving Picture Operators' Union located in Washington.

Dear Sirs:—

I have been waiting some time to receive my membership card and now that I have it I feel like one of the "boys," I am working on my fifth year in the game, thus not a novice. I am enclosing some of my appliances which have been constructed by myself. I noticed in the Dec. 31st publication a motor rewind constructed by Bro. Dynes, I am sending a diagram of one I have used four years that is a wonderful help and almost automatic. I also will soon send diagrams of "Framer Lights" and dissolving devices. The "Framer Lights" give the operator absolutely no expense for mis-frames when threading up even on outline-less titles. Later I will send a diagram of the "Reel Clock" that tells each patron just what reel he is coming into the show on and how it automatically sets at the end of each performance. Two Paramount men, Mr. Dawson and Mr. Kentner, on being shown my booth praised it very much and also said: "That boy has the most projection equipment in a small booth we've ever seen." (My booth is 7 ft. by 9 ft.) Tell any of the boys I am at their service if they only say what they want. I've got it or with the suggestion, I will make it, if possible. I am very much interested in the N. A. M. L. Forum and always watch for the boys' suggestions.

Yours truly,
JOHN E. DUNKIN.
N. A. L. M., No. 1581.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS:
Gentlemen:

I think that if a guard was made to cover the motor drive belt and pulleys so when they are oiled the oil will not fly up on the stereopticon fan

If the oil is kept off it, it will not catch lint and gum up, and therefore you will have a clearer picture.

Tell me what you think of my suggestion.

Truly,
J. CLYDE HUTCHINSON,
Strand Theatre, Kenova, W. Va.

The oiling of a projection machine, under which heading comes the speed control, is a process that can be performed correctly or abused. If the oil is applied until it spatters and flies out over the lenses, etc., it indicates that there is an excess of oil on the mechanism. We suggest to Brother Hutchinson to be more moderate in applying the lubricant.—Tech. Ed.

Gentlemen:

I have never written to the NEWS yet. Just sort of sitting back and reading what the other fellow had to say. I am a small town operator. Although I have been in the booth eleven years. I have two Powers 6B motor driven machines.

I find a lot of good information in the forum, but not much on cleaning a machine. I think a greasy machine is a miserable sight. Here is my way of doing. I have an air tight tank with a connection for a bicycle or auto pump from which I have a 5 ft. piece of hollow wire such as used in the hollow wire lighting system. I pump about fifteen pounds of pressure in the tank and use the wire as a nozzle.

This requires an extra head so as to give the head just washed time to dry. Neither will it hurt your extra to take a three days' turn on the bench.

I would like a little comment on this scheme from the other fellows.

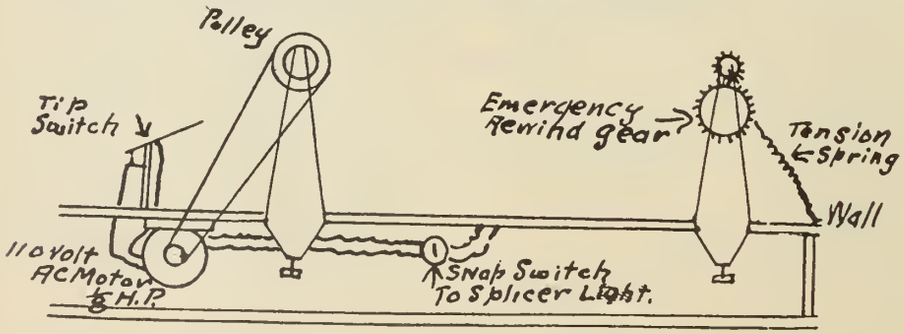
Near forgot to mention I am a member of the N. A. M. L. ranks. Fall in boys.

Yours truly,
MELVIN F. SHOLLENBERGER,
Pine Grove, Pa.

Dear Editor:

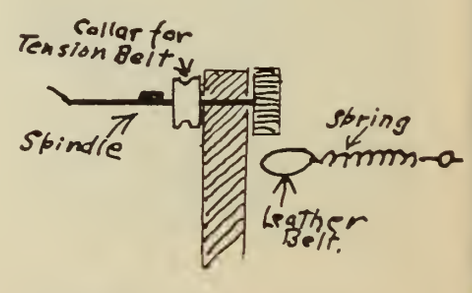
Having read Mr. Burnett's article in the N. A. M. L. Forum, on a change-over idea, I would like to say something on the subject myself with the intention of perhaps helping some struggling projectionist to change over easier and make a perfect change too.

Mr. Burnett's idea is well and all right, but in case two scenes on the end of each reel are nearly alike, as sometimes happens, or if the operator is occupied in adjusting his lamps, as is often necessary, on a newly struck arc he cannot watch the screen, his cue sheet and his lamp at the same time. The result is, the change-over may be too late and the operator gets the blame which is right.



My method of changing over may not meet with the approval of our readers, although it has never failed me and furthermore it does not make it necessary to scratch or punch the film, or paste tape or tin-foil there on or have a cue-sheet to watch while changing from one projector to the other.

Here is my idea: It is so simple it may cause a ripple of laughter among the brother operators but it works fine and in my opinion should not be discouraged.



All that is needed are enough pieces of number 18 or 20 sheet metal, one inch square with corners and sharp edges filed round and smooth, to rewind in at the end of every reel from which you want to change.

Bend them slightly so as to fit the reel when rewinding them in as shown in drawing.

To use them, insert one of them two or three feet from or above "End of part 1" or "End of part 2" as the case may be and rewind. When the reel is being used and gets to within two or three feet of the end, the little square metal will drop to the bottom of the magazine, making a slight tinkling noise, this is the time to start the other projector and fade over. The piece of sheet metal is taken out when rethreading and wound in for the next show.

Every operator does or should inspect his film before showing, so they can be inserted for the first show.

They are so thin it will not be noticed in the rewinding and if they are smoothed down with a file, there is nothing to scratch or injure the film. A small hole may be drilled through them so they can be hung on a hook of some kind above the rewind table always within easy reach.

Any operator can cut them out of tin or any other handy metal with a pair of tinner's snips. If any of the boys try this stunt and like it. I wish they would write and tell me about it. I would never do without the little square pieces of metal. Yours for better change-overs,

BERT MELLINGER,

Apparently Brother Mellinger has had very good success with his method of change-over. However, to one that has never used this method the question might arise, does the piece of metal ever slip and get caught with the film in any manner, scratching or tearing same? Would the metal fall down into the rollers, etc. From the description given in the letter it would seem that no such troubles had been encountered but at least we should keep these precautions in mind.

Inclosed find application blank for membership in the N. A. M. L.

Read the League Forum each week and certainly think it is a fine thing, and would like to see every Projectionist go into it, as it will not only help to eliminate the evils practised in the projection room but help to build up the Motion Picture industry as a whole, because the progress of the industry itself is based on results obtained in the Projection room, and those results certainly can not be obtained when having to contend with punch marks, bad patches, misframes, etc.

If there are any members of the N. A. M. L. who are having trouble and if I am able to help them, will be very glad to do so and try and do my bit to make the N. A. M. L. Projectionists 100 per cent. perfect.

Will write again soon, describing my Projection room and equipment as it is considered the best in the state, and personally I believe it is. Projectionally yours,

CHESTER DOUGLAS.

Liberty Theatre, Oregon City, Oregon.

Brother Douglas certainly has the right view point for a projectionist. He feels the responsibility that rests with the fellows putting the picture on the screen. The better every part of the motion picture industry becomes the better for everyone concerned.—Ed.

I Am the Moving Picture Operator

By A. J. McCosker

I AM the Moving Picture Operator. You vast army of picture lovers to whose enjoyment my life and work is dedicated seldom have occasion to note my existence. I am the Exhibitors' ally, in the oppressive booth high up near the rafters. Hour on hour my solitude is unbroken save for the clicking of my projection machine. Into my hands come endless miles of film representing millions of money, long days and nights of hoping, planning and striving. The authors' dreams, the financiers' rewards, the directors' artistry, the actors' ambitions, the exhibitors' prestige—all these are in my keeping; to make secure by proper presentation on the screen and reflected there to beguile, amuse, excite or sadden you. I am the contact with the multitude and the custodian of your safety. I am the Moving Picture Operator.

Membership Buttons

It has been customary for this department to furnish a celluloid membership button to new members upon receipt of their applications. Our present supply of buttons has been exhausted, and we are now considering the possibility of ordering a bronze metal button and charging the members for its actual cost. From the quotations we have at hand it appears that we would have to charge about twenty-five or thirty cents. To help us decide we would appreciate hearing from the various members on this matter.

Dear Sir:

Enclosed you will find application for membership in the N. A. M. L. which I hope you will accept.

Have only a small house in a small town and do my own projecting, and my one ambition is to give my patrons as near perfect projection as possible under small town conditions. After reading your projection dept. in the NEWS for the past year, I have come to the conclusion that today it is absolutely necessary for all operators and theatre managers to work together in order to keep film in good condition.

In your issue of Jan. 28, I noticed an article by R. E. Burnett No. 1413 which I think would be a good idea for all film exchanges to have printed and distributed to all projectionists.

Dear Sir:

Find application blank for membership in the National Anti-Misframe League.

I am operator at the U. S. A. Theatre at Sidney, Neb. I have been operating for the past seven years and here I have 2 Powers 6As with mercury vapor rectifiers, spot light, etc. This is one of the best projection booths in the state of Nebraska. Yours truly,

P. J. GUTHRIE,
Sidney, Neb.

Dear Sir:

Am now operating at the Ohio Theatre, this city. I certainly have real equipment, two Powers C. B. machines, latest improved type, and everything in the booth to make an operator's life worth while.

We also just installed a Gardner Velvet Gold Fibre Screen. They certainly are fine.

We get all films from Cincinnati and beg to say they are all in good condition, if not they are put in good condition.

Am glad to see how the membership has grown. Yours respectfully,

An old league member, No. 19.

HARRY EVERHART.

The News Solves Problems

NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE PLEDGE

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Suggestions for Lighting the Theatre

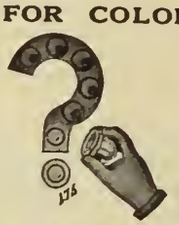
music, on the stage and as a real decorative medium.

The lighting of the motion picture auditorium will go through the same transition that the exposition has experienced. In the days of the St. Louis, Jamestown and Buffalo Expositions bare incandescent lamps were studded over all the buildings, so called outline lighting. The effect was striking at first sight, but with none of the qualities which cause one to pause and admire for an appreciable length of time. At the San Francisco Exposition outline lighting was tabooed. Soft pastel shades and tints were employed, lamps were concealed from view and the beauties of the architecture brought out through painting with light. We might use an analogy to still further illustrate this. In music the obvious soon dies, the composition with hidden beauties survives. Hiawatha, once the popular rage, is unknown to the youth of today, but Beethoven's Minuet will be "popular" centuries hence.

Robert-Morton Organ Installed

Included in a recent description of the Colonial Theatre, Richmond, Virginia, was the statement that an American Photoplayer was installed, however, we have since been advised that the organ was a Robert-Morton.

New Theatre Opens



The Anderson Theatre, Gulfport, Mississippi, which has just opened, has installed all the latest devices for the modern motion picture house. The seats are especially commendable, allowing perfect comfort through their luxuriant upholstery and size. The efficient ventilating system is designed to successfully meet the requirements of the climate.

Music and the Picture

ow to Sing and Pronounce "Snegourotchka"

ow is the name of the Russian opera, egourotchka" lately introduced to the pa- ıs of the Metropolitan pronounced?

offers, undoubtedly, some difficulty to the ccustomed Anglo-Saxon. One of the per- ities in pronouncing Russian words is the ing of the accent. Fortunately, the vocal e of the opera will set right on this point who have no more immediate sources of rmation available. Open the score, for in- ıce, at page 93 and read this:

Sné-gou-rotchka,
Sne-gou-roch-ka,

says that the accent is put on the second able, the "gou." It is also to be noted that Russian "n," has the sound of the Spanish " that is , "n" with a slight "y" sound fol- ing. So the pronounciation of the new ra's name might be represented thus: ñyegoúrotchka."

New Plan on Synchronized Music

Merit Film Corp. Will Distribute Scores in Metropolitan District

M. J. MINTZ, Director of Sales of the Synchronized Scenario Music Company, announces that negotiations have just been concluded whereby the Merit Film Corporation, New York City, has acquired the exclusive distribution rights of Synchronized Scenario Music Service in the territory comprising New York State up to and including the City of Albany, also the northern part of New Jersey.

The exhibitor who has come to understand that Music is a moral law, and that when it is properly synchronized with the action on the screen it will develop into a source of great entertainment for his patrons, is beginning to reap the reward in the box office. While there can be no denying the fact that the high standard of artistic achievements of film plays is based on the great development of photography, due credit should also be given Music for the part it has played in making the motion picture the popular institution it is to-day. Unless an exhibitor offers properly synchronized music he might better offer none at all. Many potential patrons of the films are kept out of the smaller houses because of the inferior brand of music played. Million dollar productions are screened to the accompaniment of a crudely played, old piano. Exhibitors permitting this condition to exist in their houses are demoralizing their own business. In many instances, however, this condition prevailed or does still prevail because the exhibitor was without the proper means of supply. With that idea in mind Synchronized Music Scores were conceived.

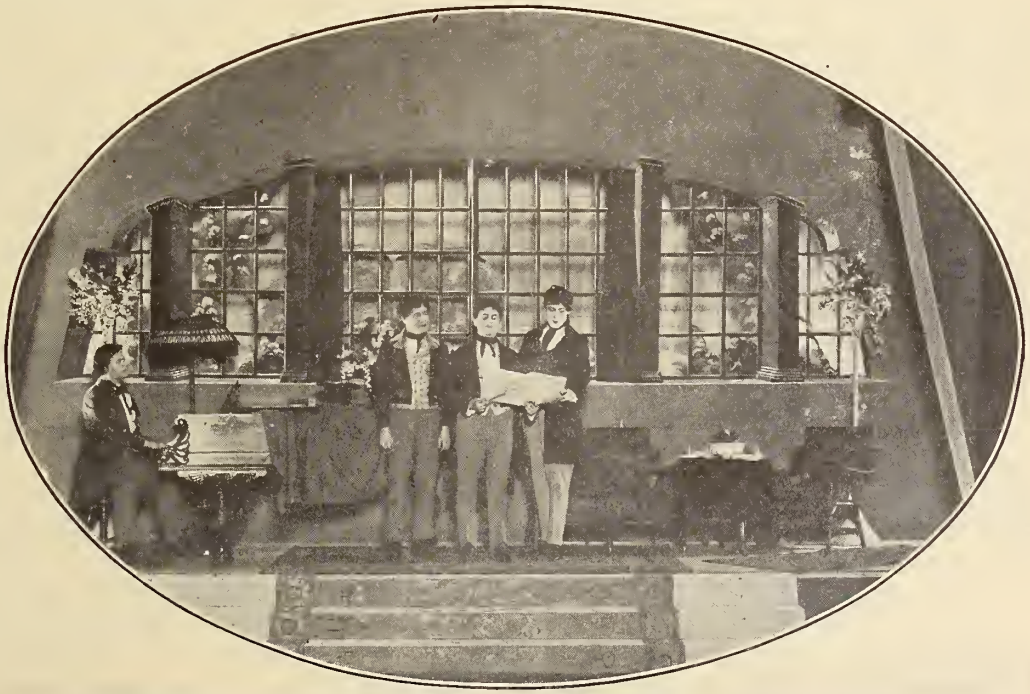
"Synchronized Music" is music written by expert musicians long connected with the Picture Business. States Mr. Mintz, "Each score individually written and timed to the actual picture for which it was composed. The music is correctly cued to each and every action appearing upon the screen. Whatever rate the film may be run at, compensation is arranged for in the score, so that music and picture blend together. Instead of having tediously to work out from a cue sheet a more or less rough idea of the part he will play in the coming presentation, the musician has merely to read off the score."

With the Merit Film Corporation now handling the distribution, the exhibitors and musician throughout the territory are assured of the most efficient service, and courteous treatment.

Movie Music Praised by Editor

Philadelphia Ledger Boosts Quaker City Picture House Musical Programs

THE musical programs being presented in the better class motion picture theatres are beginning to merit comment from n the editorial writers. Following is a re- nt of the leading editorial in the Jan. 5th is- of the Philadelphia Ledger:



The moving-picture fan is well aware that music he hears with his pictures makes a ference. In the primeval era of the motion ture, anything that would keep the piano go- sufficed. Now audiences expect either gan-playing as good as that which is heard in urch or the performance of a full-fledged nphony orchestra. Music follows the per- tations and combinations of the screen. The mired executant at the instrument is the one o most nimbly fits the musical accompani- nt to the action; and the swift change of ne from episode to episode makes the pos- ilities almost limitless.

Since the place of music played concur- ntly with the picture is firmly established, it of interest to ask how far it is desirable introduce music between photoplays. In at ıst one of the finest of our Philadelphia uses devoted to the silent drama, it is the liberate and the commendable policy to give iladelphia musicians of merit a chance to be ard. It is not charity, it is good business. ıe standard maintained is uniformly high. ıe audiences are well pleased with what they ar and manifest a most cordial disposition ward the performers. They do not regard piano or the voice or the violin as an annoy- erruption.

To the aspiring and struggling artists these portunities mean everything. The musicians s a more arduous road to travel than most. e note the fortune of the few, and we do not mark how many, after heart-breaking attempts, sink by the wayside to rise no more. It is success that glitters and is applauded. Those motion-picture artists are not stooping to conquer popular favor. They are appearing before a public whose level of critical appreciation constantly rises and is very much higher than it was even a decade ago. If the best in pictures is not too good for the people, neither is the best in music.

Honegger Publishes Score of Dramatic Psalm

Arthur Honegger has just published in Paris the score of a dramatic psalm, "King David," comprising twenty-eight numbers for chorus, solos and orchestra without strings. Emile Vuillermoz, in reviewing the score for the Temps of Paris, finds that there is sometimes a comforting abyss between the words of a reformer and his music.

" Monkey Shines "

(Campbell Comedy — Two Reels — Released Through Educational)

W. S. CAMPBELL, instead of relying simply upon the cunning tricks of cunning children here offers a blend of juvenile hokum and pathos. With the increase of such story interest, there is a natural diminishing of comedy. A new youngster plays the lead. He is a chubby little chap, who is trying to support an invalid mother by shining shoes. The monkey and dog are his pets. These animals aid him to get business by spreading a newspaper over a mud puddle at a street crossing. When the policeman falls into the trap, the boy's troubles begin. But when he rescues the policeman's little girl as she plays on the railroad track, everything turns out pretty. His mother and the policeman find romance.

The production is up to the average of Mr. Campbell's few preceding pictures. — MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

" Felix Saves the Day "

(M. J. Winkler Cartoon Series—State Rights)

"FELIX," Pat Sullivan's versatile cat, who cut up didoes in Paramount magazine for some time previously, now steps forth in an animated cartoon series all by himself. "Felix Saves the Day" is the first of the series. "Felix" now acts with human characters. He is drawn into photographs. In this reel he climbs up the Metropolitan tower in New York and sits on the flagpole. The subject matter is provided by baseball. "Felix's" team is losing, so to save the day, the cat hits the ball far skyward. It rebounds from the head of Joe Pluvius, who in anger, sends down the deluge. The game is called and the team saved from ignominious defeat.

"Felix" is a delightful cartoon character. He is given a distinct personality. There are some really humorous and many pleasant moments in this first subject. — MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

" Stage Struck "

(Pollard-Roach Comedy-Pathe)

THIS comedy is a travesty on the old "barnstorming" theatrical days and presents the sad-eyed Pollard as a stage-struck young man who steps into the performance, filling the part of the hero when the leading man develops a temperamental streak. The opening shot finds Snub dodging the cop on duty at the stage door. He manages to elude him and enters just as the thrilling rescue act is being enacted. The leading man is fired and Pollard steps into the character and convulses the audience with his caricature of a Civil War general. The officer's horse tips over the fortress and when the leading man out of r-r-r-r-r-r-evenge sets off a batch of fireworks in the balcony, the theatre is thrown into a turmoil. The climax is an amusing one and sending sky-rockets upon the innocent thespians seems like a new stunt. Cabbages and rotten eggs and fruit are replaced by a healthier kind of bombardment. The comedy is certain to raise a chuckle or three. Length 1 reel.—LAURENCE REID.

" With Stanley in Africa "

(18 Episode Serial-Universal)

UNIVERSAL is deserving of the highest encouragement in its ambition to visualize the moving chapters of history. This long neglected mine of drama, adventure and character drawing has been opened in regard to the pioneer expedition to the gold fields in '49—surely a vivid chapter in the development of America. And Universal, sensing the importance of bringing color and form and moving drama to the famous Stanley expedition of 1871—the object of which was to search for Livingstone and find him if possible—has repeated the glowing pictures revealed in the other serial "Winners of the West." Universal has started something. Page after page—a regular outline of history can be recorded by the camera, and the field is limitless. History for the first time takes on the form of adventure. The cold, printed word is replaced by the camera lens and the result is an achievemment that should be welcomed by every educator in the land.

"With Stanley in Africa" records the vivid chapters of the Stanley expedition. This is the central background around which a modern story is constructed for pure romance purposes. Thus the spectator is being treated to historical facts and he is not losing any romantic adventure in the bargain. The erstwhile Dark Continent offers a great scoop for the camera. True a few jungle slices have been offered in various serials—but they are only slices. The very suggestion of Stanley's name opens up vistas to the mind of the spectator. He is reveling in unexplored lands. Suspense is measured out in the disasters which constantly threaten him. From the moment that George Walsh as a scientific explorer, commissioned by a newspaper to get in touch with Stanley, leaves for Africa, the edventure takes on an appeal which is irresistible. A rival paper sends a woman reporter who must keep in touch with Walsh. And thus the romance is deftly introduced.

History and fiction go hand in hand and the result is an emphasized story interest. The opening reels disclose a vivid fire scene —which looks like the real thing. Thrills are not long in accumulating. And then comes an inkling of what to expect in the shape of mys- Lorraine in their attempt to reach Stanley. terious plotting to harass Walsh and Leota Kidnapping scenes are balanced with some a letic rescue work by the star. The direc has added some first rate atmosphere, and extras and other members of the cast lc genuine. A minor flaw in the up-to-date p tern of the explorers' clothes will be ov looked in the fast-moving array of events. T picture possesses great historical value as from its stimulating melodramatic quality

" The Ranger "

(Sunset-Berrud Polychrome—One Re

WITH an orchestra playing the Largo fr Dvorak's "New World Symphon this beautifully tinted scenic of the far-off pla entitled "The Ranger" takes an appeal, t force of which is irresistible. Towering mou tains, deep valleys, transparent lakes—the vist of nature as discovered in the country beyo the Rockies—these are vividly present Against these backgrounds is silhouetted t ranger, mounted and ready for the call to dt or romance. The Largo movement as play by the Capitol theatre gives this an encha ment that is certain to be felt by everyone w has an eye for color and form. That fitti music embellishes a picture cannot be deni Dvorak's crooning notes make "The Range a harmonious tone poem.—LAURENCE REI

" Circus Clowns "

(Century-Universal)

THIS Century introduces Baby Peggy a Brownie, the "wonder" dog, as the st performers of a country circus. While it a one-ring affair, there is enough amusing m ments to keep one from looking around in va for the other two rings. Brownie does his a while Peggy in the role of ring-master guid him through his yaces. The little tot then fc lows with a bare-back riding specialty. T parents are frantic in their search for the i fant prodigy and they engage a detective help locate her. The man of the law manag to get behind the scenes and run away wi Peggy, but he is followed by the brutal circ owner. Everything ends happily. The fin scene shows Brownie attempting to capture mouse and his determination causes the hou to be wrecked. "Circus Clowns" is good k stuff and up to the other releases which fe tured the baby and the dog.—Length 2 reels. LAURENCE REID.

"IT was eminently successful because it is a clean, wholesome American story, and earned the applause the capacity audience gave it. There is in 'The Prodigal Judge' action enough to suit those who seek it; laughs for those who seek humor, and there is also romance. These are the three things that go to make up the sort of picture the public demands today. It provides quite a contrast to a certain questionable type of scenario dealing with sex problems. The public is surfeited with this sort. This was shown by the approval of last night's show in this drawing-room-like theatre.

"Jean Paige was the featured member of the cast, while Maclyn Arbuckle and David Torrence as the old judge, a most lovable vagabond, and Mahaffy, a sour but loyal companion, respectively. were the outstanding members of the cast. To give the merits of one would be giving those of the two others, and they deserve the best. The trio was ably supported by the others in the cast."—NEW YORK EVENING TELEGRAM.

Fred Crosbie of Winnipeg, Manitoba, prominent in the film exchange field in Ontario, Manitoba and elsewhere in the Dominion, has resigned from Stephenson's Attractions, Limited, of Toronto, and has become identified with the Winnipeg staff of the Famous Players Film Service, Limited. Crosbie had been serving as Western manager for Stephenson's Attractions, the latter handling a number of independent releases, such as "County Fair" and Curwood's features.

Robert Myers, with Vitagraph in Winnipeg for a number of years, has been appointed Western manager for Standard Films, Limited, Montreal. The Winnipeg office of the new company is located at 115 Phoenix building.

Ernest Shipman of New York has been spending several weeks in Ottawa, the Canadian capital, for the purpose of arranging preliminary preparations for the producing of Ralph Connor's "The Man from Glengarry" which, it is understood, is to be made in the Ottawa Valley, the actual locale of the book. Mr. Shipman has appeared before a number of Ottawa clubs to tell of plans and achievements, having visited the Rotary and Kiwanis clubs, Ottawa Branch of the Canadian Authors' Association, the Women's Canadian Club and others.

An important development in moving picture exchange circles in Canada has been the appointment of Arthur Larente as manager of the Montreal headquarters of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Canadian distributors of Pathe and other releases. During the past two years, Mr. Larente, who is one of the pioneer exchange men in the Dominion, served as Winnipeg manager of the Specialty Company.

Mr. Larente's predecessor at the Montreal Specialty office was Charles Lalumiere who was in charge of the Montreal and Quebec territory for a lengthy period. Mr. Lalumiere has become general manager of the Europa Films, Reg., a new organization with main office in Montreal which has been established for the purpose of distributing foreign productions in Canada.

Officers of the Dominion Alliance, a body of blue-law advocates in Canada, showed their true colors at Toronto, Ontario, on January 25, when opposition was offered against a proposal for the relief of the unemployed in the Ontario capital by devoting the whole proceeds of Sunday moving picture shows for the assistance of the needy.

When announcement was made that the local exhibitors desired to hold Sunday benefit performances for the unemployed, Rev. W. M. Spencer, acting secretary of the alliance declared: "There can be no moving pictures exhibited in the Dominion of Canada on Sundays." The law was quite clear, he pointed out.

A meeting of the local exhibitors was held in the office of the Ontario censors when the question of holding Sunday benefit performances was brought up. Col. J. A. Cooper and Manager J. Bernstein of Loew's theatre were appointed a deputation to consult Provincial Treasurer Smith regarding the plan—despite the moralists.

CINCINNATI

"School Days" opened last week for a one week engagement at the Walnut theatre, Cincinnati. It went over so big that Manager Ike Lipson held it over for a second week. Lipson did a lot of publicity work on "School Days" prior to the opening. One week before the opening, he held a private screening of the picture at the Palace theatre for which every school teacher in Cincinnati received a personal invitation. Following the screening many of the teachers gave testimonials as to the value of "School Days" as an entertainment. The Cincinnati newspapers co-operated with Lipson in a simple word test which aroused wide enthusiasm. The reward went to the child forming the greatest number of words from the words "School Days." Paper was also widely distributed all over town. Ten boys were put to distributing 20,000 heralds. Five hundred stickers were pasted on automobiles, posts and other convenient places. Five thousand door hangers were attached to residence door knobs and telephones in public places. Wesley Barry cut-outs were stuck in conspicuous store windows. A music store gave its window to a display of Gus Edwards songs. Lipson also ran a two column one inch teaser in four Cincinnati papers for a whole week before the opening of the engagement, ending with a big display ad on the day of the opening. The result of all this exploiting was a two-week engagement with the second week even bigger than the first.

ST. LOUIS

Twenty St. Louis newspaper moving picture critics, dramatic editors, feature writers and editors were guests of Barney Rosenthal, St. Louis Universal manager, at a get-together dinner at Hotel Statler Thursday night. Rosenthal made a nice talk in which he told of the efforts being made to purge the movies of undesirable elements that draw antagonism. He appealed for a closer co-operation from the press. A private screening of "The Leather Pushers," a series of two-reelers from H. C. Witwer's stories was also given.

St. Louis exhibitors and exchange men are anticipating another movement to force censorship through the next session of the Missouri legislature. The recent successful referendum forcing Sunday closing on theatres in Springfield shows the anti-moving picture elements are ever active in the state. The advocates of censorship will endeavor to nominate men favorable to their ideas at the primaries of both major parties.

Charles Raymond of the Paramount publicity organization has been transferred to the Portland, Ore., office. Mike Vogel is his successor here.

E. C. Jensen, special representative of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, is spending several days in St. Louis. He arrived here from Omaha and is on tour of the key cities.

Tom Leonard of Pioneer has returned from Kansas City, and reports he found an undercurrent of prosperity in that city. The theatres were obtaining good patronage and the belief exists that the worst times are behind us.

Sam Harris, local Pathe manager, is visiting the New York headquarters. He will be gone about a week.

Sidney Baker of Exhibitors Direct Service announces his company will distribute several features for the Catholic Art Society in the St. Louis territory. The pictures include a two-reeler of the Canonization of Joan of Arc in which the late Pope Benedict XV appeared.

Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne and Robert McKim were guests at an after-theatre dinner given by leaders of the St. Louis film colony at Hotel Statler last Wednesday. Hector Pasmezoglu, who owns the Criterion, Delmar and Congress theatres, was the toastmaster. About thirty persons were present. McKim was appearing at the Empress while Mr. and Mrs. Bushman were the headliners at the Orpheum.

C. C. Jones of the American theatre, Johnston City, Ill., has purchased a Minusa screen for his house from the St. Louis Exhibitors Supply Company. The company also sold a No. 1 Gold Fibre Minusa to the Gem, Uniontown, Ky.

Callers at the St. Louis exchanges the past week included: J. E. Pertle, Jerseyville, Ill.; C. W. Hall, Illinois theatre, Centralia, Ill.; H. M. Ferguson, Gem, Centralia, Ill.; Charles Goodnight, Lyric, De Soto, Mo.; Charles Sears, Lyric, Booneville, Mo.; Noah Bloomer, Opera House, Freeburg, Ill.; E. M. Doyle, Grand, Cape Girardeau, Mo.; F. V. Mercier, Electric, Perryville, Mo.

CLEVELAND

W. J. Kimes, manager of the Cleveland Goldwyn exchange, attended the Goldwyn convention in Chicago last week and came back imbued with enthusiasm over the Goldwyn sales policies for the spring.

"The Queen of Sheba," Fox special, like its predecessor, "Over the Hill," will play, day and date, at twenty Cleveland motion picture theatres the week of February 26. "Over the Hill" played at twenty houses in Cleveland the week of January 22, and every one of the twenty exhibitors report better than average business. This is quite a record, as many of these twenty houses usually play split weeks. M. B. Horwitz of the Washington Circuit, comprising eight local picture houses, played "Over the Hill" simultaneously at four of his houses and says he made money at every one of the four. "'Over the Hill' is the greatest audience picture of the age," Horwitz asserts.

The Wind-A-Meer theatre, first-run neighborhood house in East Cleveland changed hands this week. The theatre was purchased by the Silverman brothers of Altoona, Pa., where they own the Strand theatre. S. Silverman will come to Cleveland to take over the active management of the house.

RHODE ISLAND

Notwithstanding a state law which forbids motion picture entertainments in Rhode Island, except for charity purposes, Sunday motion picture shows in Newport will continue despite the protests of the Ministers' Union in that city. Mayor J. P. Mahoney has made the announcement that he will not interfere in such entertainments following a request by the ministers that he stop such performances.

During the war Newport was allowed to introduce pictures to provide diversion for the naval personnel then stationed there. Permission was given partly upon the request of the ministers, who believed in providing some form of entertainment for the men.

Now that the city has refused to enforce the state law, it is said the ministers will next proceed to the attorney general's office on the ground that the Rhode Island laws forbid Sunday motion picture entertainments in all cases where admission is charged.

The following resolution has been adopted by the Ministers' Union: "Inasmuch as the opening of the theatres of Newport on Sundays was consented to by the Ministers' Union as a war measure at a time when without adequate occupations for their time of liberty and inasmuch as this exigency has now passed, the Ministers' Union of the city of Newport respectfully requests his Honor the mayor that he now enforce the law concerning the opening of the playhouses in that city on Sunday."

Moving picture managers in Providence are discussing the feasibility of opening the motion picture houses one morning each week for the showing of educational films. Dr. Francis Holley, director of the Bureau of Economics, was here recently and presented a plan to the managers for the exhibition of industrial pictures, the managers contributing their houses in turn for the benefit of school children. No action has yet been taken but the matter is being strongly considered, and the managers look upon it with favor.

WESTERN NEW YORK

Cola W. Lyon of Orchard Park, N. Y. and Douglas Morris of Buffalo have organized the Orchard Park Amusement Company to conduct a motion picture theatre and community center in Orchard Park. The plans call for a $25,000 building, with an auditorium seating 500 persons.

An attempt was made to set fire to the National theatre, 13th street, Niagara Falls, N. Y., last week. Oil was poured against the back of the theatre and a lighted match set to it, according to firemen. Louis Scalzo is manager of the National. Attempts have been made before to burn the house.

Morris Taitus, found guilty of complicity in the theft of films with a potential value of $250,000, has been sentenced in Buffalo supreme court to ten years in Auburn prison. Taitus was formerly employed as shipping clerk at the United Artists' exchange, Buffalo.

2. James MacFarlane, mayor of Canandaigua, will open bis new theatre in that town February 20. The Adelphia theatre in Fairhaven, N. Y., has been closed permanently. The new Lafayette Square, Buffalo, opens February 20.

Jack Dempsey bas settled tbe two suits brought against him by Frank P. Spellman of Batavia for $100,000, it is reported. Spellman claimed a share of the profits of "Daredevil Jack," the Pathe serial, claiming that he was instrumental of procuring the work for the boxing champion. The amount of the settlement was not divulged by District Attorney Guy B. Moore. The case was scheduled to go to its second trial January 30.

Sam Morris, general manager of Select Pictures, was in Buffalo last week-end for a conference witb Dick Fox, branch manager and members of the sales staff. Mr. Fox reports many big bookings on "Conceit."

Howard Riehl has been engaged by Branch Manager Henry W. Kahn of Metro in Buffalo to cover the Southern Tier.

E. J. MacIvor, special representative for R-C Pictures Corporation, bas arrived in Buffalo to aid in the sales drive about to be started by Branch Manager A. W. Moses. Walter Price, formerly with Metro, has been engaged as salesman. J. L. Cook bas resigned.

W. A. V. Mack, manager of the Pathe exchange in Buffalo, is planning to celebrate the end of his first year as manager, witb a special "Mack Week," February 13 to 18.

Ralpb Mosely will resign as house manager at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, February 15 and will be succeeded by George Mason, now at Shea's Criterion.

Marion Gueth has resigned as booker at the Buffalo Hodkinson exchange. She has been succeeded by George J. Canty, formerly witb Fox. P. N. Brincb, manager of exchanges for Hodkinson, was a Buffalo visitor last week.

L. C. Dumont of the Detroit United Artists' office has joined the staff of tbe Buffalo exchange. M. H. Markowitz, branch manager, reports box office records being broken throughout tbe territory by "Way Down East."

H. M. Chubaroff has resigned as vice-president and general manager of Niagara Pictures Corporation, the new state right exchange in the Warner building, Buffalo. Dave Levy is carrying on tbe business.

KANSAS CITY

Tbat Missouri exhibitors are awakening to tbe fact that strength lies only in unity was plainly evidenced last week in "test" letters sent out by Lawrence E. Goldman, secretary and counsel of the state organization. The "test" letters, as Mr. Goldman termed them, were blanks for a renewal of membersbip in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri. Four days after the letters had been sent broadcast over the state, more than 90 per cent of tbe exhibitors had responded witb a renewed membersbip, and all indications are tbat there will be a 100 per cent response among the 600 former members of the state organization. Tbe M. P. T. O. M. is represented in every town in the state, which bas a population exceeding 2,000.

Having retained as his attorney Samuel Handy of Kansas City, M. Van Praag, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas is preparing to do battle with the music tax society, whicb has filed suit against bim. Richard J. Hopkins, attorney general of Kansas and counsel of the Kansas exhibitors, will direct activities of the defense in the suit and is contemplating a move wbereby the music tax society may be ousted from the state, under the anti-trust law.

The Kansas City office of the Crescent-Federated Film Exchange has announced that they have contracted for these features for distribution in the Kansas City territory: Eigbt new five-reel Neal Harts; twelve Richard Kipling five-reel westerns; six Big Boy Williams five-reel westerns; three Snowy Baker productions; "Sbadow of Ligbtning Ridge," "Better Men," "Fighting Breed" and Diane of Star Hollow," a successor to "When Bearcat Went Dry," witb the same cast; "The Unconquered Woman," featuring Ruby DeRemer; "When Destiny Wills;" "Branded;" "Serving Two Masters;" "The Way of a Man;" "The Cloud Burst;" "Any Night;" "Asbes;" "Lone Hand Wilson," and "The Ranger and the Law." Twenty-six one-reel comedies also bave been purchased.

William Jacobs, formerly manager of Loew's Garden theatre in Kansas City, has been appointed manager of the Royal theatre, Kansas City, one of Frank L. Newman's first run houses. Mr. Jacobs recently opened and managed one of Loew's houses in Oklahoma City.

The Kansas City Metro branch bas established a publicity branch, wbich will be in charge of Bert Perkins. Closer co-operation with exhibitors in up-to-the-minute exploitation will be the policy of the new department.

M. R. Fink, Kansas City, president and general manager of Peacock Productions, Inc., upon returning from an eight-weeks' trip in Europe, has become convinced, he says, tbat American exhibitors are on the edge of "good times," due mainly because the independent distributors are offering their product to exhibitors on a live and let live basis.

C. W. Potter has been added to the sales force of the Kansas City Vitagrapb branch. He will cover Northern Kansas, having succeeded H. L. Craig, wbo now is with Crescent-Federated Film Exchange.

Among the changes in management and opening of new theatres in Kansas City territory during the last week are:

Royal theatre, Seneca, Kas., purcbased by W. P. Lenz from C. D. Stewart; Isis theatre, Syracuse, Kas., purcbased by V. H. Goodrick from C. F. Garwood; Isis theatre, Augusta, Kas., remodeled and opened by Jack Johnstone.

OKLAHOMA

As a precaution against smallpox now very prevalent in Oklahoma, it bas been ordered by the health officers at McAlester, Okla., that before any person is admitted to any public gathering, picture show or school in McAlester, that a certificate of successful vaccination must be presented before entering.

Orin Snapp of Guthrie, has purcbased the Joy theatre at Oilton, Okla., from J. W. Wbipple, consideration about $15,000.

H. H. Maloney, for several months directing manager of the Star and Rialto theatres at Denison, Texas, for the Southern Enterprises, Inc., but who left Denison in September to take cbarge of the Palace theatre at Dallas, has returned to Denison to again take charge of the Star and Rialto tbeatres.

C. C. Wallace has purchased the Happy Hour tbeatre at Lometa, Texas.

The Airdome at Giddings, Texas, has been purchased by Mercbant & Ball.

H. L. Youngblood has purchased the Guthrie theatre at Guthrie, Okla., and will alter and remodel the playbouse, adding an orcbestra.

Tom Cornthwaite and Arley Fink have purcbased the Majestic theatre at Enid, Okla., and will remodel and make many new improvements.

H. Silverberg and S. Abrams will build a new $30,000 theatre at 608 Main street, Houston, Texas, in the near future. The theatre will seat 450 and will be strictly modern and up to date.

T. C. Cabill bas purchased the Dick theatre at Haskell, Texas.

J. R. Davis of Shattuck, Texas, bas purchased the Fox theatre at Higgins, Texas, wbicb he will operate in addition to his theatres at Shattuck and Gage, Texas.

Ray C. Berry has taken over the management of the Campus theatre at Norman, Oklahoma.

The Rex tbeatre at Alba, Texas, will show on Saturdays only, in tbe future.

J. P. Jones has purchased Yale theatre at Groesbeck, Texas.

MINNEAPOLIS

Recognized as one of the foremost "film" lawyers in the United States, Benjamin M. Goldman bas been appointed counsel of the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade.

Earl M. Kindred and M. Schamber opened their Lyric theatre at Mobridge, S. D., January 14 witb "Way Down East" as tbe initial attraction. The Lyric is said to be one of the most up-to-date tbeatres in South Dakota and bas a seating capacity of 400. Admission prices are 10 and 25 cents.

Under the management of Edward Janicki of Cbicago, the Eagle theatre was opened at Eagle River, Wis., on January 14. It is the third bouse for Eagle River and was erected by Josepb Gorski at a cost of $20,000.

J. C. McConville and W. J. Cammer, traveling auditors for Goldwyn are visiting the local brancb of that company.

A tendency toward a marked improvement in business is seen in Minneapolis with all tbeatres reporting attendance picking up and with the bolding over of "Tbe Queen of Sbeba" for a second week's run at the New Garrick. Fair sized newspaper ads with attractive lobby displays have featured the exploitation for the various attractions.

Manager Jobn Preston arranged a big display of oil paintings, oriental rugs and other eastern effects for "Tbe Queen of Sheba" which did a pbenomenal business the first week with good attendance the second week. Manager Koch of the New Aster made the front of his theatre into a log cabin to advertise Zane Grey's "Tbe Mysterious Rider." Although the idea was not new it attracted considerable attention with good box office results. The picture was booked for four days but was held over for tbe week.

At the other bouses no special display was attempted, the usual attractive lobby cards being relied upon.

Will Steege of the Great Falls, Mont., Capitol, borrowed tbe old circus and minstrel ballyboo stunt to put over Bill Hart's "Three Word Brand" at his theatre. Announcing a week ahead of time that a cowboy band would play at all performances, be bired ten artists on the brass and togged tbem out in sombreros, cbaps and bandanas and bad them on the streets and in front of his bouse playing between eacb performance in an old-fasbioned hayrack.

Announcement is made of the appointment of C. H. Preston as manager of the Minneapolis New Garrick. Mr. Preston came to the Twin Cities from Pittsburg a year ago last fall to become resident manager of the Capitol theatre, St. Paul, at its opening. Early in 1921 be was made resident manager of the State theatre, Minneapolis, wben that theatre opened. For the past six months be has managed the Grand theatre, a Finkelstein and Ruben house at Duluth.

Ben Freidman, local film distributor, is to open the Rivoli theatre at Albert Lea late this month. The theatre formerly was owned by V. V. Valleau and was called the Idle Hour.

Burglars, wbo jimmied their way into the office and broke open the safe, robbed the Orpheum tbeatre here on January 9 of $600, tbe theatre's Saturday and Sunday receipts. McCarthy Bros. operate the Orpbeum.

Manager J. E. O'Toole of the Minneapolis Select exchange bas announced the appointment of Howard Carey as special representative of the company with headquarters in Minneapolis. Mr. Carey recently resigned as manager of the Omaba Select exchange. He is succeeded in that position by P. J. Richratb, formerly associated with tbe F. B. Warren Corporation.

Jack O'Toole, manager of the Minneapolis Select exchange is back at bis desk after a severe attack of bronchitis. A. H. Fiscber, local Metro manager, has also returned to work after a short illness.

Jack Prescott, former manager of the New Garrick theatre, Minneapolis and more recently manager of the Capitol theatre, Winnipeg, bas assumed the management of the Tower theatre, St. Paul. John LeRoy Johnston resigned this position to go with Southern Enterprises at Dallas about a month ago.

INDIANAPOLIS

Indiana exhibitors lost a friend in the death of Mrs. Hence Orme, January 20. She was one of tbe Indiana Indorsers of Photoplays wbo took a prominent part in the fight to prevent passage of a censorsbip bill by tbe state legislature in 1921. Death came suddenly in a room in the Hotel Severin, following an attack of acute indigestion. Mrs. Orme was the women's manager of United States Senator Harry S. New's campaign for renomination on the Republican ticket. Her political standing and the fact that she was president of tbe State Federation of Parent-Teacher Clubs made her doubly valuable as an ally to the exhibitors in their censorship figbt.

Speaking of censorship, Motion Picture News' correspondent was informed by a person on tbe inside last week that some sort of city ordinance to provide local official judgment upon the morals of pbotoplay, vaudeville, burlesque and legitimate attractions may make its appearance in the city council soon. Tbe council's next regular meeting is February 6. The measure may be introduced then, it was said. Just wbicb wing of the blue law crowd is talking of tbe move could not be definitely ascertained.

The Colonial Theatre Company of Ft. Wayne bas filed preliminary certificate of dissolution with tbe secretary of state.

Rev. W. S. Fleming, the Chicago blue law advocate, spoke to Methodist ministers of Indianapolis last week urging them to start a figbt for Sunday closing of motion picture houses.

The Coburn Pboto and Film Company, engaging locally in commercial and news film production, will build a $50,000 studio before fall, H. H. Coburn, vice-president and general manager, announced.

Worth Reading

Only rarely—perhaps too rarely—do we call your attention to the special features, which with the regular departments go to make up Motion Picture News.

This week, for example, there is a new department devoted to the doings of exchangemen, salesmen, exhibitors and others who, throughout the country, make up such an integral part of the industry. Two pages of informative, up-to-the-minute news with the personal touch.

Then "Pictures and People," two pages of zippy, chatty talks, which, instituted last week, has already created wide notice.

"What Are Press Books Worth?" a page article that will at least set you thinking, is just one of a number of other features.

Every page of the NEWS is worth reading EVERY WEEK.

FROM every angle, the four pictures making up "The Mistress of the World" have an appeal to every class of people in the United States.

There never has been and there probably never will be again anything as gigantic in conception and execution, as thrilling, as interesting, as spectacular, as these four mighty masterpieces.

Nor was there ever a picture which so lends itself to publicity and exploitation as these do.

There never was a picture which meant so much to the exhibitors of America. "The Mistress of the World" will make box-office records which never can be broken.

HERE'S THE BEST EVIDENCE A SHREWD SHOWMAN COULD ASK FOR!

The biggest exhibitors—the finest and best first-run houses in the country—are paying record prices for the privilege of booking this remarkable series of short super-features. They realize, as must every real showman, that here is a builder of patronage, a packer of houses—in short, a money maker so great as to be absolutely alone in the short-feature field. The appeal of this clean, crisp action series both to young and old, men and women, is so big and universal that one can readily appreciate these words from the Exhibitors Trade Review:

"There's something about this 'Leather Pushers' that gets you right away, and when you've seen this series you will understand why we're sold on it. It's something novel—away from the usual stuff."

ASCHER BROTHERS have booked it for their entire circuit of nineteen houses in Chicago and their two first-run houses in Milwaukee and Cincinnati; Lubliner & Trinz have booked it for their twelve houses in Chicago; such big first-run houses as the Orpheum in Akron, the Plaza in Bridgeport, the Capitol in McKeesport, the Aldine in Lancaster, and scores of others, have arranged for early showings.

IF you're the kind of a showman you should be you'll write, wire or see your Universal Exchange at once.

PYRAMID PICTURES, INC.,
and
THE PYRAMID PLAN

PYRAMID Pictures, Inc., was organized for the purpose of producing sixteen or more real box office attractions each year to be sold to the exhibitor at fair and honest prices that will enable him to make money. The Company is headed by Walter E. Greene, formerly Vice-President of Famous Players-Lasky, President of Artcraft and one of the organizers of Paramount.

PYRAMID Pictures is absolutely independent and has no alliances whatever with other producing companies or political groups. Its sole aim is to make good pictures at lowest possible costs and to distribute them as efficiently and economically as possible.

"MY Old Kentucky Home," Pyramid's first production, is completed. A story from the pen of Anthony Paul Kelly, it was directed by Ray C. Smallwood with an all-star cast including Monte Blue, Sigrid Holmquist, Julia Swayne Gordon, Lucy Fox, Arthur Carewe and Frank Currier.

PYRAMID'S second and third pictures, "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge," with Monte Blue, directed by Ray C. Smallwood, and "The Mayor's Wife," an Anna Katherine Greene story with Betty Blythe as the star and Kenneth Webb as director, are both in production now.

THESE pictures are financed and made under the Pyramid Plan under which all Pyramid Productions of the future will be made.

THE Pyramid Plan is the most equitable arrangement ever devised for the financing of motion picture production. It eliminates the high cost of producer financing from which the industry has suffered in the past and offers a sane solution to exhibitors and others who want to share in picture production profits.

THE Pyramid Plan finances each production through the sale of Pyramid Profit sharing Syndicate Units. One thousand Units, each of $100 par value, are issued to make a $100,000 production. Every dollar received by Pyramid Pictures, Inc., from the sale of these Units is used for actual production expenses and for the making of positive prints. Not one cent of this money is used for office overhead or officers' salaries.

PYRAMID PICTURES INC.

PYRAMID PICTURES INC.

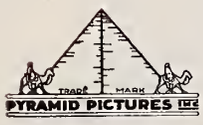
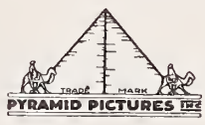
THE Pyramid Plan provides that the first money received from rentals after distributing charges shall be returned to the Unit holders until they have been repaid their total investment before Pyramid Pictures, Inc., receives a cent. After the investors have received the return of their money, the plan provides that Pyramid Pictures, Inc., shall receive 50% of the profits for management, and that the investors receive the other 50% of the profit for the use of their money.

THE Pyramid Plan also provides that the Unit holders have a first lien on the negative and positive prints under a trusteeship until they have received the return of their total investment dollar for dollar.



THE Pyramid Plan insures the producer against banker control of his business. It opens the way to exhibitors who want to foster a greater independent output of good pictures. It provides exhibitors with the means of sharing in the legitimate production profits assured by experienced honest management, employing good directors, selecting good stories, casting recognized picture players and making good pictures on a safe and sane basis.

PYRAMID'S management is tried and proven. The Pyramid Plan is a demonstrated success. Pyramid Productions of the future will be largely exhibitor financed.



PYRAMID'S Distribution will be handled by the American Releasing Corporation at a straight thirty per cent. cost, affording what we believe to be not only the cheapest but also the best distribution of good pictures in America today.

NIGHT LIFE on the Great White Way has entered into a new phase of all-night revelries. The debutante flapper and the famous hostess are with us. In one of the "clubs" on a recent evening a woman leader of Fifth Avenue's social life sat at one table; at a neighboring table sat a noted stage beauty whose name was figuring in the divorce courts. That is the keynote of the Broadway season.

"It used to be known as "slumming." Now it is a mere casual routine matter of inquiring at 3 A. M., "Where let's spend the ev ring?"

Another Proof that Keaton Is the Feature of the Show

San Francisco Examiner

Double Bill Lures Crowds to Strand

The Strand's double feature pro g am, which has been showing to pleased audiences since last Wednesday, is in its second and final week.

Buster Keaton in his latest production "The Playhouse," is the comedy feature. The story opens with a minstrel show. Buster is Bones, the end man, the interlocutor and every other minstrel. In addition he is the orchestra, audience, stage hands, not to mention the chief actor in the vaudeville act. As the comedy proceeds we learn that Buster Keaton is the only man on the theater's pay roll.

This remarkable effect has been made possible through expert photography. Buster as the orchestra occupies every chair playing the different instruments. The whole action is synchronized so perfectly that one rubs his eyes and wonders if he is dreaming. Keaton is funny, but when the spectator sees thirty or forty Buster Keatons all playing in one picture a riot of laughter is the result.

Motion Picture News

Dogs and Dummies

AN exhibitor gave us a big thought last week. It seemed big at the time; and it grows bigger. He knows what he is talking about, because he has been watching picture audiences closely for at least fifteen years and studies the present day public in his dozen or more city and country theatres.

* * *

"The trouble today with pictures and the public" —said he—"I mean the broad public and I mean pictures broadly—is that they are, mostly, not sincere."

* * *

We are considerably impatient over picture criticism. There's too much of it, especially from those who know neither pictures nor the public. The public fools the best creative minds right along, and pictures by and large are pretty good right along; and anyone who really knows is bound to have a vast respect for the effort and resources required in the production of pictures.

When anyone begins: "The trouble with pictures today—" we feel like getting hastily out of the way.

But—and we speak only from a commercial standpoint—it is known today that the public is "bilious" on pictures. And when a keen showman says why, and says it so earnestly, it's worth mighty careful consideration.

What were the outstanding features of the picture shows on Broadway last week?

At the Capitol there was an unusual picture—"The Silent Call." A dog was the hero. He held the audience spell-bound. The story, the presence on the screen of two-legged actors got only a lukewarm and incidental interest. The dog was supreme!

At the Strand there was another unusual picture—"Schooldays." And its most appealing scene was that of a boy and a dog. So the audience thought.

At the Rivoli—where, by the way, there was an extraordinary feature — "One Glorious Day" — the audience stirred with greatest interest when a fox-terrier bounded into a beautiful Post Nature Picture.

Among the first of the new Bruce Wilderness Tales —not yet released, but viewed by the writer the same week—there's a story of an old man and a mongrel pup. It grips you.

* * *

What is the human interest here—and why?

It isn't that we love dogs and children.

It is because they act without self-consciousness, because they make us feel, because they express themselves to us with genuineness—

Because, to sum it all up, they give sincere portrayals of life.

The exhibitor went on: "the screen today is too true a reflection of the industry itself, of its impulses and ideals. And we, most of us, are not sincere. The public is feeling it."

* * *

What he means is this:

If any producer entered this field because of the dollars he might make—and therefore only incidentally of the pictures he might make—then that impulse and that ideal will show in his pictures. The public will see it if he doesn't.

No man, in all the history of human activity, ever made a good product of any kind except he had in mind the goodness of the product; and the dollars came incidentally and because the public found out the product was good and bought it.

That's true as daylight; just as true as that no man ever held a job well if he had his mind only on his salary.

* * *

In this industry we've got the cart before the horse. The dollar sign comes first—and the impulse, the ideal, the ability, come next, if at all.

That's true of jobs as well as pictures.

We are not sincere.

* * *

And so on, along the line.

If a young clerk suddenly becomes a popular leading man—only because God gave him the required facial lineaments and physique; and if he believes that all that is required of him is the devoted care of his spats and mustache—why, of course the mirror of the screen will tell the public the truth about this person.

And so of the pretty young thing—who doesn't know that years of grinding study and supreme self-sacrifice are needed to destroy the self-consciousness and bring out the soul of the woman who can make people feel.

The public will stop—it has stopped—paying its money to look at motion photogravures of handsome males and pretty girls.

We are not asking that pictures express sincerity for art's sake. Our reasons are wholly commercial. It's a question of making pictures that will sell to the public.

The public is on a strike today—for sincerity in pictures.

Theatres in Big Cities Undergo Inspection

AS an aftermath to the recent Knickerbocker Theatre disaster in Washington, D C., city and state authorities in various parts of the Union are taking steps to prevent a recurrence of similar accidents in their jurisdictions. During the past week the theatres of New York City have been undergoing inspection, and in Kansas City the superintendent of buildings has been examining the city's various theatrical structures and investigating seating arrangements and methods of handling crowds. A department head of one of the big distributing corporations declared reports from their exchanges had indicated a dropping off in business at the theatres from 20 to 30 per cent. last week.

The following bill to amend the labor law in relation to the inspection of theatres in New York State has been introduced in the New York State Assembly by Mr. Louis A. Cuvillier, Assemblyman from New York City—introductory number 625:

"Section 1. Section twenty-one of chapter fifty of the laws of nineteen hundred and twenty-one, entitled 'An act in relation to labor, constituting chapter thirty-one of the consolidated laws,' is hereby amended by inserting therein a new subdivision, to follow subdivision three, to be subdivision three-a, to read as follows:

"3-a. Shall provide for quarterly inspection of all theatres and places of public assemblage for amusement purposes as to all matters prescribed by this chapter or the industrial code."

Paragraph "d" of subdivision one of section twenty-eight of this chapter is recommended to be amended to read as follows:

"d. The construction, alteration, fire-protection and sanitation of buildings used or intended to be used as theatres or places of public assemblage for amusement purposes: (Remainder of section same as old law)."

3. Such chapter is also asked to be amended by inserting therein a new article, to follow article five, to be article five-a, to read as follows:

"190. Inspection of Theatres; Certificate; Fee. After July first, nineteen hundred and twenty-two, no person, firm or corporation shall use any building as a theatre or place of public assemblage for amusement purposes unless such building shall first have been inspected by the industrial commission and a certificate issued declaring such building to be a proper place in accordance with the provisions of this chapter and the rules of the industrial board.

"Upon the report of the inspector inspecting any such building the commission may issue a certificate as herein provided upon the payment of a fee of twenty-five dollars therefor; or if such report be favorable, may make an order providing for such changes or alterations in the construction of such theatre or other building used as a place of public assemblage for amusement purposes, as it may deem advisable not inconsistent with the building code of the city, town or village in which such building is situated, as will make such building comply with the requirements of this chapter and the rules of the industrial board, and upon the compliance with such order, such certificate shall be issued; or the commission, if it deem such structure unsafe for use as a theatre or place of public assemblage for amusement purposes, may condemn such building.

"191. Certificates to Be Renewed Quarterly. The commission thereafter quarterly shall inspect each building used as a theatre or as a place of public assemblage for amusement purposes, and upon the favorable report of the agent making such inspection, may renew such certificate upon payment of ten dollars.

"192. Plans for New Buildings or Alterations; Approval by Commission. The industrial board shall on the recommendation of the industrial commission and may on its own motion, make rules for the construction and alteration, safety, fire protection and sanitation of all buildings intended to be used as theatres or places of public assemblage for amusement purposes. After July first, nineteen hundred and twenty-two, no building shall be constructed in this state intended to be used as a theatre or other place of public assemblage for amusement purposes, or no existing structure so used shall be altered unless and until the plans and specifications therefor shall have first been approved by the industrial commission.

"193. Violations; Penalties. Any person, firm or corporation violating any of the provisions of this article, or any rule of the industrial board, or order issued by the industrial commission in relation thereto, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor punishable if a corporation by a fine of not less than five hundred dollars or more than five thousand dollars or imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, or by both.

"4. This act shall take effect immediately."

Washington, D. C., February 9.—(Special).—It is suggested to the Ways and Means Committee by Congressman Fleer that the Admission Tax be doubled to provide $90,000,000.

(Full details will be published next week.)

PEOPLE AND PICTURES

GEORGE UTASSEY, one of the most prominent publishers in the country and an executive of much experience and ability, has entered the film business. He's exceptional in another way, too. He doesn't like publicity, asked us urgently to say nothing; so we have compromised on the basis of giving him mere mention, and letting the full news be announced when the press representative gets his way with him.

* * *

There's a lot of true talk in a letter from E. H. Kaufman in this issue. Read it. Mr. Kaufman represented this industry and the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce at the Foreign Trade Convention. Turn to page 1105.

IT doesn't seem at all likely that the American Express Company will ever take over the distribution of films. Moreover the agitation of the subject will probably settle forever the whole question of centralized film distribution, one which has been discussed largely—and loosely, for some time.

Enough figures have been produced—in the consideration of the Express Company proposition—to show pretty well that the saving effected would not be a factor with the big companies who will naturally vie with one another in just this sort of competitive service to their customers—as the Film Daily points out.

The high cost of distribution is not due to duplication in the mechanical handling of film—with all the clerical work involved. There are not too many exchanges, in each centre, because the handling, billing and shipment of film require them.

There are too many exchanges because there is too much production and consequently too much expensive selling effort. That's where the money goes—not for roofs and clerical labor, which could be consolidated at some but only a comparatively small saving.

Jock Hutchison instructing Constance Talmadge, a First National star, in the art of holding a club

But the consolidation of selling effort isn't going to happen quickly or early either—not so long as exchanges are producer owned and the other fellow's picture gets step-child treatment, nor so long as the prices of pictures remains a matter of barter.

HERE'S a thought for the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Can negative be preserved for future generations; and, is it being preserved?

We talk a great deal about the wonder of motion photography—that it will show the important events and personages of today for centuries after we are gone.

Is that true? How long can negative be preserved so that prints can be made from it?

Negative dries out rapidly. We are told that Eucalyptus oil will preserve it. But for how long; and what is the recipe?

How many negatives eight years old are in shape to print from today?

How many Biographs and Keystones — these will show screen people now famous—are available today?

What about our war pictures, and the news libraries? How long will they last.

The luncheon last week of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers was devoted to a discussion of trade papers. There were about 150 present; also 4 trade paper editors. At the end of two hours of discussion the vote was 150 to 4.

At the Green Room Club Revel on the evening of Feb. 5, Dr. Royal S. Copeland, Commissioner of Public Health, was introduced as "a real friend of the theatre, the man who kept the amusement houses open during the 'flu epidemic of 1918." Responding, Dr. Copeland advanced a reason for his championship at that time—a good and sufficient reason—namely that two-thirds of the city's population lived in unsanitary and unhealthful dwellings, whereas the theatres, clean and well ventilated, helped the situation by giving these people a chance to get away from their surroundings.

A common sense argument from a man who has filled his important job in an efficient, common sense manner.

A NEWSPAPER man who is also advertising manager of a local theatre—and evidently a man of hard-boiled experience in both jobs, takes a resounding whack at press-books in this issue. See page 1104.

And Joe Lee takes another—after a trip across country.

Press-books cost a heap of money. May be a million—altogether. That's all right if they exploit. But do they?

Looks like a rigid investigation might be in order—in these days of strict economy.

The National Board of Review claims its watchword is "Selection not Censorship."

It does seem that Mr. and Mrs. Public generally is able intelligently to select its entertainment—and censor that which needs censoring by non-attendance.

ONCE on a time, an enterprising rep show advertising man, now a motion picture director, consumated what he considered a great stroke of billing when he succeeded in getting a three sheet block poster on "Paid in Full" in the window of a small town bank that had failed a few weeks before. The result was a small sized riot among a colony of foreigners whose savings had been deposited in the defunct institution. The incident is recalled by some alleged exploitation on "Rent Free" at Butte, Mont. Recently an ad appeared in the local papers reading: "Notice—With the opening of the mines, Rent Free."

We leave it to the judgment of the reader which stunt deserves praise and which should be condemned.

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood

"The 'Chief' was prouder of that honor than he has been on any occasion in a long time.

That's the way a Universal man phrased Carl Laemmle's gratification over the surprise presentation by E. L. Crandall, director of lectures and visual education of the Board of Education of New York City, of a silver cup. The gift was suitably inscribed "on behalf of the Teachers and Pupils who enjoyed Mr. Laemmle's Central Theatre Matinees of 'Winners of the West.'"

Mr. Laemmle has cause for pride, not only because of the fact that he is probably the first producer to be accorded such signal recognition by an educational body, but in his forward looking action in providing the series of matinees.

POOR Mr. Hays! Everybody is press-agenting him—or rather using him as a stepping stone into print for themselves.

And the newspapers fall with astonishing ease.

An insurance agent got over a story of a $2,000,000 policy.

A real estate man got a column in the N. Y. Times about a motion picture studio village on Long Island. We do need more studios so badly. There are not enough closed ones.

Then someone shoved Arthur Woods, ex-Police Commissioner of New York City, into print—as Mr. Hays' assistant at a salary of only $50,000 a year. And we received a dark and anonymous communication connecting Woods with J. P. Morgan and thence with Henry Ford who is out after the Jewish banking interests.

What's it all about anyway?

And does it do the M. P. industry any good in the public eye?

IT has remained for R. S. Woodhull, manager of the Baker theatre, Dover, N. J., and John T. Collins, proprietor of the Criterion theatre, Rutherford, N. J., to put into practical operation the plan of the M. T. O. A., through its recently organized Public Service Department, to give special matinees with educational programs for children. See page 1106.

Speaking from practical knowledge Franklin F. Hooper, chief of the circulation department of the New York City library, and Miss Lenore St. John Power, chief of the children's department, declare motion pictures is making the public read—and read good works. As illustration of their paint they gave figures on the big demand for books from which big pictures, such as "The Four Horsemen," "Miss Lulu Bett" and others, are made, which follows the screen presentation.

IT is worthy of more than passing note that the National Board of Review has publicly referred to the marked improvement in serial pictures of today. We have heard of and seen, the 'bigger and better' feature; the high class, improved comedy and educational. Now the faith of those few producers who believed the serial had its legitimate place in picture entertainment, has further contributed to a higher plane in all around film production.

"Go-Get-'Em Hutch" (Pathe), and "The Timber Queen" and "With Stanley in Africa" (Universal) may be cited as examples of the present day serial. Thrills they have—in so much they follow the old time "continued next week" episodic picture. But the thrills stop short of the ridiculous, and through the productions run an industrial or historical thread.

The serial trend, indeed, seems toward dignified chapter presentations based on subject matter of real interest.

WE'RE to have the truth about Cannibals pretty shortly And what a story it is!

Captain E. A. Salisbury has just returned from a yea cruise on his yacht through the South Seas. Captain Salisbury will be well remembered by his "Wild Life in America' pictures several years ago.

We have just viewed eight reels of his adventure cruise—along with Frederick I. O'Brien whose book on the South Sea Islands is a best seller and who encountered Captain Salisbury on his trip.

The pictures are splendid. With titles they will make a ten-reel production and probably a Broadway theatre will house the show at an early date. No settled distribution plans as yet.

Looks like the "different" kind of picture the public is seeking.

Add appointments of the week: Frank L. Shallebarger, for five years sub editor of the Paris edition of the New York Herald, and for twenty months with Arthur S. Kane's organization, to full charge of the publicity department of that concern.

* * *

Production has begun this week on a second series of "featuretts" by John J. Glavey, and based on the famous Nick Carter detective stories. Contending that something can be done by the producer to save money for the exhibitor, he announces his intentions to sell, as the producer directly to the buyer and thereby help the exhibitor pull a tighter rein on his purse string.

"CENSORSHIP" says Heywood Broun in the New York World, "is centuries too late."

"Biology, for instance, cannot be amended with blue pencils and shears. Unfortunately, Mr. Sumner was not present, or even represented, during creation week. At that time he might have been exceedingly useful in refining the facts of existence. Certain fundamental things are now beyond recall. Life has been released and it is likely to go on even without the benefit of a license from any of the appointees of Gov. Nathan Miller."

Mr. Broun also points out that the censors keep strictly moral in spite of all the bad things they see in pictures. They don't, for instance, jump into one-piece bathing suits after viewing the bathing beauties. And if they can remain pure, why can't the rest of us?

The only answer must be that the censor is super-human and ordinary humans must be protected.

Which seems to us to go right to the root of the silliness of censorship, and other such autocracy.

Jules Levy

The appointment of Jules Levy to the District Managership for Universal of the territory embracing Philadelphia, Washington and Charlotte, is announced by H. M. Berman.

Mr. Levy, after a career in the legitimate, embarked in the picture field in 1913. He has been manager of exchanges in Detroit, Toledo and Washington for Universal.

Famous Players-Lasky Absorbs Allen Theatre Holdings in Canada

bout Fifty Theatres Reported to Be Involved in Huge Merger

THE Canadian holdings of Allen Theatres, Limited, representing about fifty moving picture theatres om Coast to Coast, are being absorbed the Famous Players Canadian Corration, according to an announceent made at Montreal on February 6. ne huge merger has been approved by e directors of both companies, it is reorted, and will be completed as soon as areholders of both companies ratify the al. This ratification is assured, accordg to George Rotsky, managing director Jule and J. J. Allen in Montreal. The ansaction forms the greatest theatrical al in the history of Canada. This corration will now have about eighty movg picture theatres in cities and towns roughout the country.

The actual cash involved in the transacn is between four and five million dolrs, it is announced, and funds to cover e cheque of $1,250,000, being the first payment in the deal, have already been placed in the bank. The new Allen Theatre in Cleveland Ohio, which was regarded as the first of a chain of Allen theatres in the United States, is not included in the purchase, while it is understood that the Allens will continue to operate their moving picture exchanges, through which Goldwyn, Educational and other releases will be distributed throughout Canada as before. The Allens, with Mr. W. P. Dewees of Vancouver, B. C., also control the distribution of First National features to Western Canada. This arrangement is not disturbed, but the subfranchises which the Allens secured from First National for each of their theatres in Eastern Canada, with the exception of Ottawa, Ontario, are to go with the houses which are being transferred.

The absorption means the termination of a gigantic theatre building war which has been waged during the past three years between the Allens and the Famous Players Canadian Corporation. These companies erected and operated competing theatres in many cities, but they used different methods of financing for the construction of the houses. The Famous Players Corporation announced that they did their own financing, being backed by several prominent capitalists, while the Allens organized individual companies for practically all of their new theatres which were financed on a popular basis, the public being invited to invest in preferred shares, common stock being offered as a bonus.

At one time the Allens had no less than fifty-five theatres, but several of their houses had been disposed of during the past year. The Allens also secured an option on theatre property in Leicester Square, London, England, and it was intended to erect a large film palace there, but the option was permitted to expire, according to reports from London.

The Famous Players Canadian Corporation has Adolph Zukor of New York as its president, and Mr. George P. Bickel of Toronto, a noted capitalist and mine owner, is the vice-president. The managing director is Mr. N. L. Nathanson of Toronto, who is also managing director of Regal Films, Limited; Eastern Theatres, Limited, and subsidiary companies. Other directors include Mr. J. B. Tudhope of Orillia, Ontario, a manufacturer and financier, and Mr. Sheppard of New York, a banker.

The Allens entered the moving picture theatre business with their father, Mr. Ben Allen, at Brantford, Ontario, about 14 years ago, when they opened a store show. This was soon followed by store shows in many other cities and towns in Ontario. Eventually they moved to Calgary, in Western Canada, where they built the first of the large moving picture theatres in the Dominion. Other large film houses were erected in Western Canada, and then the Allens returned to the East to open Canadian headquarters at Toronto. This was seven years ago. Large Allen theatres were built in numerous cities in Ontario and Quebec, handsome suburban theatres being built in practically every district of Toronto.

The Famous Players Canadian Corporation, in the meantime, erected a chain of Capitol Theatres from Montreal to Vancouver and developed a combination form of moving-picture, music, prologue and grand-opera entertainment to a high degree. The Allens did likewise, reconstructing a number of their large new theatres to provide facilities for the staging of operatic, dancing and other features, including elaborate prologues.

Inquiries at the New York headquarters of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation elicited no response from any of the departments on the Canadian transaction. Mr. Zukor had just left for the Coast and could not be reached. S. Kent was also reported to be out of town.

Powers to Be Managing Director of R-C

ARRANGEMENTS have been completed by the R.-C. Pictures Corporation, by which Patrick A. Powers has become financially interested in the corporation and its subsidiaries and will occupy the position of managing director, according to an announcement made by R. S. Cole, president. It is the intention of the corporation to immediately enlarge its sphere of operations and to arrange for a still larger plan of production and distribution than has already been announced.

New National Distributing Corporation Announced

PLANS for a new national distributing organization came to light in Indianapolis, Ind., last week with the filing of papers of incorporation in the office of the Indiana Secretary of State. The name adopted is the National Cinema Corporation. This announcement is contained in a news report just received from the Motion Picture News correspondent at Indianapolis. The report adds that the company is to be backed with unlimited capital as financiers of national repute are interested in the organization.

The incorporators are E. M. Mathews and T. F. Vonnegut of Indianapolis and W. E. Rothermel, of Chicago. An announcement given out in Indianapolis declares that the plans of the company include the opening of branch exchanges in twenty-six cities. The organization is incorporated with a capital of $250,000. None of the original stock is for sale, it was announced.

Resident managers will be located in New York and Los Angeles, according to the announcement. An entirely new method of centralized distribution is being planned, it is stated, the idea being to eliminate as much as possible the present high prices of film shipments from the exchanges to the theatres and return. In addition to the twenty-six exchanges, it is explained, there will be placed in every city of advantageous location an office to facilitate the shipping of films and accessories; sales units and branch managers will be situated only in the original twenty-six exchanges. The announcement also declares that pictures will be purchased independently, and that while contracts have been signed with several producing units, their product will be subject to screen examination with the privilege of rejection.

Pathe Files Suit Against New York Censors

PAPERS were filed on Thursday, February 9th, by Pathe in an action against the New York Censor Commission, the outgrowth of deletions ordered by the Board on a Pathe News reel.

Lewis Innerarity, general counsel of Pathe, made the announcement of the institution of the suit. The action is based principally on the fact that the Censor Board took exception to certain scenes of bathing girls shown in the News reels and ordered them out. This occurred soon after the Board started functioning.

"Can't We Have Some Real Utility Copy?"

By Charles M. Stetson,
Advertising Department of San Diego Union-Tribune

SINCE pictures have become America's greatest educator, and, in proportion, the advertising of pictures has graduated to "exploitation," it does seem that the men who spend hundreds of thousands of dollars for exploitation literature—perhaps to justify the rentals they collect for their films—could be brought to the realization that the men who finally exhibit the pictures have kept pace with the times and have fortified their house budget with comparatively capable advertising men, familiar with local conditions, who, with proper assistance from the exploitation bureau of the producer could turn out real merchandise picture copy—in other words, copy that would really pull in the people.

It has been my own experience in some five years of constant theatrical campaigning to be forced to discard approximately 90 per cent of the "canned copy" and fully one half of the cuts and matrices furnished from the producers. It has also become necessary in hundreds of instances to have to hurry art work through the engraving shops in order to develop display even worthy of public attention. It seems a foolish extravagance on the part of the producer to allow the "exploitation" geniuses to spend so much money on really useless prepared copy and "news stories" that the editor of a weekly gazette of 126 circulation wouldn't dare to print for fear of losing all his profits.

Is it not barely possible that shrewd employment of an editorial desk man on the "literary" end of the press sheet of a production, and a really capable display man on the advertisements in the press sheet would not only save the producer a lot of money, but—as the exhibitor finally pays these bills—work to the advantage of the exhibitor? It certainly would be a relief if, out of some hundred or so press books, the local advertising man could pick up a book of "canned copy" that he could clip and "shoot" verbatim.. It would save him time and money and might give him some original ideas.

I have noticed a good many suggestions in the press books in the past years for the development of business, but to my knowledge I have yet to find the suggested "stunt" that my advertising manager and business manager would shoot the "staff" out on for the development of copy business.

The newspapers are just as anxious for copy as is the theatre for a good "hook-up" stunt, but there seems to be a dearth of ideas in the "exploitation" offices the producing companies, and as a resu many pictures with a dozen "hook-up angles go unheralded.

Instead of "gems" of literature, hig sounding phrases and 7-point Roman fi in matter in some of the matrices, wh don't the "exploitation" offices grind o a few black face condensed title lin with the name of the star (if he or she really a popular star), is good tall, f black letters? Why don't they inclu some insert "thumb-nail" portrait cu and a good contrast 60-screen cut for di play copy purposes? Or a few borde designed to "stand out," no matter whe the ad would be buried in publication.

An outburst of this character must general among the theatres all over t country that wait patiently until abo three days before their picture engag ment starts, only to find that the literatu and matrices haven't an ounce of pun or one really original business-getting su gestion. Give us some big title lines, condensed fat black face drawings—n type—plain reading, the kind a lady eighty can see without her glasses. Gi us illustrative matter that can be work into a 4 column by twelve inch layout something like this. Advertising and di play copy men all over the United Stat that are handling theatrical copy wou appreciate anything of this sort.

Press Books—and the Waste Paper Basket

New York, Feb. 4, 1922.

Mr. Wm. A. Johnston,
Editor Moving Picture News,
729 Seventh Ave., N. Y.

My Dear Mr. Johnston:

After an extended trip through the middle and northwestern states in behalf of the Swedish Biograph Company, I thought you might be pleased to know that in the great number of theatres and exchanges that it was my pleasure to visit, I noticed in every instance a copy of the Motion Picture News always occupied a prominent place on the desks of the various exhibitors' offices.

It might also interest you to know that in a number of talks with various editors of newspapers, some interesting facts were brought to light as to the large amount of money wasted annually in the mailing of expensive press books, etc., as a number of editors remarked, the majority (with some exceptions) of these books usually found their way to large waste baskets. When I asked the reason for the books landing in such an important place as the waste basket, the reply in most cases was the bulk of material contained in most press books was of a technical nature and that newspapers desired short, snappy interesting stories.

In some theatres, too, from my observation I judge the old paper collectors reap a harvest from discarded press books.

Should the small amount of information contained in this communication be of slight interest to you, you have my permission to do with it as you deem fit.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Yours very sincerely,
Joseph F. Lee.

Paramount Exploiteers in Two New Exchanges

THE Paramount exploitation service has been extended to the Dominion of Canada and to the Portland, Me., territory, as the first two steps in the expansion of the department planned by S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Claud Saunders picked Leon J. Bamberger, exploiteer of the Minneapolis Paramount exchange to do the pioneer work in Canada. Bamberger was winner of the gold watch offered by the firm for the best exploitation stunt for Paramount week. Charles E. Raymond of the St. Louis exchange, was chosen to open the exploitation service in Maine.

The vacancy at Minneapolis caused by Bamberger's transfer has been filled by Max R. Doolittle, who has been at the Cleveland exchange. Harry Royster, Des Moines, takes Doolittle's place, and a new exploiteer, John C. Ingram, has been assigned to the Des Moines post. Mr. Saunders has transferred A. Mike Vogel, who has had the double-barrelled assignment of the Portland, Ore., Seattle exchanges, to St. Louis to succeed Raymond. Vogel's old job in the Northwest is temporarily open.

Ten New Companies Incorporated in New York

TEN companies entered the motion picture business in New York state during the past week and filed papers in the secretary of state's office, noting the following directors and capitalization:

Joe LeBlang's Ticket Office, Inc., $5,000, William Kaufman, Edward N. and Harry Bloomberg, New York City; George H. Hamilton, Inc., $10,000, George H. and L. W. Hamilton, T. O. Eltenhead, New York; Public Service Ticket Office, Inc., $10,000, William Kaufman, Edward N. and Harry A. Bloomberg, New York; Torc, Inc., $10,000, Carl Reed, H. L. Cort, Solomon Goodman, New York; Vaudeville Productions, Inc., $20,000, Walter Brooks, Anton Scibilia, George A. McCormick, New York; The O. P. Company, $500, R. C. Roy, M. M. Burke, A. C. Redmond, New York; Grady Productions, $10,000, Billy Grady, William C. Fields, Ruth Stern, New York; Bell Harbor Corporation, $20,000, Alexander J. Granick, Abraham Shabsholowitz, Brooklyn, Jacob Bernstein, New York; Baron Productions, Inc., $1,000, Harry Baron, Dora Cahane, William Roubert, New York; the Phloe Studios, 65,000, Buffalo, Einar Symonds, C. E. Petterson, G. G. Burg, Buffalo.

Hays to Establish Morale in Film Industry

E. H. Kaufman Tells Purpose of Postmaster's Appointment in Reply to Los Angeles Papers

The following article was prompted by the ference of certain Los Angeles papers to the pointment of Postmaster Will Hays as "Film ing." Mr. Kaufmann, who is president of the ter-Ocean Film Accessories Corporation and ho was the delegate of the Los Angeles hamber of Commerce to the Foreign Trade nvention and in this capacity represented the m industry, declares that the term of "Film ing" is entirely misleading as to the object of r. Hays's appointment and the purpose of the w national organization. The establishing of sound morale among the various branches of e industry and the subsequent recognition of e motion-picture as a representative industry local, state, and federal authorities are the ajor purposes of Mr. Hays's entrance into the eld, declares Mr. Kaufmann.

By E. H. Kaufmann

The above term is inclined to mislead ıe public and also the trade as to the ob-ect of the appointment and purpose of the Jational Organization. The present trust ombinations in the film trade are the cause f existing factions, the result of which ; lack of co-operation, and this has pre-ented the fourth largest industry in the Jnited States from getting the proper ecognition from local, State and Federal uthorities as a representative industry.

The idea proposed in the above men-oned article published under date of Jan. 8th to fight local State censorships by ap-ointing Mr. Hays as a censor for the en-ire industry is not alone a bad move in rying to correct one evil with another, ut is also an admission by the trade of eeding censorship instead of standing on heir constitutional rights for the screen, he same as the press, viz: No censorship. his can be helped and accomplished only y co-operation of all interests with Mr. Hays in establishing a Morale by the indi-idual standing of the members of the Jational Association representing all ranches of the industry and so command-ng national recognition of the highest ype.

Censorship cannot be accomplished by Mr. Hays, as a court of last resort, dictat-ng to the independent producer of an ndesirable film to scrap same, and by the ssociated producers refunding to the pro-lucer in question one-fourth of the cost of is production, as proposed. It can only e done successfully, as it was done re-ently in the Hamon case; when by con-erted action of the producers and theatre wners and exchanges the producer of the ilm in question was told that the film would not be allowed to be exhibited in ny of their theatres; and this ruling as arried out by them worked successfully o prevent the public showing of this film. The producers who invest their money in naking productions in the face of stated bjections by the industry are not entitled o even the consideration of a refund of ne-fourth of the cost of production, but nust take their full loss.

If Mr. Hays can reorganize the industry to the point that there are no Controlling Interests ruling, and establish a confidence from the bankers and capitalists as to the Morals of the members of the industry, showing that they have regard for their obligations when due and that they carefully guard their investments against unnecessary extravagance or loss caused by the artistic temperaments of directors and stars, which extravagances still exist today in the organizations of the largest producers in the industry, Mr. Hays will have accomplished what is needed most for national and international recognition of the American screen.

It is wrong to state that there is nothing we want in the way of national legislation. The American screen is a national product that touches on American life and industries in all its phases, and we cannot look at it from a selfish viewpoint, taking into consideration that by allowing a duty to be levied against foreign films we are not only encouraging foreign powers to retaliate against us with a high tariff shutting out our product in those countries, but we also shut out the best medium at our disposal to promote and encourage foreign trade. The screen is the best salesman, speaking all languages and educating foreign countries as to American ideals and products, and we hamper all industries in the efforts toward foreign trade by not taking an international viewpoint of such a broad and serious question.

Recent investigations by the Senate Finance Committee in reference to the question of duty on foreign films have disclosed the fact that the present depression and inactivity of the American producer was not caused by the eight films that have been imported from Europe and shown in this country, but it was caused by the shutting down of over 50 per cent of the theatres in the United States on account of the lack of support by the people who were not able to pay the high prices of admissions, which were caused by the high price of films demanded by the exchanges and consequently caused through the wave of depression and the unemployment situation in the East and Middle West of this country.

I might mention right here that ten years ago a law was enacted giving the American public a right to censor every foreign film coming into this country, the same right that has been exercised during the past ten years by every other country, making it possible for the people, as a nation to state what they want to see and what not. This law, however, was never put into force for the reason that there was no appropriation made when the law was passed for the carrying out of same.

M. P. T. O. Public Service Showing in Dover, N. J.

The first step in the previously explained plan of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, through its recently created Public Service Department in affiliation with the Bureau of Commercial Economics, a Washington organization devoted to public education through lectures, film and stereopticon shows, to bring the screen and picture theatres into closer and more friendly relations with the educational, social and economic life of the country, was realized Saturday, Feb. 4th, when a program of educational pictures, supplemented by a lecture, was presented before 1,500 children at the Baker theatre, Dover, N. J.

This showing, held at 10 A. M., was followed by a second performance at John T. Collins' Criterion theatre, Rutherford, N. J., and both shows are only initial in the plans of the M. T. O. A. and of Manager R. S. Woodhull, of the Baker, and of Manager Collins, of the Criterion.

Both Mr. Woodhull and Mr. Collins had exploited the innovation with painstaking care. In the case of the Dover performance fully 500 children were unable to find room in the theatre. Children from a dozen neighboring towns were attracted to the show. The Mayor of the city was on hand and lent his support to the plan. The local school authorities were also greatly interested and have promised active aid in carrying out the plans for the subsequent performances. Clergymen of all denominations, the women's clubs, etc., have and will co-operate.

The programs given at Dover and Rutherford were varied and nicely balanced. Besides the several reels of instructive films, there were some slides furnished by the Bureau of Commercial Economics and addresses by Dr. Francis Holley, director of the bureau, and others.

At Rutherford practically the same plan of procedure was carried out.

Both Mr. Woodhull and Mr. Collins are actively interested in the new departure, Mr. Woodhull being president of the New Jersey M. T. O. A. and Mr. Collins being one of the directors of the national organization.

It is planned to hold the special shows once each week, although in the future some other day besides Saturday will be selected.

East Hampton, Mass., House Destroyed by Fire

The Majestic theatre in East Hampton, Mass., was totally destroyed by fire on Sunday morning, February 5th. F. H. Roberts, the owner of the theatre, estimated the loss at $75,000. The fire is believed to have started shortly after midnight in the bowling alley in the basement of the theatre building. It spread so rapidly that the rear of the house was a mass of flames by the time that the firemen arrived. All the theatre equipment was destroyed, including $1,000 worth of scenery belonging to William G. Friel. Ern-

WILLIAM D. TAYLOR

William Desmond Taylor, the prominent director, was found murdered in his home in Hollywood on Thursday morning, February 2nd. Several investigations are under way. The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon, February 7th, with services at St. Paul's Episcopal Pro-Cathedral, Los Angeles. The Pall bearers were selected from the membership of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, of which Mr. Taylor was president. Immediately after the services the body was placed in a vault in the Hollywood Cemetery, pending the arrival of the late director's daughter from New York.

Jesse L. Lasky, production chief of Famous Players-Lasky, with which organization Mr. Taylor had been associated, paid a tribute to the memory of the late director in the following words:

"I have lost a friend—a man who won that place not only for his personal qualities, but also for the manner in which he discharged his professional duties.

"William D. Taylor's loyalty to the firm he worked for was proverbial. Never had he been late to an engagement, never had he balked at a task because it was too hard, and when a slump in the industry demanded personal sacrifice he was the first to offer himself. A man of finer ideals I have never known.

"Our corporation proposes to enter actively into plans for the detection of the slayer. All our resources will be drawn upon to hasten the bringing to justice the murderer of our friend."

BELIEVING that exhibitors, having no other source of information than the public press, might be misled by the sensational reports of Mabel Normand's connection with the Taylor tragedy, the Mack Sennett organization has issued the following statement:

"The facts of the case, in so far as Miss Normand is concerned, are these: Mr. Taylor had promised Miss Normand that he would secure for her a certain book. He phoned her at the studio that the novel had arrived and was awaiting her pleasure. Immediately after her day's work at the studio and just before dinner she drove to Mr. Taylor's residence and picked up the book. Mr. Taylor bade her good-bye at the machine and Miss Normand was driven home immediately by her chauffeur. They were the last ones known to have seen him alive.

"That is the way her name became connected with the case. Miss Normand has the sympathy of the entire country through the accidental connection of her name with this regrettable tragedy, for she has been completely exonerated of any connection with it."

Shepard Leaves Kineto

Harry K. Shepard, who has been associated with Charles Urban in the Kineto Company of America, has resigned from that organization. He will be succeeded by H. J. Knight.

Standardization Discussed by Laboratory Experts

The Allied Laboratories Association held the first of their series of banquets in the Hotel Astor Wednesday evening, February 1st. The idea back of these banquets is an organized campaign on the part of this association to do its utmost to bring about a better situation in the industry in so far as it concerns standardization in character both technically and financially.

Dr. William E. Story, scientist on the subject of light, color, etc., of the research laboratory of the General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y., was the speaker of the evening. Dr. Story gave a very interesting lecture on the possibilities of standardization of the various technical phases in the laboratories, studios and theatres.

A few of the present-day methods in printing and photographing were constructively criticized and suggestions were offered to overcome some of these fallacies. For instance, in the various theatres, the house lighting differs to an extreme degree, some houses using almost no illumination while a picture is shown, while another may permit considerable light to fall on the projection screen. Thus, the same picture with the same intensity of light on the screen would appear entirely different in regard to contrast. It follows that a standardization in house illumination would be very desirable. Again, in the case of the laboratories, in one instance a print is examined under a relatively high intensity of screen illumination as against the print inspected under a low intensity. It is then likely that when this print is shown in the theatres under the same conditions a variation of the density is apt to become very noticeable. In the studios themselves, much can be done to insure nearly uniformity of light variation in the negative, thus helping standardization of the prints, Dr. Story declared.

The discussion by the members that followed this talk indicated that the laboratory experts themselves were very much interested in the subject of standardization, and some definite steps in this direction are expected shortly.

Chicago Postpones Action on Censor Ordinance

The Judiciary Committee of the Chicago City Council has postponed indefinitely consideration of the proposed motion picture censor ordinance, giving as a reason that the majority of members of this committee were also members of the Finance Committee and were busily engaged in preparing the 1922 budget. The new ordinance is similar to that which was favored by the Hurley Committee and defeated in the Council some months ago, largely through the efforts of Chief of Police Fitzmorris, in whom the censorship power is now vested, ex-officio.

The Reader Has His Say

"The Little Black Hen"

Motion Picture News,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen: I am attaching hereto a clipping from our local paper that I think will apply to the present condition of the film industry, from the producer down to the exhibitor. I am sure that "the worms are still here," but, as the little black hen said, "you must dig like hell to get them," and I am doing some digging and getting some worms, and I think that all "The Little Black Hens" in the film business are finding worms, but it's "the Red Roosters" that are complaining about the dry times.

The booking guide is a big help these days, and I am very glad indeed that I have a complete file of the News for three years back.

Steve M. Farrar,
Colonial Amusement Co.,
Harrisburg, Ill.

The clipping referred to by Mr. Farrar follows:

THE LITTLE BLACK HEN

Said the little red rooster, "Gosh all hemlock! Things are tough,
Seems that worms are getting scarcer, and I cannot find enough,
What's become of all those fat ones is a mystery to me;
There were thousands through that rainy spell—but now where can they be?"

The old black hen who heard him didn't grumble or complain,
She had gone through lots of dry spells, she had lived through floods of rain,
So she flew up on the grindstone, and she gave her claws a whet,
As she said, "I've never seen the time there weren't worms to get."

She picked a new and undug spot; the earth was hard and firm,
The little rooster jeered, "New ground! That's no place for a worm."
The old black hen just spread her feet, she dug both fast and free,
"I must go to the worms," she said; "the worms won't come to me."

The rooster vainly spent his day, through habit, by the ways,
Where fat round worms had passed in squads back in the rainy days,
When nightfall found him supperless, he growled in accents rough,
"I'm hungry as a fowl can be. Conditions sure are tough."

He turned then to the old black hen and said, "It's worse with you,
For you're not only hungry but you must be tired, too.
I rested while I watched for worms, so I feel fairly perk;
But how are you? Without worms, too? And after all that work?"

The old black hen hopped to her perch and dropped her eyes to sleep,
And murmured in a drowsy tone, "Young man, hear this and weep,
I'm full of worms and happy, for I've dined both long and well,
The worms are there as always—but I had to dig like hell!"

Oh, here and there red roosters still are holding sales positions,
They cannot do much business now because of poor conditions,
But soon as things get right again they'll sell a hundred firms—
Meanwhile the old black hens are out and gobbling up the worms.

What of the Other 13½?

It is seldom that the writer ever feels called upon to answer any of the editorial comment appearing in the various trade papers that comes to his desk, but attention has been called to a "Go to Work" essay that should not go unanswered.

For the basic figures in this discussion we are going to take the work of Wm. A. Johnson of the Motion Picture News, who, in commenting on whether or not business is bad and whether or not exhibitors have a reason for feeling pessimistic, quotes government tax reports.

In part, he says:

"From June 1 to December 1, 1921, the distributors in this business, all of them, took in $58,674,010.80, and in the same period in 1920 $59,205,708.20, and we find that the income of the distributors is less than one per cent under the income for a similar period of a year ago."

And here is the rest:

"Remembering that the theatre tax is based on all forms of amusement—legitimate, vaudeville, cabarets, etc., as well as pictures—theatre admissions for six months in 1921 were $385,899,799.70, and for 1920 $449,336,657.30." And using the Editor's own words, "The theatre business, in other words, has been off about 14½ per cent since June 1 last. Which don't agree very well with some of the rash and unsupported statements we have recently heard."

We pause to ask what of the other 13½ per cent?

Has Editor Johnson failed to note that while the producers and distributors have been getting practically as much rentals out of their product as they ever did, the exhibitor has been compelled to watch his profits decrease and decrease from 13½ up? Isn't it about time that one per cent and 14½ per cent get within speaking distance?

13½ per cent loss.

That means the passing of deserved dividends, an eating up of deserved profits, the necessity in many cases of borrowing money and paying from 8 to 10 per cent, which, added to the other loss, brings the total up to an appalling figure of 23 per cent. Has the exhibitor reason to feel pessimistic?

And all of the time the producer, who is much better financed than the small exhibitor, who is wondering where in hell that 13 per cent is coming from, can sit back and smoke big black cigars and see a rosy dawn of better business, for he is standing only a loss of less than one per cent, according to Editor Johnson.

And up comes the question:

Where is the exhibitor going to get the fatal 13½?

Here is the prescription given by Dr. Johnson:

"Perhaps the theatres ought to lower their admissions. Perhaps they should do other things." And here is the gem of the whole article: "These exhibitors must work out their own individual problems." To the credit of the Editor of the News, he does say that they need rental adjustments, but for what reason? He says, using his words: "For the distributor's own sake. He wants them to keep open." Let us add, so they can make up that one per cent.

He also prescribes percentage playing a "right and reasonable system"; and certainly it would be enlightening to hear Mr. Johnson's idea of "right and reasonable." It might enlighten some of the exhibitors who spent as much on advertising a certain picture which they booked on the "right and reasonable" basis of 70—30 and one of the gibbest pictures of the century, and then made ordinary money.

It will be interesting to every exhibitor to note what his solution of the problem is.

Look!

"Many theatres must cut house expense." Yes, be the janitors of their own places, trying to dig out the fatal 13½, while the corpulent one, which resembles a Big I, are enjoying the steam heat. Would it not be fair that some producers also eliminate considerable unnecessary overhead, such as fabulous salaries, luxuriant offices and the general waste that is freely admitted by all.

"Rentals must be adjusted, here and there, where the exhibitor is helpless (no, not against high rentals, but) against industrial depression." Again old general depression is the sole cause.

"A lot of other overpaid people (besides stars) must get down to hard earth." Most exhibitors have been there for some time.

And then the comments irrelatively on over-production and ends with the admonition, "Go to Work!"

For the information of Editor Johnson it can be said that 99 and 44-100 per-centage of exhibitors went to work when they opened their houses. They had a little vacation a few years ago, when business was abnormal, and for the past year and a half have been making up for it.

It is eminently unfair to assume that the industrial situation is altogether to blame for the deplorable condition that exists in the exhibitor circles to-day. I heartily agree with Editor Johnson that individual blindness and greed should be laid aside. Yes, indeed, the war is over; but

Who regulates the price that can be paid for productions? The motion picture going public. If the public has had wages reduced so that it is necessary for exhibitors to reduce admissions, then it is high time that there be much more than a one per cent difference in the incoming revenue of producers and distributors.

Film rentals must come down. How? As Editor Johnson has said to the exhibitor, it can now be said to the producer—that's your problem.

Possibly Editor Johnson does not know that a large percentage of exhibitors are to-day working for less money a week than they pay their operators.

I do not believe that Editor Johnson wants to be unfair, and I think that he will agree that it is high time that the producer not expect rentals equal to those of the war period, when the exhibitor is going through the famine.

It's time that 14½ per cent and one per cent be a little more evenly divided.

Gen. Manager, M. P. T. O. of Michigan.

Albany Ready for Convention

AT a meeting of the special committee from the Albany Chamber of Commerce and members of the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association Monday afternoon, Feb. 6, final plans were made for next week's convention of motion picture exhibitors in Albany, N. Y. The convention will open at 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, at which time Mayor William S. Hackett will welcome all present. All sessions will be held in the ballroom of the Hotel Ten Eyck. Samuel I. Berman, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the state, arrived in town this week and opened a desk at the Albany Chamber of Commerce. The first of the exhibitors will reach Albany Sunday. Included in these will be Martin G. Smith, of Toledo, president of the Ohio exhibitors, and President Woodhull, of the New Jersey exhibitors.

There will be a meeting of the executive committee Monday night.

All exhibitors attending the convention should go to the Hotel Ten Eyck on arrival, register, receive their hotel reservations and badges. Secretary Berman will be found on the mezzanine floor of the Ten Eyck, which will also serve as a headquarters for the women attending the convention.

Censorship Subject of Non-Partisan Discussion

A non-partisan discussion of censorship was conducted at the National Republican Club, New York City, on last Saturday afternoon, February 4, at which the subject was gone over from all angles. Rupert Hughes roundly attacked censorship as a present-day form of intolerance and declared those efforts futile which aimed at making people good by coercing them.

Rufus S. Cole, motion-picture producer, declared himself in favor of Federal censorship as contrasted with state regulation, while Charles Urban, another producer, expressed himself in favor of Federal licensing of producers, with the power to revoke the license when the circumstances of the specific case might warrant.

Commissioner Levenson of the New York State Censorship Board spoke in favor of screen regulation, declaring that the mentally weak are more likely to attend motion-picture performances than the mentally strong, and that 60 per cent of our population, judging from army tests, is below normal intelligence.

H. J. Shepard, general manager for the Urban Productions, who read Mr. Urban's speech at the Republican Club meeting on Saturday, made a subsequent speech, in which he paid a glowing tribute to the new Public Service movement of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and upheld the M. P. T. O.'s principles based on the Golden Rule.

Federated Officers Re-elected at Convention

One hundred per cent attendance marked the third annual meeting of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, which was concluded on February 6th at the Hotel Astor, New York, after a four-day session.

All the present officers were re-elected to hold office for the ensuing year. They are J. L. Friedman, president; Harry Charnas, vice-president; J. Eugene Pearce, secretary; and Samuel V. Grand, treasurer. While no announcements of new pictures was made it is understood that several deals of importance are pending which may be announced at the directors' meeting in March.

Those who attended the convention were: J. L. Friedman, of Chicago; Samuel V. Grand, C. W. Denick and Samuel Bishoff, of Boston; Abe Warner and Robert North, of New York; Ben Amsterdam and L. Korson, of Philadelphia; P. Oletsky, of Baltimore; Harry Charnas and M. A. Liebensberger, of Cleveland; Albert Wunderlick, of Minneapolis; J. T. Sheffield, of Seattle; J. Openheimer, of San Francisco; W. T. Underwood, of Dallas; J. Eugene Pearce, of New Orleans; Sam Werner, of St. Louis; Al Kahn, of Kansas City; L. E. Ouimet, of Montreal, and George Weile, of New York.

Connecticut Exhibitors to Convene February 21st

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut, of which William A True is president, will hold their state convention in New Haven at the Hotel Taft on February 21. The Connecticut organization is now among the most powerful of the state exhibitors' bodies and preparations are being made for an enthusiastic and businesslike gathering.

New Hampshire Exhibitors Stage Grand Ball

The first annual ball of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Hampshire, held in Le Chateau, Manchester, N. H., Friday evening of last week, was graced by the presence of Governor Albert O. Brown of New Hampshire, Mayor George E. Trudel of Manchester, and a quintette of motion-picture stars, which included May McAvoy, Bert Lytell, Hope Hampton, Frank Mayo and Diana Allen. Over three thousand attended the function, which proved to be a tremendous success.

Uncle Sam Requires Exhibitors to Keep Books

Exhibitors, unless Uncle Sam has missed some of them, have received letters from the Internal Revenue Department explaining the necessity of keeping systematic accounts that will clearly show the inventories, purchases, income, capital investment, depreciation and similar items required in making up income tax returns. Motion Picture News advises that the instructions of this communication be taken seriously.

The law is plain and as many exhibitors who have been careless in making returns to the Internal Revenue Department can testify, excuses are not accepted and, on the contrary, penalties are exacted.

The authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to require what many theatre owners may think as an unnecessarily elaborate system of bookkeeping is provided by the following section of the Revenue Act:

The law says: "That every person, corporation, partnership, or association, liable to any tax imposed by this act, or for collection thereof, shall keep such records as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time prescribe."

Paramount Long Island Studio to Reopen

Paramount's Long Island studio is to be reopened in April, according to an announcement wired East by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production.

Victor H. Clarke has been appointed general manager of the Long Island studio and will arrive to take charge about April 1. Active production will be resumed as soon afterward as the studio can be prepared.

Mr. Lasky's announcement stated that the former Realart studio in Los Angeles, the same of which has been changed to the Wilshire Paramount studio, will be closed until further notice.

Frank E. Garbutt has been appointed special technical advisor to the production department, in charge of all laboratory work.

Activities of Exchange Managers, Exhibitors, Salesmen and Others

Kansas City

R. D. BURDGE has been succeeded by Truly B. Wildman s manager of the Kansas City Enterprise branch office. Mr. Wildman formerly was manager of Realart's New Orleans office, coming to Kansas City following the consolidation with Paramount. He formerly was a special representative in the Middle West for Fox. Mr. Burdge has not definitely decided upon plans for the future.

Phillip L. Ryan, division manager of Hodkinson at Kansas City, has returned from a midwest tour with a brighter outlook for business. Mr. Ryan visited the Minneapolis, St. Louis and Omaha exchanges and is optimistic over the conditions in these territories.

George Hinton, formerly with Associated producers in Kansas City, has been appointed manager of the branch office of Peacock Productions, Inc., in Oklahoma City, according to Johnny Waters, general sales manager.

The Kansas City office of R-C Pictures stands second in film earnings for the months of November and December, according to Roy Churchill, branch manager. The Kansas City office also ranked third in the $1,000 prize contest for R-C branches in film earnings.

R. H. Fairchild, Metro representative out of Kansas City, returned last week with a large number of contracts of "The Four Horsemen," "Peacock Alley" and "Turn To the Right." G. W. Hartman, Vitagraph representative, reports equal success in Missouri towns with "The Little Minister," which now is booked solid.

Michael Kahn, Kansas City representative of Crescent-Federated, proved on his first trip out last week that business is far from depressed. "Mike" returned with contracts for Crescent-Federated's entire output of features from the Savoy, Nickel, Olive, Hickory, Empress, Star and Royal theatres of St. Joseph, Mo.

Dubuque

JAMES YIANNIAS, one of the managers of the Princess theatre recently became a Benedict. He married Miss Stella Poulos of Boone, Iowa. The marriage took place at the bride's home. Mr. Billos, the other manager of the Princess, was among the guests.

Pen Sketches

Fred M. Zimmerman

FRED M. ZIMMERMAN is president and general manager of Nu-Art Pictures corporation, one of the largest state right concerns in New York. The exchange in Buffalo is located at 221 Franklin street. There is a branch office in Albany in charge of M. Cohen. Mr. Zimmerman is a veteran in the film business, being a salesman for many years with several of the leading companies, before entering the business which he established a few years ago. Nu-Art Pictures corporation has grown by leaps and bounds. Mr. Zimmerman is continually adding men to his sales staff. There are never any complaints on business at the Nu-Art office. Nu-Art is handling all the Clara Kimball Young productions in western New York, as well as the Tony Sarg and Prizma subjects. "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight" has just been added to the list of features. Mr. Zimmerman is both an exchange man and an exhibitor. He owns the Avondale theatre in North Tonawanda, where he has just installed a big Wurlitzer Hope-Jones unit orchestral organ.

Henry W. Kahn

HERE we gaze upon the charming visage of no less a personage than Henry W. Kahn, manager of the Buffalo Metro exchange and treasurer and director of the Film Board of Trade in the same city. Mr. Kahn has been with Metro for seven years in New York, Albany and Buffalo. Last summer he made a trip to Germany to visit relatives and put that country on its feet again. He has just purchased a Cadillac coupe and is seriously considering a silk high hat to go with it. Henry has booked "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" in every city, town and "willage" in the territory and is now trying to break all booking records with "Peacock Alley." Mr. Kahn also announces that "The Conquering Power" will be shown at the new Loew State in Buffalo the week of Feb. 20. As the photo shows, Henry is having much trouble with his hair, which continually gets into his eyes. To avoid this he is now brushing his hair straight back. Mr. Kahn recently won the Buffalo "Film Row" beauty contest. Yes, girls, he is married.

DUBUQUE'S popular theatre, the Strand, owes a large part of its splendid reputation to the manager, Frank Burlingame. This young man came to Dubuque a little over two years ago to take charge of the remodelled Strand. There were many drawbacks connected with the theatre. In the first place, the first Strand had been destroyed by fire. Then the building itself had been converted from a church into a theatre, and there was prejudice to combat. Lastly, it was situated in a section of the residence district which was not considered a very favorable location for a theatre.

But Manager Burlingame was a live wire. He realized

Clarence Udelhof, one of Dubuque's younger musicians, has been chosen to lead the Princess theatre orchestra this year. Mr. Udelhof succeeds Mr. C. Carney. The Princess orchestra is composed of five pieces.

The only woman to lead an orchestra in a moving picture theatre in Dubuque is Mrs. Hazel Lynn, the conductor of the orchestra at the Grand. Mrs. Lynn, a graduate of the Dubuque Academy of Music, is reputed to be not only a pianist of exceptional ability, but a pipe organ artist as well. Just a few years ago she was attending school and wearing her hair in a braid down her back; now she plays the Kimball organ at the Grand in the afternoon and leads the orchestra in the evening.

Mr. Al Schollian, usher and ticket man, has been in the employ of the Grand theatre practically since the management began to show motion pictures, a little over eight years ago. Except during the time when he takes his annual vacations, Mr. Schollian is always at the door and his pleasant smile and genial manner has made him one of the most popular ticket men in the city.

"The jolliest and most capable little usher in town"—that is what they say about Miss Harriet Hardy, head usher at the Strand theatre.

J. E. Boyle has two theatres to look after. He's manager of both the Dreamland and the Liberty and is making a success of both.

Salt Lake City

AT the suggestion of George Carpenter, manager of the Paramount Empress theatre, local managers have been meeting informally at a luncheon once a week. The purpose is to create greater harmony and a better understanding in order that competition may not create practices which would be harmful to the industry as a whole. Local labor leaders pretend to see a menace in these meetings.

E. E. Tucker has been made the new manager of the Gem theatre by William H. Swanson, owner of the American and Gem theatres. It is understood that Mr. Tucker is planning some striking innovations in the way of picture exploitation.

Gus Hager, manager of the Universal Film exchange, has just returned from a tour of Idaho towns. Many moving picture house managers are practising economy at he wrong end of the business, according to Mr. Hager.

"Patrons are demanding more for their money," he asserted. "It is the best policy not to cut down on the quality of pictures but cut down expenses at the other end of the work in order to keep business."

J. T. Moran, who was formerly with the Universal exchange as salesman, is returning to that position after an absence of some time.

Des Moines

HARRY L. ROYSTER, exploitation manager for the Famous Players Exchange at Des Moines, is transferred to the Cleveland Branch, where he takes the place of Max Doolittle, sent to the Minneapolis Branch which is his home. Mr. Royster is replaced in Des Moines by John Ingram, who comes to Des Moines from New York, and before that was manager of the Rialto and Palace Theatres in Denver.

The Universal exchange, Des Moines, expects E. J. Smith to arrive from New York to aid with the exploitation and placing of "Foolish Wives."

The Argus Enterprises, Inc., which have had a branch in Des Moines for over a year are reducing overhead and consolidating this branch with that at Omaha. R. W. McEwan will still travel for Argus and make his headquarters at Omaha.

Jack Kurry of the advertising department has been longest with the Famous Players Exchange in Des Moines. He has been in this position for four years.

Louis Jacobs of Century Comedies was the most recent visitor at the Universal studios, Des Moines.

J. A. Muchmore, formerly branch manager for the Famous Players at Des Moines and now representing the Kansas City branch, visited the Des Moines exchange this week.

Buffalo

R. C. FOX, Select manager in Buffalo, has returned from a trip to Rochester and Syracuse where he reports exhibitors contributed large sums in the exchange's drive for collections. While in the two cities Mr. Fox also signed up a large number of contracts. Sam E. Morris, general manager of Select, has written Mr. Fox a letter complimenting him on the large number of rentals secured by the Buffalo office during the past few weeks. Mr. Fox announces that Elaine Hammerstein in "Why Announce your Marriage," will be the feature on the opening bill at the new Lafayette Square theatre, which opens Feb. 20 in Buffalo.

Maurice A. Chase, manager for several years of the Buffalo Universal exchange, has been appointed district manager of the eastern division, with supervision over the Universal offices in Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Indianapolis, Cincinnati and Pittsburg. Mr. Chase will make his headquarters in Buffalo. announced in a former edition of the NEWS. Mr. Price is sending tures going like a house afire.

Walter Price has not joined the Buffalo staff of R-C Pictures as Frank S. Hopkins has been appointed sales manager in the Albany territory by Mr. Chase. Jess Kaufman is now a special representative out of the Buffalo exchange.

M. H. Markowitz, manager of the United Artists' office, screened Nazimova in "A Doll's House," for Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome last Thursday evening. Mr. Markowitz reports business booming and all of the company's big fea his family to Atlanta. He is seeking a connection in Buffalo. Mr Price was formerly with Metro.

that the new Strand was a splendid theatre building and all that was necessary was to get the people to come to it. Noting that lobby displays were seldom, if ever, used in Dubuque theatres, he began to put into being some of his ideas as to just how a real theatre should look. During the summer months he erected a picturesque lattice, entwined with flowers, in the main lobby. Then he transformed the inner lobby into a sunken garden by means of a clever arrangement of the drinking fountain and wallboard. Then, in winter, his inner lobby took on the appearance of an old-fashioned living room, with a mantel, a fireplace and cozy seats near the hearth. The lighting effect was a subdued red. Of course, all of this took a great deal of time and work, but it brought results. People began to talk about his lobbies; then the newspapers took it up and the result is that today, the Strand is rated as Dubuque's best theatre.

Now, here are just a few of the things Manager Burlingame has done since he took charge of the Strand:

He was the first Dubuque theatre manager to add pep and variety to his program by introducing a singing or dancing sketch now and then as a treat for his patrons.

He was the first manager in the city to consider the possibilities of having girls act as ushers. The Strand now has three young lady ushers.

He was the only Dubuque theatre manager wso decorated his theatre during the holidays. He spent days substituting green and red lights for the white bulbs on the exterior of the mammoth building; he erected a special Christmas lobby display which included a trimmed Christmas tree and arranged for a program of Christmas carols during the performances.

Another of his ideas was the hanging of a gorgeous pair of tan and black curtains on the stage, before the screen. With the opening of the picture, the curtains are parted; they are closed at its conclusion. While one or two of the theatres have curtains, the Strand was the only one to use them in this manner.

In addition to these features, Mr. Burlingame has erected numerous lobby displays which have attracted attention all over the state. Among the recent displays was a striking lobby used during the showing of "The Sheik."

Cleveland

JAMES B. REILLY, well known locally as manager of the Cleveland Realart exchange as long as that office was maintained, and latterly manager of the Cleveland Robertson-Cole office, has resigned from that position to represent the American Releasing Corporation in the northern Ohio territory. No definite arrangements for a permanent office for the new company have yet been made.

H. W. Murphy booker of the local Robertson-Cole exchange is acting manager pro tem until a permanent appointment has been made.

E. C. Jensen field representative for Robertson-Cole is in Cleveland and will remain here until a new exchange manager for the local office has been named and duly installed.

H. M. Forman traveling auditor for Robertson-Cole has been in Cleveland all week going over the local books.

Harry L. Royster has been made publicity manager of the Cleveland exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Royster follows Fred. E. Walters who has been transferred to the New Haven office of the F. P. L. Corporation.

W. F. Seymour Central Division Manager for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation covering the Chicago, Detroit, Cincinnati, Cleveland and Pittsburg exchanges has changed his headquarters from Chicago to Cleveland. Cleveland is more centrally located than Chicago and by the change, Mr. Seymour can keep in closer touch with the details of distribution.

"Doc" (E. C.) Holah, manager of Wid Gunnings Cleveland office was in New York this week.

Dan Phillips, former booker at the Cleveland Paramount exchange is now in charge of the booking department of the local Vitagraph office succeeding William Ruddy.

J. S. Cagney, formerly with Hodkinson, is now covering the Toledo-Lima territory for Vitagraph.

W. A. Hoffman at one time manager in Ohio for the American Film Company, has joined the Vitagraph sales force, and is covering the Columbus territory.

E. J. Smith, Eastern District manager for the Universal Film Company with headquarters in Philadelphia, was in Cleveland for a day last week. Smith was given a royal reception by exhibitors and exchange managers.

Two Omaha Theatres Sell "A Man's Home"

"A MAN'S HOME," playing recently at the Sun and Muse theatr Omaha, was the recipient of a most comprehensive exploitati campaign.

The Sunday World-Herald dated January 8 carried approximate three pages of live advertising on "A Man's Home." The "smash was a double truck made up of the had been cast. The reproductio advertisements of leading merchants of these pieces of mats could be c in the city which were printed in out and pasted in proper position conjunction with a quarter page ad. a piece of paper to make up t paid for by the theatre and directly complete theatre ad. advertising "A Man's Home."

Each of the merchants' ads carried the title of the picture "A Man's Home" with selling talk for the merchandise carried arranged to follow this lead line in a convincing manner. In addition the contest idea was used.

Each of the merchants' ads contained a piece of the big mat from which the quarter-page theatre ad

The theatre management wri that they found little difficulty i putting the stunt across. The enthu siastic help and support of th newspaper was a foregone conclu sion. The merchants were easil interested when the contest pla was outlined to them as a means c guaranteeing that thousands of pec ple who might otherwise pass u their "copy" would read it.

"Silent Call" Lobby Is Attractive

EXCELLENT lobby decorations added much to the business, "The Silent Call," at the Palace theatre, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Using gigantic heads of Strongheart, canine star of the picture, painted on canvas, Manager Koch arranged a lobby display which even commanded the attention of the newspapers in his city. Large heads of the dogs were used in each side of the lobby, these heads illuminated by electric lights. The sides of the lobby and the box office were camouflaged to represent a log cambin, the dog's head also being used on the interior of the lobby.

Some clever brush work has produced the appearance of the mountain log cabins at sides of the lobby and the whole effect expressed and enhanced the spirit of the drama of the hills.

Australian Theatre Builds Lobby Display

THE lobby display as exploitation is not unknown in far off Australia, as is proven by the front which Managing Director Finklestein of the York theatre, Adelaide, South Australia, recently constructed for his showing of "Gilded Lies."

A huge spider and fly display was erected suggesting that the fly is lured by false promises into the lair of the enemy. Cut out heads of O'Brien and Martha Mansfield surmounted the two figures. A wireless outfit in another corner of the theatre flashing intermittently was a further attractor.

Advance Prologue Used for "One Arabian Night"

A TEASER ad campaign and an advance prologue for three days previous to the opening of "One Arabian Night" at the Princess theatre at Sioux City Iowa, were the means which the manager, Wm. C. O'Hara, employed for the purpose of arousing public curiosity regarding the picture.

For the prologue a baritone appeared before the curtain and as his song was concluded the curtain was slowly raised, disclosing the stage, in semi-darkness and dressed in true oriental style with a picturesque drop concealing the dancers.

The stage gradually lighted bringing into view a harem scene with the company of eight classic dancers in artistic pose, the stage was again darkened and the dancers took their places for the program of three company and two solo dances which followed.

The oriental atmosphere was further enhanced by burning incense and oriental music by the Princess concert orchestra.

For the opening day the theatre displayed a "false front" as shown in the picture accompanying and a prologue was given twice each day. Like the advance prologue this had an oriental flavor, combining burning incense, wierd music and oriental dances by four very pretty girls in costumes most appropriate in design and coloring.

Mr. O'Hara, the manager, is to be complimented on his exploitation which was not costly compared to the business it brought.

"Penrod" Plays Premiere at Chicago

Windy City Exploitation Campaign Features Personal Appearance of Star

THE premiere engagement of "Penrod" is an indefinite one at Balaban and Katz's Chicago Theatre, and has also been the occasion of a publicity campaign that includes many novelties and the personal appearance at the theatre and elsewhere of the star of the production, Wesley Barry.

Upon his arrival in Chicago Wesley Barry was met by the Chicago Junior Naval Reserve, a boys' band, and some two hundred cadets in uniform.

A parade was formed, which marched to the office of Chicago's Mayor, where camera men photographed previously arranged ceremonies.

Arrangements were made for the star to "conduct" departments in three Chicago newspapers.

For the Evening Journal he became editor of the Journal's children department; for the Daily News he became chief mogul of a children's scenario contest, and for the Chicago Herald-Examiner he conducted a California orange recipe contest, in which the housewives among the readers of this publication took part. Thus three of Chicago's largest papers carried news and straight photographs of Wesley hooking up with "Penrod" every day for the first week he played the Chicago theatre.

Stories of the reception and parade were carried on the front pages of all the afternoon papers, with three and four column photo layouts. The fact that a movie star never before headed a parade in Chicago, staged especially in his or her honor, made the story all the more desirable to the newspaper editors.

Twelve of the largest department stores carried window displays of the book of "Penrod," with a special Wesley Barry color jacket and illustrated with stills of the picture. Large cut-outs and advertising matter were prepared by the publishers for this tie-up. Department stores carried advertising in the papers crediting the picture and "Freckles."

A tie-up was effected with the Ad-Photo-Scope Projecting Machine Co. This machine, a trifle larger than a phonograph and which ran off 200 feet of "Penrod" cut-outs, was placed in the lobby of the Hotel Sherman during the entire week, at which time the auto show conventionists were stopping here. This machine was kept running from nine in the morning until twelve at night and advertised the theatre as well as the picture.

Announcing an Interesting Series of Exhibitor Articles

THE exploitation campaign for "Penrod" playing a premiere at Balaban and Katz's Chicago Theatre, in which the personal appearance of the picture's featured player, Wesley Barry, is featured, affords the opportunity to announce that Motion Picture News will publish a series of articles written by prominent exhibitors of the country on the subject of "Stars and Their Personal Appearance" in the near future.

It has been arranged for Master Barry to make a trans-continental tour in connection with the showing of "Penrod" in the larger cities. A number of stars, including Bert Lytell, Clara Kimball Young, Viola Dana, Thomas Meighan, George Beban, Ben Turpin, are or have been making personal appearances. In fact, there seems to be a vogue of this sort of thing, which has attained such magnitude that it makes such a series of articles of particular interest at this time.

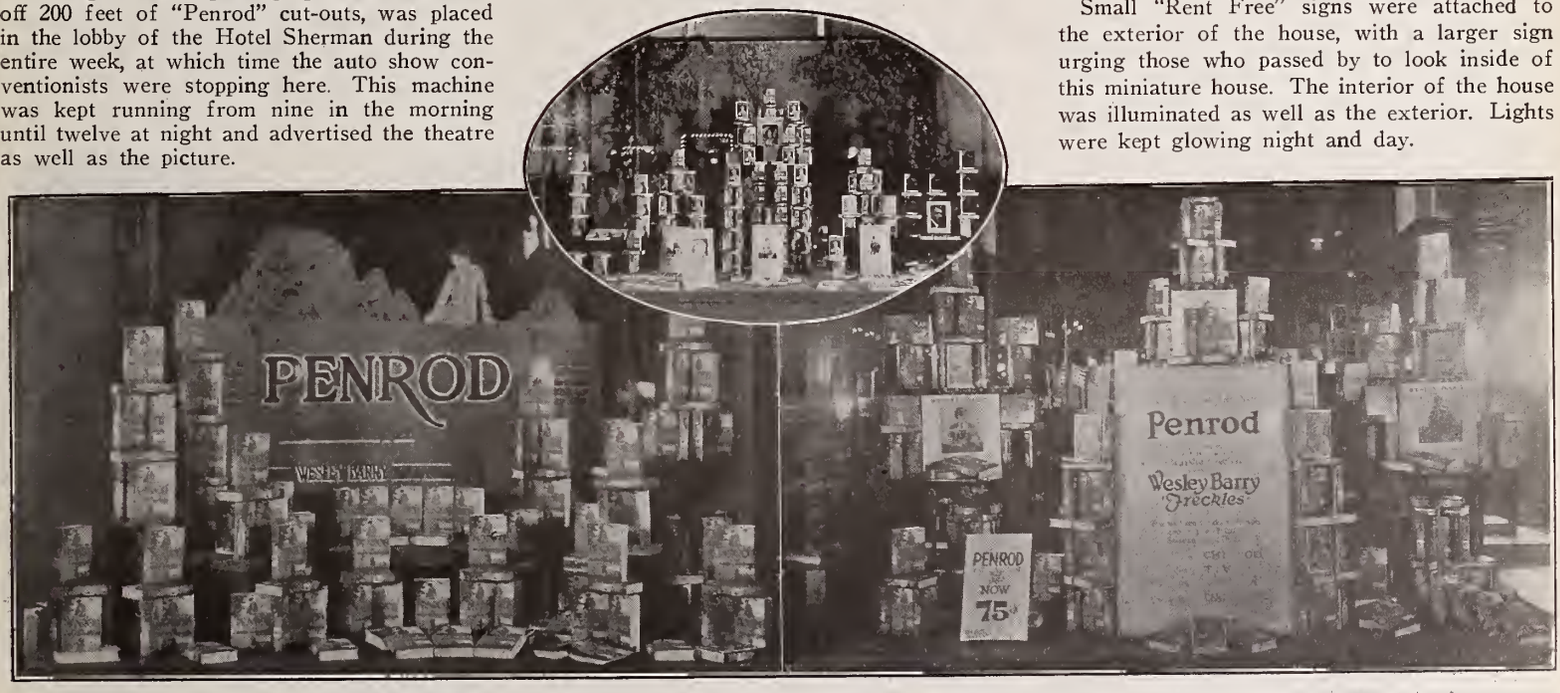
Motion Picture News and we believe the whole industry wants to know just what the reaction is from personal appearances. Is it a good thing for the exhibitor? Is it a good thing for the star? Is it a good thing for the industry? What is to be gained and what is to be lost?

The series will begin very shortly. They will be written by men whose opinion all will respect and whose views will carry weight.

Among the other exploitation stunts employed were a tie-up with a department store, which distributed 50,000 autographed photos of "Freckles" advertising the picture and the book; a tie-up with a "Penrod" song, which was exploited during the second week of the run; the sale of a Wesley Barry doll in the department stores, and the advertising of a line of "Penrod" boys' clothing in the large shops.

Cuts showing a number of the cooperative window displays appear on this page.

The exploitation campaign was staged by Pete Smith, of the Marshall Neilan staff, and the Balaban and Katz exploiteers.



Comprehensive Campaign on "Rent Free" Put Over by Beall

A comprehensive exploitation campaign for "Rent Free" was put over recently by Manager Ray Beall of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C. One thousand placards were printed with these two words only, "Rent Free," and distributed all over town. They were tacked to trees, telephone poles, vacant buildings, fences, residences, etc. One of these cards was placed in a hotel window a passerby saw it, came into the hotel and made the proprietor give him a room rent free.

One week ahead of the play date on the picture, Mr. Beall invaded the classified newspaper real estate columns of the local papers with copy which read: "Rent Free, Watch Daily and Sunday Papers." "Rent Free, See Page 2," was also used in a real estate page display ad. This copy was followed by other ads which read: "Rent Free—Watch This Space"; "Rent Free—If You Are Looking for a Solution of This Problem, See Page 2," etc.

As a lobby display a cut-out of the Rent Free 3-sheet was made, with Reid and Lila Lee sitting on the roof. Miniature doors and windows were cut out, framed and painted in order to give appearance of a miniature house. The sides, back and top of house were added and constructed of beaver-board. The side windows were cut out and a skylight was arranged in th roof, permitting one to see within the house. Inside was a small standing lamp, a baby crib with doll, and complete furnishings.

Small "Rent Free" signs were attached to the exterior of the house, with a larger sign urging those who passed by to look inside of this miniature house. The interior of the house was illuminated as well as the exterior. Lights were kept glowing night and day.

Some of the various "Penrod" book store tie-ups secured for the showing at the Chicago theatre, Chicago, as explained by the story appearing above

This cut will explain the lobby display and ballyhoo used by Tom G. Coleman manager of the Strand theatre Memphis for his showing of "Burn 'Em Up Barnes."

Coleman's Campaign for "Burn 'Em Up Barnes"

Down at Memphis, Tenn., Manager Tom G. Coleman of the Strand Theatre has just put over "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" in grand style. Mr. Coleman's exploitation campaign was thorough and diversified. Something over a hundred Memphis newsies carried a like number of oilcloth banners announcing the showing. Each banner was good for an admission, and the result was every newsboy in town wanted to turn sandwicher. Another ballyhoo is explained by the accompanying cuts.

The Memphis Press carriers were Mr. Coleman's guests on the opening day and the paper gave the show a good writeup, all of which was fine publicity for the picture.

Five thousand tags, appropriately worded, were tied on everything about the main streets that would stand "tagging," and to finish up the deal Mr. Coleman employed a young lady to go out on the streets and through the stores to tie the tags on the men she met. When people found out that the girl was not working for a "fund" the scheme went over in great shape.

A car used for hauling films was decorated with "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" banners and ballyhooed the city every day of the run. Other cars were also pressed into service to carry banners. A well selected news-stand consented to exhibit advertising matter.

"Sir Sagamore" Ballyhoo Used Again

WILLIAM NOBLE, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla., exploited "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" in a manner which attracted the interested attention of the entire city.

For several days prior to the opening of the run, Noble used teaser advertisements in the dailies exhorting the public to watch the streets for the "Great Knight of the Middle Ages." As the day for the opening grew nearer the advertisements were increased in size.

Then, with the announcement of the name of the picture, a man dressed like Sir Sagamore of the Mark Twain story was sent out to parade the downtown streets. He wore the conventional suit of armor, a shield and a long lance, and bore a large canvas sign across his back explaining his presence.

This exploitation caused hundreds of people to stop and watch the "knight" walk by.

"Rent Free" Stunts Sell Picture to Dyersburg Fans

Teaser advertising, based on the high cost of living, especially high rents, was used effectively by Manager T. W. Young, Jr., manager of the Francis Theatre, Dyersburg, Tenn., to exploit his engagement of "Rent Free."

Mr. Young made use of teaser slides to the effect that rent was too high in Dyersburg. The copy was changed daily, but in every instance kept to the idea of the high cost of living, arousing curiosity relative to securing lodgings "Rent Free," and later suggesting a solution of the problem by seeing "Rent Free" at the Francis, such and such a date.

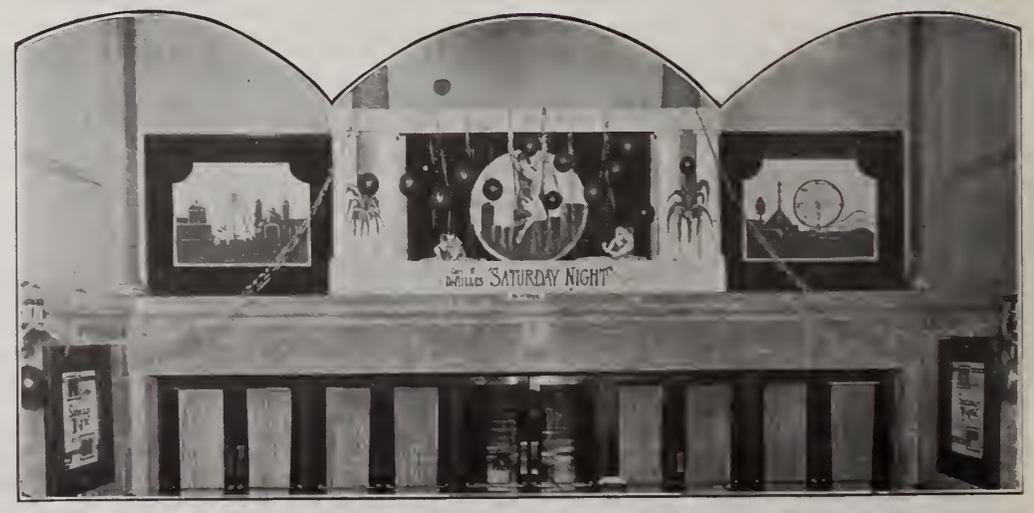
The next step in Mr. Young's campaign was also new to Dyersburg. On Saturday afternoon, before the opening of the picture, ten passes were given away, these being thrown from the tallest building in the town; 500 small envelopes bearing the words, "Rent Free," were distributed, only ten of the 500 containing passes. This was comparatively inexpensive, since Mr. Young already had the small envelopes and he used a stamp, printing them himself.

In order to create interest and comment, on Sunday night before the opening the next day a miniature house, which had been borrowed for the occasion, was placed in the lobby for churchgoers to see. This small house was electrically lighted and was complete in every detail. A placard over one window read:

"Apply here
RENT FREE."

Over another window a card carried simply the words:

"RENT FREE."



No expense was attached to this, only the time and effort.

Hidden Word Stunt Turned to the Paper

The Logan, Utah, Journal appropriated and sponsored the hidden word stunt, themselves, when "The Sheik" played at the Lyric theatre.

The theatre offered a certain number of free tickets to the Journal, and the Journal sold the merchants on the idea of burying the name of the subscriber in each of the ads. If the subscriber discovered his name he received two free tickets.

Heretofore, the theatres have sold the stunt to the merchants, now the paper sold the stunt for the theatre. The same results were obtained as far as the theatre was concerned, but the advertising staff of the Journal did the work.

Filizola Improves the Co-operative Display Idea

Making the best people in town take to an exploitation stunt like a duck to water, was the feat performed by D. Filizola, of the Empress Theatre, Fort Scott, Kansas. Here is the way he did it:

Just before the run of "What Do Men Want?" at his theatre, Mr. Filizola got all the local merchants together and engineered a full-page of co-operative advertising, with the "What Do Men Want?" title featured in each separate ad. Thus far, he followed in the tracks of a good many exhibitors.

The original touch was in a new application of the old jig-saw puzzle idea. He took a picture from the press sheet of "What Do Men Want?" cut it into a number of pieces, and put them in the different ads. Then he offered free theatre tickets to the first ten persons who would clip the pieces, put them together to make a picture illustrating the title, and return them to the box office of the Empress.

The result was a knock-out. Staid and dignified citizens grabbed shears and paste, went to work on the puzzle, and rushed to the theatre to get the free tickets offered. The exploitation stunt was the talk of the town, and Mr. Filizola should get the credit for a good use of a well-worn idea.

"Way Down East" Tie-up Cards Get Window Space

MANAGER I. C. HOLLOWAY of the Imperial Theatre, Anderson, S. C., has just staged an exploitation campaign on "Way Down East" that brought him fine results for his efforts.

The first step was to secure permission to bill the show in the P. & N. R. R. Stations, all along the line. Following this exploitation cleverly worded window cards were placed in local stores on a co-operative basis. Some of these cards read as follows: "When Better Cars Are Made, Way Down East, Buick will make them." Way Down East, they ask, what comes after the purchase price.

Saturday before opening, telegrams were sent to small towns around Anderson addressed to the Mayor in every case, except one to Clemson College, which was addressed to the President. With but one exception, each receiving a telegram wrote and thanked Manager Holloway for this bit of advertising. These messages created "talk" and helped generally with publicity.

The atmosphere of the house was changed and brightened by changing the lights to different colors, etc.

Turns Lobby Into Summer House and Lawn

Manager J. C. Duncan, of the Strand theatre, Asheville, N. C., took advantage of the romantic background implied in the title of his picture when he played "A Virginia Courtship" recently. Blessed with a rather good-sized lobby, Manager Duncan turned it into a summer-house, and lawn.

He built a trellis across the front of the lobby, of narrow white lattice-strips, wound with wistaria vines and blossoms. The floor of the lobby was sanded, and garden chairs of wicker were placed here and there. A lawn swing, also occupied some space, and added an interesting note of comfort.

Down center, as if just at the edge of the summer-house, was a sun-dial, weather-stained and very realistic looking.

Despite the fact that the weather in Asheville that week was extremely cold, Manager Duncan hypnotized the fans into believing that it was balmy summer, by his lobby—and did excellent business, as a direct result!

New One Invented for "Over the Hill"

Something "different" in a newspaper contest in exploitation of a motion picture production was conceived and carried out by the management of the Majestic Theatre, Jackson, Mich., during the run of "Over the Hill."

That the contest resulted in a greater box office business than ever before recorded by the house is proof of the effectiveness of the newspaper tie-up.

With the aid of a Fox representative, the management got the leading merchants of the town to advertise in the morning daily in such a way as to tie up with "Over the Hill." Each advertisement bore some reference to the picture, and all the advertisements were of the same size and printed on the same page of the paper. Each lay-out—there were 28 of them—was almost square in shape. Four of the squares were devoted to direct publicity of the production.

On each square was printed a verse from the poem by Will Carleton, from which the picture was adapted. When the squares were cut out and assembled properly the stanzas would be in the correct sequence. The contest was for the best assemblage of the squares in pamphlet form, the covers of which might be colored or otherwise decorated, as the contestant preferred. The prizes consisted of both cash and sets of tickets to see the picture. The school children of the town entered the contest with enthusiasm and more than 2,500 booklets were submitted.

All Jackson was speaking of the contest and of "Over the Hill" as a result of the noval campaign idea.

Examples of Cooperative Advertising

Tie-ups on "Hail the Woman" Have Been Especially Advantageous

THE use of co-operative newspaper advertising, the exploitation on "Hail the Woman," has been found unusually successful in various parts of the country, and with newspapers of widely divergent policies.

For the exploitation of "Hail the Woman" at the Bijou Theatre, in Richmond, Va., a double page co-operative newspaper smash was arranged with the Richmond Times Dispatch and the Richmond Dispatch, the morning edition of the Times-Dispatch.

The Rialto Theatre at LaCrosse, Wis., in exploiting "Hail the Woman," developed eight solid newspaper pages of co-operative newspaper advertising in the LaCrosse Tribune and Leader-Press.

In Stillwater, Minn., the Majestic Theatre secured a double truck and in Eagle Grove, Iowa, the Princess Theatre tied up with the Eagle Grove Eagle on a double page spread which the merchants supported enthusiastically.

The unusual success of the co-operative newspaper advertising connected with the exploitation of "Hail the Woman" is doubtless due to the particular merchandising value of the tie up. The picture is in many ways, a woman's picture, and it is billed as "Thomas H. Ince's splendid tribute to the new social and economic position of American womanhood."

Newsboy Ballyhoo Sells "I Do" for O'Connor

THE Strand Theatre of Trinidad, Colorado, lined up a unique parade to exploit "I Do." According to John M. O'Connor, the Strand advertised in the evening papers for six small boys. At 2 P. M. the next day the manager had fifty-two kids waiting for the six jobs. He took twenty of them and put banners on their chests with the words, "I Do," and twenty more with the same slogan on banners attached to their backs. He then paired them off so tht each pair had a banner on front and back and started them through the town at intervals of thirty seconds. Following the last pair he sent out a boy with a larger banner, reading: "Harold Lloyd in 'I Do' at the Strand Sunday." The procession covered an entire block, and the people gave the boys a lot of attention. The stunt was worked two or three times before the first performance. According to Mr. O'Connor, it cost him fifty cents for the want ads., $1.10 for the cloth, which, together with a little paint, and about thirty minutes time, resulted in an exploitation stunt which packed his theatre to the doors.

"Rent Free" Lobby Attracts Excellent Business

FOR a two days' showing of "Rent Free," at the Mojeska Theatre, Augusta, Georgia, Manager Frank Miller duplicated the big twenty-four sheet advertising the picture in his lobby.

An improvised tent of sheeting was the central decoration of the lobby. A clothesline was stretched clear across the front of the theatre, the tent being upheld by this. It was fastened to the clothesline with small clothespins.

At one end of the tent, a life-sized cut-out of Wallace Reid, in the paint-spattered smock which he wears in the picture, was posed, and at the other end, peeping at him, coyly, was a life-sized cut-out of Lila Lee.

The display almost filled the lobby, leaving only a narrow entrance and exit on either side. Artists' palettes, toy-bulldogs, an easel and similar articles occupied the inside of the tent, of which only a glimpse could be secured as one entered or left the theatre.

Four-Horse Chariot Parades Des Moines

The management of the Strand theatre, Des Moines, Ia., effected an attractive street ballyhoo in the exploitation campaign for "Queen of Sheba."

A chariot, composed of the front wheels and tongue of an old grocery wagon and a box made by a local carpenter, was sent faring into the thoroughfares of the city drawn by four horses. The driver was attired in mail, wore plumes, and was escorted by two helmeted "knights" who walked alongside the horses. A large banner on the horses gave the message of when, where and what.

Noon hour crowds were attracted daily by the strange vehicle, which challenged street-cars, automobiles and wagons to race it. Aside from the unique appearance of the chariot itself, the four horses, side-by-side were a curiosity to the crowds that lined the streets wherever the affair appeared.

Whopper Campaign Put Over at Dallas

Johnson's "Child Thou Gavest Me" Exploitation Is Veritable Wonder

"THE Child Thou Gavest Me" was made the pivot of the most sensational exploitation campaign ever staged in Dallas, Texas.

A "perfect baby" contest, which resulted in the finding of a hundred per cent child in the Texas metropolis, was conceived by J. L. Johnson, of the Palace theatre, and had the cooperation of the Mayor, Federal, State and City health officials, with the result that an advertising scheme was turned into a big civic event.

Johnson began his campaign a week in advance of the showing by arranging to hold the contest under the auspices of the Dallas Council of Mothers.

The Mayor was so strong for it, he permitted Johnson to stretch a banner across Elm street, the main stem of Dallas, and also donated the Municipal auditorium as the scene of the tests.

Lobby display on "Don't Get Personal" by the Standard theatre, Cleveland, described in the accompanying story

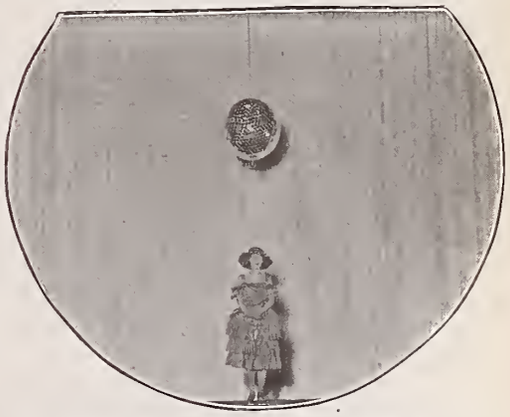
Pyle Exploits "Don't Get Personal" in Novel Way

THE accompanying cut and the following text will explain a clever exploitation and lobby display idea put over for the showing of "Don't Get Personal" at the Standard Theatre, Cleveland, O. The idea was originated by Norman Pyle, manager of the Standard, and consisted of two wooden boxes with a slit on the top, like the penny slot machines they used to have in the amusement parks where you dropped a penny and looked at the pictures in the machine. One box had a sign over it reading: TAKE-A-PEEK, but DON'T GET PERSONAL. Underneath there were the words, FOR MEN. The other box, right next to the first one, was just the same, only .it .was .labelled, FOR WOMEN. Inside the boxes were lights, and whoever took a peek saw the stills of Marie Prevost in "Don't Get Personal."

Leading merchants of the city also joined in the spirit of the contest donating prizes ranging from lockets and baby rings to cedar chests, thermos bottles, baby carriages, silk carriages, silk dresses, blankets, comforters, robes, photographs and a $1,000 life insurance policy. Prizes were displayed in the store windows and at the theatre.

To create interest in the coming contest, Johnson, the week preceding the opening of the picture, gave away the tags with Kewpie dolls attached, and also employed twenty-four sheets, heralds, snipes and street car hangers. Four newspapers carrier stories of the contest daily.

As the result of all this exploitation, more than 600 babies were entered in the contest, the mothers obtaining entrance blanks at the theatre.



The contest was divided into four classes:—A, boys under 18 months; AA, girls under 18 months; B, boys 18 to 36 months; BB, girls 18 to 36 months. Prizes were awarded by the theatre to three in each class, a gold medal for first, silver medal for second, bronze medal for third.

Judging was conducted daily at the Municipal Auditorium, morning and afternoon, for five days, examinations being made by leading specialists, trained nurses, physicians and health officers.

This probably rates as the biggest thing a theatre has done in that territory and Mr. Johnson has pointed the way for other managers—not because baby contests are new, but because he went at it with such thoroughness and made it an official enterprise, conducted along dignified and scientific lines.

Some Australian Exploitation on "Scrap Iron"

In putting over "Scrap Iron" at the Theatre Royal, Perth, Western Australia, the manager organized an amateur boxing tournament a week previous and entered the best boxer in town under the name of Charles Ray. He carried off honors easily the same as did the picture a few days later.

Miniature Forest Used as Lobby Display at Augusta

For "Heart of the North," when it played a two-day engagement at his Rialto theatre in Augusta, Ga., Manager Frank Miller turned the front of his theatre into a miniature pine forest.

A clump of real pines, which cost him nothing but the labor of cutting and transporting from eight miles out of town, concealed the box office, leaving what looked like the window of a tiny, snow-covered log cabin, through which tickets were purchased. More pines were distributed on either side of the lobby, so that the walls could be seen dimly through their interlacing branches. A thick coating of artificial "snow" was over the pines, and the ground was covered with it. At night the only illumination of the lobby came from electric globes arranged back of the trees, and shaded in deep blue, so that the light seemed to be moonlight streaming through the snow-covered trees, giving a truly beautiful effect.

Across the front of the theatre was a banner giving the name of the picture, and the lobby frames on either side of the theatre held stock one-sheets. But the only other advertising matter seen in the lobby consisted of several crudely printed placards. These placards were somewhat soiled, as if they were old, and they were fastened to two or three of the pines.

Fine results—and not much expense.

Vinson Builds Pretty Display for "Cappy Ricks"

Publicity Manager Vinson of Loew's Vendome Theatre, Nashville, Tenn., had a beautiful display on "Cappy Ricks" recently. The window is next door to the theatre and gives valuable aid weekly. The details of this decoration were perfect, blue cloth being billowed gracefully for the ocean and a real sandy beach; twenty figures of bathing girls, dolls, kewpies and marines were scattered about, standing and lounging. Three big ocean liners were anchored in the offing and three smaller ones docked at the Beach's edge, guarded by a marine. The back wall panel of board was in beautiful sunset colors at sea, with a big sailing vessel floating in the foreground. The figures were borrowed for the week, so the expense was slight.

Detroit Broadway-Strand Gets Window Display Space

A handsome cut-out of Betty Compson adorned by a natty bathing suit and twirling a parasol sold a Detroit drugstore on a ticup with cosmetics.

The Broadway-Strand theatre, which was playing "Ladies Must Live" secured the cooperative window without any more expense than the poster and window card.

Phil Gleichman again showed his ability to obtain fine results with a medium of expenditure.

Oriental Tapestry Featured in "Sheik" Window

AN expensive tapestry woven with the design of a sheik dominated the display in a music store window secured by Manager S. O'Hare, of the Armory Theatre, Clarinda, Iowa, for the run of "The Sheik."

Stills of the picture and a miniature oasis is seen with tents and caravans made from still cut-outs. Leopard skins and oriental rugs completed the display.

George Rotsky Shows Way to Grab Off Front Page Publicity

GEORGE ROTSKY. manager of the Allen Theatre, Montreal, grabbed off a nice bit of publicity for "Stranger Than Fiction"—right on the front page and without a cent of expense, by means of an idea and the co-operation of a friendly local aviator who—probably—was willing to get a little publicity for himself.

One of the posters on "Stranger Than Fiction" announces that $1,000 will be given to anyone who will duplicate the aerial stunts of the picture. J. B. Patton, a local aviator, was interviewed by Mr. Rotsky and "ribbed" to write the Montreal Herald a letter stating that he was willing to perform the stunts (the letter also described them and linked up with the title of the production) and would do so if given the opportunity, for half of the offer. The other half Patton agreed was to go to a local hospital.

The Herald printed the letter with comment, and the next day followed it with a story, relating the contents of the letter and explaining that Mr. Rotsky was wiring Miss McDonald and hoped to be able to pull off the aerial stunt over the city.

Both stories ran for a quarter column, with good heads and as news. The story caused a lot of talk about Montreal and the business done on "Stranger Than Fiction" was the best in some time.

Simple but Effective Exploitation Put Over by Boston Theatre

Comparatively inexpensive, yet possessing all the effectiveness of more claborate exploitation methods, was a publicity plan adopted by the Tremont Temple, Boston, in connection with the run of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

Twenty thousand blotters, seven by three and a half inches, printed in blue with a white background and bearing an attractively arranged legend, were distributed throughout the post-offices, business houses and residences of the city.

A photograph of Mark Twain and a picture of "Sir Boss," the hero of the story, bordered the following statement: "They made the Yankee 'Sir Boss' as he soon had the old kingdom running shipshape. He found the plumbing bad, no telephones, no carpets on the floors; and they had never seen a flivver. He fixed the plumbing, installed telephones, and taught the knight how to eat, drink, smoke, ride a motorcycle and build a flivver. He licked a few knights at a tournament, and when dressed up in a top hat and Boston Garters made his escape with the aid of a can opener."

Sends Telegrams to All Women on Mailing List

Every woman on the mailing list of the Strand Theatre, Grand Forks, N. D., received an apparently orthodox telegram asking questions about women and the way to manage husbands as exploitation for the Strand's engagement of "The Sting of the Lash."

The telegrams were mailed with two-cent stamps in envelopes to match the blanks.

The attendance showed three times as many women in the audience as men, and the management of the Strand concludes that the exploitation was effective.

Wright Offers Prizes for "Don't Tell Everything" Essays

When the Strand theatre, Seattle, played "Don't Tell Everything" recently, Manager H. B. Wright seized upon a novel means of exploitation by offering cash prizes for letters in connection with the picture.

The idea was put across through the cooperation of the city newspapers. According to stories carried in the papers, the point conveyed by the theme of "Don't Tell Everything" was that a man or woman should not lie to his or her sweetheart or fiance. Or better still, according to the stories, never tell him or her everything connected with your affairs.

Then the articles went on to the effect that Maanger Wright does not agree with the above ideas, and told how he believed that engaged couples should be truthful, and should confide in each other in order to be happy after they were married,

The stories wound up with the suggestion that Manager Wright was offering a first prize of $10 and three secondary prizes of $5 each for the best letters on the subject as stated above.

The contest created quite a little discussion, and was in a measure one of the reasons for the successful week's run of the picture at the Strand.

"Morals" Lobby Display Caught Augusta's Fancy

When he played "Morals" at his Rialto theatre, in Augusta, Manager Frank Miller hid the front of his theatre back of a sort of framework, somewhat resembling the old-fashioned gilt picture-frames of Grandfather's day. Behind this frame was a sort of boxed in space which held as a back-ground, Oriental draperies, and a big couch. Reclining on this couch was the figure of a woman (a wax "dummy" borrowed from one of the local shops, and used by them in their windows). This dummy was dressed as nearly as possible like May McAvoy in the harem scenes of the picture.

There was a gauze screen over the front of the "picture," and some carefully arranged lights aided the illusion of a fine old painting.

"Wet Gold" Treasure Hunt Interests Calgary Youngsters

The interesting stunt was recently worked out by Manager Tubman, of the Allen theatre, Calgary, Alberta, in conjunction with the presentation of "Wet Gold" at the theatre during the week of December 12. All boys and girls under 12 years of age were invited to take part in a unique treasure hunt, the prizes for which were $5 in cash and a double pass for the show. A sales clerk in the Parker Department Store was selected to hold the prize, and the first boy or girl finding this clerk was the winner. Announcement was made that the search would start Monday afternoon at 4 P. M. and the question to be asked was: "Do you know where 'Wet Gold' is?" The result was that the store was literally stormed by school children of the city.

Local Merchants Back Majestic Theatre

THE Majestic Theatre, Chico, Cal., landed no less than 22 merchants for their double truck for "Ladies Must Live." The exhibitors made clever use of the title, playing it in every ad.

Benefit Show for Unemployed Works Well

OWEN BANNON, manager of the Dreamland Theatre, Elyria, O., recently staged a free show with a new twist to it. The matinee was given for the benefit of those who have been unable to see a movie show for some time on account of the hard times. Although Bannon's object was 99 99/100% altruistic, there was a little business thrown in for good measure, for he took advantage of the assured full house to show the opening two episodes of Eddie Polo's serial "Do Or Die." It was a good stunt, for it made many friends for the house, and gave Bannon unlimited free space in the local newspapers.

Cooperative Advertising Campaign Put Over at Halifax

R. J. MacAdam, and T. S. Daley of the Casino theatre, Halifax, gave a fine example early in December of how a picture can be put over. "Over the Hill," was the screen offering. The manner in which Mr. MacAdam and Mr. Daley went after a big attendance was a treat in showmanship.

They began their campaign a week before the run by using two and three-column ads in the daily papers. A private showing for the clergy and other prominent persons in Halifax was arranged, and as usual this showing developed into a great success.

After this showing MacAdam and Daley obtained letters from Mayor Parker, the three leading pastors and a department store owner. MacAdam and Dale used three letters with telling effect.

On the day previous to this showing MacAdam and Daley tied up with eleven advertisers and took a whole page in the Halifax Herald. A three-column Casino ad was in the center. Over the top was "Over the Hill to Gottingen Street," on the bottom "Come 'Over the Hill'—Shop on Gottingen Street and Save for Xmas." Each advertiser carried at the bottom of his ad the line "Over the Hill to Gottingen Street."

Whole page ads were printed in all the papers on Saturday, and on Monday these were followed with half-pages and three and four-column ads.

This "Over the Hill Lobby" was used during the recent showing of this picture at the Nelson theatre, Fairmount, W. Va.

Another Calendar Idea Worth Borrowing

WILLIAM J. MacFARLANE, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Canandaigua, N. Y., has one of the best "friend-making" exploitation ideas that has come before the motion-picture industry for some time. Each month he issues a calendar which gives the days of the week and dates of the month, and also announces the showing dates for the pictures booked for the entire month.

This calendar is exceptionally neat in appearance, printed in such a way that everything on it stands out like a red light in the fog, and yet is not garish nor loud.

Mr. MacFarlane has his calendar protected by copyright, but is perfectly willing to permit any exhibitor who may care to do so to use the idea, provided it is not to be used by any theatre in his own city.

Tent in Lobby Gets Attention for "Rent Free" Showing

A lobby display that cost little and brought excellent results was used recently by Oscar White, manager of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., for his showing of "Rent Free."

A large tent was constructed and suspended in the lobby, with beaver board floor and ladder leading up to it. The ends and sides of the tent carried cards which read: "Come and Laugh at the Landlord in Rent Free"; "Wallace Reid in a roof raiser—Rent Free"; "See Rent Free and Laugh the Housing Blues Away"; "Don't Cuss the Landlord—See Rent Free"; "If It Is Moving Time, See Rent Free." Mr. White reports this lobby created quite a lot of favorable comment.

Farley Has a Good Idea for "Saturday Night"

IT has remained for H. C. Farley, manager of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., to think of a clever teaser stunt on "Saturday Night"—one which can be used by any exhibitor with a reasonable expectation that it will get attention, although it is a better idea for the small-town manager than for the big-town showman.

Here is what Mr. Farley put over:

Four days prior to publishing the first announcement ad. of SATURDAY NIGHT five one-inch teaser ads. were featured in the morning papers.

First copy read—"IT'S COMING SATURDAY NIGHT, JANUARY 25th." Copy was changed daily.

Now . . . by the calendar, January 25th was not Saturday Night. The conflict in day and date was noticed by many and aroused curiosity.

The teaser ads. were followed by other exploitation, among which was a window display.

Co-operative window displays were arranged in Woman's Millinery shop, with card reading "Hats for Saturday Night and any other night," etc. Similar co-operative cards were displayed in Drug Stores.

This lobby display on "The Light in the Clearing" was built by the Favorite theatre, Piqua, O.

How Wright Exploited "Molly O"

Seattle Theatre and Newspapers Cooperative to Mutual Advantage

AMONG the numberless exploitation stunts which Manager H. B. Wright of the Strand theatre, Seattle, put over for "Molly O" none brought such excellent results as a "Jingle Contest" put over in co-operation with the Seattle Star.

Each day Manager Wright gave $5 to the author of the best "Molly O" jingle that was published in the paper. The only requisite for a successful jingle was that it contain the name of the picture, the star, and the Strand theatre.

All of the jingles turned into the paper were in turn turned over to the Strand, where they were placed in a large glass case in the theatre lobby, where they formed the basis of another contest in which local firms donated prizes.

Among the prizes were a Sonora phonograph, several pairs of "Molly O" pumps, several "Molly O" dolls, a number of "Molly O" hats, and other valuable merchandise prizes.

These exploitation features were emphasized by all the city papers, the magazine published by the management of the Strand theatre, and on the screen of all theatres under the direction of the Jensen-von Herberg circuit, directors of the Strand.

A baby contest, run in conjunction with the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, also helped make the run a success. Each day motion pictures of a number of Seattle infants were shown on the Strand screen, as part of the Post-Intelligencer's plan to select the Seattle children best adapted to screening tests. These pictures were changed daily, and attracted a large number of people interested in the newspaper's contest.

Attendance at the Strand the second Saturday and Sunday of "Molly O" surpassed attendance during the first two days' run according to Manager Wright, who was very well pleased with the showing made by the picture.

This Should Be Sure Fire Most Anywhere

WHEN Manager M. M. Wear of the Rialto Theatre, Charleston, W. Va., played "Everything For Sale," he got out a teaser ad. that tore the town up.

His newspaper space was headed with the title, which was followed by an inventory of everything in the house. It was also announced that the sale would continue "tonight and Saturday." Mr. Wear got a touch of humor to the stunt by listing among his for sale articles odds and ends about a theatre, like photos of stars, empty beer bottles, etc.

Vance Takes Advantage of Transient Celebrity

MANAGER VANCE, of the Vance Theatre, Asheville, N. C., was fortunate when he played "Steelheart," in being able to effect a tie-up with a well-known and interesting figure—that of Van Cleave Giles and his wonder-horse, "Midnight".

Giles stood in the lobby with Midnight, saddled and bridled with very ornate carvings on the saddle and bridle. Giles wore the elaborate riding togs expected of such a figure, and gave away pictures of himself, riding Midnight up the steps of City Hall, in New York City, meeting the mayor, etc.

The interest created by the man and his beautiful horse resulted in good business for the picture.

C. C. Deardourff in charge of publicity in Ohio, for "The Four Horsemen," broke some records lately when he got out an eight page supplement to the Lima News when the "Four Horsemen" was playing there. The paper was headed "FOUR HORSEMEN OF THE APOCALYPSE SUPPLEMENT." Beneath that appeared "published by the News—an exceptional supplement for an exceptional picture."

There was a catch line running all through the supplement. It was "GREATEST IN THEIR LINE." The front page was devoted to a big story on the picture headed "Greatest in their line."

Then followed page after page of literature on the picture and advertisements by local stores. And every advertisement started out with "GREATEST IN THEIR LINE." There was in excess of twenty-five advertisements in the supplement varying from half to eighth pages, and everyone featured the catch line.

In addition to this, the management of the Sigma theatre, where the "Four Horsemen" played, secured the co-operation of the interurban railroad and had special excursions running into Lima in time to see the two performances of the picture. Business is reported as having been excellent and everyone expressed himself as satisfied with the performance even at the greatly advanced admission prices.

This cut illustrates the way the America theatre, Casper, Wyoming, exploited "What Do Men Want?"

Tulsa Girls Who Resemble Mary Pickford Compete for Prizes

Raleigh M. Wilson, exploitation man for the Broadway theatre, Tulsa, Okla., had first-class success when "Little Lord Fauntleroy" was booked there, with a photographic contest with prizes for the Tulsa girls who looked most like Miss Pickford.

There were three prizes, two in cash. The girl who won first money received $15, the second was $10 and the third received ten free tickets to the "Little Lord Fauntleroy" showing. Mr. Wilson tied up the contest with the Novelty Studio, Tulsa, which furnished one free photograph to all contestants, and the Tulsa Daily World gave valuable aid in the way of daily stories on the progress of the contest and finally ran a deep two column cut showing the three prize winners.

In addition the contest was boosted daily in the house program. The total expense for the contest was $32.

Two thousand postal cards were mailed to the theatre mailing list on one side of which was a cut of Miss Pickford with a bandaged eye after her fight with the false pretender to the earldom.

It also was planned to give a little luncheon to the contestants in the resemblance contest, the idea being to put on something that would find its way into the society news columns and thus bring more publicity.

Dainty Lobby Decorations for "Over the Hill"

Conversion of an ordinary, drab lobby into an attractive publicity vehicle was the feat of the management of the Nelson theatre, Fairmont, W. Va., during the recent run of "Over the Hill."

The lobby is somewhat in the shape of a rectangle, measuring about 12 by 18 feet. At the rear is the box office and the entrance is immediately to the right. Framework was erected over the door and the ticket window in such a way as to make it represent the front elevation of a cottage. To the left of the ticket office was constructed a window with lace curtains and a light shining apparently from within. The roof of the little house was painted on the rear wall of the lobby.

On the two side walls were painted large scenes from the picture. One showed the long road to the poorhouse with the "black-sheep" son of the picture dragging his renegade brother to the summit; the other representing the renegade ordering the mother from his door. Additional posters and framed stills were used in embellishing the front of the theatre and the extremes of the lobby. In all it was one of the most attractive displays Fairmont ever witnessed.

Window Display Brings Profit to "Sheba" Exhibitor

Cleverly worded cards used in window decorations for the exploitation of "Queen of Sheba" were largely responsible for the exceptional success the production enjoyed at the Grand theatre, Perry, Ia.

Every prominently located window in town was adorned with stills, scenery drawings and elaborately designed cards. The resourcefulness of the exhibitor is demonstrated by the fact that in several places three and four adjoining windows were utilized for display of "Queen of Sheba" advertising.

Beckerich, Buffalo Showman, Gets Front Page Publicity

AL BECKERICH, manager of the Loew State Theatre, Buffalo, got a lot of valuable front-page publicity last week, when he tied up with the Buffalo Enquirer on a benefit performance for the newspaper's Cheer Fund Chest. Mr. Beckerich turned over a large amount to the fund. In return he got a two-column-headed story every day on the front page of the Enquirer and various special stories.

Giant Page of Toledo Blade as Lobby Display

Further details on the exploitation campaign which Paul Gray of the Wid Gunning exploitation forces put over for the showing of "What Do Men Want?" at the Pantheon theatre, Toledo, O., in addition to those described in the issue of the NEWS of Dec. 24th, are available.

Mr. Gray had obtained numerous front page stories from the Toledo Blade on a contest based on the title of the picture. While the contest was still an event of real interest, Mr. Gray had a huge sign, eighteen by fifteen feet, painted as a reproduction of the first page of the Blade, but instead of painting the usual news in the body of this "page," he painted in details of the essay contest, giving the list of prizes and other information.

A crowd of between twenty-five and fifty stood before the sign continuously at its place high up on the Pantheon Building. But the Blade's co-operation brought it to the attention of at least 90,000 more people. The newspaper reproduced the sign on its first page, under the caption, "The biggest newspaper page in the world," and also ran a story telling of the stunt and of the engagement of the special at the Pantheon. Needless to say it was a "sold-out" showing.

Gillen Telephones His Exploitation for "Three Musketeers"

Fred Gillen, general manager of the Strand theatre, Binghamton, N. Y., used the telephone to splendid advantage recently when "The Three Musketeers" was shown at the Strand.

All the way down the mailing list of the house two young women went calling the persons on the telephone instead of sending the usual mail notice. They called attention to the special features in this Fairbanks production, and referred to it as the "Douglas Fairbanks Million Dollar Picture."

While this telephone exploitation was going on Mr. Gillen himself was making a personal call at all schools of the more advanced grades where he had been given permission to talk briefly to the pupils, outlining the story of the picture.

"Both of these stunts were on the real personal order," says Mr. Gillen.

Youthful Actor Exploits His Own Picture

Lewis Sargent, who plays the messenger in "Just Around the Corner" went to work for Western Union in Los Angeles, to help the picture at Grauman's Million Dollar theatre.

Sargent spent a day at it, and the colleagues razzed the uniform off of him. Sid Grauman made the stunt more interesting by offering a prize of passes to the bona fide messenger boy most resembling Sargent.

Booker Sells Time Table Idea to His Patrons

An announcement has been made by Manager Fred Brooker of Loew's Ottawa Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, with regard to the time-table for the weekly shows. Brooker has made arrangements for the publication in the Tuesday editions of local newspapers of the actual time-table for the current week so that patrons can govern themselves accordingly. In making this plan known, Mr. Brooker declared that the nominal opening hour each day is 1 p. m., but that the time required for a performance fluctuated from week to week.

"It is impossible to remedy this except by speeding up or slowing down the pictures which vary in length, but this does an injustice to the features which are intended to be shown at a fixed rate of speed to give most effective results," he said. "The only way to show our pictures properly is to run them at the proper rate of speed and we have chosen to do this, with the result that some fluctuation in starting time is necessary. In order to notify patrons of the actual starting time of each feature of our performances, we are now publishing a time-table in the daily newspapers every Tuesday. This gives the running time for the show as a whole and, by consulting it, patrons will see precisely at what hour they should come to see either the whole performance or any part of it. We suggest that you consult this time-table every week and clip it for reference."

Saengers Bill "Molly O," Like A Circus

Another "Molly O" cooperative campaign that broke exploitation records is that put over by B. W. Beckert, special representative, Maurice F. Barr, superintendent for the Saenger Amusement Company, New Orleans and Elmore M. Ryan, house manager at the Liberty theatre and one of the Saenger string.

Here is their record of achievement:

A "Molly O" silk display in the best window of another big department store.

A tie-up with a prominent music store with a window display that sold both the picture and the "Molly O" records.

Another window display in a furniture store, tieing up with the engagement and another make of phonograph.

Newspaper advertising by the theatre in which the various cooperative displays were called to the attention of the reader.

Big display ads which sold the picture as a starring vehicle for Mabel Normand and promised a fine show.

An elaborate lobby display in which stills, cut-outs, and appropriate signs caught the eye of every passerby.

Florist Tie-Up for "Wedding Bells"

A tie-up with a florist featured the exploitation of "Wedding Bells" when it played the Garden Theatre in Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Hyman Levy, the proprietor of the house, arranged with the local florist to prepare a flower bell of considerable magnitude and suspended it in the lobby of the theatre. The decoration bore the name of the florist and the famous phrase, "Say it with flowers." Nearly everybody in town went to see the bell, as a result of the discussion it evoked, and remained to see the picture.

More Expert Opinion on—Why the Prologue?

THE controversy centering around the question of prologues in the motion-picture theatre received fresh impetus this week with the receipt of further expert opinions from E. R. Rogers, managing-director of the Tivoli and Rialto, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Writes Mr. Rogers apropos the Prologue:

"To the Exhibitor belongs the idea of the Prologue. By him it must be said whether or not the prologue or special number used on his programs shall be retained. He finances it and evidentally profits by it or he would not keep it.

"Attention to the prologue has come through objections directed to this form of divertisement by those who classify it as Vaudeville and make the contention it has no place on a motion-picture program.

"Now, let's see whether it has or not. If the people want musical numbers and atmospheric prologues it behooves the exhibitor to satisfy his public. If through his own errors he has made the prologue the predominant factor of his program, and has confused his public to the extent that they do not know whether they are attending a vaudeville show or a photoplay exhibition, he will soon find that expenses and public opinion will prohibit his continuing his efforts. So the question of the practicability of the prologue will work itself out. No exhibitor who is a business man will burden his institution with "trimmings" which do not bring him results, nor will he add to his program more than his income will serve.

"The prologue, judiciously managed, should add tone to any motion-picture theatre's program. It's cost can be made nominal. It must be always secondary to the feature. It must be so carefully constructed that it dovetails with the theatre's intent to give satisfactory entertainment to its patrons. The result is the theatre sells its program as a whole and the audience receives the afternoon or evening's entertainment as a palatable morsel.

"White Hands" lobby sign used for the showing of this picture at B. S. Moss' Broadway theatre New York

"The prologue must be used as a vehicle for carrying the musical themes or the atmosphere of the picture, or it is not in the true sense of the word a prologue. Many fine themes used to interpret a picture fail to get over because the spectator is not familiar with the lilt or lyrics. But if the words are properly enunciated in song numbers the audience catches the significance whenever the theme is interposed.

"A prologue or adequately staged song or dance number does this. It warms up the audience; gives a 'kick' to the program that puts the spectator in the right mood to respond to the subtle and dramatic situations in the feature. Any excuse at all that is fruitful of audible demonstration from a theatre audience is worth the effort. The best impression any patron gets of a theatre is when it is doing capacity business, or when the audience expresses its appreciation in a manner that registers with the auditory nerves. An enthusiastic audience oft-times changes the opinion of those who are more or less indifferent. So then the prologue serves to "break the ice"—to give the spectato the cue to be natural. It is easier to giv vent to his emotions after he has onc raised his voice or clapped his hands whe the "punch" in the picture comes. An whenever this happens we use that sho worn, but nevertheless useful theatric phrase, "It went over with a bang"—an after all it is this for which the exhibito strives and when his performances reg ister "satisfaction" with his audience, h realizes he has done all he can to appeas the ever-yawning maw of the box-office.

"Brevity is one of the factors that ente into the success of the prologue or "speci number." Three or four minutes are suffi cient. Don't tire your audience. Giv your program to them in a snappy fash ion. If they want more when the curtain are drawn and the title comes flashing leave them clamoring. Don't overdo it.

"Few pictures offer an opportunity fo a prologue. Those that do not should b let alone. Musical numbers should sat isfy in this instance. Few exhibitors ar capable of putting on a prologue that ha the ear-marks of professional execution

"So after all, the prologue's worth i measured by the intelligence behind it If an exhibitor can use prologues for a nominal cost and at the same time make them serve a purpose, he should continue them. Those who lack the ingenuity to command rhythm, color and music; who are devoid of the sense of proportion and value, should never attempt this form of presentation.

"There must be progress in the realm of theatres. We cannot always go on serving our public the same menu. Sometimes a very small thing will have a psychological effect that means increased business. So to him who attempts the ultimate—who strives for the new and novel, let credit be given."

Manager B. B. Varner, of the Casino theatre Lakeland, Fla., recently built a "cabin" lobby display and then to get double his money's worth placed it in a different position, added the "Conflict" cut- outs, the whole serving as an entirely different front

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FIRST NATIONAL

Molly O—

Third week of run held up fairly well. (West.)

Held up well for a week run, with audiences having the time of their lives at every showing. (East.)

Hail the Woman—

Did very well at a uniform price of 50 cents. (Middle West.)

Strong feature which was well liked by our patrons. Played to good business. (Middle West.)

My Boy—

Business slow first half of week and going big for last half. Special performance under auspices of Federation of Women's Clubs on Saturday morning at end of week brought only about 200. Everybody liked the picture. (Middle West.)

Jackie Coogan made another hit in this one which went over big for seven days. (Middle West.)

Vendetta—

Mediocre picture. Business only fair. (East.)

Not so good. Receipts fair. (East.)

Cabiria—

A powerful spectacle. Has wonderful exploitation possibilities. Pleased good crowds. (Middle West.)

Stardust—

Good entertainment and box office value. (West.)

Love's Redemption—

Fine picture and good box office attraction. (West.)

Broke all records. Fine show. Part of the success of the engagement was due to very elaborate style show put on with a series of popular vaudville numbers. (Middle West.)

R. S. V. P.—

Fairly good feature with fair business. (West.)

Nomads of the North—

Drew for second return those who were interested in Betty Blythe from "The Queen of Sheba." Some dissatisfaction and would do for those who like animal pictures. (Middle West.)

Penrod—

Brought roars of laughter from audience, and being shown in connection with personal appearance of Wesley Barry, played to very heavy business for week. (Middle West.)

Pilgrims of the Night—

A splendid picture. Full of thrills, with love themes and everything to appeal to movie audiences. Business was consistently good all week. (Middle West.)

Her Mad Bargain—

Some of the patrons raved about this. They liked it. Receipts average. (East.)

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Law and the Woman—

Betty Compson's popularity here usually assures a good attendance for the week. This picture proved to be no exception. (Middle West.)

Betty Compson's popularity with our audiences helped put the picture over Business good. (Middle West.)

Pretty good picture. Receipts fair. (East.)

Boomerang Bill—

Very fine picture, but star (Lionel Barrymore) doesn't draw well here. (Middle West.)

Good picture and satisfying box office receipts. (West.)

Rent Free—

Last week was anniversary week at this theatre and in conjunction with picture Victor Herbert conducted the orchestra. While picture was pleasing, tremendous business attributed to occasion and musical feature. (East.)

Three Live Ghosts—

Good show, but not so good as the stage presentation. Business only fair. (Middle West.)

Call of the North—

Old material, well used. Business good. (East.)

The Sheik—

Played to big business at advanced prices. Excellent picture. Pleased well. (East.)

The Lane That Had No Turning—

Fair picture. Fair business. (East.)

The Last Payment—

A good entertainment. Few dull moments. Nice business. (Middle West.)

Miss Lulu Bett—

Went nice and slow all week. Have no special reason to account for this as the audiences were enthusiastic about the picture. (Middle West.)

Why Change Your Wife?—

In second showing drew good crowds all the time—not enormous but satisfying. Drew generally. (Middle West.)

FOX

Sky High—

Best of the Mix pictures. Played Fox Anniversary Week. Drew record Mix business. (Middle West.)

An average picture which played to the usual week's attendance. (Middle West.)

Shame—

Two weeks to big business. (West.)

Poor business but picture is good although too long. The title is misleading and think it would have gone better if named almost anything else. Those who saw it liked it but not so many came. (Middle West.)

The Last Trail—

Business fair, not above average. Good picture if played in right house. (Middle West.)

Play Square—

Drew quite well by playing up, not so expensively either, that Johnnie Walker of "Over the Hill" is the star of this picture. Good picture for general appeal. (Middle West.)

Connecticut Yankee—

Third week of run went good. (West.)

Trailin'—

Tom Mix is a big drawing card with our audiences. This one filled the house all week. (East.)

Queen of Sheba—

Just about gasped through the third week. (East.)

Virgin Paradise—

Bad picture and bad business. (East.)

METRO

Four Horsemen—

Good picture and good business. (East.)

Ended engagement of several weeks. (East.)

Conquering Power—

Good picture, fair business. (East.)

There Are No Villains—

Mediocre picture. Business bad. (East.)

Peacock Alley—

Can't find a single flaw in the production. Audiences seemed to agree with the manager, for business grew better every day of the two-week run. (Middle West.)

Camille—

Drew for Valentino and not for Nazimova, especially. This story has been done so many times. Some dissatisfaction because the hero wasn't on the screen more of the time. (Middle West.)

Fightin' Mad—

A good picture which did not receive proper support, due largely to inclement weather. A fair week's business. (Middle West.)

The Hole in the Wall—

Mediocre picture, and business to correspond. (East.)

The Idle Rich—

Good picture. Business only fair. (East.)

UNIVERSAL

The Scrapper—

Fair. People liked the picture, but star isn't very well known to our audiences. (Middle West.)

Conflict—

Very poor story, which is saved by Priscilla Dean. Fair box office value. (Middle West.)

Don't Get Personal—

Good picture and fine business. (West.)

The Fire Eater—

Fair production with average business. (West.)

Dr. Jim—

Fair business on a fair picture. (East.)

REALART

Tillie—

Mary Miles Minter always pleases. Fair weather and good business. (Middle West.)

Did rip-roaring business. (East.)

Nancy From Nowhere—

Bebe Daniels growing in popularity. Business good on every appearance. (East.)

GOLDWYN

Poverty of Riches—

An interesting story, well acted Good box office value. (Middle West.)

The Glorious Fool—

Very interesting story and good business. (West.)

R-C PICTURES

Silent Years—

Good picture. Fair business. (East.)

The Sign of the Rose—

Fairly good picture. Beban drew splendidly. (Middle West.)

PATHE

A Sailor-Made Man—

Up to the usual Lloyd standard. Something doing and different every second. A sure fire for the box office. Fine business. (Middle West.)

A real box office attraction. The picture played to good crowds for a week's run and received favorable press comment. (Middle West.)

EQUITY

What No Man Knows—

Miss Young knows how to put the heart of a woman on the screen. A really good picture. Drew good crowds. (Middle West.)

Fair, with fair receipts. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

Way Down East—

A sure money-maker, despite the fact that it has played here before in a legitimate house at higher prices. Now on its second week and still going good. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

Judgment—

Foreign picture. Big spectacle. Fair business. (East.)

The Soul of Man—

Good picture and good business. (West.)

School Days—

A fine picture which drew well. (Middle West.)

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

Ascher Brothers will not advance the admission price at the Roosevelt during the run of Universal's million dollar production, "Foolish Wives," according to General Manager Newhafer. Ascher Brothers and Universal are co-operating in putting over an extensive publicity and advertising campaign for this picture, which is expected to remain at this beautiful State street house for some time. Miss Dupont will make a personal appearance on Feb. 12, the opening night.

Al Steffes, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Minnesota, was a Chicago visitor last week and conferred with leaders of the local organization on matters of interest to the M. P. T. O.

Charlie Miller, veteran film salesman, is now connected with the Robertson-Cole exchange and is covering the southside Chicago territory for that organization.

Manager Brimmer, of Vitagraph, states that "The Prodigal Judge" will be released at an early date in Chicago, and that arrangements have been completed for a big advertising campaign in connection with this picture, including the use of twenty-four sheet posters on one hundred and fifty-six bill boards.

Manager Levine, of Universal's Milwaukee exchange, was in Chicago last week and reports theatre attendance in the Wisconsin city improving. being helped by the reopening of factories and increasing of working forces at those plants which have been operating throughout the winter.

Carl Muller, owner of the Spencer Square theatre, Rock Island, Illinois, is confined to the hospital following an operation, but it is reported there is no occasion for anxiety as his speedy recovery is expected.

The Colonial theatre at Rock Island, Illinois, has been closed and no reopening date as yet announced.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Beaby, of the Majestic theatre, East Moline, Illinois, were visited last week by the stork. The family circle was enlarged to the extent of a bouncing baby girl. No shock talk possible with the Reabys this week.

R. Fox, Universal's special sales representative, brings word from Davenport, Iowa, that all the motion picture houses and newspapers have joined forces to make a big success of their "Go To Theatre Week" which has been set for February 5th to 12th.

Petey Wales, of Lanark, Illinois, who operates a chain of small town theatres in northwestern Illinois, was a visitor last week and brought a refreshing breath of optimism with him. He caters to the agricultural class and reports business good and the outlook bright. His business for the past two weeks has been best known for sometime, he reports.

Many friends of Fred Shlanger, of Universal, were sorry to learn of the death of his mother this week. Mr. Shlanger is a son-in-law of Manager I. R. Lesserman, of Universal.

Manager Bensch, of the Bell theatre, and former owner of the Garfield on South Halsted, has purchased the 648 seat Liberty theatre from Mr. Gordon, and will continue to operate it as a high class moving picture house.

Manager Gallas, of Robertson-Cole, is wearing an expansive smile as a result of the good work done in putting over Robertson-Cole Week in this territory. R-C pictures are being shown in 180 houses in Chicago for a solid week and a total of 360 movie theatres are showing Robertson-Cole features during this period.

Isadore Gumbiner, owner of the Banner theatre, has taken over the lease of the Ideal theatre now held by Joe Hopp and will get possession of this house next September.

Al Lichtman and Felix Fiest. of Associated First National Pictures, stopped off in Chicago for a day on their way to the west coast.

Ralph T. Kettering, Jones, Linick & Schaefer's popular exploitation expert, has returned from Toronto, Canada, where he closed a deal for his latest stage play. Mr. Kettering has been very successful as a playwright for several years and many of his productions are now being shown throughout the country.

The committee of thirty, recently appointed by the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners, to make plans for securing a reduction in rental prices of film for exhibitors in Chicago and throughout the state, met again this week and, it is understood, have gotten their case in shape to such an extent that they will soon be ready to approach the managers of local exchanges. A large amount of data showing the rents paid in this territory in comparison with that exacted in other parts of the country, and other statistics bearing on the desired reduction, have been compiled for presentation. Statements by certain exchange managers that they were willing to treat with the individual theatre man for reductions, but opposed meeting the committee, were not received favorably by exhibitors who believe the only way to secure results is by negotiations between their organization and the managers.

William H. Bell, one of the pioneer exhibitors of Chicago, passed away Saturday at his residence, 1901 Warren Avenue. Mr. Bell had operated the Bell Theatre, 2407 West Madison Street, for twelve years or more and enjoyed the friendship of hundreds of exhibitors and others connected with the industry in this territory, all of whom will regret his death.

Ben Beadell reports that the showing of the Official Dempsey-Carpenter pictures in Lubliner & Trinz's chain of theatres was so successful that repeat dates have been arranged for all the L. & T. houses. Bookings from all parts of Illinois are continuing to be made in large numbers, according to Mr. Beadell.

M. E. Maxwell has arrived in Chicago to assume his duties as district manager for Cosmopolitan Films. He will make his headquarters here and will have supervision of eleven Cosmopolitan offices in the central west. Mr. Maxwell is well known to the trade, having recently been field representative for Realart.

W. W. Hodkinson's exchange reports that more than two hundred exhibitors have signed up to show the Official Urban Movie Chats and that the first release in this territory will be next week. Both large and small houses are welcoming this innovation and among the important Chicago firms which have signed up is Balaban & Katz, who decided to use the Movie Chats after a week's trial showing at the Chicago Theatre, which convinced them that the public would enjoy these reels. The first Chicago showing of the Official Urban Movie Chats occurred at Schaffer's Projection Room on January 24th, and the large assembly of exhibitors burst into hearty applause at its conclusion, and expressed themselves as very much pleased with this reel, which has the official backing of the M. P. T. O. of A.

Bill Hirshberg has bought the Orchard Theatre on North Avenue, from Sam Levine. Julius Lamm is doing the booking for this house.

Harry Berman, of Universal Film Company, was in the city this week in connection with the opening of "Foolish Wives" at Ascher's Roosevlt. Dan McConnell is also here and will look after the publicity and exploitation campaign in connection with the showing of this big feature. Mr. Berman reports that "Foolish Wives" will be shown in fifteen of the country's largest cities within the next ten days.

Joe Friedman, of Celebrated Players, was due back to Chicago this week after spending ten days in New York City attending an important meeting of Federated Film Exchanges, of which he is president.

Sidney Goldman, who is looking after the American Releasing Corporation's interest in the Central West, has practically closed a lease for a ground floor office on Wabash Avenue between Seventh and Eighth Streets, and expects to open up the Chicago headquarters for American within a few days.

Realistic Blizzard in "The Great Alone"

Tons of rock salt and a couple of aeroplane motors provided an effective blizzard which will be seen in "The Great Alone," the Monroe Salisbury feature, which will be distributed by the Producers Security Corporation. This saved the expense of taking the entire company to Northern California, and according to Director Jacques Jaccard, proved thoroughly realistic.

"The Great Alone" is rapidly nearing completion, according to Supervising Director Isadore Bernstein, and arrangements for its release are now being formulated by the producers Security Corporation.

"The Silent Call" Wins Praise in Frisco

Duplicating its success at the Capitol theatre in New York City, where it won unanimous praise of all the newspaper critics, "The Silent Call," an H. O. Davis production directed by Lawrence Trimble and released by First National, won similar acclaim from the reviewers of San Francisco during its presentation at the California theatre.

"The story is an intensely interesting one," says the Call, "and is filled to the brim with gripping moments and situations as thrilling as they are unusual."

The Daily News: "The picture is one of the most unusual and most interesting that has come out of the studios in some time."

The Bulletin: "Most stories with an animal as the leading figure lose the big punch because the animal cannot be made to adequately interpret the character called for. There is no criticism of this sort to be found with 'Strongheart' the canine wonder. The most remarkable thing about 'Strongheart' is that he does not fail in one situation."

The Examiner: "A distinctly pleasing novelty is 'The Silent Call'."

TERRITORIAL SALES AND PURCHASES

In the Independent Field

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

Julius Singer, who is now Eastern manager of the Pacific Film Co.

All-Star Carewe Picture Arouses Interest

When announcement was made to the trade last week by C. C. Burr of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., that Kenneth Harlan, Alice Lake, Rosemary Theby, Noah and Wallace Beery and Gaston Glass had signed with Edwin Carewe as director to appear in an independent production to be released through Affiliated Distributors, it brought forth the commendation of some of the largest independent exchanges in the country.

Last week, a carload of props, and another passenger coach filled with principals and extra players arrived at Truckee, California, where the initial Edwin Carewe-Affiliated Distributors release will be produced. B. P. Fineman is in charge of the party which includes Alice Lake, Kenneth Harlan, Rosemary Theby, Gaston Glass, Noah Beery, Wallace Beery and cameraman Bob Curley. The scenario prepared by Raymond Shrock calls for a number of big mob scenes laid in the snow country. For this reason it was necessary to transport a large list of players from Los Angeles.

Katherine Stuart Will Edit Bible Films

Katherine Stuart has been engaged to edit the Italian film version of the Old Testament controlled by Weiss Brothers Artclass Pictures Corporation. Miss Stuart will work in association with Adolph Weiss.

Renewed Buying Interest

Robert W. Priest Reports Many State Right Sales Since Jan. 1

UNMISTAKABLE signs of renewed activity in state rights buying is to be observed everywhere just now, according to Robert W. Priest, president of The Film Market, Inc., who states that buyers are busy looking for pictures that exhibitors will book. He emphasizes the fact that his company has made more actual sales and received more inquiries regarding "The Supreme Passion" and "The Ne'er-Do-Well" since January 1 than during the entire ninety days preceding.

The particular feature of recent sales which has struck Mr. Priest forcibly is the fact that new money is literally pouring into the independent branch of the industry.

"Andrew Carnegie's wonderfully successful policy," says Mr. Priest, "seems to be accepted by some of the wise business men who are edging in just now. Carnegie once wrote: 'In time of depression and quietness I used to prepare for the better times which never failed to come.'

"Nobody would be stupid enough to dispute the truth and logic of Carnegie's statement. And by the same token it would be stupid to gainsay the fact that every exchange that has pictures that the public wants to see can book them and make money.

"This is not blind optimism; it is a statement of fact. The return to prosperity is due strictly to demand. For nearly two years motion picture production has been curtailed and every day during that period projection machines in thousands of theatres have been consuming the stock on hand until today pictures are really scarce. This is why state rights buyers are rushing to New York in search of productions. Their exchanges are empty; they must have new goods with which to do business. Theatres must get new pictures to show to their patrons or close up shop.

"Theatres that sell second-hand films are dying like flies on a hot griddle. The only thing that will bring them to life is cash at the ticket window and the only thing now that will bring cash to the ticket window is good, strong, clean features on the inside. Let us have a few big worthwhile independent productions and watch the result.

"There is plenty of ready money to buy real pictures but not a dime to buy junk. Also there are capitalists with millions ready, willing and anxious to invest it in the motion picture business to finance independent producers with a definite policy and whose dependability can command the confidence of the man with money.

"Every dollar that I take out of "The Supreme Passion" is going right back into good box office attractions and unless all signs fail the early spring and summer will see a healthy boom in production and sale of state rights pictures."

Sixteen Pyramid Features

"Old Kentucky Home" Heads List of Exceptional Independent Pictures

PYRAMID Pictures, Inc., announces this week its list of big pictures financed on a plan, it is said, whereby the American exhibitor can be given a maximum product at the lowest possible rental.

Pyramid Pictures has given its promise to the motion picture trade world to release sixteen super attractions during the current year. "My Old Kentucky Home," written by Anthony Paul Kelly and directed by Ray C. Smallwood and in which such stars as Monte Blue, Arthur Carew, Matthew Betz, Frank Currier, Billy Quirk, Sigrid Holmquist, Lucy Fox and Julia Swayne Gordon appear, is now ready for distribution. Production work has commenced on the second and third pictures. Paul M. Potter's international success "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge" is the second offering and is being directed by Ray C. Smallwood. Betty Blythe, the "million dollar" box office attraction, has been signed by Pyramid to star in this third super attraction which will be directed by Kenneth Webb. Anna Katherine Greene's best seller, "The Mayor's Wife," will be Miss Blythe's next starring vehicle.

The plans as announced by Pyramid Pictures shows nothing but the most elaborate of super dramas that will be made under this companies banner in the ensuing twelve months. Mr. Greene is now arranging with two other celebrated directors to have them join the Pyramid organization.

Backer to Handle New Amalgamated Series

AN explanation of the extra amount of activity in the main offices of East Coast Productions, Inc., and the sudden decision of Franklyn E. Backer to leave for the coast on February 11 is forthcoming in announcement of a second series of Amalgamated Pictures to be launched through the franchise-holders of this organization upon Mr. Backer's return. The second production of the first series, designated as co-star pictures, is "Any Night" and will be followed by "The Greater Duty," the prints and accessories of which are now ready for shipment to the exchanges. A feature of the distributing method of this series was the showing of three completed productions upon the screen before any contracts were closed with the independent exchanges holding Amalgamated franchises.

The new series, which will consist of two-reel refined Comedies, will be launched along the same lines, and the first three pictures are now ready and will be brought East by Franklyn E. Backer upon his return from the trip to Los Angeles.

Foreign Rights Sold on "Heart of the North"

Foreign rights on "The Heart of the North," the George H. Davis-Joe Brandt feature of the Canadian Northwest featuring Roy Stewart with Louise Lovely, were sold this week by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation for Australia, New Zealand, and Tasmania. The purchase to this territory was made by Select Pictures Corporation.

Slow Motion Used in Hallroom Comedy

Slow motion photography as a means of securing comedy effects is one of the features of a new Percy and Ferdie Hallroom Comedy featuring Sid Smith and Jimmie Adams which has just been completed by producer Harry Cohn. The comedy, which will be released through Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., has been given the title "Beware of Blondes."

Coast Producers Honor W. E. Shallenberger

On the occasion of a recent visit to Los Angeles and the Coast studios Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation was the guest of honor of the most famous Californian producers, including Ben Wilson, Morris Schlank, Eddie Lyons, Reggie Morris, S. M. Herzig, as well as of the leading directors and artists, including Roy Clements, Ann Little, Roy Stewart, Jack Hoxie and very many others.

In recognition of Dr. Shallenberger's visit, a floral offering composed of American beauty roses was prepared and presented to him. The confidence of the producers in Dr. Shallenberger's business integrity and honesty of purpose could not be more strikingly evidenced.

Arrow Representative Returns Optimistic

T. A. Curran, the well-known representative, recently returned to New York after a three months' trip over the Arrow territories of Kansas, Oklahoma, Georgia, and Texas, in the course of which he visited all the Independent exchanges in the territory and many hundreds of exhibitors.

Mr. Curran returned to the city full of confidence in the success of Arrow in these territories during the year of 1922. He declared that the outlook for the Independent Branch of the motion-picture industry was never so bright inasmuch as he finds there is a strong tendency on the part of exhibitors to favor Independent productions wherever it is practicable.

Harry Beaumont Signed as Fox Director

William Fox has signed Harry Beaumont, the well known director. Beaumont, who recently severed connection with Metro after the completion of a long series of successful productions, will assume direction of Shirley Mason in her next feature, the working title of which is "Down the Back-Stairs."

Mid-West Likes "His Nibs"

Exceptional Receives High Praise of Feature After Its Screenings

BOTH L. L. Hiller, the president of "His Nibs" Syndicate, Inc., and Exceptional Pictures Corporation, producers of the comedy feature in which the versatile "Chic" Sale is making his first appearance in the films, have received most enthusiastic praise of "His Nibs" which is drawing crowds and favorable criticism in the middle West.

"His Nibs" opened at the Pantages Theatre, Salt Lake City, on Jan. 29th, and by the middle of the afternoon the feature had created so much comment from the office, and the line at the box office was so long, that it inspired the following telegram, which was received by Mr. Hiller "'His Nibs' opened up at Pantages to capacity business. The picture was a riot from start to finish. The house was in a constant uproar and we roared with them. You sure have a great picture."

Another commendatory report came from Mr. Phil Selznick, of the Phil Selznick productions, of Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Selznick controls "His Nibs" for the State of Ohio. Mr. Sale is very popular throughout the state and the key cities all bought the picture immediately upon Mr. Selznick's announcement it was ready for distribution.

For the benefit of all the exhibitors in his territory, Mr. Selznick arranged a special showing on "His Nibs," at the Allen Theatre, in Cleveland on Jan. 28th. The next morning he wrote the following letter:

"I took the time to write you a short while ago complimenting you on your cooperation in advertising 'His Nibs.' Now allow me to again compliment you and 'Chic' Sale, the star of the production. In all my experience in the film business I have never met an actor who is so thoroughly business-like and so thoughtful for the persons distributing his picture.

"Last night we screened 'His Nibs' at the Allen Theatre to over 500 persons, and the show started at midnight, so you can readily realize what a compliment to the picture it was to have so many people stay up so late. It was the largest and most enthusiastic audience ever at a screening. 'Chic' came to the screening and was greeted by a large crowd and acclaimed as the screen's newest star. Everyone there went crazy about his work."

Praise "Boomerang Bill"

N. Y. Critics Comment Favorably on Lionel Barrymore's New Picture

LIONEL BARRYMORE makes "Boomering Bill," one of the finest screen characterizations of the year, says the New York Evening Telegram of the featured player in the Cosmopolitan Production shown to New Yorkers for the first time at the Rialto theatre the week of February 5.

The reviewer, who, in common with other daily newspaper critics, found much to praise in "Boomerang Bill," ex-gunman, played by Lionel Barrymore with all the power and rich humanity at his command, is a fascinating screen study.

The Evening Sun likewise gives Mr. Barrymore great praise, saying: "Lionel Barrymore is fine. We don't remember having seen him do anything so well in pictures as his portrayal of the pistol-toter. His walk and nervous movements and shifty expression and his acting in the prison scenes all contribute to our motion as to what an ideal crook should be."

According to the Evening Post: "Lionel Barrymore has a good story in 'Boomerang Bill,' and he makes the most of it. All the other characters, too, in this photoplay at the Rialto are well cast. Indeed, they are so well chosen for type and give so much to their parts that all of the captions could have been omitted without loss. And it has to be a good motion picture to have that said."

The reviewer of the Evening Globe writes: "'Boomerang Bill' is worth seeing because Lionel Barrymore plays the part of the gunman who reforms. Rugged of physique, Barrymore looks every inch the powerful crook who puts on two very good fights. His forceful features are ever eloquent of the strong and at times tender emotions of this burglar man. There is many a thrill for the jaded moviegoer in the workings of his emotions as indicated by his facial expressions. His eyes alone express more than do all the facial and body contortions of most of the people who are passed off as actors on the screen."

"School Days" Does Big Business in New York

The run of the Warner Brothers production Gus Edwards' "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, at the Strand, New York, was productive of a big business week, according to Managing Director Joe Plunkett. The drawing power of the attraction, states Warner, is also proved in the announcement that the Strand, Milwaukee, played to such phenomenal business that the feature was held over for a second week.

Cohn to Offer New Novelty Short Subjects

ANNOUNCEMENT comes this week from Jack Cohn that two new novelty short releases, each different from the other, and promised as real surprises, are now in process of final production and will shortly be announced for release.

Herz to Present More Foreign Spectacles

Herz Film Corporation, which presented "Good and Evil," through Wid Gunning, Inc., "Dorothy's Confession," now scheduled for national distribution, and "The Love Slave," now offered on the state right market, announce two forthcoming features which, it is claimed, will create a sensation in the American market.

These are "The Prince and the Pauper," based on Mark Twain's story, and a gigantic spectacle based on the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, according to the Bible narrative. The Biblical story has been humanized by a strong dramatic story and historical characters and heroic figures are said to be introduced with dramatic effects. Huge sets have been built for the picture. Vladimir Herz, president of Herz Film Corp, also announces two unique underwater stories to be released in the near future. These are "A Sunken World" and "Masters of the Sea," both made recently on the coast of Africa.

Mr. Herz exports a large number of American films to the foreign market, and personally selects foreign pictures for import. Associated with Mr. Herz is C. H. Macgowan, who acts as general manager of the company.

Many Contracts Given Urban Official Reel

While the production staff of the Kineto Company has been busy getting together the introductory reel of the "Official Urban Movie Chats of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America," the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has been busy getting in touch with the exhibitors all over the country.

The response has been as enthusiastic as it has been large. In all sections of the country, state the reports, exhibitors have been glad to put their signatures to the contract to play the Official Urban Movie Chats every week for the first year. The contracts form the flood, so rapidly are they coming into the three main offices in New York—the offices of the M. P. T. O. A., of the Kineto Company and of the Hodkinson Corporation.

Fontenelle Film Co. Buys "His Nibs"

L. L. HILLER, the President of "His Nibs" Syndicate, Inc., has notified the Exceptional Pictures Corporation, producers of "His Nibs," in which Charles (Chic) Sale has transferred his protean art to to screen, that he has disposed of the Nebraskan and Iowan rights to this feature to Max Wintroub, of the Fontenelle Film Company, of Omaha, Neb.

Mr. Wintroub is one of the most important factors in the better pictures movement throughout the Middle West. He has been in the state right field for the past six years, and has given even the smallest exhibitor his personal and careful attention, spending most of his time out in the field conferring with the exhibitors regarding their bookings, their likes and dislikes.

Interesting Press Book on "David and Jonathan"

In the form of a periodical bearing the title "Exhibitor's Guide," Second National Pictures Corporation has issued an interesting and practical press book for the first release, "David and Jonathan." The front page, in orange and black, producing a three color effect, carries a cut representing the burning of a ship at sea. The second page is taken up with three cuts, one, two and three column, which are supplied to exhibitors. The third page contains the story, taken from the popular novel by E. Temple Thurston and the photoplay itself. The fourth page is devoted to exploitation, beginning with directions from the conducting of a teaser campaign in the newspaper and offering suggestions for novel and effective lobby "stunts," tie-ups, etc.

The fifth page is filled with ready-to-use advance notices, reviews, last day notices and newspaper paragraphs. On the sixth page are teaser lines and catch lines for the program, two short newspaper stories and one long one dealing with the manner in which the fight between Jonathan and a leopard was arranged and carried out. The seventh page presents the

New Eddie Lyons Comedy Is "Keep Moving"

Arrow Film Corporation announces that "Keep Moving" is the title of the Sixth Eddie Lyons Comedy in two reels shortly to be published. Reports from the territories indicate that Eddie Lyons, both as director and star, is more and more in demand than ever with the exhibitor and the public.

Of the twelve two-reel supercomedies Eddie Lyons is making for Arrow's distribution half of them are prepared: for the remaining six the demand is so great that the production has to be rushed with all possible speed at Los Angeles.

Intimate Views of Pius XI

International News No. II Contains Scenes of Funeral of Benedict XV

AN intimate moving-picture portrait of Cardinal Ratti, who has just been elected Pope Pius XI, is the high spot in International News Release No. 11, just issued. The portrait of the new pope elected on Monday of course was not taken since he became pope, but was taken by International at a previous conclave and represents him in his cardinal robes.

There are also views of an exclusive scene of the funeral cortege of the late pope within the Vatican and the arrival of the members of the Sacred College of Cardinals to cast their ballots for the new head of the Catholic Church.

In addition, there are also shown some exceptionally fine views of the successful termination of the Disarmament Conference in Washington. The representatives of the various powers are depicted signing the momentous five-power treaty and President Harding is shown addressing the delegates at the conclusion of the parley.

Of less international import, the British troops are shown leaving Ireland. Reminiscent of the former splendor of the German army are the views of Argentine's army "goose-stepping" by in review. A unique wedding ceremony of Seminole Indians is taken in the picturesque Florida Everglades. For the animal lovers there is a 500-year-old turtle captured in the Florida surf, a dog team race over New England's snow clad hills and prize winning Persian cats in the Chicago Cat Show.

Business Better in West

Goodstein Explains Conditions; Buys Rights to Arrow Product

JOSEPH J. GOODSTEIN, President of the Arrow Photoplays Company of Denver, who is in New York City this week on a business trip, states that in his opinion conditions are showing a slight improvement in the Western States.

Mr. Goodstein, who is one of the most energetic representatives of the motion picture industry, says that while the change noted is gradual it shows a substantial improvement. He believes that another six months will reflect a decided trend toward better times for the exhibitor. Mr. Goodstein has built up a wonderful organization for his territory. Jimmie Moran, who was associated with the Universal Film Company for several years is manager of the Salt Lake territory; Charles Zagrams, who is also secretary of Mr. Goodstein's organization has charge of the Denver district, assisting Mr. Goodstein. Mr. Goodstein opened the Seattle offices about six months ago. Barney Shooker is sales manager in the Denver offices. A. H. Hout is in charge of publicity and exploitation and also manager of the Seattle offices.

Besides his organization in Denver, Mr. Goldstein is owner of the Pal theatre, Pueblo, and the Pal theatre of Philadelphia. On his trip to New York, Mr. Goodstein visited the New York offices of the Arrow Film Corporation and purchased twelve special two-reel Eddie Lyons Comedies, known as the "Big Twelve"; fourteen Broadway Comedies featuring Eddie Barry, twelve five-reel Westerns starring Jack Hoxie; "The Girl From Porcupine" and two additional features to be produced in the near future. Mr. Goodstein also bought for his Denver territory "The Decciver," starring Carol Halloway.

Selig Serial Soon Ready

Nine Episodes of "Jungle Goddess" Completed at West Coast Studios

COL. WM. N. SELIG'S new wild animal serial, "The Jungle Goddess," in which Eliner Field and Truman Van Dyke are co-starred, will be ready for release soon, according to Mr. Louis Auerbach of the Export & Import Film Company, Inc., world distributors of this chapter picture.

Production at the coast studios is now proceeding according to schedule. Delay occasioned by the unlooked for frost, which seriously hindered the taking of wild animal scenes, has been made up for by constant night work. Director Conway has now finished the ninth episode of Agnes Johnston and Frank Dazey's thrill drama. Work on chapters ten, eleven and twelve is rapidly nearing completion.

It is understood that the accessories for the serial are being rushed to be in readiness for an early release of "The Jungle Goddess." The posters for the first six episodes are now ready as are the lobby display photographs for the first four chapters. Slides, heralds, banners, etc., will be available within one week.

Material for a thirty-two page multi-colored press-book with exploitation and exhibitor aids, reproductions of posters, cuts, lobby photographs, and a complete newspaper campaign is now being assembled.

"The Jungle Goddess," it is said, will be backed by extensive newspaper publicity in addition to the trade paper advertising now going on. The former has been withheld to prevent its appearance before the serial is ready for the exhibitor and the public.

Kent Reports Demand for Anchor Product

John A. Kent, the new Eastern Sales Representative of Anchor Film Distributors, of Los Angeles, has been busy during the past week screening some of the pictures of his firm to state right buyers. The New York state and Northern New Jersey rights to "The Heart of Lincoln" and "Another Man's Boots" have been sold, reports Mr. Kent, and many inquiries have been received concerning the new series of which he is daily expecting prints.

Anchor Film Distributors is headed by Morris Schlank, one of the pioneer picture producers, and associated with him is Ben Wilson, the well-known independent producer. Now in production are a series of Peggy O'Day, race horse features, Jack Perrin sea stories, Alice Howell single reel comedies, and others.

Mr. Kent expects to leave in the very near future on a sales tour of the principal key cities. At present he can be reached at the offices of the Arrow Film Corporation.

"Torchy's Frameup" at New York Criterion

"Torchy's Frameup," a "Torchy" Comedy released by Educational, was shown at the Criterion Theatre beginning Sunday, Feb. 5. This "Torchy" Comedy was booked for an indefinite run. This follows a two-week run of Educational's "Ride on a Runaway Train," which was shown at the Criterion for its fourth Broadway engagement.

"Jungle Goddess" Scenarists in N. Y.

Agnes Johnston and Frank Dazey, who collaborated in the preparation of the story and scenario for Col. Selig's new wild animal serial, "The Jungle Goddess," which the Export & Import Film Co., Inc., is state righting, arrived in New York this week from the coast, for a conference with Mr. Louis Auerbach, of this company, regarding the final episodes of the serial.

The two scenarists it is understood are working in close cooperation with Col. Selig, in the production of the serial, being constantly on hand while the "shooting" is in progress in order to offer any impromptu ideas which present themselves.

"The Great Alone" Makes Rapid Progress

Isadore Bernstein, head of the West Coast Film Corporation, reports rapid progress with the big Monroe Salisbury feature, "The Great Alone."

The new fifteen-year-old star, "Draga," is said to be doing remarkable work in support of Monroe Salisbury. Jules Jacquard, the director, has assembled an all star cast for this production, and has enlisted the services of Alfred Allen, Walter Law, Laura Anson, and many others.

MEN AND EVENTS IN THE FILM CENTRES

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

BALTIMORE

Two Baltimore theatres—the Parkway and the New, both of the C. E. Whitehurst interests, have undergone a change in policy. Instead of each theatre showing a special first run for one week both will play the same two simultaneously.

The switch, while giving each house twice as many pictures weekly and thus annually, in reality requires only a duplication of the films booked. In one year both houses will play 102 films, the same aggregate under the plan of booking one and different shows for the two places.

"It's a permanent move," said Louis A. DeHoff, booking agent for the Whitehurst interests, "and was forced by our inability to get big first runs. The New and the Parkway are so widely separated, the former downtown and the other uptown, that we believe the new plan will operate more advantageously."

H. S. Jefferson, manager of the Parkway, is of the opinion the change will be beneficial. "One of the big features of the move is that our patrons have a choice. We have a double hold, so to speak."

SEATTLE

A complete 10-reel copy of the William Fox film "Over the Hill," valued at $1,000, was stolen in Seattle on Wednesday, Jan. 25, from the College Playhouse, where the picture had just finished a short run.

Private detectives and city police investigating the case found no clues. They were proceeding on the theory that the robbery was perpetrated by the international film theft gang that has been so active in all parts of the country recently.

The film was in the possession of Raymond Geddes, manager of the University district house, who reported that he had taken it home in his auto to keep during the night. Geddes left the film in his garage all night, it is declared, and upon opening the garage the following morning found the films gone.

This is the second robbery of this nature to occur in Seattle during the past month. On the night of December 28, 1921, copies of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and "The Conquering Power," valued at $100,000, were stolen from the vault of the Metro Pictures agency, and so far no clues have been found in that case.

CLEVELAND

By special arrangement with S. Barrett McCormick, managing director of the Allen theatre, Cleveland, Frank J. Zimmerer, art director for the Allen theatre, has become Director of the Department of Stage Craft and Scenic Decorations in the School of the Theatre, 10550 Euclid avenue, where classes are being conducted.

The Wind-A-Meer block, East Cleveland, including the Wind-A-Meer theatre, a 1,000 seat first-run motion picture theatre, has just been purchased from G. A. Siebanoler, by Myer Fine of Cleveland and the Silverman brothers of Altoona, Pa. Mr. Fine is one of the principal owners of a chain of local movie houses. The Silvermans are prominent Altoona exhibitors. Simon Silverman will take over the active management of the theatre.

Approximately $1,500 was stolen from the safe of the Ohio and American Theatre Company, with offices at 122 West Fifth street, Cincinnati. The door to the office was jimmied, and the contents of the safe, representing the Saturday's receipts from five motion picture houses which the company controls, were stolen.

WESTERN NEW YORK

Sam Carver is representing I. H. Herk in the management of the Academy, Buffalo, under its new picture policy. The Academy burlesque policy ended Saturday, February 4. First-run pictures are now being shown, with three changes a week, Sunday, Monday and Thursday. The Empire is also continuing under the management of Mr. Carver.

Miss Dupont appeared at the Criterion, Buffalo, this week in connection with the presentation of "Foolish Wives," and Miriam Battista was at the Loew State in person.

Sol Myers is now house manager at the Criterion, Buffalo, succeeding Vincent McFaul, who was manager under the Shea Amusement Company direction of the house. Max Spiegel and company have leased the theatre and will probably start burlesque in it next season. In the interim pictures will be shown, it is reported. "Foolish Wives" is the current attraction.

Fire did several thousand dollars' damage to the new Capitol theatre in Oswego, N. Y., January 30. Some 500 patrons filed slowly out of the house as the operator continued to show the picture. The blaze originated in the heating plant in the rear of the auditorium. The Capitol is Oswego's largest motion picture house.

Yeggs entered the Lyceum theatre, Rochester, in broad daylight and after assaulting the janitor, attempted to rob the safe, but were scared away.

Morris Fitzer of the Empire, Syracuse, was a Buffalo visitor last week. He came to town with Henry W. Kahn of Metro and while in the city viewed "Peacock Alley," at the Metro exchange. Other exhibitors in the city were E. C. Peters of Hornell, Charles Shattuck of Hornell, M. Woods of Jamestown and Henry F. Kurtz of Rochester.

Nate Robbins has purchased two houses in the Buffalo territory, west of Syracuse, according to word arriving in Buffalo. The names are not divulged. Mr. Robbins owns a string of theatres in Watertown, Syracuse and Utica.

James A. Bailey is putting on some strong programs at Keith's theatre on lower Main street, Buffalo. Serials always have a prominent place on the bill. "Tarzan" and "The White Eagle," are now being shown.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Fred Niblo Will Direct "Blood and Sand"

JESSE L. LASKY announced in Hollywood this week that Fred Niblo, director of "The Three Musketeers," had been engaged to direct Paramount's big special production, "Blood and Sand," in which Rodolph Valentino is to be starred.

John S. Robertson had been chosen to direct "Blood and Sand," but owing to the magnitude of "Spanish Jade," the production which Mr. Robertson has been making in Europe for Paramount, it was found to be impossible for him to reach Hollywood in time to start the new production on schedule.

Vitagraph's "Little Minister" Scores

Vitagraph's "The Little Minister" established a new box-office record at the New Lincoln Theatre, Belleville, Ill. "Our crowds increased the second day to the extent that for hours an ever-lengthening line of people eagerly awaited an opportunity to get inside the theatre which has a capacity of 1,800," writes Forrest C. Templin of the Lincoln Theatre Co.

Richard Daniels, the youngster who plays the role of Micah in this picture, has been placed under contract by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph. The youthful actor will be given a prominent part in a special production to be started shortly by Vitagraph.

Costume Play for "Doug"

Fairbanks Abandons "Zorro" Sequel and Will Film Crusade Feature

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS announces that he will not film the further adventures of Zorro for his next offering as had been previously announced. Instead he will do for United Artists release, a stupendous costume feature, more elaborate than "The Three Musketeers," dealing with the period of the Crusades and the early history of England and called temporarily, "The Spirit of Chivalry."

The new vehicle will be a story of rip-roaring adventure, fiery romance and gripping drama, dressed in all the color and atmosphere of the period, and lavishly costumed, states United Artists.

"The thrust of D'Artagnan's sword," said Mr. Fairbanks, "will give place to the slash of the broadswords of Ivanhoe, Richard the Lion-Hearted and other early English characters. Lovers of the age of chivalry will be thrilled anew by those bold adventurers as they walk onto the screen from that picturesque past."

While this play, like "The Three Musketeers," is to be a costume spectacle, it will be so different in setting and locale as to transport one into an entirely different epoch, and is said to rest upon a stronger dramatic foundation than the French play.

Fairbanks will appear as a purely legendary character against a background of historical figures familiar to every man, woman and child the world over.

Allan Dwan, who will direct the new feature, has been conducting a research drive in the Los Angeles public library with Lotta Woods and Kenneth Davenport, of the scenario department.

This research campaign will continue until Mr. Fairbanks returns from New York, where he will go shortly on a business trip. It is expected that the picture will be ready for spring release.

The story upon which Johnston McCulley is now working as a sequel to "The Mark of Zorro" will be held over for production after "The Virginian."

"Jutland" Film First Runs

Educational's Special Receiving Big Bookings in Many Key Cities

A NAVAL parade in San Francisco, with a band of seventy-five pieces and a thousand men from the Naval Reserve in line, is just one of many events being planned to mark the first-run showings of "The Battle of Jutland" as the prints of this three-reel super special are being distributed to the branches of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., for release.

"The Battle of Jutland" is having its first theatrical showing outside of New York City in Rochester, N. Y., where the picture went into the Regent Theatre, Sunday, Feb. 5. Contracts for this special have been made in many other key cities, and the setting of dates awaits only the arrival of prints.

This remarkable historical record of the World War's greatest naval battle has received highest praise from Rear Admiral William S. Sims, president of the Naval War College at Newport, Rhode Island, where the film was shown at his special request to the War College class of naval officers following its presentation at the Naval Academy at Annapolis and at the Marine Barracks in Washington.

"The picture was shown at the War College," writes Admiral Sims, "and was viewed with much pleasure and keen interest by the officers attached to the War College, and those from other naval and military stations in Newport. In my opinion this film would prove of great interest to any civilians who take any interest at all in such matters. There are a few people whose interest has led them to read the books that have been written on the subject, but the vast majority have no opportunity to read these rather expensive books, and there is no other way, or at least no way so good to give them an understanding of what the battle was like, as this film. While of course the limitations of the process forbid going more into detail, still they are sufficient to give the layman a very clear and very interesting idea of the nature of a modern naval battle.

First Nat'l Producing Units Very Busy

ACTIVITY continues unabated at the independent studios which are turning out motion pictures in Los Angeles and New York studios for First National release. Comprehensive plans for 1922 production are now being carried out on an elaborate scale.

Marshall Neilan began shooting last week on "Fools First," following the completion of the continuity. In the meantime his young star, Freckles" Barry, is making a transcontinental tour, appearing personally in connection with his latest picture, "Penrod," in the larger cities.

Allen Holubar spent last week shooting seaside scenes for "The Soul Seeker." Dorothy Phillips is being starred in it. Editing of Norma Talmadge's "Smilin' Through," has been completed. Three costume pictures are now in the course of filming—Norma Talmadge in "The Duchess of Langeais," Mabel Normand in "Suzanna" and Maurice Tourneur's "Lorna Doone."

At the Louis B. Mayer studio work has been finished on John M. Stahl's "One Clear Call" and on Anita Stewart's "Rose O' the Sea." Final scenes have also been taken on "On Patrol," a Mack Sennett - Billy Bevan two-reel comedy. In the East Richard Barthelmess is working on "Sonny" and Hope Hampton on "The Light in the Dark."

A scene from "Her Husband's Trademark," a Paramount picture starring Gloria Swanson

New Goldwyn Group Released

Seven Features and Special Are Ready for Exhibitors

GOLDWYN'S third group of fifth year pictures is now ready for release to the exhibitors of the country. There are seven productions in the group—"The Glorious Fool," "The Man With Two Mothers," "His Back Against the Wall," "Watch Your Step," "Doubling for Romeo," "The Wall Flower" and "Grand Larceny."

Goldwyn's Italian spectacle, "Theodora," is released with the group but is not included in it as it is a Special.

The group includes three pictures of commanding importance in "Grand Larceny," "The Wall Flower" and "Doubling for Romeo" all of which rank with Goldwyn's big productions. "Grand Larceny" is a society drama written by Albert Payson Terhune and directed by Wallace Worsley with two newcomers in Goldwyn's players featured—Claire Windsor and Elliott Dexter, one of the screen's most popular and gifted leading men. The story concerns the theft of a man's wife by his friend and the spiritual havoc that resulted from the husband's warning, "Remember that a woman who can be stolen from one man can be stolen from another."

"The Wallflower" is another one of Rupert Hughes deft, humorous and penetrating studies of everyday American life with its mingling of tragedy and comedy. The author directed the picture. Colleen Moore is featured.

"Doubling for Romeo," starring Will Rogers, is extravaganza of the highest type. Starting out as a western comedy, it soon travels to Hollywood and becomes a burlesque on the "movies" and those who make them; it then retrogrades several centuries to the Venice of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" and stages a humorous take-off on that great tragedy. Clarence G. Badger directed. In the cast are Sylvia Breamer and Sydney Ainsworth.

"Watch Your Step" is Julien Josephson's first original screen story for Goldwyn, a tale of small town life told with this author's understanding of small town characters and humors. William Beaudine directed the picture. Cullen Landis is featured while youthful Patsy Ruth Miller acts opposite him.

"His Back Against the Wall," by John Frederick, directed by Rowland V. Lee, is a new kind of western picture, depicting the adventures, mostly humorous, of a New York tailor's helper in the woolly if no longer wild west. Raymond Hatton, all around character actor, does a splendid piece of work in the picture.

"The Man With Two Mothers" is Alice Duer Miller's first original screen story and is the tale of a young Irishman whose uncle's widow had him come on to New York to become his heir. Mary Alden as the real mother, Cullen Landis as the young Irishman and Sylvia Breamer as his sweetheart are the featured players. Paul Bern, now Goldwyn's editor-in-chief, directed it.

"The Glorious Fool" is the first story Mary Robert Rhinehart ever wrote directly for the screen. Richard Dix and Helene Chadwick are featured. E. Mason Hopper directed. It is a romantic comedy.

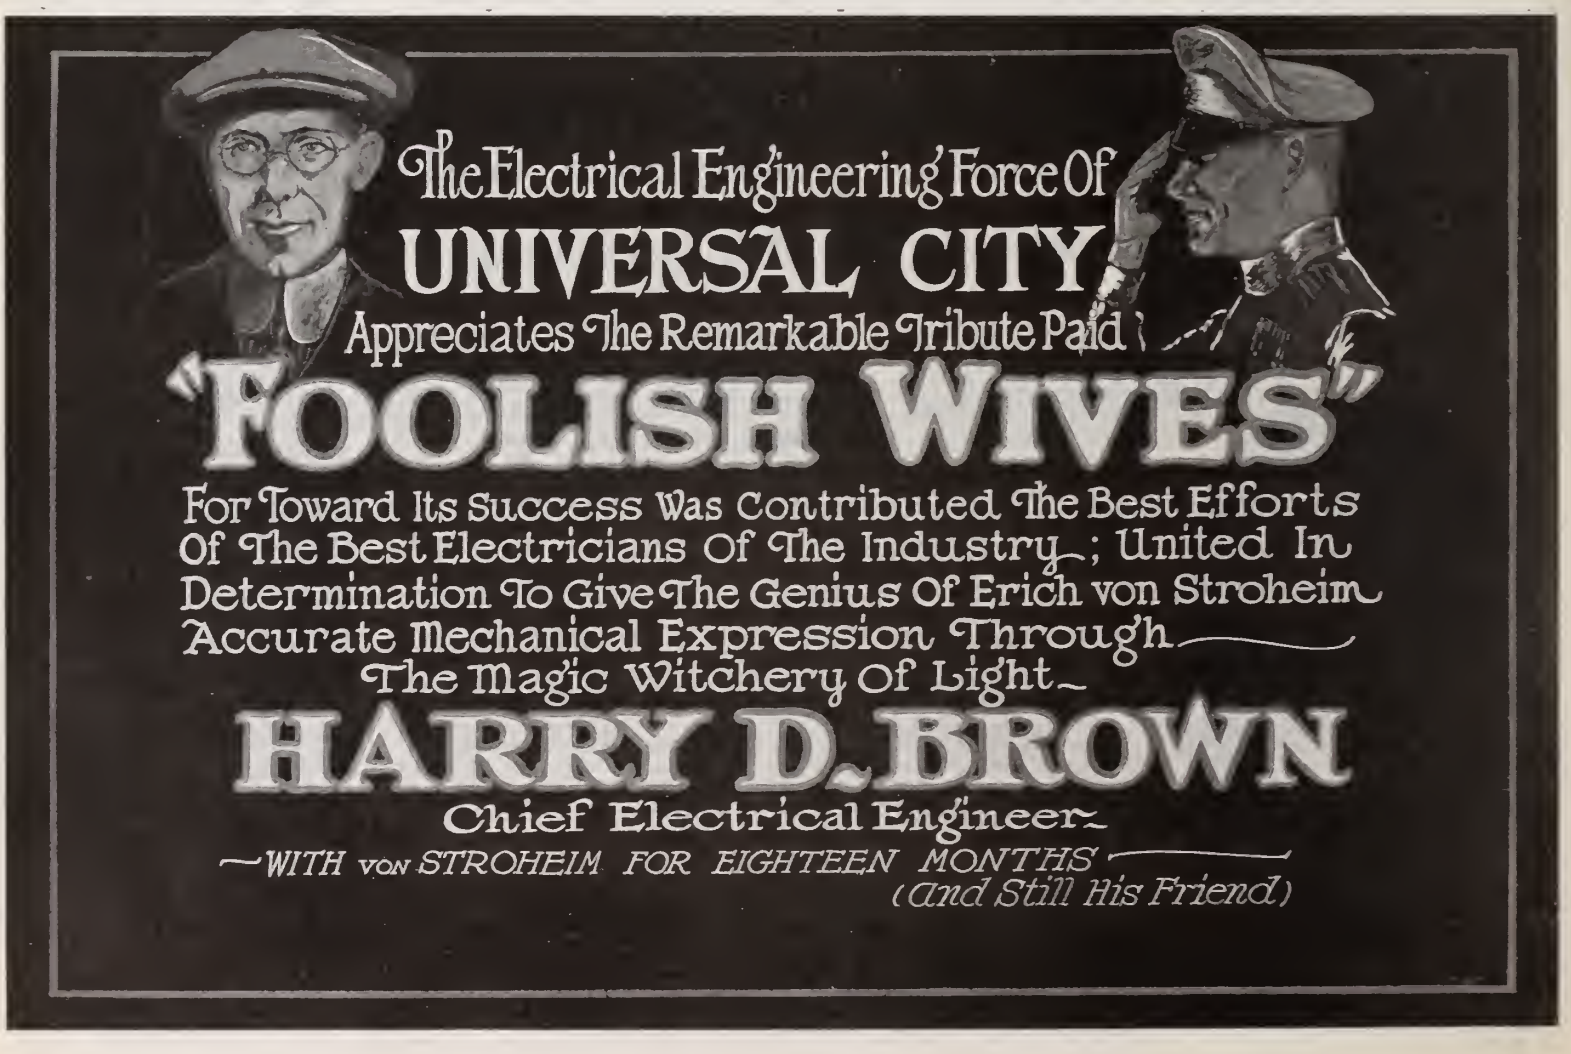
Praise for Rothacker's Work on "Rosary"

Twice on the same picture the same day!

Telegram from Sam Rork to Watterson R. Rothacker: "Have just seen premier The Rosary at Imperial Theatre (San Francisco) and want to thank you for wonderful print that will add 100 per cent. to value of picture."

And from Eugene Roth: "Selig-Rork's splendid feature 'The Rosary,' had its premier opening at our Imperial Theatre to-day. Packed houses prevailed and picture highly praised. We want to take this occasion to congratulate you on the laboratory work which shows on the screen a remarkable clearness and depth typical of your usual high quality. Again we say more power to you."

Paramount Starting on Three New Pictures



MONDAY, February 6, is the starting date for for two new Paramount production, Wallace Reid in "The Dictator," and Jack Holt and Bebe Daniels in "Val of Paradise." James Cruze will direct Reid in "The Dictator," which Walter Woods adapted from the stage comedy made famous by Willie Collier. Lila Lee will have the feminine lead.

The Jack Holt-Bebe Daniels starring picture is by Vingie E. Roe, who also wrote the story, "Tharon of Lost Valley," which has just been filmed tentatively under that title with Dorothy Dalton in the stellar role. The scenario is by Will M. Ritchey and Joseph Henabery will direct.

On or about the same date Thomas Meighan will start work in "Our Leading Citizen," by George Ade, adapted by Waldemar Young. Lois Wilson will be Mr. Meighan's leading woman and Alfred Green will direct.

Illness Suspends Production of 'Sonny"

Owing to the illness of Director Henry King, the filming of George Hobart's "Sonny," in which Inspiration Pictures will star Richard Barthelmess, has been suspended. Mr. King is suffering from the flu.

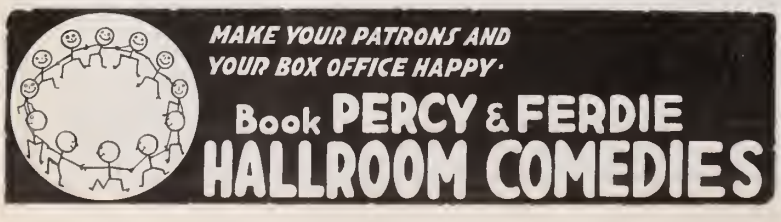
Selznick Has Innovation

Celebrities of Former Days to Be Seen Again in Selznick News Reel

FOLLOWING upon its introduction into the news reel of the striking newspaper type of captions, which brought forth such favorable comment from exhibitors, public and the press, the Selznick News has again brought something new to the screen by the inauguration of its "What They Are Doing Now" department which features famous celebrities of more or less bygone days who, though still well known and pleasantly remembered by the general public, have been somewhat overlooked in the general march of events.

In this connection the Selznick News has brought back into the public eye such famous figures as Ex-World's champion boxers "Jim" Jeffries, now a farmer, and "Battling" Nelson, now mayor of Hedgewich, Ill.; the celebrated Dr. Cook, "discover" of the North Pole. Ex-Tennis champion Maurice McLaughlin.

In the current issue Selznick News presents Ted Meredith, former Olympic champion runner, who is today employed on the New York Sun as a reporter; Josephus Daniels, once a member of President Wilson's cabinet as Secretary of the Navy, but now returned to his newspaper at Raleigh, N. C., and Charles Brickley, rated in the hey-day of his sporting career as one of the greatest football players that ever lived.



"What They Are Doing Now" will be a regular feature of the Selznick News and many interesting personalities are scheduled to appear in each issue.

"Island Wives" Completed

Vitagraph's Production Starring Corinne Griffith Set for March

"ISLAND Wives," Vitagraph's spectacular production of life in the South Seas, in which Corinne Griffith has the star role, has assumed its final form. For several weeks past, ever since the last shots arrived by special messenger from Florida, the editorial staff at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studios has been at work cutting and titling this stirring photodrama of tropic passion and true love. The result of their industry is one of the most artistically finished films ever made. All those who have seen the advance showings for the studio forces and the salesmen are distinctly enthusiastic over the production and predict a smashing success for it. The release date for "Island Wives" is fixed for early in March.

All the exterior scenes for the colorful picture were made in Florida, on the coast about four miles south of Miami. The gigantic palms rising sheer straight up like the masts of a ship, the tropic profusion of foliage, and the long spread of sandy beaches add a pictorial excellence to this production, which it would be almost impossible to surpass.

"Hail the Woman" Popular

More Than 30 Houses Book Ince Special for First National Week

MORE than thirty theatres in widely scattered sections of the country have already reported to the First National home office their intention of running "Hail the Woman," Thomas H. Ince's special production, during First National Anniversary Week.

It is estimated on a basis of reports already received that every print of "Hail the Woman" in the First National branches will be at work every day during First National Week.

This record is set despite the fact that "Hail the Woman" has had its premier in many of the large key cities. Including the big circuits, it has already been released by Skorus Bros., playing day and day in the New Grand Central theatre and the West End Lyric theatre, St. Louis, Mo., Rubin & Finklestein playing day and day at the Capitol theatre, St. Paul, Minn., and State theatre, Minneapolis, Minn.; the Strand theatre, New York City; the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, Calif.; the Mission theatre, Los Angeles, Calif.; the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.; and Kunsky's Adams theatre, Detroit, Mich.

Willard C. Patterson has booked "Hail the Woman" for First National Week at the Metropolitan theatre, Atlanta, Ga., and the Louisville premier will be at the Alamo theatre during that week.

A list of other houses which will play "Hail the Woman" during that week include: Madison Circle, Forest Park, Ill.; Vernon, Chicago, Ill.; Fern, New Orleans, La.; Trianon, Birmingham, Ala.; Regent, Chicago, Ill.; Rex, Chicago, Ill.; Oakley, Chicago, Ill.; Paulina, Chicago, Ill.; Plaza, Chicago, Ill.; Clarmont, Chicago, Ill.; Perry, Hazard, Ky.; Paramount, Miami, Fla.; Burns, Colorado Springs, Colorado; Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.; Thailia, Chicago, Ill.; Brighton Park, Chicago, Ill.; Plaissance, Chicago, Ill.; Karlor, Chicago; Ill.; Tiffin, Chicago, Ill.; Avon, Chicago, Ill.; Standard, Chicago, Ill.; Virginia, Chicago, Ill.; Crescent, Chicago, Ill.; Strand, Emporia, Kans.; Lagoon, Minneapolis, Minn.; Princess, Minneapolis, Minn.; Princess, Mt. Doro, Fla.; and Opera House, Tucson, Ariz.

New Series for Assd. Exhibs

Florence Vidor to Star in Series of Films; First Release March 5

THE announcement that Florence Vidor would appear in a series of feature productions for Associated Exhibitors has been supplemented by a statement from that company to the effect that her first feature, entitled "Woman Wake Up," has been scheduled for release on March 5th.

Charles Meredith and Louis Calhern support Florence Vidor who, naturally, is the star of the production. It was directed by Marcus Harrison, from the story by Ben Moore Clay which was scenariozed by G. B. Manly.

"Woman Wake Up" is said to be of decided audience appeal because of its exquisite settings and the delightful manner in which its dramatic theme is said to be handled. It is a production which tackles the misunderstandings of the first year after marriage, when two young people discover that after all they both have their individual interests and inclinations, and which sometimes seriously interfere with the business of being happy though married. It is further affirmed that "Woman Wake Up" is of striking entertainment value, because the dramatic moments of such a plot are kept subsidiary to its humor and cleverly amusing treatment, which makes it at all times a brilliant and thoroughly enjoyable offering.

The title "Woman Wake Up" is suggested by the scheme employed by Florence Vidor, as the young wife, to bring her trifling husband back into complete accord with the ideals of marital loyalty and contentment when he, feigning business, doesn't come home for dinner, on the occasion of their first anniversary, she promptly retaliates by good-naturedly forcing her husband's best friend to take her to the same gay restaurant where her husband is dining with another girl. The subsequent situation is said to be cleverly explained by two of the subtitles, which state that "A wife really never knows her husband until she sees him with another woman,' and "A husband's moral code is never so strict as when his wife steals some of his own stuff." As the story develops, the young wife finds the lesson which she had intended for her husband becoming very involved and, at the climax, only her false declaration of love for the other man saves him from her husband's anger.

Program Picture Doomed Says Scenario Editor

Paul Bern, Goldwyn scenario editor, who has just returned to the Culver City studios after a month's conference with executive officials in New York, declares that "the day of the program picture is gone forever."

"Because of conditions in the industry, every production, in order to be successful, must be a 'special' in the true sense of the word," said Mr. Bern. The public is shopping very carefully for its entertainment these days.

The scenario editor expressed the belief that this attitude on the part of the public would undoubtedly bring about better pictures, as only superior productions can survive under the new conditions.

3 Christie Comedies for Early Release

THREE new Christie Comedies which will be released soon by Educational provide a good illustration of Christie's system of alternating stars and directors, thus bringing the work of the producer to the highest standard.

Two of these pictures have just been completed, while the third is nearing completion at the Christie Studio. Bobby Vernon, whose latest picture is "Hokus Pokus," is working in the unfinished comedy called "'Tis the Bull." Under the direction of Harold Beaudine, this comedy is being produced in considerable magnitude, with a complete Mexican bull ring, Mexican streets, etc., all built at the Christie studio to carry out the atmosphere. Vernon is deriving much fun out of a situation in which, to win a Spanish girl, he has to go through with his friend's bluff that he is America's greatest bull fighter.

The two other pictures of the trio will be released before "'Tis the Bull." They are "'Twas Ever Thus," featuring Viora Daniel, and "Oh, Promise Me!" with Neal Burns in the featured role.

Jos. Schenck Discusses "Sex Pictures"

Producer Joseph M. Schenck, who is now starring Norma Talmadge in "The Duchess of Langeais" and who recently finished supervising the filming of Constance Talmadge's "The Divorcee," for First National release, has a few pertinent remarks to make regarding so-called "sex pictures."

"Very much has been said on the subject of sex in pictures," remarks Mr. Schenck, "but there exists a confusion in the minds of many regarding the definition of sex. A great many think that the word sex is synonymous with salaciousness. This is not true.

"The sex picture will continue to lead in presentation on the screen. But the salacious picture will not be tolerated.

"There is an appeal of sex in everything. The cleanest and most wholesome love story is based—cannot help being based—on the attraction between opposite sexes, "the love of a man for a maid." The very word itself and everything that goes on upon it has sex as a foundation. But it is not necessary to treat the appeal of sex in a vulgar or obscene way."

French Dancer Cast for Big Role in Fox Film

Paulette Duval, French dancer, who played Poppea in "Nero," which J. Gordon Edwards recently finished in Rome for William Fox, is to have a prominent part in "Mary Queen of Scots," when Fox completes abroad his third big production for next season.

Fox Assembles Strong Casts

Fine Line-Up of Stage and Screen Talent in Productions Under Way

SOME of the best casts, generally, ever assembled in motion pictures appear in various productions now under way in the William Fox studios in New York and in Hollywood.

The company of Dustin Farnum, making "Iron to Gold" on the West Coast, is a sample of the character of players now being engaged by Fox. His leading lady is Marguerite Marsh, known to her friends as "Lovie" Marsh. She is a sister of Mae Marsh. She went to the coast with the idea of forming her own company, but the Fox offer came along and she accepted it. Frank Cameron, the veteran actor, who was Trampas to Mr. Farnum in the original "Virginians" company, is another member of the cast. Also in the company is Lionel Belmore, well known stage and screen character actor.

Playing with Charles Jones is Mae Busch, formerly leading woman with Eddie Foy, and an old favorite at Weber and Fields'. Robert Daly, brother of the late Pete Daly, and a vaudeville headliner, has a prominent part in the Jones production.

Tom Mix has a new leading lady in Patsy Ruth Miller, who has come rapidly to the front in the last two years. Miss Miller has appeared in some of the biggest productions made on the coast.

With Shirley Mason is Edwin Stevens, long among the best known actors of the stage, and Aggie Herring, former leading woman in prominent stock companies. Miss Mason's leading man is John Herron, who has appeared in a number of productions.

Maurice Flynn has in his support Lewis Stone, who has been seen in such big successes as "The River's End," "Man's Desire" and "Held By the Enemy."

In the East Harry Millarde is making a big special with Charles Richman, the noted actor—at one time a member of Augustin Daly's stock company and leading man for Ada Rehan and Mary Mannering. Mr. Richman has starred under the direction of David Belasco William Brady and the Shuberts.

"Jane Eyre" Crowds Houses

Excellent Reports on Hodkinson Picture from First Run Theatres

INDICATIONS that the Hugo Ballin production of "Jane Eyre," based on the novel by Charlotte Bronte and released by W. W. Hodkinson, will establish new high marks for gross earnings on costume productions are contained in statements issued this week by the managements of the Sheridan Theatre, in New York and Barbee's Loop Theatre in Chicago, where "Jane Eyre" last week completed first-run showings.

Following the engagement of "Jane Eyre" at the Sheridan in New York, which resulted in one of the biggest week's receipts in the history of the house. Edwin T. Emery, managing director of the Sheridan, declared that the production was a wonderful success both from an artistic and financial standpoint, reports Hodkinson.

"Our business increased each night," said Mr. Emery, "the comments on the picture were unusually good and as a really high class feature it ranks above many of the so-called 'specials.' The charm and touch that Mr. Ballin has put into the picture will enhance its value to all patrons of the silent drama who admire things that are well done."

A wire from W. S. Barbee, managing director of Barbee's Loop Theatre in Chicago said the picture was a great business getter.

Wider Bookings for Century Comedies

CENTURY salesmen have compiled records showing that there have been more new Century comedy bookings during the last three months than ever before.

"By careful examination of sales records," says Julius Stern, president of Century Film Corporation, "I have found that more than 90 per cent of new Century comedy users have continued to book our product. We find that our comedies featuring Baby Peggy, Lee Moran, Harry Sweet, and Brownie, the Century Wonder Dog, are replacing many comedy products which heretofore are supposed to have a monopoly in first run houses.

"The latest Moran comedies, notably 'The Straphanger' which was recently shown on Broadway, have been booked in almost all the key cities of the country. Where 'The Straphanger' has played, it has been received with as much if not more enthusiasm than was accorded to it in New York."

"The Dust Flower" to Be Ready Soon

"The Dust Flower," Goldwyn's picturization of Basil King's new novel of that title—and the first picture since "Earthbound"—is in the final stages of preparation at the Culver City studios.

Photography was completed a short time ago and the cutting, editing and titling is progressing. "The Dust Flower" was written originally for the screen, but the author decided to withhold production until he had turned the story into novel form. It was published serially in Good Housekeeping Magazine, beginning with the issue for September 1921. It will be brought out in book form by Harper Bros. next autumn.

Rowland V. Lee directed the production. Helen Chadwick and James Rennie have the leading roles in "The Dust Flower," but the cast is an all-star one, the six leading roles being interpreted by the two players mentioned above, by Claude Gillingwater, Mona Kingsley, Edward Peil and George Periolat. The continuity was prepared by Charles Kenyon in association with Basil King.

Marie Osborne Features for Pathe Playlets

Three features starring Baby Marie Osborne are to be revived by Pathe in the form of Pathe Playlets. The first feature, "Little Mary Sunshine," raised the young actress to the stellar ranks. It was directed by Henry King, who also played the leading male role. The second playlet is entitled "Shadows and Sunshine" and was directed by Henry King from a story by Daniel F. Whitcomb. The third of the Pathe releases is "Told At Twilight," in which the baby star is featured again under the direction of Mr. King.

Pathe-Roach Agreement

Pathe Signs Contract Covering Entire Product of Hal Roach Studios

PATHE announces the signing of a new contract with Hal Roach covering the entire product of the Hal Roach Studios, including weekly comedy releases for a period of three years. This arrangement, completed during the producer's recent visit to New York, Pathe regards as making their position in the screen comedy field impregnable. The new long term contract with Harold Lloyd, already announced, enables Pathe to continue to provide exhibitors with comedy features which have become established as fully the equal in drawing power to any other class of features obtainable. The superior program value of the Hal Roach comedies featuring "Snub" Pollard and other of the Roach comedies put out by Pathe has long been conceded by exhibitors everywhere. The new contract, it is explained, will still further encourage artistic and profitable evolution of this important line of attractions.

In addition to the list of Pollard releases called for by the terms of the new contract, there will be one-reelers featuring Paul Parrott—a type of laugh-making production which already has made its way in the esteem of motion picture patrons—and a new departure in screen comedy production, for which Mr. Roach professed high expectations. These latter are comedies featuring trained domestic animals in realistic action with children.

One of these animals—a highly trained pony—made its debut with a baby girl in a recent comedy with Paul Parrott, with happy results. In discussing his animal and kiddie comedy plans with Pathe people, Mr. Roach said that for some time past he had been accumulating a managerie of domestic animal actors on the Roach lot, such as a pony, a mule, a bull dog, three goats and a flock of ducks and chickens. These were being handled by one of the most proficient animal trainers in the United States, with results really marvelous. Their comic action, especially in combination with natural and ingenuous characterizations by children, was surprisingly effective, Mr. Roach said, and was resulting in new and very diverting inventions on the part of scenario writers.

Short Subject Program in Small Town

Big specials are not the only pictures which make to-day, according to S. E. Baxley, manager of the Star Theatre in Arcadia, Fla. In a letter to the branch manager of the Educational Exchange in Atlanta, Ga., Mr. Baxley states that he pleased his audiences and did big business with a mixed short-reel program consisting of the Selig-Rork drama. "The Northern Trail," "Kinograms," and a Larry Semon Comedy, "The Bell Hop."

Thrills in R-C Attractions

Dramatic Moments and Spectacular Effects in R-C's Coming Releases

BIG dramatic thrills and spectacular episodes feature an important group of forthcoming R-C attractions which have been designed for direct box office appeal among all classes of patronage. Another outstanding feature of these productions, according to a statement from the R-C organization is their adaptability to advertising and exploitation on a big scale—a factor the smart exhibitor is regarding as of the utmost importance at the present time.

A series of strong box-office angles is developed in William Christy Cabanne's big special "Beyond the Rainbow." The story is packed with mystery, drama and no little humor, but the big magnet is the cast. It embraces Helen Ware, Lillian "Billie" Dove, Virginia Lee, Rose Coghlan, Clara Bos, Diana Allen, Marguerite Courtot, James Harrison, William Tooker, Harry Morey, Edmund Breese, George Fawcett, Huntly Gordon, Russell Francis Griffin and Walter Miller.

"The Vermillion Pencil" is to be Sessue Hayakawa's next starring vehicle. The climax comes in this gripping story by Homer Lea when a volcano erupts and sends its molten stream of lava down upon a Chinese village. While the volcano erupts an earthquake rocks the surrounding country and the resultant thrills are said to be quite enough for one evening. In addition to the thrill scenes "The Vermillion Pencil" is based upon a most engrossing story, it is reported. Supporting Mr. Hayakawa are Bessie Love and Ann May, who typify to a nicety the whimsical type of Chinese maiden for which the story calls.

"The Call of Home," created by L. J. Gasnier at the Hollywood Studios has at least three big thrill scenes. Of chief importance among thrilling scenes is the big flood episode in which a mountain stream overruns its banks and spreads death and destruction for miles about. A huge dam is shattered by the onrush of millions of tons of swirling water and the hero, in the person of Ramsey Wallace, is catapulted off the structure and into the torrent, to be gorne downstream among the jagged rocks. These scenes were filmed in the valley of the Colorado river when that stream swollen by rains, had risen above its banks.

"Little Minister" Popular in Portland, Ore.

Paramount's Portland, Ore., Exchange reports to the home office that the public demand for the Penrhyn Stanlaws production "The Little Minister," starring Betty Compson, has been so great in that city, where it has been playing the Columbia Theatre, that the Columbia management has been forced to extend the engagement another week.

Vitagraph Gets Rights to French Picture

VITAGRAPH has acquired the American rights to a big French production, entitled "The Sheik's Wife." The picture, according to the Vitagraph statement, was actually filmed in Algeria and presents some striking Sahara Desert scenes and picturesque ruins of an ancient temple.

The leading role was played by Marcel Vibert of the Comedie Francaise. Emmy Lynn appears in the leading female role. The picture has already been shown in France, and is now commanding wide attention in England, according to the Vitagraph statement.

Goldwyn Feature for St. Patrick's Day

BECAUSE of its Irish humor, Goldwyn has decided that the week within which falls St. Patrick's Day was just the right time for playing Rupert Hughes' latest photoplay "Come On Over." This is the picture tentatively known as "Sent for Out" and "Darlin'." The final title is "Come On Over."

Alfred Green directed the picture and he was given a great cast to work with, Colleen Moore and Ralph Graves having the featured roles of the Irish lad who comes to this country, leaving his sweetheart behind, and the girl who follows him over before he is able to send for her.

Others in the cast are J. Farrel MacDonald, Kate Price, James Marcus, Kathleen O'Connor, Florence Drew, Harold Holland, Mary Warren, Elinor Hancock, Monti Collins, C. E. Mason and C. B. Leasure.

Statement on "Robinson Crusoe"

Laemmle Wishes to Set Trade Right on Situation

IN order that there shall be a thorough understanding of a situation which has been the subject of rumor and speculation for the last few weeks in the trade, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has issued a frank statement in regard to the forthcoming Universal serial, "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe" as it affects his former serial star, Eddie Polo. Mr. Laemmle's statement is as follows:

"I don't believe in keeping information under my hat which will be of value to moving picture exhibitors. The statement which I am now making may hurt me and it may not, but I am making it in the belief that a full knowledge of the situation will help every exhibitor in the United States who runs serials.

"This statement is about my former star, Eddie Polo, and the serial which I am about to release under the title, "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe." Recently Eddie Polo and the Universal came to the parting of the ways. Mr. Polo asked for his release and we gave it to him. At the time of this parting, Universal had made all of its plans to make a serial entitled "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe." All of these plans were carefully gone over with Mr. Polo because we intended to star him in the serial. The continuities and synopses of some of the episodes were made and Mr. Polo was enthusiastic about the possibilities of the serial for him. So enthusiastic, in fact, that when he had obtained his realease he immediately started to produce a Robinson Crusoe serial with his own organization.

"We are now informed that he has changed the title of his picture, but that the story which he intends to sell on the state rights' market has not been changed. We are going ahead with our "Adventures of Robinson Crusoe" and have engaged Mr. Harry Myers to play the part of Robinson Crusoe, and Noble Johnson to play the part of Friday. I feel that we have made an excellent selection and that Mr. Myers' widely known capabilities will be a tremendous asset to the character of Robinson Crusoe and to the value of the serial itself.

"I feel, however, that it is only just and proper that I notify the serial exhibitors of the United States that there probably will be two Crusoe serials on the market. I make this statement without any prejudise. Those who like Eddie Polo will be gElad to know it, and those who have come to appreciate the modern requirements of serial stories such as Universal is now producing after months of research, the careful reconstruction of period properties, and the kind of exploitation for which Universal is noted, will also be glad to have this knowledge which I am imparting."

Sid Grauman Lauds Baby Peggy's "Chums"

In a letter to the Los Angeles exchange, manager for Universal, Sid Grauman expressed his approval of Baby Peggy's picture "Chums" for Century Film Corporation as follows:

"Our exhibition of the comedy 'Chums' in which Baby Peggy and Brownie are featured at the Grauman million dollar theatre during the week of January 16th proves more than ever the value of showing wholesome motion pictures.

"That 'Chums' won the appreciation of the audiences which viewed it cannot be questioned. This appreciation is reflected unanimously in the opinion of the newspaper critics who reviewed the film.

"The screens of the Grauman Theatre will always be open for motion pictures which provide such desirable clean entertainment."

Teaser Paper Issued on "The Ruling Passion"

All the paper made for and issued with "The Ruling Passion," second of the George Arliss film productions for United Artists Corporation which had its initial showing in Broadway at the Strand Theatre last Sunday (Jan. 22) is of a teaser nature.

The twenty-four sheet merely announces the name of the star and the title of the feature and then shows a large picture of Arliss, one hand buried in a heap of gold, the other clutching a handful of struggling humanity, while before him stands a beautiful young woman, thus symbolizing Love, Wealth and Power as the most general types of "ruling passions."

In the one, three and six sheets are scenes from stills of the production all signifying youth, love, romance and adventure. The color scheme of all the paper is worked out from a background of dark blue, and is highly decorative in effect.

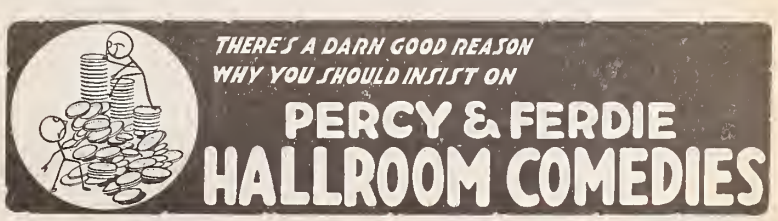
Fox Anniversary Week Success

More Than 20,000 Theatre-Owners Participate

MORE than twenty thousand exhibitors in twelve nations combined their resources and efforts in the celebration of the eighteenth anniversary of the entrance of William Fox into the motion picture industry and the ninth birthday of Fox Film Corporation, during the week of January 29 to February 4, inclusive, declares a statement just received from the Fox headquarters.

At the New York offices of the company hundreds of letters, wires, cablegrams and radio messages have been received from every section of the globe reporting the excellence of business experienced by the great numbers of showmen presenting Fox features in their theatres. The unanimously favorable reports indicate the wide extent of the prosperity which the anniversary week brought to the cinema houses in the United States, England, France, Canada, China, Siam, South America, Scandinavia, the Dutch East Indies, the principalities of the Federated Malay States, Australia, and the Straights Settlement.

According to reports from various distributing exchanges throughout the world, Fox Anniversary Week celebration emptied the valuts of prints. The solid seven-day run of Fox features was as widespread in foreign countries as it was in America (including Canada). In China and Siam, where more than 100 theatres regularly show Fox productions, the exhibitors ran 100 per cent during the birthday week: Similar reports arrive from Java and the Straits Settlement and the Dutch East Indies.



Unusual advertising and exploitation campaigns preceded the week of Fox presentations in all the theatres. In many instances exhibitors with small neighborhood houses who have indulged in very limited advertising appropriations in the past, gave unusual importance to their display space in newspapers and other advertising media during the week. Hundreds of houses doubled their ordinary advertising schedules and publicized their week's program with alaborate street bally-hoo effects, the wide distribution of large circus heralds, decoration of the most prominent store windows in their communities, special matinees and children's parties.

Mayors in several cities in the United States opened the week of Fox pictures with an address to the theatre audience. Boy Scouts patrols in many cities gave parades in collaboration with the theatre proprietors and attracted the attention of entire populations. Newspapers throughout the world devoted front-page space to the story of Mr. Fox's rapid rise to the pre-eminence he now enjoys. Magazines contained lengthy articles on the subject.

Business in the United States averaged about 250 per cent above normal, according to early statistics compiled by the Fox contract department. That the figure will rise above even this great showing is indicated by a number of regional reports that have trailed in at the last moment and were not included in the original count. It is predicted by the Fox officials that final compilations will show that wherever showmen exhibited a full week of Fox Anniversary features their gross business was greater than that of any previous week in the history of their houses. This statement is made on the authority of figures and is not the result of optimism merely, declares the report from the Fox offices.

Mayor Van Nort of Paterson, N. J., attended the opening performance of Fox Anniversary Week at the American Theatre. A capacity house greeted the city's chief executive, who delivered a short address from the stage praising William Fox for his efforts which have enabled the motion picture industry to achieve the position which it now occupies. The total attendance at the American Theatre, according to written report, was the largest for any week on record.

At Newark, N. J., Mayor Archibald was escorted to the Terminal Theatre, where Fox Week was elaborately celebrated, by a regiment of the Boys Patrol, a famous boys' organization. He pressed an electric signal which officially opened the anniversary in several hundred theatres in the East. The mayor read a telegram from Tom Mix, the Fox star, who is an honorary president of the national organization of the Boys Patrol. The wire expressed the star's regret for his absence from the Newark youths' celebration in connection with Fox Week.

Old Times Lived Again in "The Barnstormer"

It is back to the kerosene circuit for Charles Ray in "The Barnstormer," his current First National release, in which Arthur S. Kane presents the star. This quaint comedy picture affords the public a glimpse "back stage," at a time when many a popular actor of the present day was having his humble beginnings. Long before he had a thought of playing before the camera, before, indeed, he was fairly launched as a player in the spoken drama, Ray had a taste of barnstorming in one-night stands in California and Arizona.

Not only Ray but almost every member of his cast has an "It happened to Me" part in the picture. Thus, Wilfred Lucas, the leading man in the barnstorming troupe which is represented, occupied that very position many years. Florence Oberle well knows from experience just what stage life is. Lionel Belmore, the company manager in the picture, was one of Sir Henry Irving's principal supporting characters several seasons. Gus Leonard, Lincoln Plumer, George Nichols and Blanche Rose are also experienced artists.

Photoplay Author Speaks at Private Showing

"A Man's Home," the big Selznick special, is the attraction at the Newark theatre, Newark N. J., the week beginning February 12. In connection with the engagement, the Newark theatre management, Monday morning, February 6, gave a private screening of the feature for club-women, ministers, and representatives of the press.

By special arrangement with the Selznick company Anna Steese Richardson, author of the photoplay, was in attendance at the showing and made an address on the subject of moving pictures, stressing many things of interest which had entered into the production of the big special which bears her name and that of Edmund Breese as authors.

Three Paramount Releases

Medford Production, Barrymore and May McAvoy Features, Feb. 12

AGAIN Paramount announces the simultaneous release of three productions, the George Melford production, "Moran of the Lady Letty," with Dorothy Dalton; the Cosmopolitan production, "Boomerang Bill," with Lionel Barrymore, and May McAvoy in the Realart picture, "A Homespun Vamp," all scheduled for release through Famous Players-Lasky Exchanges on February 12.

Rodolph Valentino plays opposite Dorothy Dalton in "Moran of the Lady Letty," which is from the sea story by the late Frank Morris. The adaptation was the work of Monte M. Katterjohn.

To obtain the realistic sea stuff Mr. Melford took his company to San Francisco and there worked for more than two months making scenes on board schooners and along the waterfront. The result, it is said, is that the scenes have a realism seldom equalled in screen productions of this character.

"Boomerang Bill," the Cosmopolitan picture in which Lionel Barrymore plays the leading role, is described as intensely dramatic. It is a crook story by Jack Boyle, well known to magazine writers as the author of the "Boston Blackie" stories. Doty Hobart wrote the scenario and Tom Terriss directed.

Mr. Barrymore has the role of a Chicago gunman who meets the girl of his heart in New York and decides to go straight for her sake. But to save the life of her invalid mother he commits his "last crooked job," is caught at it, and goes to prison for a long term.

Hector Turnbull is the author of "A Homespun Vamp," the Realart picture in which May McAvoy is starred. Harvey Thew wrote the scenario and Frank O'Connor directed. The tale is said to abound in homely country touches. Darrel Foss is Miss McAvoy's leading man and other roles are in the hands of Lincoln Stedman, Josephine Crowell, Charles Ogle, Guy Oliver, Helen Dunbar and Kathleen Kirkham.

Heavy First Nat'l Bookings

Simultaneous Showings for Four First Nat'l Pictures in Frisco

THE demand for entertainment bearing the First National trademark has resulted in exceptionally heavy bookings of these productions on the Pacific Coast, according to an announcement made this week by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

During the week of Jan. 22, four First National attractions opened simultaneously at the larger San Francisco theatres, "Wedding Bells" at the Tivoli; "The Silent Call" at the California; "My Boy" at the Cranada; and "The Rosary" at the Imperial. A fortnight previous two others began a week's run at the same time, and both were held over for a second week. Following closely on the six-week run of "Molly O" at the Mission theatre in Los Angeles, eight other First National attractions are being shown or are scheduled for presentation in the film capital.

Last week the Kinema presented Hope Hampton in "Star Dust," her greatest picture. "Star Dust" was given a lavish campaign of advertising and exploitation such as but few great pictures have had in Los Angeles.

"Hail the Woman" continues its record-breaking at the Mission Theatre and probably will remain there for several weeks more, owing to the hit this Ince drama has scored.

The attraction at the Kinema during the week beginning Feb. 4th was Constance Talmadge in "Woman's Place." During the same week at Miller's Theatre, H. O. Davis' "The Silent Call," featuring "Strongheart," the half-wolf half-dog, was presented.

Freckles Barry in Marshall Neilan's "Penrod" will be the attraction at the Kinema during the week beginning February 11th.

The week of February 18th will be celebrated throughout the country as "First National Week," an anniversary which is being given the support of about sixty of the biggest stars and producers in the Independent Screen Artists' Guild. During that week four First National attractions will be presented in local theatres.

At the Kinema John M. Stahl's "The Song of Life" probably will be the attraction. At the Alhambra Mack Sennett's "Molly O" will continue the unprecedented run it began at the Mission Theatre. At Clune's "The Invisible Fear" will be the attraction while at Loew's State Theatre Katherine MacDonald will be seen in "Stranger Than Fiction."

The Kinema will also exhibit during the last week in February and the first half of March "The Rosary" a Selig-Rork production, and Charles Ray's "R. S. V. P." At Loew's State Theatre Thomas H. Ince's "Love Never Dies" will be presented on March 19th.

Beauties Participate in Pathe Try-Out

Among the 250 girls in Charles Dillingham's Hippodrome show and his musical comedy, "Good Morning Dearie," the Pathe experts on screen beauty and athletic prowess expect to find one who approaches their ideal for work in serials. The screen try-outs began on February 1st on the Hippodrome stage, and will end there on Sunday afternoon, February 12th, before an invited audience. The one chosen will be awarded an immediate engagement, presumably in the cast which will support Charles Hutchison in his new serial.

A vivid thrill in "Yellow Men and Gold," a new Goldwyn release from the story by Gouverneur Morris

Photoplay Edition of "Burning Sands"

The Paramount publicity department has completed arrangements with the book publishing firm of Grosset and Dunlap for the publication of a special photoplay edition of "Burning Sands," the novel by Arthur Weigall, which is soon to be produced as a Paramount picture by George Melford, producer of "The Sheik." The photoplay edition will be issued simultaneously with the release of the picture. Dodd, Mead & Co., the original publishers of the book are now co-operating with Paramount to the extent of featuring the line, "Coming—a big Paramount Super-Special," in their advertising.

Arrangements have also been completed with the firm of E. P. Dutton for the photoplay edition of "Blood and Sand," novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, which John S. Robertson is shortly to produce for Paramount with Rodolph Valentino and May McAvoy in the leading roles.

Elinor Glyn Supervisor of "Beyond the Rocks"

Elinor Glyn, famous English author who gained a world-wide reputation through her novel, "Three Weeks," and who gained laurels in a new field through her authorship of "The Great Moment," Gloria Swanson's first starring picture for Paramount, has been officially named supervisor of "Beyond the Rocks," the new Gloria Swanson picture which she also wrote.

The official credit which Mrs. Glyn thus receives is a fitting recognition of her invaluable services in the filming of the present production.

SCREEN THE YEAR IN PICTURES

THE movies threaten to become motion pictures. This is the alarming situation confronting those philistines of the "filium" industry who are beginning to realize that they can't make or understand anything but movies and that none of their movies brings in the big money almost any old strip of celluloid was worth a few years ago. As they flounder about looking for the cause of their troubles, they are disturbed, it seems, by the fear that others are beginning to make and exhibit pictures which satisfy the public, but which go over their heads and lie outside the narrow field of their capabilities. Such pictures appear as a menace to them, of course, so, in accordance with the law of self-preservation, they seek to destroy them, but the only weapon they can lay hands on is that bogy-word of the motion picture business, "highbrow." They call everything that is beyond them "highbrow," and if any picture so condemned happens to be commercially unsuccessful, or yields only a modest profit on the money invested in it, they gloat over its misfortune and chorus, "You see, the public doesn't want that kind of stuff. It's too highbrow."

The true explanation of the picture's failure, in a majority of cases, is to be found in the fact that, although it is tastefully and sincerely done, it lacks the photodramatic quality which even intelligent people desire in their screen entertainment and which may legitimately be present in the most refined production; or, if the picture has this quality, it may fail as a box-office attraction because the people who would pay for and appreciate it have been driven away from the theatres by the prevailing movies of the day. The man or woman, for example, who went to see "Male and Female" because it was advertised as an adaptation of Barrie's "The Admirable Crichton," was not likely to take a chance on "Sentimental Tommy."

But those who make and exhibit the usual movies do not take these things into account. Instead, they seek to reassure themselves and terrify the timid by shouting "highbrow" at any picture that an intelligent person may be able to look up to.

Now, as a matter of fact, no one is asking for highbrow pictures; that is, pictures which require special, or even extensive, education on the part of spectators. What are wanted are pictures that people of ordinary intelligence can enjoy, photoplays, for instance, in which acceptable ideas have the benefit of generally logical and moderately imaginative treatment. And at the present time the chief need is for more invigorating treatment of the photodramatic subjects available. The common complaint of today is that so many acceptable stories are botched on the screen through inadequate acting and inexpressive, incomplete motion pictures. The vitality of any subject depends upon its treatment in whatever medium it may be presented. The most dramatic of plots, for example, loses its force on the stage in a clumsily constructed, poorly acted play. No poetic conception becomes poetry until it is embodied in poetic language. Likewise, a photoplay depends for its strength upon well-composed, expressive motion pictures, upon the fluency of its kinetic photography.

So, it is the photoplays that are most characteristically cinematographic, and at the same time acceptably motivated, that may be called truly significant, and to the number of such productions the year just ended has added more than any previous year of the motion picture's history. Taking only those photoplays which have come to Broadway in the last twelve months, one may make up quite an impressive list of significant works, which, though varying in degrees of excellence and suited to different tastes, are genuine motion pictures, in the main, and prophetic of the complete realization of beauty and expressiveness on the screen. Probably no two observers would select the same productions for such a list, and certainly no one is in a position to dogmatize about any selections he may make—there is too much room for intelligent difference of opinion to permit that—but any list may be suggestive, or at least it may serve to illustrate an observer's idea of the direction in which the screen can most profitably develop, and, therefore, for whatever it may be worth, the present writer nominates the following fifteen productions as the most important photoplays of 1921, the pictures being named in the order of their appearance on Broadway screens:

"The Kid," with and by Charlie Chaplin.
"The Old Swimmin' Hole," with Charles Ray, directed by Joseph De Grasse.
"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," directed by Rex Ingram.
"Sentimental Tommy," directed by John S. Robertson, with May McAvoy and Gareth Hughes.
"The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," with Werner Krauss, directed by Robert Wiene, with settings by Hermann Warm, Walter Reimann and Walter Rohrig.
"Deception," directed by Ernst Lubitsch, with Emil Jannings and Henny Porten.
"Gypsy Blood," directed by Ernst Lubitsch, with Pola Negri.
"The Golem," with Paul Wegener, also directed by Herr Wegener.
"The Conquering Power," directed by Rex Ingram, with Rudolph Valentino and Alice Terry.
"The Three Musketeers," with Douglas Fairbanks, directed by Fred Niblo.
"Little Lord Fauntleroy," with Mary Pickford, directed by Alfred E. Green and Jack Pickford.
"One Arabian Night," directed by Ernst Lubitsch, with Pola Negri and Herr Lubitsch.
"Hamlet," with Asta Nielsen, directed by Sven Gade.
"All for a Woman," with Emil Jannings and Werner Krauss, directed by Dimitri Buchowetzki.
"Vendetta," with Pola Negri and Emil Jannings, directed by George Jacoby.

In addition to these there were a number of photoplays which, while not so consistently significant as screen works, were yet sufficiently characterized by expressive motion pictures to claim a place in any record of the year's achievements. Some of them, it is true, suffered from serious shortcomings, yet each of them, for its special virtues, was good entertainment and an important contribution to the screen. Of such photoplays the present writer saw twelve which, in his opinion, ought to be mentioned. They were:

"The Love Light," with Mary Pickford, directed by Frances Marion.
"The Passion Flower," directed by Herbert Brenon, with Norma Talmadge.
"A Small Town Idol," directed by Earl Kenton, with Ben Turpin, produced by Mack Sennett.
"The Old Nest," by Rupert Hughes, directed by Reginald Barker.
"The Journey's End," directed by Hugo Ballin, with Mabel Ballin.
"Dangerous Curve Ahead," by Rupert Hughes, directed by E. Mason Hopper.
"Theodora," directed by Arturo Ambrosio.
"Woman's Place," by John Emerson and Anita Loos, with Constance Talmadge, directed by Victor Fleming.
"Doubling for Romeo," with Will Rogers, directed by Clarence Badger.
"The Lotus Eater," with John Barrymore, directed by Marshal Neilan.
"Our Mutual Friend," a Norwegian production.
"Miss Lulu Bett," directed by William De Mille, with Lois Wilson.

And besides these, there are several photoplays which have not been shown in any of the Broadway theatres, but which have been exhibited privately under the auspices of different individuals and organizations, and would undoubtedly go into the first of the foregoing groups if they had been qualified by regular release. There was, for example, Abel Gance's terrific "J'Accuse," which was shown last May at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, but was so emasculated before it reached the public screen under the title "I Accuse" that it must be counted as lost. Another French production, Louis Mercanton's "Miarka, the Daughter of the Bear," with Mme. Réjane in the leading rôle, which was shown under the auspices of the Commonwealth Centre at Town Hall in October, belongs among the leaders.

Pathe Negotiates Australasian Distribution

ALEC B. HELLMRICH, of Sydney, Australia, has taken over the distribution of the entire product of Pathe in Australasia for a period of three years under an exclusive contract just arranged by Arthur Rousseau, export manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

The terms of the deal make it one of the biggest ever recorded in the foreign film field, states Pathe, and insures the Pathe product greater exploitation than it has ever before received in the Antipodes. The product will be marketed on a co-operative basis, through an organization modeled along the lines of the Associated Exhibitors in this country.

Pathe was considering opening its own exchanges in this country, when it received a proposition from Mr. Hellmrich, who, in addition to being a pioneer in film distribution in Australia, has the confidence of exhibitors in his country that places him on an enviable plane.

Exploitation Ideas for "The Barnstormer"

Telling the story of a stage-struck youth, "The Barnstormer," Charles Ray's current release through First National, offers peculiar opportunities for effective exploitation at a minimum of expense to exhibitors.

Every town boasts its budding young Thespians who are certain they will draw the world to their feet when only they "get the chance." Arrange an "amateur night," the "night" consuming a half hour or an hour just previously to the screening of the feature, and invite the local geniuses to display their talents.

In towns where there are high schools it should be easy to interest their dramatic societies in such an entertainment, and where there are more than on such institution and the pictures shown several days, each school might have its own night, its society arranging and presenting the entire prologue.

In many communities the old-fashioned "speaking day" continues to be a regular feature of the grammar school week and each school has its prize orator, declaimer, recitationist, pianist and vocalist. This offers a chance for a tie-up also.

Praise "Turn to the Right"

N. Y. Critics Render Highly Favorable Verdict on Ingram's Special

THE New York newspaper critics gave Metro's "Turn to the Right" an unusual measure of praise following the opening presentation of that picture at the Lyric Theatre, New York City, on January 23:

"Go and see it," was in the opinion of Frank Vreeland, of the New York Herald, "the best criticism of 'Turn to the Right,'" and, although the other theatrical reviews varied from this phrasing, they expressed practically the same opinion.

The Evening Mail charges Rex Ingram with another success, when it says:

"Ingram has done it again. . . A new phase of this splendid director's ability. . . In 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse' he showed his mastery of spectacular production. In 'The Conquering Power,' his powers in delineating character and dramatic action; in 'Turn to the Right' he demonstrates his versatility by turning out an extremely good light comedy drama. . . A mighty good entertainment."

The Globe and the Evening World predicted another long career on the screen in New York, one as long as its stage life, which lasted 443 performances.

"One couldn't ask," remarks Don Allen in the Evening World, "for a better evening's entertainment than 'Turn to the Right' which started what by all rights should prove an all-season run at the Lyric Theatre last night. Everyone, that is about 95 per cent. of New York population, knows what a corking good speaky 'Turn to the Right' was, and how it ran on and on with always the S. R. O. sign doing yeoman service. Well, all we can say is that 'Turn to the Right' as a film is so far ahead of 'Turn to the Right' as a play that there is no basis for comparison."

And the Globe agrees, when R. W. Potter comments:

"We . . . predict a prosperous future for this picture."

Harriette Underhill, of the New York Tribune, said:

"Abounds in beauty . . . If you do not wish to renounce a career of crime do not go to see Mr. Ingram's picture, for you will learn that the only way to be truly happy is to have a home sweet home and live in it."

The Morning Telegraph's reviewer, Helen Rockwell, declares:

"The film is everything that one would expect it to be and even a trifle more because of the mother love."

Alan Dale, in the New York American, found that "it is impossible to resist the lure of this film." He further characterized it as "a well-made picture, with the . . . interest that bespeaks popularity."

Pathe's Feb. 19th Releases

"Hunting the Hawk," a Pathe Playlet, Heads Short-Subject Schedule

PATHE EXCHANGE, Inc., announces that an exceptional list of subjects have been scheduled for release the week of February 19th, headed by the next Pathe playlet, "Hunting the Hawk," starring William Courtenay and Marguerite Snow. The offering, now in three action-jammed reels, re-edited from its original five-reel feature length, was directed by one of America's foremost directors, George Fitzmaurice, and was written by George B. Seitz, the famous serial author-director-producer-star.

"The Island of Terror" is the eighth episode of "White Eagle," the new Pathe serial starring Ruth Roland. "The Big Idea" is the current reissued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd. The spectacled comedian appears as a clerk in an antique shop; Bebe Daniels is his sweetheart, the saucy cashier; and "Snub" Pollard plays his usual role of the hated rival.

"Rich Man, Poor Man" is the title of the latest Hal Roach comedy featuring the funniest comedians among the Roach staff of funmakers. "Paul" Parrot appears as a janitor at a fashionable hotel, and is wooed by Ethel Broadhurst, as an heiress, who is seeking a poor man for a husband. "Sunshine Sammy" is the second lieutenant janitor, and Mark Jones plays the role of the proprietor of the Hotel Gougem.

"The Dog and the Thief" is the current animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables." Pathe Review No. 143 presents a series of entertaining subjects headed by "The Jungle Harvest," showing the copra gatherers of the Philippine Islands at work with their water buffaloes. Other subjects included are: "Art by the Acre," a glimpse of the achievements of American landscape artistry; "When Daddy Comes Home," a Pathe Slow-Motion novelty of the children's hour and how Daddy entertains; "Here and There in the Zoo," the latest Hy Mayer Capitol Travelaugh; and "Teddy in Glazierland," the third of a series in which five-year-old Teddy adventures among the Alps.

Elaine Hammerstein on New Selznick Subject

Production work on the new Elaine Hammerstein release for the Selznick Pictures Corporation is being pushed under the supervision of Vice President Myron Selznick at the Selznick studios in East Forty-eight street, New York City. The story is by Cosmo Hamilton. Ralph Ince is directing. The title announced is "Reckless Youth." Niles Welch continues to appear as Miss Hammerstein's leading man. Huntley Gordon, Myrtle Stedman, Frank Currier, and Constance Bennett are prominent in the supporting cast.

"Four Horsemen" Back on Broadway

"THE FOUR HORSEMEN OF THE APOCALYPSE" returned to Broadway February 5, when this Rex Ingram screen production of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's novel, presented by Metro Pictures Corporation, opened at the Capitol theatre.

Two Rex Ingram pictures are now on Broadway at once. The young director's subsequent photoplay, "Turn to the Right," began its run at the Lyric theatre, January 23. It is a picturization of John Golden's stage hit of a few seasons ago, a play written by Winchell Smith and John E. Hazzard.

The return of "The Four Horsemen" is in response to a popular demand, states Metro. This picture was presented in New York last season, first at the Lyric and later at the Astor theatre, for a long period, and its termination was brought about only by the then existing shortage of playhouses suitable for a long-run attraction.

School Official Lauds Educational Films

After using a considerable number of single-reel pictures released by Educational in the public schools of Detroit, Edwin H. Reeder, supervisor of visual instruction in the schools of that city, has pronounced them of distinct merit and great value.

The pictures shown to the school children included releases from the Hudson's Bay Travel series, Robert C. Bruce Scenics Beautiful, Chester Screenics and pedagogical subjects.

"For two months," writes Mr. Reeder, "we have been using Educational Film Exchange pictures in the public schools of Detroit. These films have met with uniformly enthusiastic responses from both pupils and teachers. They have been used by forty teachers and shown to about 50,000 children. I am glad to commend them."

New Owen Moore Film "Sink or Swim"

"Sink or Swim" has been definitely chosen as the title for the forthcoming Selznick picture starring Owen Moore which has been widely heralded as the biggest production which the Selznick company has ever made. This announcement was made by Vice President Myron Selznick in charge of production, a day or two ago.

Late Feature and Short Subject Reviews

"Julius Caesar"

(Produced in Italy—Distributed by George Kleine)

THIS re-edited release does not need to be announced as Italian product. It is typical Italian in its spectacular scenes, in some of its photography, in the types that make up the cast. The life of Caesar, as history has handed it down, offers too much material to be expressed in one photoplay. This is the sole reason why this picture cannot hold the interest at a high pitch throughout. It embraces Caesar's domestic, political, and military life. On the other hand, it does offer genuine entertaining incident. For example, there is the scene of the murder of Caesar, closely following Shakespeare. It makes splendid screen drama. The old Roman senate is lavishly reproduced.

The picture starts with Caesar as a young man of twenty. It shows his unfortunate marriage to Cornelia, and his exile by Sulla. The action skips twenty years and the next sequence shows his struggle for political supremacy. The intricacies of the first Triumvirate and the quarrel with Cato are shown as clearly as possible. Then the hero is followed to Gaul where he wages his campaigns. Battle scenes play a large part in this sequence. There are hundreds before the camera in some scenes. Then comes Caesar's return to Rome, where he is acclaimed by the populace, although termed traitor by the Senate. He is afforded a "triumph" and there is another beautiful scene of spectacular magnificence. Finally comes the murder in the Senate and Marc Antony's funeral oration. The downfall of the plotters is not followed further. All this is excellently done.

The production is certainly of educational value as well as being entertainment. The role of Caesar is played by Anthony Novelli in a convincing fashion. Other players, especially those in smaller parts, overact, according to American standards. It is in six reels, and covers the life of Caesar from 80 B. C. to 44 B. C.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Should a Wife Work"

(J. W. Film Corp.-State Rights)

AFTER witnessing this picture for the best part of an hour and a half, the inquisitive nature of the title may not bring any response from the spectator, the reason being a profusion of confusing scenes. If this offering were re-edited, trimmed of its extraneous scenes, and some of the sequences put through the "re-take" mill, it might carry some convincing quality as a story. As it is at present there is revealed a deal of illogical action cluttered up with long drawn out scenes and a mass of captions. It is an involved story and being so complicated should have been told through bold strokes with detail entirely extracted. The spectator has a difficult time catching the gist of it. The theme purposes to tell that a woman is entitled to a career, but this idea isn't established until a wealth of introductory matter has slipped through the machine. There is contrast and abundant conflict but it takes a long time in getting started.

Two college chums enter the concert field, one to take up a career, the other, through generous impulses, to assist her struggling husband to keep the wolf from the door. The young inventor's employer attempts to compromise his wife through her repelling his advances. The story becomes highly involved as it develops that both husbands are lacking a single attribute of character. The inventor learns that his wife is supplying him with money. This piques him to the extent that he allows her to shift for herself, while the other becomes a worthless cad.

This modern social problem remains unanswered—principally because there is nothing tangible to grasp in the story. The production is not meritorious, there being samples of poor photography and the staging, considerably old-fashioned. The story seems forced, which discounts the apparent sincerity of the cast, which comprises capable players such as Walter McEwen, Louis Kimball, Stuart Robson and Edith Stockton. The title suggests exploitation possibilities and mentioning the cast will help a great deal. The picture, re-edited, has a chance to stand alone. Otherwise it should be presented on double feature day.—Length, 7 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Ranger's Reward"

(Two-Reel Western-Universal)

THIS is a vest pocket edition of the ranger formula and introduces Art Acord and his horse. The star gets a job with the rangers through his skilled horsemanship. He wastes no time in falling in love with the daughter of the captain of the troop. The father is trying to track down a band of smugglers whose secret rendezvous is a border hotel. The girl borrows the hero's horse and is kidnapped by one of the villains—their object being to force her father into easing up on his vigilance where their smuggling is concerned. The crooks then demand that the captain withdraw his forces. He refuses and a fight is about to start when they tell him if he pulls a gun he'll never see his daughter again. Meanwhile the heroine has been able to secret a note in the horse's bridle and send him for aid. The climax reveals an adequate rescue scene. The offering carries an old story which because of its fast action is good enough to please the average patron.—LAURENCE REID.

"Years to Come"

(Hal Roach Comedy-Pathe)

THIS is one of the best comedies which Snub Pollard ever made. The trick "business," the gags, and situations, are rather novel and each and every one support the theme and are not dragged in by the heels for the sake of hokum and laughter. "Years to Come" presents the women wearing trousers while the men are bedecked in the garb of femininity. Snub is attired in a modish (?) gown with frills and laces and his duty is to take care of the house, cook, sweep, etc., while Marie Mosquini plays the part of the tired business woman. She lives up to the traditional breadwinner. She does not bring any candy or flowers. And when an accident happens to the coffee she leaves the house to seek solace at the club. Meanwhile Snub is weeping away when a croney enters and tempts him with a bottle of pre-volstead stuff. High jinks follow when wifey returns home. The comedy is snappily developed and, really, a bright filler for any program.—Length, One Reel.—LAURENCE REID.

"Loose Change"

(Hal Roach Comedy-Pathe)

PAUL PARROTT and lil' Sunshine Sammy, the ebony juvenile, carry the comedy burden of this burlesque which has to do with a bank robbery. The robber enters and his command of "Hands Up!" causes the cashier to obey with alacrity. However the latter presses a pedal with his foot which releases the thief through a trap door into the police station below. The crook discovers himself before the sergeant's desk and there is no waste of time as the officer gives him a crack on the head and presses another pedal releasing the robber into a cell below. If the thief keeps passing through trap doors he might bob up in China eventually.

It develops that his gang attempt to avenge their comrade. Meanwhile the pampered son of the president finds a map indicating buried treasure. He starts digging tunnels under the bank and into the vault where he discovers heaps of money. The subsequent scene is good for a big chuckle. The prexy and his son not only discover that they have dug into their own vault but encounter the gang of thieves at the same time. The situations are broadly burlesqued and give rise to many amusing incidents.—Length, 2 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Dumb Bell"

(Century-Universal)

HARRY SWEET, the comedian of this effort plays an ambitious commuter. He learns that a man with a child in his arms is the only man capable of getting a seat on the 5:15. So he purchases a huge doll. When he arrives in his home town he tries to get rid of the doll, but a policeman seeing a little baby on the depot platform thinks it is Harry's che-i-i-i-ld, which the cop saw him get rid of. Harry is forced to take the doll. The comedy, which does not carry much variation, proceeds with its romantic interest. The commuter's sweetheart will not listen to his explanation, and it is only after much trouble and perspiring on the star's part that the lovers are eventually brought together, and Harry's plight is really understood. This is not as funny as some recent Centurys but it carries enough high spots to register O. K.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Night Attack"

(Two-Reel Western-Universal)

THIS runs typical to form. Which is to say that it carries a concentrated line of Western action having to do with a group of outlaws and a vigilance committee determined to capture them. The heroine is told by the upholders of the law that it is a man-size job—this hunting of outlaws. This is discouraging to the girl. It develops that the chief villain attempts to have him join his forces—he posing as a minion of the law. But she frustrates his advance. She eventually notices some mysterious action concerning the villain and rides forth to investigate. And before she knows it she is caught in the trap of the robbers. The hero and his vigilantes come to the rescue and the love note is heard when the smoke of battle is cleared away. Eileen Sedgwick makes an attractive heroine.—LAURENCE REID.

"BOOMERANG BILL"
(Cosmopolitan-Paramount)

Human Interest Crook Story Excellently Acted

THERE is revealed in this crook story by Jack Boyle, author of the "Boston Blackie" tales, as fine a sample of human interest as has been shown in some time. It is a picture of a criminal's redemption from an unusual angle, the ordinary development of which would have made it a conventional photoplay. Since it is told in narrative form the moral can be caught that the ways of crime do not pay. A detective with humanitarian instinct, observing that a youth is about to leave the "straight and narrow" talks to him and his object lesson is a broken-down peddler who come under his vision. Perhaps it is largely due to the captions that the moral is so well established. But after watching Lionel Barrymore live the title role you feel that the interpretation provides the lesson as well as the human interest.

Bill, the gunman, is keeping under cover in New York's underworld. He attends an East Side "racket" and meets a girl who influences his life. She does not know that he is a crook—not until he has robbed a bank to enable her mother to find health and peace in the country. He well realizes that a "last job" is always a jinx and when he is arrested and sent up the river the old superstition bears fruit. Bill has three big moments in his life. The first is when he resolves to go straight through his love for the girl, the second is when he renounces his claim upon her when she comes pleading to be released from her engagement. For the girl has had an offer of marriage which will prove a blessing to her mother. Bill is broken. Reason nearly leaves him in a pathetic scene. The third moment arrives when, after a long imprisonment, he steals upon the snug cottage and noticing that Annie is happy, turns away. He journeys down to Chinatown and pours out his love upon the little Chinese girl, who is also friendless and alone. The pathos is felt throughout this compelling story, particularly when Bill understands the hopelessness of his love. That the girl denies him eventually does not bring any scoffing from the spectator, for anyone can appreciate that she could not have acted otherwise. You only feel immensely sorry for Bill. From a fine specimen of manhood he becomes a derelict. As the detective points out, the pathetic peddler tried to mix the good and the bad. He tried to build a foundation of love upon a life of crime. The cards were against him. Barrymore feels his situations acutely and he conveys that feeling to the spectator. It is fiction but it sounds mighty like truth. The agony of his lost happiness is expressed with dumb, mute emotion. Marguerite Marsh plays the girl with fine restraint. She has caught the true pathos. Tom Terriss has handled his scenes remarkably well. His atmosphere is genuine. The East Side with its Chinatown teems with local color. Jack Boyle can write a crook story. And Barrymore can humanize it.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picture that is said to reveal eloquently the heart of a reformed gunman is "Boomerang Bill," featuring Lionel Barrymore, which will be presented at the ———— theatre next ————. The role of Bill, the gunman, is played with the finished artistry characteristic of this star. Boomerang Bill, is a Chicago gunman hiding in New York. He is a crook but when circumstances take him into pleasanter fields he turns honest. Then comes a great dilemma. The girl he loves is in dire poverty. Her mother requires expensive medical attention and a change of climate if she is to live.

Bill decides to do one more crooked job for their sakes. He is caught and goes to prison. The girl pledges herself to await his release. But she cannot because her mother is rapidly failing and an admirer wishes to marry her and provide for them both. Bill tells her to accept. Months later, when he is free, he sees her happily caring for the baby and happy in her husband's companionship. He steals away silently without letting her know of his presence. Adding charm and character to the production is Marguerite Marsh as the girl. Margaret Seddon makes a sympathetic mother. The picture contains vital dramatic moments and is excellently staged.

PROGRAM READER

Lionel Barrymore, the eminent actor of stage and screen, is the star of the vital drama, "Boomerang Bill," written by Jack Boyle, creator of the famous "Boston Blackie" stories which reached the screen as rich entertainments. The picture will be presented at the ———— theatre next ————. It is a story of the underworld of New York and a love that touched its shadows with glory. It tells of a bad man's love that is finer than any king's. The hero commits one more crime for the sake of humanity. He is arrested and sentenced to a long imprisonment. But he has the satisfaction of knowing that his sacrifice is not in vain.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a crook melodrama written by Jack Boyle who will be remembered as the author of the famous "Boston Blackie" stories. After you have acquainted this fact to the patrons—tell them that Lionel Barrymore comes to the ———— with the best picture of his career. It is a sure-fire drama because of its rich pathos and heart interest. Just give an inkling of the plot—not enough to acquaint your crowd with the contents. Follow up with the title and suggest that it is rich entertainment. Playing up the Barrymore name would prove to advantage also. Mention that he has contributed some first rate offerings. Use catch lines.

"MORAN OF THE LADY LETTY"
(Paramount)

Rip Roaring Sea Story That Should More Than Please

AS good old-fashioned melodrama, "Moran of the Lady Letty" is seldom surpassed. The picture has plenty of action, a dependable if not exactly new theme, fine atmosphere of the sea, likable leads and a sufficiently despicable villain to satisfy even the hard boiled.

The story told concerns a young lounge lizard, born and bred to idleness and luxury, but realizing his uselessness, who is shanghaied aboard a San Francisco schooner captained by a modern pirate where in the course of many melodramatic events he woos and wins a sailor-girl daughter of a long line of sea-faring ancestors and quite the opposite of the sort of wife he would have picked out if he had remained a land lubber.

Reduced to plot the offering would be pretty much the same story as most of the sea yarns. The young man is transformed from a "softy" by his experiences into a rough-and ready two-fisted guy and is proud of his new status. He protects the girl from the villain, thwarts a plan to murder the crew and otherwise proves himself a man's man.

However, it is the way the picture is developed that brings it out of the ordinary run. There is a fight or two that won a hand from a Sunday afternoon Broadway crowd. The picture is splendidly acted by a fine cast of types. Rudolph Valentino, as the hero, demonstrates once again that he can act. Dorothy Dalton is an ideal selection for the role of the heroine. Walter Long is a villain worthy of the name.

"Moran of the Lady Letty" is an adaptation of a popular novel of the same name by Frank Norris. The book has made good picture material and been handled with skill and understanding.

Any place that melodrama has a chance this ought to go over for a ten strike.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A complete Mexican town, supposedly peopled by renegade Mexicans and murderous Chinese and located somewhere on the Mexican coast, was constructed at Paradise Cove, on the shore of San Francisco Bay, for scenes in "Moran of the Lady Letty," the George Melford production for Paramount which will be presented next ———— at the ———— theatre.

The town was laid out with streets and twenty buildings of adobe, plaster and wood and thatched over the roofs with straw were erected. Thirty carpenters and scenic artists labored for two weeks to build the village.

The village is the scene of some of the most thrilling dramatic episodes of the new sea picture, which is an adaptation of the novel by Frank Norris. Dorothy Dalton plays the featured role, and Rudolph Valentino plays opposite her.

PROGRAM READER

Fighting on the fore top of schooner with the vessel rolling and pitching and the mast swaying, is no pleasant job, according to Rudolph Valentino, playing the leading male role and Walter Long, the villainous captain of the hell-ship in "Moran of the Lady Letty," a Paramount picture which will be shown at the ———— theatre next ———— for ———— days.

The fight scenes were filmed aboard the ship in San Francisco Bay. The two men were at least sixty feet above the deck. The fight started on deck and continued on up the rigging until they reached the fore top. From there they fought on out to the end of a spar. After a final struggle, the villain drops into the ocean. For this latter shot, a camera was lashed to another spar, and thus a close-up view of the knock-out punch and the fall was obtained.

Dorothy Dalton plays the featured role of "Moran." The picture is an adaptation of the sea story by Frank Norris.

SUGGESTIONS

Promise your patrons plenty of thrills, action, sea stuff and splendid acting on the part of a fine cast. Use a sea song for a prologue with the singer costumed as a sailor and an appropriate drop. Lobby displays are suggested by the type of picture also. In newspaper ads use action stills rather than extended selling talk. Give Valentino equal credit as star with Miss Dalton. He has the best role of the two. Play up the theme rather than the plot.

CATCH LINES

A story of the sea in which the son of luxury and idleness is shanghaied aboard a rum smuggler and learns to prefer a sea faring life to that of a cotillion leader. And the romance of a girl who had always lived on the sea and who thought that she didn't like being a woman.

From leading the cotillion to scrubbing decks was a big jump for Ramon, pampered son of an old 'Frisco family but strange to say he liked the change and the girl of the sea whom he met aboard the "Lady Letty."

A rip roaring sea story, with a fight that will bring a thrill to the most sophisticated. A romance that brought a cotillion leader and a girl born and reared on a ship together never to be parted on earth. A picture with scenic qualities that are no small part of its entertainment values.

"WHERE IS MY WANDERING BOY TO-NIGHT"

(B. F. Zeidman-Equity Pictures-State Rights)

Frankly "Sob Stuff," With Sure-Fire Hokum

THERE is no doubt but that this picture has a theme that wins at the box office. "Mother love" can be offered on the screen in any variety of form, shape, or development, and there are always those who will come away perfectly satisfied with the "good-cry" which has been afforded them.

"Where Is My Wandering Boy" is an undisguised appeal to these lovers of "sob stuff." There is no subtlety in its method of attack; it goes forward direct to its goal without much attempt to gloss over the familiar hokum of the weeping mother and the wayward son. It is hard to overfeed an audience with "mother" pictures. "Where Is My Wandering Boy" could very well ride along to success simply on its title, theme and the tried-and-proved incidents which it contains. The number of those who sneer at so-called sob stuff is insignificant when compared to those who relish just such pictures.

One physical thrill crowns the production. This is a railroad wreck—one of those head-on collisions that brings an audience forward in their chairs and draws forth a gasp of surprise.

The producers present a conventional picture of small-town life in the beginning. It is a place populated by exaggerated rustics, with chin whiskers and bare feet. Perhaps there is ridicule here which will not please the small town-audience. For instance, there is a spitting contest, with the rubes trying to hit the bull's eye. The boy leaves this village, his mother and sweetheart, to win his way in the big city. A chorus girl is part of the attraction. Then he steals and proceeds to go to the devil in the big city in the prescribed fashion—cabaret suppers and expensive gifts to chorus girls. When he is broke and the chorus girl proves false, he repents, but is arrested for another crime which he never committed. Cut-ins run through this sequence showing his mother and sweetheart back home suffering from the want of him. It is in the prison sequence that the climatic thrill arrives. An uprising of the convicts occurs and the warden is carried off as hostage on board a runaway locomotive. The boy mounts the cab and performs a thrilling rescue just before the head-on collision. For this heroism he is reprieved. He naturally goes back home to bring happiness to his weeping mother and comfort the girl who has loved him since boyhood.

There are some scenes which will undoubtedly be criticized as spreading the hokum too thickly. For instance the mother pursues the train which is carrying her son away until she falls exhausted on the track. But all in all the hokum is sure-fire. Cullen Landis convinces as the boy and Virginia True Boardman, as the mother, gives an effective performance.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Cullen Landis plays the leading role in "Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight," the feature picture which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. This feature production was suggested by the famous hymn of the same name and tells a dramatic story of mother love, a theme which is ever-powerful and always dramatic.

In every town and village in every State there are boys and girls who look towards New York as a Utopia, a place where fortunes are to be made over night. The quiet of the country pales upon them. They long for the action and the glamour of the big city's playground. But New York is seldom the land of enchantment of which they dreamed. "Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight" is the story of a village lad who thought that happiness could only come with worldly success. Home, his mother, his sweetheart seemed as nothing as compared with the glory of success in the big city.

Few more moving stories of mother love have reached the screen than this production which has won applause in every city in which it has been shown. No subject is more appealing than that of mother love. In literature, on the stage, and on the screen, this theme has always touched the heart. It is universal in its appeal, it is all embracing in its power.

"Where is My Wandering Boy" will be shown for ———— days at the ———— theatre. Other pictures on the program are ————.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

As its feature picture on ———— the ———— theatre is glad to announce "Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight," the B. F. Zeidman production which enjoyed a run at the Criterion theatre in New York, and which is creating a sensation in every city in which it is shown. The story is suggested by the hymn of the same name, and the pathetic tale of a country boy who follows the lure of the big city is unfolded in such a way that it is bound to hold the attention of every one in the audience. No dramatic subject in the world can compare with the drama of mother love. "Where is My Wandering Boy" makes use of this subject to the utmost. It unfolds a story which brings to the mind of everyone their own childhood. It recalls to all the mother who suffered, fought and worked for them. It is a picture with an universal appeal—a drama which will be appreciated by men and women, young and old.

Cullen Landis, the popular young leading man, who will be remembered from his work in a similar part in "The Old Nest," is seen in the leading role in "Where is My Wandering Boy." The part of the mother is very capably played by Virginia True Boardman. "Where is My Wandering Boy" will be the leading attraction at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————.

CATCH LINES

A powerful story of mother love, suggested by the famous hymn of the same name, "Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight." A gripping screen story of the small town and the big city.

"BILLY JIM"

(R-C Pictures)

Hardly Suffices to Travel Feature Length

IF this feature starring Fred Stone were compressed into three reels the action would be quickened, the incident would be more spontaneous and the result would be a likely offering. As it is there is scarcely enough substance to sustain through five reels. Since it is more of a semi-humorous character sketch of a rollicking cowboy one can appreciate that the director has been forced to use a deal of padding to put it over. Fred Stone fits the title role like the proverbial glove fits the hand. He has occasion to prove his versatility by expert lariat-throwing and snappy horsemanship. But that is about all.

The story is almost plotless, although because of its humorous trend one cannot take offense at a lack of crisp action. Frank Borzage has collected some charming exteriors. One showing mountain ranges enclosing a lake is a colorful shot indeed. The plot interest is weakened by some poor cutting or editing. The hero frolics about through the early scenes, becomes intoxicated and immediately after is sober enough to sit in a hand of poker. The idea revolves around a rough and ready, wild and woolly cowboy, determined to win the girl who has captivated him with her charm. He follows her to a mountain resort where everything is of the social order. In his rough clothes and rougher mannerisms he has a tough time getting any attention from the host or other guests. Also you suspect him of staging a hold-up in an earlier scene to account for his display of unlimited wealth.

The introductory incident unfolds some shots which carry a juvenile appeal and some characteristic Stone comedy. Some of the later scenes are not closely related. The heroine rebuffs him time and again but he finally wins her over. The plot takes up some villainous work with Stone riding to bring the crooks to justice. There is no lapse of time in the action, yet some of the guests appear in evening dress, with the sun shining broadly and casting huge shadows. The hero is identified later as a wealthy ranch owner with the hold-up being sponsored by a rich suitor of the girl who has traveled West with her father. Stone's comedy in the hotel is snappy enough. But it is a one-character story with very little contrast of incident and very little action of any suspense. As stated above compressed into three reels this would, in all likelihood, make a hum-dinger.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A cowboy picture which is said to contain everything characteristic of Western stories—such as swift action, thrills, adventure, humor and suspense—as well as a death-defying hero and a beautiful heroine is "Billy Jim," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Fred Stone as the star. The offering presents a story that enables Stone to indulge in all his delicious horseplay. He enacts the role of a lovesick cowboy who pursues the beautiful young daughter of a wealthy Westerner with a view of asking her hand in marriage. It is upon his experiences in the chase for a wife that the story is built and Mr. Stone has missed no opportunity to bring out the delicious humor in many laugh-provoking situations.

Stone has occasion to display his skillful horsemanship for the scenes give him chances to indulge in hard-riding and straight shooting. Much of the action of "Billy Jim" is laid in the beautiful country of the West. The mountain lands, with tall snow-clad peaks penetrating the heavens, form a wonderful background for the story. The star is supported by a well balanced cast that includes Millicent Fisher, George Hernandez, Marian Skinner and others. Frank Borzage, director of "Humoresque" and "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford," directed the feature.

PROGRAM READER

A roaring Western comedy-drama, packed to the brim with thrills and laughs. That is "Billy Jim," the rollicking cowboy picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Fred Stone as the star. You all know this comedian's ability. You know that he is one of the most versatile artists of stage and screen. When you see him in this droll story you will be thrilled with his horsemanship. His skill with the lariat, his marksmanship with the six-shooter—these qualities are firmly established. It is a story crammed with humor telling as it does the experiences of a lovesick cowboy. Romance, thrills, humor, sentiment, action, suspense and beautiful backgrounds mark "Billy Jim." We are sure you will be pleased with this entertaining picture.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a rollicking picture expressing a deal of humor and with Fred Stone as the star the patrons are assured of a comedian who knows his comedy values. First play up the title emphasizing that it indicates an afternoon or evening of jollity. Mention that the star plays the role of a lovesick cowboy. Follow up by featuring his skill in the saddle, with the lariat and with the six-shooter. Feature the picture as one that carries typical Western stuff—packed with action, thrills, humor, romance and suspense. If you can secure the services of an artist skilled with the lariat dress him up in chaps, etc., and use him for a prologue. Play up the stills as they bring out the picturesque backgrounds.

CATCH LINES

You'll shiver with delight when Fred Stone arrives in "Billy Jim." A rollicking cowboy drama—filled with fast action, humor, thrills, suspense and wonderful scenery.

See the breezy, swift-moving picture of the wild and woolly West. See Fred Stone, the gifted comedian, in his finest picture. See "Billy Jim."

"WHAT LOVE WILL DO"
(Fox)

Story of Regeneration Makes Good Program Offering

THIS story of regeneration and romance, deftly blended with the sure-fire touches so dear to the sentimentalists, such as pathos, heart interest and small-town incident of a homely character is a fitting vehicle for expression by the Fox co-stars, Johnnie Walker and Edna Murphy. "What Love Will Do" cannot be called original but it has been treated in rather novel fashion. Indeed the director has balanced the little heart tugs so that they continually crop out and move the spectator to extend sympathy. There is even a semblance of humor extracted from the tale with Richard Tucker taking care of the comedy moments. The story fits the personalities of the stars.

The plot unfolds a mother leaving her husband and little son to elope with a newcomer in the village. The father dies of a broken heart and years later the mother is forsaken by the man who enticed her away to the colorful city. The scene shifts to the youthful hero now grown to manhood in the little town. His one object in life is to hunt down and kill the man who caused the tragedy of depriving him of a mother's love. The heroine is introduced as having a deep interest in Johnnie and inspires him to follow the straight path and help humanity. The boy had been the leader of evil associates but the girl starts him on the road to redemption. Coincidence or convenience enters here with the arrival of the villain who enticed the lad's mother away. He poses as a revivalist, thinking the time ripe to bleed the town dry by staging a religious issue.

The big scene follows with Johnnie frustrating the plans of the wily crook. The mother has entered the situation and recognizes the boy. There is revealed a hectic fight in which the youthful hero forgets his religious scruples and punishes the hired thugs of the pseudo-clergyman. The latter is killed in the melee and a reunion is effected between mother and son. And the romance keeps pace to the end. The picture is directed in competent fashion by a director who seems to have the correct gauge of the small town. There is very little padding and the action always fits the situation. The mother-love theme, the heart interest, the pathos and sentiment—these qualities will certainly make this an appealing offering for any program house—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Edna Murphy and Johnnie Walker, the Fox co-stars, will be seen at the ———— theatre next ———— in "What Love Will Do," a picture telling the story of a man's regeneration through the power of a woman's love. The youth, soured by the knowledge that his mother deserted him as an infant, and his father dying, left him penniless to struggle with the world, seeks pleasure in the company of toughs. He eventually rules the gang through his superior ability as a fighter, and assumes a disrespectful attitude toward all women. Then the "one girl" comes into his life in strange and dramatic fashion, and marked changes in his nature gradually take place.

At length he takes up civic betterment work with all the force and energy formerly devoted to an entirely different sort of activity; but his old fighting spirit and ability prove of service when two robbers try to take church funds from him. The picture is marked by swift action and tense situations abound in a majority of the scenes. The appealing qualities of the offering are enhanced by the youthful enthusiasm of the co-stars who contribute sincere performances. It is said by impartial authorities to be one of the most interesting pictures of the season.

PROGRAM READERS

It is dangerous for a boy to lose his sense of reverence for his mother, but the love of a good woman can restore his faith. Even when evil companions have aided in forming bad habits and pleasure is found in pursuits morally and physically injurious, the "one girl in the world" may wean the mind of a man away from them. All of this is presented entertainingly in "What Love Will Do," a Fox photoplay which becomes the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. The youthful co-stars, who have established themselves through a sincere enthusiasm—these co-stars, Edna Murphy and Johnnie Walker, carry out the demands of the story with charming performances. The picture is charged with deep human interest, pathos, sentiment, romance and swift-moving action.

SUGGESTIONS

This is the third of the Walker-Murphy series of pictures. You can start it off with a teaser campaign with the question, "Who are the ideal lovers of the screen?" and add the answer a day or two before the showing. Use the postcard stunt. Use the posters, lobby photos, cuts and slides. Use throwaways embodying the substance of love such as WHAT is the power of LOVE when it plays on the WILL of a youth who would DO as he pleased? Use program fillers and bill the picture as a human slice of life, carrying the elements of heart interest, pathos, sentiment, romance. Play up the co-stars, telling that each has made a name at the box office. Tell that Walker made a big hit in "Over the Hill." The same may be said for Miss Murphy.

"CHASING THE MOON"
(Fox)

Some Stunts in This Weak Effort

TOM MIX, who has been hitting the bull's eye in his previous efforts, especially in his last release, "Sky High," has missed the mark in his new offering, "Chasing the Moon." This story lacks a plot and the sponsors must have gauged it correctly for they have attempted to dress it with snappy titles. It is a good deal like a comic opera story, the little thread of plot intruding here and there but making no impression. The star executes several stunts, many of which are of the hair-raising order, but even these take quite a time in assembling. The action pilots the star through a series of dizzy scenes having to do with wild motor rides, escapades in hotel dining rooms, knock-about work aboard a train and some comedy hokum in foreign countries.

Mix has burlesqued his ideas before, but usually there has been something tangible about his exploits. However, the title has its value. It indicates that nothing can be gained from following moonbeams. Perhaps the main fault is a lack of a definite outline. It is as if Mix told the director to grind the camera without a continuity present to work with—and the latter proceeded to "shoot" anything and everything. The star is seated in a snappy roadster as the picture opens. He is contemplating sadly on the lack of new thrills. This is a good idea. Mix has dished up everything in the past few years—until it would seem he had no more stunts to conquer. Here he is wealthy and bored. A few flashbacks are shown revealing his craving for excitement and he finally decides to settle down on a ranch. From this point the picture takes up a helter-skelter scheme of development.

Mix becomes inoculated with some deadly germ, the cure of which is owned by a professor in a foreign country. So the offering becomes a mad race to reach the learned scientist. One cannot become critical because the action is so absurd. There is some good thrills displayed on a train and the star has moments when he shows his daring in the saddle. An ultimate rescue brings the story to an end. The titles are snappy enough but often miss their mark through repetition. If one character talked in witty fashion the action would ring more genuine, but the other figures retort with crisp dialogue. And a play or picture which reveals the characters hurling snappy sayings at each other is always overdrawn, for the simple reason that you couldn't find such a gifted crowd. The sequences are swift enough and the suspense is fairly keen in places. The supporting cast is adequate with Eva Novak playing the heroine in spirited fashion.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Tom Mix, the popular interpreter of Western pictures for Fox, comes to the ———— theatre in his latest attraction entitled "Chasing the Moon." This offering enables the well known star to display his gifted talents, such as superb horsemanship and lariat throwing. It is a picture crammed with stunts and incidents characteristic of his other pictures. The hero is fed up with excitement. In fact he fails to get a thrill out of anything. He finally decides to settle down on a ranch, and cuts up capers enough but there is no stimulant in them. Finally he inoculates himself with a deadly poison, the cure of which is owned by a professor in a foreign country.

He takes trains, horses, steamers and other modes of locomotion but the elusive scientist is always out of reach. The picture unfolds several novel thrills and offers a tense hour of excitement. It is good-natured burlesque and Mix plays the role of the hero with his customary abandon. In the cast are Eva Novak, Wm. Buckley, Sid Jordon, Wynn Mace and others. The star wrote the story in collaboration with Edward Sedgwick while the latter also directed the feature.

PROGRAM READER

He was always chasing the moon. No matter how hard he tried, he could not find any enterprise which would give him a new thrill. He thought of his past adventures, but they had lost their appeal. So he settled down on a ranch. He didn't remain long. He staged a sumptuous party in a hotel—one that earned him a name for reckless spending. But there was no thrill attached to it. Finally he discovered that he was carrying a fatal drug in his veins and that unless he could find the owner of the antidote in thirty days he would be a dead man. Thus he found a thrill. The wild journey took him across continents, trains steamers and practically over the world. Did he live? Come and see for yourself at the ———— theatre next ————. "Chasing the Moon" with Tom Mix.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture features Tom Mix in a series of new stunts. You don't have to be told how to feature his offerings. He either has a following or he hasn't. So you are your own best judge. The mere mention of his name in the electrics is usually sufficient to attract the crowd. Emphasize that the picture carries several new stunts, that even the followers of Mix since his first days as a screen actor will fail to recognize. Play up the star. Mention that the picture is a breezy offering, packed with adventure, thrills, excitement and romance. Mention that Eva Novak is in the cast. The title can be worked out in a teaser campaign. The prologue can feature a background of the sage-brush country—with an ensemble attired in cowboy regalia whooping it up with characteristic songs and dances.

CATCH LINES

"THE GOLDEN GALLOWS"
(Universal)

Conventional and Uninspired

THIS picture, featuring Miss Du Pont, started off like a house afire, depicting life back stage, with the idea conveyed that slices of this interesting life would be revealed in such intimate fashion that the offering could be classified as good entertainment. But the theatrical spark burns out and what is revealed is a conventional and uninspired tale of a girl who becomes the victim of evil gossip. The heroine is an understudy to a famous star and when the latter is incapacitated the girl steps into the character and creates a sensation. She is elevated to stardom, although there is the usual current of scandal connected with her life.

It develops that a wealthy roue is interested in her. When his methods are ineffectual in a sordid way he adopts different tactics. In fact his character is regenerated. It is a purely platonic friendship, but a jealous woman kills him. Before he expires he writes a note leaving the bulk of his estate to the actress. This note is intrusted to an unscrupulous lawyer who automatically becomes the "heavy" of the drama. The love interest finds a wealthy scion of an old established family registering romance in happy fashion until the winds of scandal reach his ears. Although he has qualified as a gentleman he stages a crude scene in which he severely punishes the attorney. The gossip makes him considerably of a cad. He enters and passes out of the actress' life with the impulses of an impressionable collegian. Meanwhile his mother sponsors the girl and learns to appreciate her. When the youth comes home, the older woman does not know that her son is acquainted. Yet she fails to introduce the young people.

The story does not give Jack Mower many chances to appear human or regular. His appearances are effected in rather crude manner. And he constantly registers anger because of his suspicions against the girl. Finally the lawyer, thinking he has the whip hand because of the secret note, attempts to compromise the actress. But she journeys to his home and frustrates his plan at the point of a revolver. The hero shows his manliness here by refusing to read the message, trusting in the girl's sincerity. The story is interrupted in its sequences by a faulty continuity, there being places where a title or two would aid the action. The backgrounds are effective, the exteriors being charming. If the central male figure had been treated in more human fashion and less as a character of convenience the story would ring more genuine as far as characterization is concerned. Miss Du Pont is supported by a company that includes Edwin Stevens.—Length, 4,808 feet.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Golden Gallows" is the title of the Universal picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This is a story of theatrical life depicting an understudy to a famous actress who because of the latter's illness steps into her role and creates a sensation. It is a crowded house and seated in a stage box is a youth who is attracted by the girl's personality. He secures an introduction and the way is paved for a romance when gossip reaches his ears that she is an old man's darling. This evil rumor spreads a deal of unhappiness for the girl and also for the youth. An unscrupulous lawyer is entrusted with the old man's will which is made out for the benefit of the girl. His friendship for her has only been a platonic one, but a jealous woman kills him because of his cooling advances.

The lawyer is struck down by the hero and the scene proves to be so brutal to the sensitive imagination of the actress that she refuses to entertain her newfound admirer. It isn't until he develops a faith and a loyalty that she consents to a reconciliation. Miss Du Pont, who created one of the vital roles of "Foolish Wives," plays the leading role in spirited fashion, registering her scenes with adequate emotion. In the supporting cast are Edwin Stevens and Jack Mower. The picture is well staged.

PROGRAM READER

Have you ever longed to cultivate a romance with an actress? Hasn't life back stage ever fascinated you? Suppose you had secured an introduction to a well known star and gossip reached your sensitive ears that she was the victim of a scandal, would you believe it? Would you have faith in the girl, or would you catalogue her as unfit for matrimony? Consider the dilema that came to Jack Mower when he found Miss Du Pont the victim of ugly gossip. He refused to bave faith in her. He made himself considerably unhappy and brought sorrow to the girl. But in the end he conquered his evil suspicions and discovered the girl to be honorable and sincere. This is the outline of the clever picture, "The Golden Gallows," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have a star who has created a good impression in Stroheim's "Foolish Wives" to exploit. Make mention that she carries the central feminine role in that picture and that her work in other Stroheim pictures entitled her to stardom. Play up that she has an ideal vehicle for the display of her personality. Mention that she is one of the best dressed women identified with the stage. Use stills of her showing her in a lavish wardrobe. Play up that Edwin Stevens and Jack Mower are in the supporting company. Bill the picture as an interesting slice of theatrical life, showing the consequences of evil gossip as it concerns an innocent girl. Bill it as dramatically effective. A prologue can feature an ensemble of ballet dancers.

CATCH LINES

See Miss Du Pont, the actress who supported Stroheim in "Foolish Wives," in her newest picture, "The Golden Gallows."

"ANY WIFE"
(Fox)

Dream Situation Adds Surprise and Saves Triangle Theme

THE dream situation is employed in this conventional pattern of the eternal triangle which gives Pearl White emotional opportunities as a discontented wife. That the picture carries a lesson cannot be denied, although the story contains several crude scenes which are saved through the surprising finish. Many will say that the wife inspires little sympathy since she gave up a devoted husband, a little son, and the comforts of home to contract a marriage with a charming interloper. The background is a familiar one. There is the worshipful husband who is not presented as neglectful toward his wife. Indeed he is a man of wealth and given to generous impulses in providing for his better half. Perhaps she has a perverse streak in her due to being showered with so much attention.

As the scenes develop he seems to have lost his romantic ardor, giving most of his affection toward the youngster. The wife is attracted to the gay deceiver because he is seemingly gifted in romantic ways. The child is tucked into bed. You begin to see the ultimate conclusion that the juvenile appeal will reunite the parents even before the husband comes back unexpectedly from a trip and catches the guilty wife in the arms of her lover. He lectures the couple, but is too civilized to kill. So he takes the child and turns the wife from home. Her second marriage is one long series of tortures. She spoils a business project of her husband's and learning that he is developing an affair with a celebrated actress goes to the theatre to claim her rights. The deceitful spouse ignores her. But the woman is not defeated. She remonstrates so successfully that the thespian champions her case.

The climax arrives when she goes to the hospital to see her child who is dangerously ill. She is refused admittance but the pleading voice of the child wins against the cold and cruel attitude of the husband and father. The picture travels this familiar orbit but is saved from being utterly orthodox by the surprise finish. Her unfortunate experience has been nothing but a bad dream but it has furnished her with enough character to see things in their true light. Some of the scenes with the philanderer are crudely developed. And a chuckle might be aroused here and there where only deep thought was intended. However, one cannot take offense in view of the employment of the dream situation. "Any Wife" gives Miss White an occasion of revel in emotional feeling, and she brings out the contrast of a discontented wife and one who becomes disillusioned in an effective manner. The picture carries a certain appeal because of its moral, but its dramatic qualities are mostly negligible.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The theme of the new Pearl White picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— is based upon the discontented atmosphere of the home. The heroine has everything to make her happy—a loving husband who showers her with gifts and attentions, a little child and a splendid home. Yet she is discontented probably because there is no struggle to attain these pleasures. The other man comes into her life and steals her love. The husband, unwilling to stand in the way—ever desirous of making her happy, consents to a divorce, although he keeps the child. Once the wife is married to the interloper her life is far from happy. She is emharrassed and bumiliated. Her new husband showers his attentions upon a celebrated actress, but the wife intercedes. The climax is a startling surprise. To reveal it would be robbing the patron of that suspense which keeps his interest at attention. Suffice to say that it is a picture carrying sufficient action and drama and plenty of heart appeal to please everywhere. Miss White makes the central figure a warmly sympathetic character. In the supporting company are Holmes Herbert, Gilbert Emery and Eulalie Jensen. Herbert Brenon directed.

PROGRAM READERS

You don't know Mrs. Hill do you? Well, we are going to introduce you to her. She has a message for discontented women—wives especially. She had a fine home, servants, a devoted and loving husband and a darling little son. But she wasn't satisfied. She was discontented. Then came the serpent into her life. He fostered her discontent and she listened to him—much to her sorrow. Her husband turned her away—but let her tell you the story herself on the ———— screen next ———— and ————, where she opens in "Any Wife," the Fox feature. Pearl White is the star. The offering isn't a sermon. It is just a slice of life that any wife might have lived—if she were discontented. Remember next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

A line of argument having to do with discontented marriages would stimulate a deal of curiosity concerning this picture. Marital problems would help put this over. Play up the fact that most wives are discontented when they have no object in life. If their husbands shower them with too much pleasure—give them everything which will suggest happiness—it is natural that they will be overfed. The result is they become restless. This is an age-old theme with psycho-analysts. Play up the title. Mention that Pearl White is the star. Mention that it is a timely story—not the least bit a preachment, but telling a story that is really a slice of life. Bring forth that this drama could happen and is probably happening everywhere.

CATCH LINES

Are you discontented with married life? Do you feel penned up? Are you tired of household duties? Come and see Pearl White in "Any Wife."

Supplementing the General Theatre Illumination with Special Effects

Few Exhibitors Realize Their Opportunities for Striking Original Features

By A. L. POWELL, Edison Lamp Works

We treated last week the subject of general illumination of the theatre and also suggested that the general lighting could be made much more effective by special local lighting.

How can we obtain these special effects which have been mentioned for supplementing the general lighting? There is no limit to the possibilities in this direction and the fact that these effects are original makes them so especially appealing. It is quite apparent that one could not attempt to cover the question in the space available. A few hints along this line should serve to indicate the scope of our field.

There are two forms of light, direct and reflected. When we look at a lamp or light source the direct light strikes our eyes. If we look at a book, statue, wall or picture it is the light which is reflected that we perceive To all intents and purposes the object becomes the light source. Both of these actions can be utilized to produce decorative effects.

Suppose there are a number of translucent vases as part of the lounge decoration. Under ordinary conditions, they are simply an item of the general scheme, dull and lifeless. Now imagine the room is illuminated to a fairly low intensity, say from one to two foot-candles with a warm pinkish amber light. One vase has a purple lamp inside of it, another green, another blue, and so on. They will then stand in relief against the general warm tone, spots of colors, of life. Beauties hitherto unappreciated become high spots of the decoration Pure colors rather than tints are best for such effects as these. The filament should not be visible through the glass and the surface, while appreciably brighter than the background, not brilliant enough to be glaring.

Distinction

Very few exhibitors realize the splendid opportunities they have for securing various distinguishing effects through special lighting. How many artistic vases, statues, architectural designs and the like are totally unnoticed throughout your theatre? Special lighting will not only bring the object to attention, but additional stress and beauty may be secured. Just read carefully this article by Mr Powell and then make a tour of your house. Undoubtedly you will be able to secure some extremely striking lighting effects at almost no expense. Try a few experiments and be original.

Art glass inserts can be similarly treated. Silk shaded table and floor lamps and even well units are among the devices to which pure colors can be applied for essentially decorative effect (that is, no dependence put upon them for general illumination) the object of course being to obtain contrast and touches of high light.

In some foyers a miniature waterfall or fountain is installed. Colored lamps in suitable moisture-proof fittings can be concealed behind the falling water and in the pool itself A motor-driven flasher is used to change the color of light continuously. The combinations are limitless and the fascination of watching the constantly varying play of color in the particles of water is indeed great.

Frequently clusters or bouquets of hothouse flowers are purchased to be used for decoration. They represent an appreciable expenditure and unless something striking is brought into play, they are scarcely noticed by the patrons. They fade into the background. How much more attractive the interior would appear if these flowers were spotlighted. A small automobile headlight reflector with concentrated filament lamp fed by a storage battery or transformer can be effectively concealed to direct a beam of light on the flowers. Small floodlighting projectors with standard voltage lamps or even ordinary deep bowl reflectors with low wattage lamps have been applied with excellent results. The flowers brilliantly lighted stand out as touches of bright color.

In other instances marble busts, statuettes and the like are placed in niches and receive no special lighting treatment. Concealed color lamps will produce some most striking effects; in fact the application of tinted light to statuary or architectural details is one of the most interesting phases of illumination. The future developments mentioned above will be based on these principles.

To give some idea of the possibilities in this connection let us first consider what effect direction of light has on objects in relief. In Figure 1 a composite capital is lighted from three directions: A—directly overhead, B—from the lower left-hand corner, C—from the lower right-hand corner The shadows cast from projecting parts are quite evident.

Let us suppose that this object is lighted from above by red light and from below by green light. The shadows cast by the red will be illuminated in green; the shadows cast by the green light will be the high spots of red light. At points where both colors meet they will mix and, as pointed out in the first article, yellow light will result. The play of light and shade in color is truly marvelous.

Delicate shadings from one tint to another are produced and unthought of, hidden beauties brought to light. With three colors still more startling effects are secured.

Again, this same principle can be applied to, for example, statuary. In Figure 2 is shown the variety of striking expressions and effects which may be obtained by simply lighting this bust of Homer from different directions. In position 1 the light is directed from overhead; 2, below; 3, right side; 4, very diffused flat light, and 5, overhead, with a certain amount of shadow.

Anyone interested in light is urged to make up for himself a small black box with colored lamps and reflectors at various points; to study the effects on objects in relief and then apply these in practice.

Such a box should be about four feet square and three feet deep, painted black on the interior, with sockets and six-inch diameter deep bowl reflectors located at the four front corners and at the centers of the upper and lower front sides. Red, green, blue and amber lamps in these reflectors on separate switches can be used to show color effects on the objects with which one is experimenting.

In the future one may well anticipate seeing the beautifully designed cornice, pilaster and other decorative detail brought out by concealed colored lighting —then light will begin to come into its own as a decorative medium.

You can not use too much care in fire prevention.

A view of the auditorium, stage and orchestra of Kunsky's New Capitol theatre, Detroit, Mich., showing the magnificence of its decorations along with the magnitude of the general design

Capitol Theatre, Detroit, New Entertainment Palace

Fifth Largest Motion Picture Theatre in United States

The Capitol theatre, Detroit, John H. Kunsky's greatest and biggest theatre devoted to motion pictures, had its premier Thursday evening, Jan. 12th at seven p. m. The house is located on Broadway, near Grand Circus Park and runs through to Madison avenue. The building is so constructed that six floors of offices face both streets. The cost of constructing the Capitol theatre, with the offices, including the property was approximately $3,000,000. The financing of the project was handled entirely by George W. Trendle, general manager and secretary of the John H. Kunsky Enterprises.

The Capitol means one more theatre added to the circuit already conducted by the Kunsky Enterprises. The complete list is: Capitol, Madison, Adams, Alhambra, Linwood, De Luxe, Columbia, Liberty, Strand, Empress, Royal, all playing motion pictures.

The architect was C. Howard Crane, who has built more than 250 theatres in America, and who now maintains offices in Detroit, Chicago, New York, Paris and London.

The Capitol is a real place of beauty and is "the last word" in theatres to use an absurd phrase. It is a place where the artistic, the scientific and the comfortable are happily blended. It has a seating capacity of 4,500; it has everything you could hope for in a theatre and a good deal more.

Among the highlights of its architectural and artistic features are a spacious and beautiful foyer, a promenade of 242 feet long, a smoking room and lounge for men, handsome retiring rooms for the ladies, a high auditorium artistically appointed and a lighting system that gives something new and novel in the way of illuminating effects. Instead of the usual chandeliers or indirect lighting fixtures, the lighting is reflected through fountains of glass and the effect is very soothing. A sliding stage apron extends out over the orchestra pit when a singer appears on the stage.

The Capitol will have a permanent symphony orchestra of 45 pieces, not counting the director or organist. Mr. Kunsky intends that the programs of his new theatre will be such as to compete with such great theatres as the Capitol, of New York, the Chicago and Tivoli in Chicago, and the Rivoli and Rialto in New York.

There are no side boxes in the Capitol. There is a mezzanine for reserved seats, divided into boxes. At night these seats sell for one dollar. The main floor seats are 60 cents and the balcony 40 cents. All these prices are for evenings.

The policy of the Capitol will be continuous performances from 12 noon to 11 p. m. The opening program comprises: Pathe News, Pathe Review, Educational Bruce Scenic, First National feature "The Lotus Eater" and Snub Pollard Pathe Comedy. In addition there were selections by Estelle Carey, soloist, and by Griffith and Smith.

One of the hits of the opening was the taking of motion pictures by The Metropolitan Co. of the audience as well as the crowd outside, which were shown to the same audience before they left the theatre.

Mr. Kunsky, in co-operation with Mr. Crane, the architect, has endeavored to embody in the Capitol every up-to-date and latest feature contained in motion picture houses erected during the past five years. Even to the placing of small lights on the posts just above the head-levels of the many usherettes so those coming in may readily find them.

The seats are so arranged that the maximum of comfort is combined with the greatest utility and seating capacity. Above the mass of the seats, the foyer rises to the top of the building, it being the only show-house in the world where this is so. This adds an effect of spaciousness to the whole that loses the individual like an atom in a wheel-barrow.

Speaking of some of the features, George W. Trendle, general manager, remarked to The Motion Picture News representative: "Take note of the front of the balcony from the mezzanine. In front of each panel you see two small receptacles that look like the basis of small fountains. They are fountains, but not of water; they're fountains of light. Inside each basis is a powerful reflector. Arranged over each reflector are four bulbs, red, yellow, amber and blue.

"As you stand or sit here you cannot see those bulbs; they are so placed that patrons in the mezzanine and balcony cannot see them either. Yet, when they are lighted the reflectors throw their rays powerfully against the arches and dome above, and from there the light is thrown down in a flood of any color desired. By using bulbs of one color the electrician can give the whole house a yellow, red, or blue tone; or by using the bulbs in various combinations he can produce other colors.

John H. Kunsky of Detroit, one of the founders of the First National and proprietor of the Capitol

"That variability of lighting effects will be one of the chief features of the Capitol theatre. In the darkened house, it is difficult for patrons, coming in, to go about. The change from the light of the street to the darkened interior of the house is too sudden. We've eliminated that. In the first place the lights begin to lower from the moment the patron enters the lobby. The lights in the foyer are somewhat in conformity with the lighting in the auditorium and, by the time the patron has bought his or her ticket, passed through the foyer and is ready for a seat, their eyes have been accustomed to the lighting in the auditorium—they can see everything before them and everybody about them. Yet the picture apparently may be seen just as well as if the house were in more darkness. We get that effect by throwing a light which we call a "blue haze." In this light objects are easily discernible all around, yet we believe it has no effect on the vision in looking at the screen. In fact, some say it improves the picture.

"And here's another thing to notice, in many theatres, the seats are set on a base which, when it comes adjacent to the aisle, stands up above the slope of the aisle and forms an edge over which patrons stumble. We have taken that obstruction out. Our architect has sloped the base so that it is flush with the aisle and offers nothing to stumble over. With this sloping of the seat to the aisle he has combined another feature. In most theatres the ventilation is achieved by means of fans installed at various points, some forcing fresh air in, others drawing the used air out. That system makes drafts and patrons often complain of catching

At the same time there is almost perfect distribution of fresh air throughout the theatre."

The auditorium is so big it has the atmosphere of a cathedral. Far up in the lofty ceiling is a great dome. Around it and reaching down to the proscenium in front and sloping down to the balcony in the rear is a vast and massive tracery of gold over a background of blue. It suggests the sky at night. The same idea—golden tracery over blue—is carried out in a series of great placques extending up the sides and across the proscenium arch. On both sides of the stage are great arches, their faces decorated with the same tracery which is also around the face of the balcony.

The curtain and the great draperies falling from the arches on either side of the stage are of the same old Italian rose seen in the fittings of the foyer.

The stage curtain is another example of the art that can be put into draperies. The curtain is of damask, the color scheme being old Italian rose. The curtain is 55 feet wide and hangs more than 50 feet from the arch to the footlights.

In the lighting scheme of the auditorium are contained 1,000 lamps while the foyer covers each carry 400 lamps and the foyer fixtures 100 lamps. The great stage border lights, each 50 feet long, contain 500 lamps, while the double row footlights, some 53 feet long, contain 200 lamps. In the illuminated glass ceiling over the main foyer of the playhouse better than 1,000 lamps are used.

Situated within the Capitol building are 24 motors, used for one purpose or another in connection with the theatre and ranging anywhere from one-half to 40 horsepower.

A complete electric clock system, fire alarm, usher's signal system indicating the number of vacant seats in any section of the house, and a local telephone system with switchboard, represent some of the independent services which the Capitol theatre contains.

The stage setting of the new Capitol, based on a background showing the Bay of Naples, is capable of an almost infinite number of variations, depending on the arrangement, and to a large extent on the lighting used. It is one of the finest in the world.

There are some beautiful paintings in some of the panels in the foyer, which are the personal property of Mr. Kunsky, and represent a collection that have been many years in the gathering and in which Mr. Kunsky takes great pride.

Among the many features is the huge switchboard back stage. It is one of the largest in the country and towers some 12 feet above that section of the stage flooring to which it is attached.

The projection room is equipped with a battery of Motiograph De Luxe Projectors with high intensity arc lamps. Each projector is equipped with a Baush and Lamb Cinephor objective lens, speed indicator, footage meters, pilot lamp in both mechanism and lamp house. The projectors are of blue enamel finish. The installation is complete in every respect. The picture, 21 by 16 feet is thrown a distance of 144 feet on a Raven half tone screen. Ira D. Jackson, Motiograph representative, received many compliments on his work in supervising this installation.

On the opening night magnificent floral pieces of all sizes and descriptions were banked in the lobby, the foyer, the stairs to the mezzanine and on the stage, so numerous they were from friends of Mr. Kunsky and Mr. Trendle, from all parts of the world.

The staff of the new Capitol will be: John H. Kunsky, president: George W. Trendle, general manager and secretary; Thomas D. Moule, theatre manager in charge of bookings and general supervision; Howard O. Pierce, in charge of advertising, exploitation and presentation; William Fishwick, organist; Ray Johnson, chief electrician, and Eduard Werner, orchestra leader.

The success of John H. Kunsky reads like a fairy tale. He started 15 years ago and operated the first motion picture house in Detroit, seating 200, on Monroe avenue. From that he gradually increased his holdings until he has today over a dozen Detroit theatres. The "man behind" has been George W. Trendle, associated with Mr. Kunsky. He started with Mr. Kunsky as a bookkeeper but went to the Detroit College of Law at night. When he had finished school he opened a law office and as a side line handled the legal work for Mr. Kunsky. Realizing his broad knowledge of the amusement business, Mr. Kunsky persuaded Mr. Trendle to devote his entire time to the Kunsky Enterprises and became the active manager. Today Mr. Trendle not only devotes his entire attention to the interests under his charge but he has become financially interested to a great extent in the various Kunsky ventures.

Simplex Steps Out in Non-Theatrical Field

During the past few months, the Precision Machine Company, Inc., manufacturers of the Simplex Projector, have made wonderful progress in the non-theatrical field. Many projectors being installed in private homes, community clubs, schools and churches.

These installations mean much to the industry in general for they are bound to increase the demand for film and equipment which is necessary in the presentation of motion pictures, such as carbons, incandescent lamps, film cement, etc., wherever a projector is installed.

While space will not permit a listing of the activities of the entire Simplex organization we are enumerating below a number of the installations to show how thoroughly this field is being covered by the Simplex distributors.

In California, the Los Angeles branch of the Argus Enterprises, Inc., have installed Simplex Projectors in the homes of W. R. Hearst, San Luis Obispo, Cal., Mme. Nazimova, Hollywood, Cal. and also in the home of William de Mille, the well-known director. The Arlington School, Arlington, Cal., was also Simplex equipped by Argus.

Mr. E. C. Anthony, Pacific coast representative for the Packard Motor Car Company, had Simplex Projectors installed in his home at Burlingame, Cal., by the Western Theatre Supply Company of San Francisco, Cal., as did Dr. Harry L. Tevis, Alma, Cal. The McKinley Park School, Reno, Nev., and the St. Jarlath Church, Fruitvale, Cal., were also recently supplied with Simplex Projectors by the above company.

The report of the Western Theatre Equipment Company, Seattle, Wash., also shows good results, having recently installed Simplex Projectors in the Methodist Church and Elks Club at Seattle, Wash. The High School, Olympic, Wash., and the Normal School, Cheney, Wash., have also just been Simplex equipped.

Through the Middlewest the following installations of Simplex Projectors been made: Consolidated School, Medford, Minn., by the Teco Products Mfg. Company, Minneapolis, Minn.; M. E. Church, Denison, Iowa, by the Des Moines office of the Argus Enterprises, Inc.; Madison Vocational School, Madison, Wis., by the Milwaukee office of the Exhibitors Supply Co., Junior High School, Oklahoma City, Okla.,

National Anti-Misframe League Forum

DEAR SIR:

I would like to correct my mistake in my last letter to you. I have made a mistake in the throw. The throw is 80 Orpheum Theatre, 95 St. Joseph's Auditorium. I am sending my photo, as I have said I would send you one. Kindly send me one of the new membership buttons. Also let me know what is the cost of them and I will send you the money as soon as I receive the button. Just a few days ago I received a film and it was in bad condition. Every two or three feet apart the sprocket holes were torn about two inches on one side and about one and one-half inches on the toher side, and caused the film to jump out of the frame and sometimes break. It was that way almost for a half a reel and also the last reel, instead of having the end on it, had end of part five. And that made the people think I cut the last reel off. But I have sent it out in the best condition.

Guess I will close for this time. I remain,

Yours for better projection,
ANDREW J. GMITTER.
82 E. Third St., E. Mauch Chunk, Pa.
Projectionist, N. A. M. L., No. 1517.

GENTLEMEN:

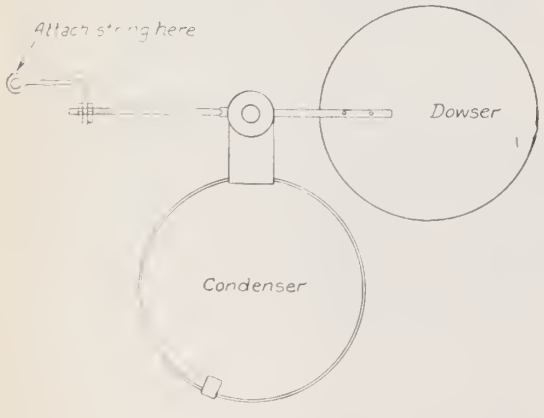
I think that the national anti-misframe league is a very good thing to belong to. And I think that if every projectionist would join it, misframes would be done away with altogether.

I have been operating at one of the War Department theatres here in camp for quite a while and I must say that some of the film I get are full of misframes.

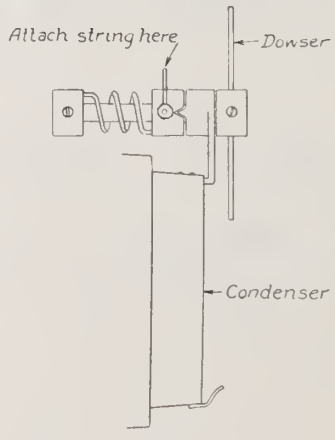
I want you to put me down as a member and I will do all I can to make it better.

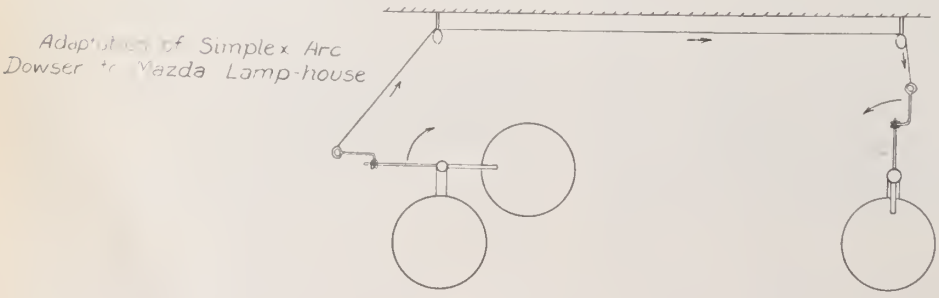
Very truly yours,
GEORGE W. VOSS.
Camp Dix, N. J.

Dear Ed.



I'm not as busy tonight as I've been for the last two weeks so will contribute my several lines to the columns.





Andrew J. Gmitter

CORRECTION.

In our February 4th issue, a problem was solved for the method of figuring 2,000 feet of film on a 14-inch reel. Some of the projectionists noted an error for which we can offer no excuse excepting that of an oversight. We assumed 81 layers of film to the inch and 11½ inches of thickness for the reel or a total of 81 x 11½ turns. However, the turns should only be counted on one side of the reel. Then the actual number of inches of layers is 5¼. Under the assumed conditions of the problem we would have only 1,000 feet of film on this reel.—Ed.

Occasionally I read of equipment with which other members are privileged to work but so far I don't believe I have heard anyone say that they are using a Mazda projector lamp. There are several different makes of Mazda adaptors, I believe, but mine is made by the General Electric Co. The reason I state the make is because I am hoping there is some one else who has worked with them and can tell me whether or not some kind of an automatic dissolver is possible with the kind of a dowser that is used. I have of course experimented with various devices with a view to a more perfect change over but these were just a system of strings and proved satisfactory only to a certain extent. I should like to hear of some one else's experiences.

I beg to remain,

GLEN SMITH,

Dear Members:

Brother Smith asks for suggestions along the lines for change-overs for Magda equipments. One layout with which I am acquainted and which gives very good results, is as shown in the diagram "Figure A."—ED.

DEAR EDITOR:

Enclosed find my application to N. A. M. L., which I have been intending to send to you for some little time.

I have always done or seen that all misframes were taken out, and this place never punches a hole in any film, but the greatest trouble we have is with the exchange and their old reels. They mash the side of the film so that it makes the film in bad shape.

Well, I am hoping that my application is accepted, so let me know soon. Will ring off for this time. Here's to the N. A. M. L. and the other fellows.

A. ERNEST LAMKIN, JR.
Stockton, Kansas.

I am enclosing another application signed by my relief operator. He has been reading our forum letters and wishes to become one of us. I guess my former letters must have hit the scrap basket, but as long as I can read those of the other boys I am satisfied with their "kick" and "push." This department should grow to a size that the progressive exhibitor will sit up and listen, for where would he get his show if it wasn't for the projection room his operator maintains for him.

P. S.—This film came in uninspected, so here is some of what I found while looking it over before the operators tried to run it. I removed nine misframes and several places of pulled sprocket holes. Who's guilty?

DEAR SIR:

Your letter received at same date. Was glad to get a reply from my letter. I have been experimenting on a Powers 6B head about a year. I am trying to put two intermittent movements on the head, both to work on same shaft at the same speed. This invention will make it so that if the sprocket holes on a film are broken on each side for not more than three inches the film will go through all right. The worst trouble a projector has with condition of films are bad patches and sprocket holes torn on both sides. The parts for which I am making now for this invention are made out of wood. I hope to be able in a few weeks to send you a few blue-prints on them, and that in a few months I will have everything working satisfactory. If I get this through it will be the greatest improvement that could be put on a head to make better projection and less trouble for its projector. Hope that you will publish this as soon as convenient in the operators' part of your Motion Picture News, and if any operator can give me any new ideas I will be glad to hear from them. I remain,

Yours truly,
L. C. Maire.

Chief Proj., Fairfax Theatre.
L. A. T. S. E., Local 619.

However, admitting that an extra intermittent would allow most film to run through regardless of the sprocket holes, it still remains a question if the idea is practical. Every time an added piece of mechanism is used the possible troubles with the machine magnify. An intermittent is not like an extra leg on a machine, but carries the probabilities of trouble. However much the editor dislikes discouraging the progressive projectionist, still he feels that the above idea is not at all practical.

Dear Editor:

Thanks for the info on Paramount condensers.

Am enclosing application for membership for the N. A. M. L. Hope it goes in O. K.

The inspectors in the film exchanges should work in the projection room for a while. Maybe they would take more pains to inspect the film and put leaders on the end of the reels.

Have a little suggestion to make to Bro. J. W. Schmock, who, in the Jan. 28th issue of the News, asked for help on the upkeep of motor generator sets. See that the oil cups are full. Use a canvas cloth for cleaning commutator of generator. Get a piece of paraffin and touch lightly on commutator two or three times a week. Never use oil. When commutator gets black and dirty take brushes out and clean them and use a piece of "00" sandpaper on commutator (while generator is running and the brushes are still out). Do not press heavy on the sandpaper—just enough to smooth and clean the commutator.

Excuse long letter and hope these suggestions will help Bro. Schmock.

Sincerely,
George E. Wise.

Hipp Theatre, Williamson, W. Va.

Brother Schmock can also secure some very valuable information on motor generator sets in the article appearing on page 647 of the Jan. 21 issue of the Motion Picture News.

Junior Seat Indicator

A small electrical seat indicator now being marketed by the Guerin Theatre Seating System eliminates the old method of trying to signal with the fingers, just how many seats, and what their positions are, that are vacant way down a dim aisle, when there is an impatient crowd in the back of a theatre waiting to be seated.

These indicators look somewhat like an ordinary camera, and hang from a strap which is slung about the usher's neck, thereby allowing it to fit at about the waist, where it is in position to be used at any time without any inconvenience.

The actual signaling as to how many vacant seats exist and whether they are singles, doubles or triplets, is produced by either a red spot on the face of the indicator, which means one seat is vacant, or a number of white spots, which correspond to the number of seats together that are vacant.

By this means, an usher down the aisle looking for vacant seats can accurately signal the usher holding the crowd at the head of the aisle, just how many seats are vacant in any row, and whether they are singles, doubles, or whatever combination they are in, then the usher can allow waiting patrons to the number of vacant seats signaled, go down to occupy these seats.

It can readily be seen how much confusion and inconvenience can be avoided by these indicators, as it is frequently almost impossible to tell by finger signaling how many seats are vacant and what position they are in, and when several patrons go down the aisle expecting to occupy seats together and find there is only one, owing to a mistake being made by the usher holding the crowd in the number of fingers that were held up signaling the number of seats vacant, it does not create the friendliest feeling on the part of these disappointed patrons.

Another feature in favor of these seat indicators is when people begin crowding the rear of the theatre awaiting their turn to be seated, it becomes imperative that they be seated with the utmost dispatch, as time and again people on the outside about to buy tickets will imagine that the theatre is absolutely crowded, and go to another house, when, as a fact, more than enough seats are vacant throughout the house to seat this waiting crowd of standees, if there was only some way to quickly indicate where the vacant seats were.

This new evolution in the seating of patrons also furnishes another most valuable asset that can be exploited by the theatre installing them, "the patron's comfort," as human nature follows the line of least resistance, and people will naturally show their preference and pay admissions to the theatre where they know they will be seated without confusion and noise, and what is more, the public is always looking for something new, that it can see being operated, and this is something they cannot only see, but appreciate as well, as it has a direct bearing on their comfort, as it is no fun waiting in a crowded theatre for seats.

The indicator is very light in weight and can be easily carried about without any inconvenience by a girl usher.

Film Moistener and Scraper

A new and novel device is being offered by the Ott Sales Company. Namely a combination moistener and scraper which has at one end a tube for water and cap with felt insert for moistening, at the other end a blade for scraping. All the parts are interchangeable and it has nickel plated finish.

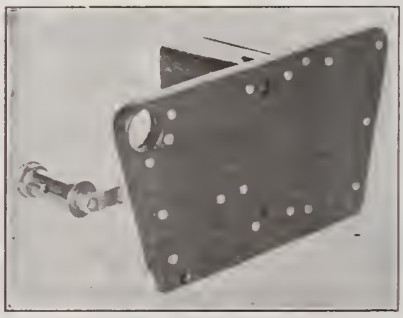
This device is invaluable to all users of film. In order to make a good joint Emulsion must be entirely removed and film properly scraped before Cement is applied. Thus doing away with the old method of using razor blades, wet cotton, and other means.

The Ott Sales Company informs us that they will shortly put out other labor saving devices and accessories.

Make it a rule to gently but firmly refuse to allow standing in the exits. Post a sign to this effect, as it will stimulate business, patrons knowing they will not jeopardize their safety to accommodate the box-office.

NO MORE RAZOR BLADES, WET COTTON, ETC.

To make a good joint the emulsion must be entirely removed and film properly scraped before cement is applied.



All this the OTT COMBINATION MOISTENER AND SCRAPER does to perfection

Brightening Up the Lobby

The Frankel Amusement Company has purchased the Empress theatre, one of the two burlesque houses in Cincinnati. Announcement has been made of a complete change in policy. Beginning Saturday, January 28th, continuous vaudeville and first-run pictures will be featured.

Prices will be 10 and 20 cents.

The Empress has been renovated inside and out. Realizing the necessity for competing on an even-Steven basis with all other houses in downtown Cincinnati, the Frankel interests have followed their lead in "brightening up" the lobby. Newman brass frames have been selected as best, and a complete set of unit (side-wall) frames, 3-sheets and photo cabinets has been installed.

Lobby Displays

In all of the six moving picture theatres of Cumberland, Maryland. not one has other than the usual lithographic (one and three sheet) lobby display. Can you picture a city of 30,000 lacking the ordinary lobby display?—BARNETT.

White's Prairie Schooner Exploits "White Oak" Nicely

When "White Oak" played the Rex theatre, Sumter, S. C., Manager Oscar White set his thinking cap at work and originated some exploitation that stimulated business greatly.

Feeling that Hart needed a boost in Sumter, Mr. White conceived a plan to wake his prospects up a bit and, incidentally, stimulate business. He borrowed from a local liveryman a two-horse wagon and had it covered to represent the old-time Prairie Schooner. On this he had painted:

"Ye Olden Times"
"To California or Bust"

while underneath this in big red letters:

"Wm. S. Hart in WHITE OAK."

The wagon was driven all over town and finally stopped in front of the theatre, where the mules were unhitched and the wagon pulled across the sidewalk into the lobby. A collection of such articles as are necessary for a cross-country trip, for instance, an old gun, a pick, shovel, coffee pot, frying pan, bucket, etc., were also placed in the lobby.

This particularly stimulated the attention of all the old-timers in town.

This cut shows a portion of a specially painted 24 sheet used recently by the California theatre, Los Angeles, in which the Christie comedy, "A Barnyard Cavalier," was given extra conspicuous billing

Dignified "Disraeli" Campaign Put Over By Finke

WHEN Manager D. H. Finke put on "Disraeli" at the new Bellevue theatre in Niagara Falls, N. Y., he exploited the production in a dignified manner. One of the features of his campaign was a private showing of the production for some 300 educators from both sides of the Niagara. At this screening the manager asked his guests to note their impressions of the picture on cards. These criticisms were later used in ads. placed by Mr. Finke in 'Falls papers. All the teachers and principals were deeply impressed by the picture, said Mr. Finke, and many of them recommended it highly to their students.

Public Schools Help Winks on "Connecticut Yankee"

Ray Winks, manager of the Sigma Theatre, Lima, O., used the school children of his city as a means to some excellent mouth-to-mouth advertising in connection with the showing of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

Because of the fact that several classes in the public schools were studying the works of Mark Twain at the time of the engagement of the picture, Mr. Winks found it an easy matter to tie up with the school authorities in conducting his exploitation campaign. Accordingly, it was announced through the teachers in Lima's elementary and high schools that the Sigma Theatre would offer a special matinee for school children only, on the day prior to the opening of the scheduled run. Instead of the regular admission of 25 cents, the price was reduced to 10 cents for the "kids" matinee.

As a result whole classes turned out accompanied by their instructors, and the box-office returns which followed this showing justified the extra pains taken by the management.

Inexpensive Stunts Sell "What Do Men Want?"

Some good exploitation helped John W. Creamer, manager of the Pert theatre, Gillespie, Ill., put over "What Do Men Want?" in fine shape.

Mr. Creamer began his campaign by painting a big question mark with the title running through it on the mirrors of the lobby doors. The title was in red and the question mark in blue.

A quantity of smaller question marks were cut from card board and after being painted were hung in the lobby. Four teaser slides bearing the title of the picture and nothing else were next in order. The first slide bore the word "What" and the following three, the other words of the title. The slides were not run in rotation but were sandwiched in between advertising slides. Later, four explanatory slides were used to follow each of the teaser slides.

A lobby display also helped sell the picture. Mr. Creamer painted a special one-sheet and a special cut-out display, in which a woman was shown pulling aside real lace curtains revealing such words as wealth, love, home, etc., painted on tissue paper. Behind the tissue paper was another big question mark also of original design.

It was inexpensive exploitation but it sold the picture to excellent business according to Mr. Creamer's report.

Miller Builds Another Effectiv Lobby Display

Manager Frank Miller of the Modjeska theatre, Augusta, Ga., played "Get-Rich-Quic Wallingford" for a two-day run recently, wit a most effective lobby display.

Some two months ago, one of Augusta's leac ing banks failed most spectacularly. Naturall the subject is quite fresh in the minds of th city—and will be for some time to come.

So Manager Miller secured a quantity of th canvas money-bags used by this bank, with th name printed across the bags in black letter These were stuffed with rocks, and bulged ver realistically. These were piled about a boxe in space in the lobby. Bales and bundles o paper money, fastened with markers from th same ill-fated bank, were scattered carelessl around.

The boxed-in space was triangular in appear ance, and was formed by a double line of smal cut-out wooden figures to represent messenge boys in perspective—those at the apex of th triangle being very small, those at the other en larger. Each of these messenger boys wore besides his uniform, a wide grin, and was trun dling a wheel-barrow full of "money." They were all headed towards two life-sized cut-out of "Wallingford" and "Blackie," who stood engaged in earnest consultation, in the center of the lobby.

The usual stock paper completed the display

Bill Dillon Has a New One for "What Do Men Want?"

William A. Dillion, manager of the Strand Theatre, Ithaca, N. Y., has a large number of the students at Cornell as his patrons, and it is because he is always thinking up some new kink in bringing a picture to their attention. When "What Do Men Want?" played at his house for three days recently, Mr. Dillon sent the following telegram to each fraternity house on the campus:

What Do Men Want the First Half of the Week That They Won't Get on the Last Half? —Mr. Ufindout, Strand Theatre.

The result was a generous response to this message on the part of the students.

Window display on "The Conquering Power" secured for the showing of this picture at Loew's Palace theatre, Washington, D. C.

Answering a Big Editorial Question from the Motion Picture News

By the way, isn't it about time for a drama of the American Revolution? We've seen a lot about the French Revolution. Has every one forgotten America?

How about the midnight ride of Paul Revere—the flash of signals—the tramp, tramp, tramp of the long line of British redcoats—the tumbling out of the farmers, over fields and along stone walls—the rattle of pot shots—the volleys—the lone rider again along the black country lanes, cape flying in the wind—the lights in the houses—the gathering storm of freedom—the girl awaiting rescue—the lone rider again—the desperate battle—the rescue—crescendo, whoop, bang!

Here's Griffith suspense for you. And the American flag waving over it all!

Need we go abroad for historical drama?

Why I Show Paramount Pictures

By J. E. Madsen, Idaho Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho

RECENTLY I signed contracts for Paramount Pictures, and after having used them with success here I want to congratulate you on your splendid output.

Looking over the various brands on the market, I selected Paramount for these three reasons:

1. Splendid line of attractions
2. National advertising
3. Exploitation experts

People are now coming to this theatre who never came before.

From the favorable comments we have heard we see no reason why the Idaho theatre should not be a 100 per cent Paramount theatre.

who starred ten years ago in "Queen Elizabeth," the first Paramount Picture

More than 10,000 theatres and twenty million picture-goers are joining this month in the celebration of

PARAMOUNT'S TENTH ANNIVERSARY

The history of Paramount is the history of the screen

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, whose trade-marked product is Paramount Pictures, have, in ten years, changed the screen from a one- and two-reel flickering stunt to the nation's entertainment and a great

The name Paramount stands for whatever is best in motion pictures

Paramount has gathered every kind of talent necessary to make better pictures, whether they be talents of Direction, of Drama, of Literature, of Acting, of Photography, of Mechanical Inventiveness, or the talent of Organizing all these on a great scale and regularly Delivering the Results to more than 11,200 theatres.

That's why this tenth birthday is worth ... You are going to enjoy it if ... Showmen in your town ... their way!

TEN years ago Adolph Zukor saw in the motion picture a thing of amazing possibilities. It was only a toy then, but he realized that if it were properly developed it could become a world factor, an international language, a medium of entertainment and education such as the world had never known!

He felt that the public would be satisfied with nothing less than the greatest artists, and he was fortunate enough to secure Sarah Bernhardt, the world's greatest actress, whose name is a legend of the ultimate in drama, for his first five-reel picture. She starred in "Queen Elizabeth," the first Paramount Picture and the first modern feature picture!

"Queen Elizabeth" was quickly followed by that wonderful ... play of Jesse L. Lasky's and C... DeMille's, "The Squaw Man." ... were the auspicious begin... Paramount.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

March 4, 1922

This month marks the tenth birthday for Paramount

PARAMOUNT'S history is the history of motion pictures.

Ten years ago a motion picture was a crude, flickering thing of one or two reels shown in an old store.

Today it is the national entertainment!

What is it that has lifted the screen to such a high plane? Paramount's tremendous organization, which has created an endless chain of great shows for every theatre whose audiences want the best.

Paramount has lifted screen art a little higher every season for ten years, until today you may see such superb triumphs of Paramount's art as Cecil B. De Mille's "Fool's Paradise," Wallace Reid in "The World's Champion," and Gloria Swanson in "Her Husband's Trademark."

This anniversary is being celebrated this month by more theatres showing more Paramount Pictures than ever before. See the newspapers for your theatre's program.

Your theatre manager wants to give you what you want to see. Go to him and say:

"Whenever you are going to show a Paramount Picture let me know. I'll be there." He will be glad to do it.

Cecil B. DeMILLE'S "FOOL'S PARADISE"

A FALSE French love leads a brave young American a strange trail in this new masterpiece of Cecil De Mille's.

The plot is as amazing as anything ever schemed by Balzac or DeFoe, and yet the whole glittering, thrilling drama seems a real, a possible happening.

Imagine her great love forcing her to have him operated on—and then, seeing, he spurns her and leaves on his fanatic search of the globe for the fair, false dancer!

At one point you see him in competition with the Prince of Siam. The French siren tries to play with them both throws her glove into the pit of famished crocodiles and says she will award herself as prize to the man who gets it.

The next five minutes are more thrilling than three-quarters of all the photoplays ever released.

The settings surpass all the previous gorgeous De Mille productions. See the marvelous ice ballet—the snow queen's palace—the riotous temple dances of Siam! Beauty of women—beauty of sets—beauty of gowns.

Like all Cecil De Mille's Productions "Fool's Paradise" is a treasure house of daring dramatic power—"shots" of unexampled photography—a richness of "putting on" which is to ordinary work as a sunrise is to a cheap lithograph.

You can sit back in your seat and simply thrill and revel in "Fool's Paradise."

It is there with a million dollar impact, and it lifts the great reputation of Paramount Pictures just one notch higher.

"Fool's Paradise"—was pre-released in New York City at the Criterion Theatre at $1.50 and $2.00 a seat. The sign "Standing Room Only" was busy most of the time.

What the Newspapers Said:

"Fool's Paradise" ... will keep you on the edge of your seat at least three times during the course of the picture. —N. Y. Sun

"One of the big films of the year." —Phila. Bulletin.

"Gorgeous movie effects, superb photography ... splendid artistic originality." —N. Y. Evening Mail.

"The Criterion is still at Broadway & 44th St. Everybody is really worth the trip." —N. Y. Evening World.

"Absorbing play in pictures ... Criterion Street and the film director of loving to put the screen." —N. Y. Herald.

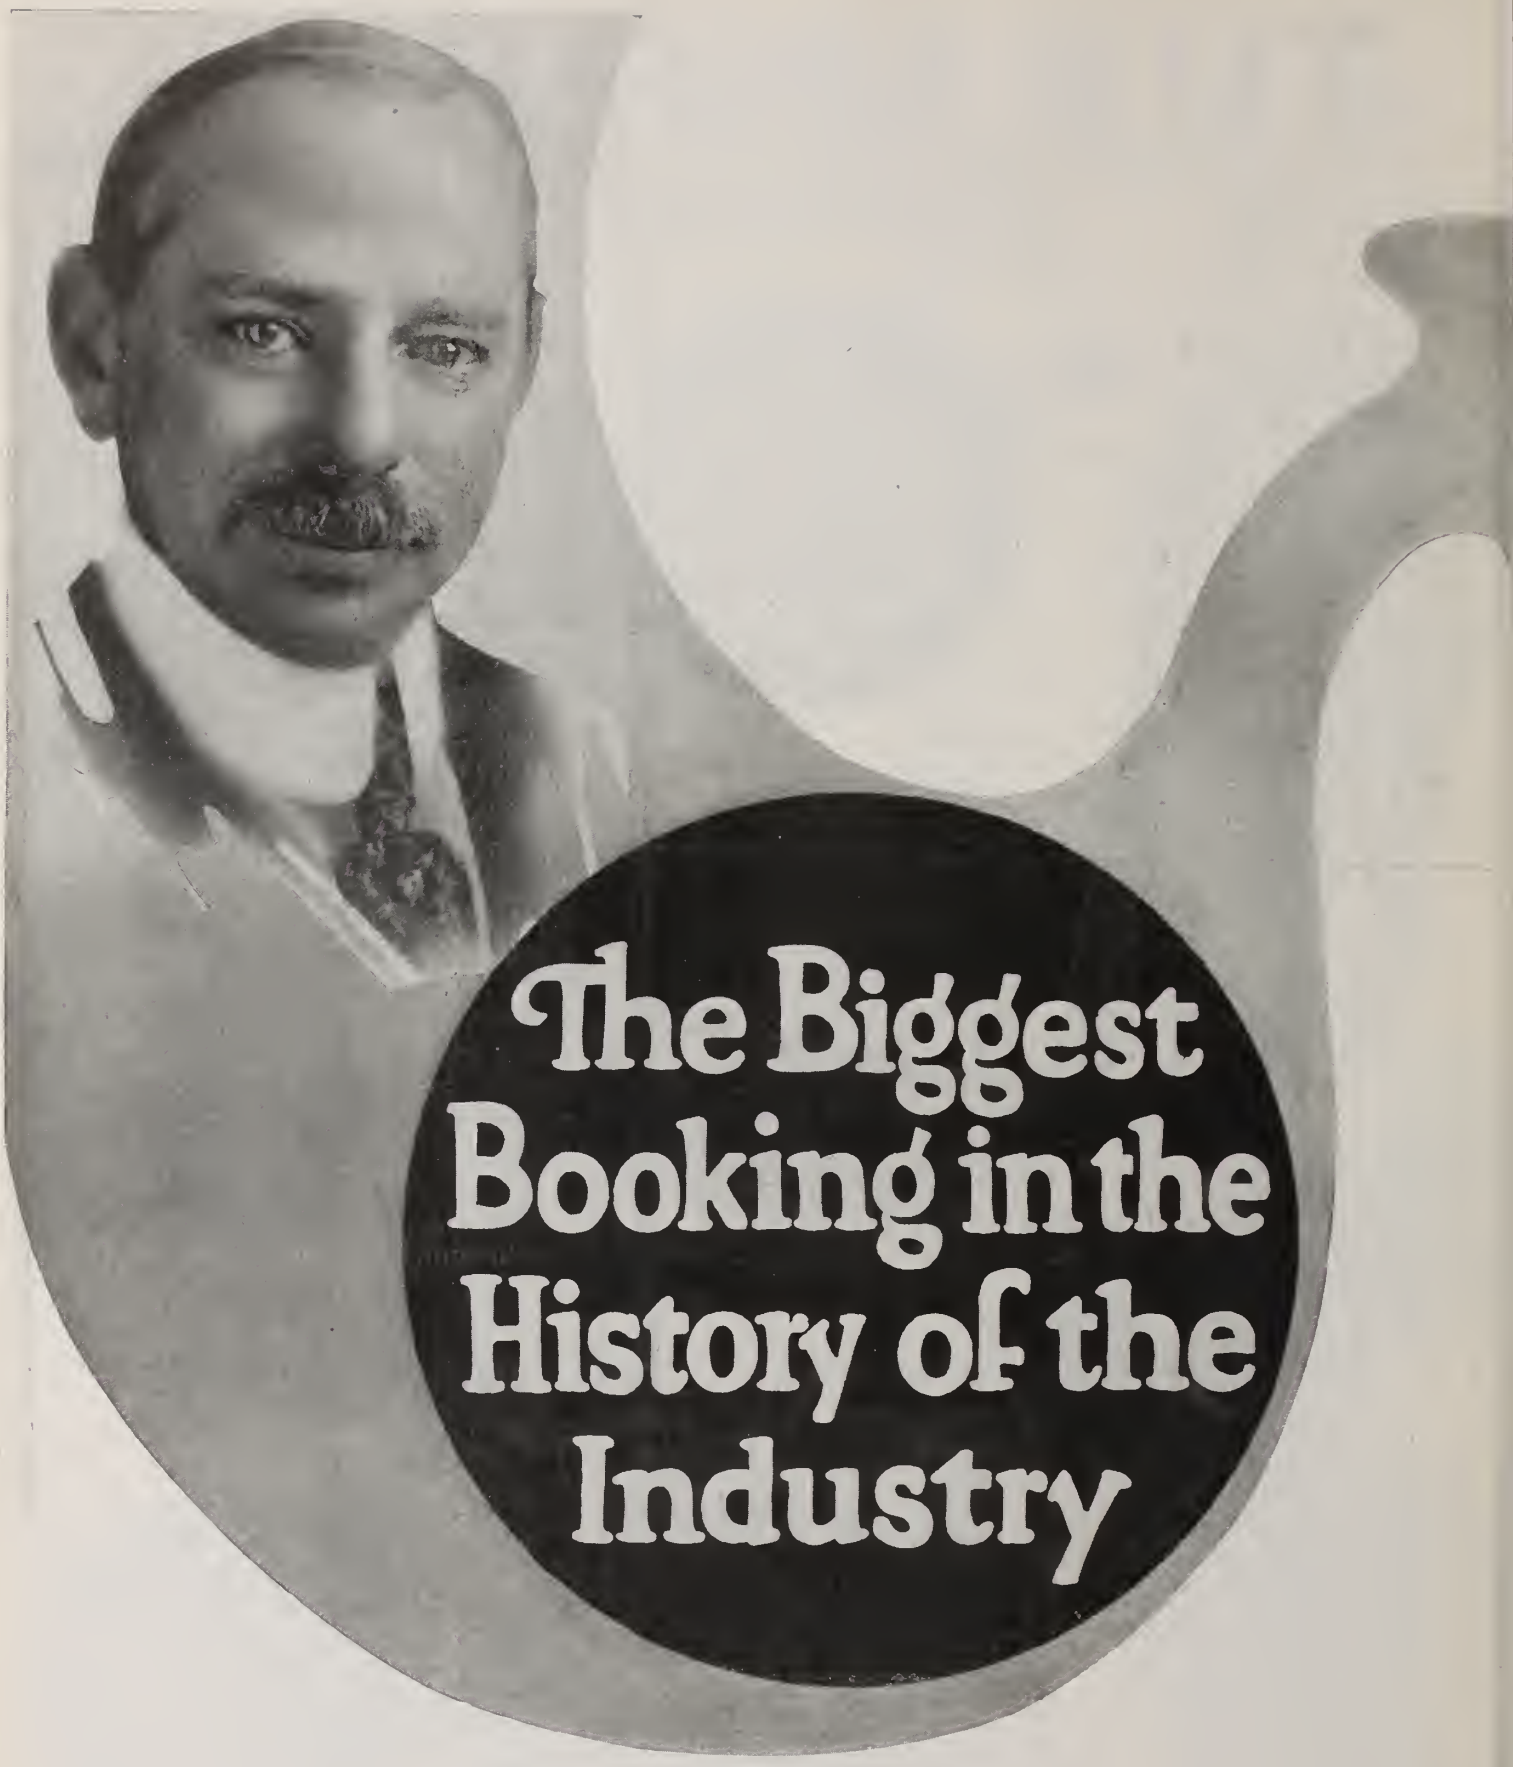
PARAMOUNT'S 10th

THE MONTH

MARCH will be the biggest month in the history of the industry.

This is the tenth anniversary of the birth of the feature picture. In 1912 Adolph Zukor presented Sarah Bernhardt in "Queen Elizabeth," and out of that has grown the mighty industry which supplies the chief entertainment of the entire world.



So the whole country will join in the celebration of Paramount's Tenth Birthday.

Three full pages in the Saturday Evening Post, and advertising in 906 newspapers, will start the public looking for theatres showing Paramount Pictures.

Five million souvenir booklets, given free to exhibitors for distribution, supply the direct theatre tie-up with the national advertising.

SPECTACULAR! That's the way to describe this amazing feature. It is a rare combination of romance, thrills and startling adventure. Its unusual story tells of a half-crazed dreamer who attempts a revolution against the United States in Southern California and a heroic bad man who matches wits with him. Its cast includes Jack McGowan, Jean Perry, Florence Gilbert, Helen Holmes, Andrew Waldron and others. Not until the end can the audience decide whether the star is hero or outlaw.

You seldom see such reckless riding, action, daring, heart-throbbing romance and clever intrigue.

Here is a sure-fire attraction. Its whirlwind climax will leave them standing up and you'll know from the noise how big it went. It's wonderful good entertainment for your theatre.

PHENOMENAL BUSINESS

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 24, 1922.

J. D. Williams, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., 6 West 48th Street, New York.

" Stardust " just finished phenomenal week's business at the Rivoli, turning them away at every night performance. Last night of week's engagement box offices stopped selling tickets at seven-forty-five and hundreds were turned away. Compelled to call for extra police to turn away those waiting in line for a block and a half at both box offices, and who couldn't get in. Unanimously declared a great picture by the press and public. In my opinion it is a box office attraction that every franchise holder should lose no time in booking to stimulate his business.

PICTURE PLEASES ALL

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 11, 1921.

Associated First National Pictures, Inc., 6 West 48th St., New York City, N. Y.

" Stardust " was received most favorably by press and public. Any number of our patrons liked the picture better than story. I personally believe that changes made from original story helped the picture. Our business improved last week, which indicates that picture pleased.

WENT OVER BIG

Boston, Mass., Feb. 6, 1922.

J. D. Williams, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., 6 West 48th Street, New York.

Hope Hampton and her picture, " Stardust," went over big. Turned them away at all performances at Fordon Washington Street Theatre. Is a wonderful picture, and Miss Hampton's magnetic personality has won the city. " Stardust " has proved great box office attraction. Franchise holders can look forward to turn away business when it plays in their theatres.

Motion Picture News

The Exhibitor's Opportunity

A SHORT time ago we stated in a small paragraph what seems to us a big truth.

In effect it was this: that if the exhibitor doesn't want to see the picture go to the school and church he must bring the school and church to the picture theatre.

That is just one reason—a commercial one. The exhibitor does not want to lose this large patronage. And he need not.

But there are other reasons—and still greater ones.

If the exhibitor does not want censorship—everywhere, he must bring the school and the church to the picture theatre.

And so—if he wants his theatre to remain open on Sunday.

And so—if in general he wants to make his theatre the solid, prosperous and enduring institution it must and can be.

He must, in short, establish a full contact, a regular, intelligent and sympathetic relationship with the educational, religious and civic spirit and growth of his community.

* * *

The entire motion picture industry—all of its interests—need this public relationship as never before.

The need, in fact, is imperative and immediate.

It's the plainest nearest sign on the picture horizon today.

Last Fall the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association announced a department of Public Service. It was just this idea of a new public contact that its leaders had in mind.

The first plan offered was that of a free showing to school children, on Saturday mornings, of a program of industrial pictures. To prove to other exhibitors how feasible this is Messrs. Woodhull and Collins of New Jersey have just started regular Saturday morning shows, to which the local schools, women's clubs and civic societies have given their enthusiastic support. The first exhibitions were crowded.

Next, the M. P. T. O. A. adopted a regular weekly release, a picture magazine of general interest and instruction called "Movie Chats." It will have "tie-ups" with various welfare organizations, government bureaus and patriotic Societies. It is the exhibitor's weekly voice to his community, an evidence of his active association with public progress.

All of this is a big, fine, progressive step.

This important movement toward a closer, truer relation with the public is under way everywhere.

In Cleveland, Indianapolis, Memphis, Fort Wayne, Salt Lake City, Hartford, Minneapolis, Columbus, Atlanta, Providence, and in other communities exhibitors are working cordially and successfully with women's clubs, newspapers and school, church and civic organizations. Pictures are selected for the family circle and the children; lists are published in the local newspapers, together with articles on "better films." Meetings are held, efforts are made in every possible way to build up family patronage at the theatres.

If the exhibitor everywhere puts his best energies into this broader contact with his community—and certainly it is to his immediate financial advantage to do so—there will be no further development of official censorship; and the blue law reform will die a-borning.

Legislative reform begins from the top down. Its advocates must at least admit that—and all its fallacies and inefficiencies that inevitably follow this false start. To begin from the ground up is the right way—the American way. And that means simply, for each exhibitor "a full contact, a regular, intelligent and sympathetic relationship with the educational, religious and civic spirit and growth of his community." It isn't merely that this will kill legislative oppression: it is the fulfillment of the true and broad function of the motion picture theatre.

The motion picture is more than a show: it is the great maker, today, of public opinion. And that fact must be fully realized.

Censorship Measure Defeated in Virginia

But Mississippi Senate Passes Bill; Odds in House Seem to Favor Censor Board

VIRGINIA has again rejected censorship. Following a vigorous attack by Thomas Dixon, the author, on legalized censorship at a hearing before the Senate Committee on General Laws of the Virginia Legislature, on Monday, February 13th, the committee by a vote of six to three decided to table the censorship bill indefinitely. On Wednesday of last week, February 8th, another censorship measure introduced into the Senate of Mississippi was passed by the upper house of that state. The vote stood two to one in favor of the measure. It is now pending before the House where the odds seem to be decidedly in favor of its final passage.

At the hearing on Monday in Richmond before the Senate Committee on General Laws of the Virginia Legislature, able arguments against legalized screen control were made by speakers representing the producers, distributors and exhibitors. Thomas Dixon, the author, in a highly dramatic address, pointed out the absurdities of legalized censorship and the inadvisability of inflicting such legislation upon the public and the industry. Chairman Henning declared the committee had been greatly influenced by Mr. Dixon's masterly speech.

Other speakers were Windham Meridith, representing Jake Wells and other Virginia exhibitors; Mrs. Speed of the National Board of Review; Mrs. Channing Ward, a well-known club woman of Richmond and Mrs. J. E. Krise, Chairman of the Motion Picture Committee of the Parent Teachers Association and Mothers Congress of Virginia. Both Mrs. Ward and Mrs. Krise vigorously opposed the pending measure.

The campaign against censorship in Virginia has been directed by Jake Wells and, the Censorship Committee of the National Association. Jack S. Connolly, Washington representative of the National Association, has also aided materially in the campaign.

The professional reformers, headed by Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, have been centering their censorship activities upon Virginia for several weeks. Canon William Sheafe Chase has been stumping the state, and on Saturday, Dr. Crafts and his group appeared before the Senate Committee on General Laws, urged the passage of the censorship bill, and issued a tirade against the motion-picture industry.

Following a spirited and acrimonious debate, the Mississippi Senate, on Wednesday, February 8, passed what is believed contains the possibilities of being one of the meanest censorship bills in any state in the union. The vote stood two to one in favor of the measure, which now goes before the House of Representatives, where the odds seem to be decidedly in favor of its final passage into law. Passage of the censorship law is in keeping with the regular legislative recommendations of Governor Lee M. Russell, who called for such a measure emphatically in his opening address.

The board of censors, as the bill stands as it passed the upper chamber of the legislature, is to consist of three members. One of these is to be a school teacher; another a woman, to be endorsed by the State Federation of Woman's Clubs; and the third a minister of the Gospel. The school teacher is to be appointed upon the recommendation of the State Superintendent of Education, and the preacher upon the recommendation of the chief justice of the State Supreme Court. Each member is to be given a salary of $2,400 per year; to be derived from just what source does not seem so far to be quite settled, but presumably from a special license tax levied upon the exhibitors operating in the state, as recommended in the gubernatorial message.

One important amendment to the bill was forced on the floor of the Senate. That related to the right of the motion picture people to appeal from the judgment of the censors. It was finally inserted in the bill that where the motion picture interests considered themselves aggrieved they would be allowed to prosecute an appeal from the censorship board, first to the chancery court of Hinds County and thence, if they wish, to the Supreme Court of the State.

PEOPLE AND PICTURES

FIRST NATIONAL celebrates this week its Fourth Anniversary.

It is the anniversary of an idea—an idea which like other big ideas began in a little way and steadily grew till it rattled and reordered things in general.

Reminiscences are in order.

The writer can well recall a long letter received from J. D. Williams, some years ago in which he spoke at length of big theatres and little theatres and of a new order of events that was about due.

The letter was written from the West Coast and Mr. Williams was just starting out on a circle of the country, to sell the idea to exhibitors. He came back to New York and some exhibitors followed him here.

Then some small offices were opened at 18 East 41st Street. Just J. D. and a small clerical force. Then C. L. Yearsley who was with Mr. Williams in Australia came along.

It was tough sledding at first. The writer also recalls a lunch with J. D. and a long discussion of this same tough sledding.

But the idea went along. The industry began to talk a good deal about it. It's a good idea—about the best so far, everybody agreed; but, said everyone, a crowd of exhibitors like this will not stick together! That's the weak point!

Of course, if they do—; but then, they won't! It isn't possible.

But they did; and they are together. The idea held them together; and now it holds a very large number together; and the institution is a big and solid one.

With every idea, however, there are always men; if not, the idea however good doesn't get very far. It is often said that good men are a great deal scarcer than good ideas. Does anyone fully realize how true this is?

So we take this occasion to take off our hat—as we have often and frankly done in a verbal way before—to J. D. Williams, Harry Schwalbe, C. L. Yearsley and all those who have so sturdily and staunchly stood in the trenches of a mighty long and engaging struggle.

We are glad that the Rev. John Roach Straton of New York City elected the pulpit instead of the stage for a professional career. The church, of course, is not to be blamed for the Rev. Straton.

When the latter recently staged, or should we say, pulpited a debate between himself and Wm. A. Brady—this to take place at the Calvary Baptist Church on Sunday afternoon, Mr. Brady, who reluctantly came to the pulpit, pointed out that the place was not fitted for the debate the Rev. Straton has so long and persistently clamored for.

If the Rev. Straton's congregation wants Sunday entertainment may we not suggest that he use motion pictures? They are not so sensational it is true: but they are more instructive and certainly cleaner. They would not, for instance, dare to express silently the subjects of immorality so boomingly uttered by the Reverend Straton.

* * *

Julian Johnson, former editor of Photoplay Magazine, and who is recognized as a successful film production editor, will henceforth hang his hat in the Eastern office of Famous Players.

In the limelight this week at Albany: Charles O'Reilly and Sydney Cohen

Jesse Lasky has announced his appointment as manager of the Editorial Department of the concern.

There is something more than an idea behind the formation and production plans of Visuagraphic Pictures. Tarkington Baker, president of the new concern, has a purpose—one which if carried out persistently will ally many men of influence, who if not actually hostile, have previously shown no great friendliness for the industry.

The first important step has resulted in the signing of a contract with Science Service, an endowed institution of Washington, D. C., devoted to dissemination of scientific information in popular form, and an organization severely hedged about by ethical restrainments. With the assistance of this body, which numbers on its Board of Trustees, some of the most noted educators, and scientists in the country, a series of illuminating short reel pictures will be made.

Later it is contemplated to produce scenarios from the pens of such notables as Sir Oliver Lodge, Thomas A. Edison, Dr. Woods Hutchinson, David Starr Jordon and Mary Roberts Rinehart.

Jos. W. Farnham wishes to give him an earful of complaint. Complaint to the effect that he has never experienced such busy times. Says he is loaded up with agreements to edit and title pictures.

* * *

An interesting booklet replete with facts, figures and illustrations, has been issued by the Fox Film Co. It is really a history of the organization, leading the reader from the first days of the concern right down to the present. Profusely pictured are the studios and offices of the organization in New York, Los Angeles and Rome. It is really a compact history of eighteen milestones of progress of the picture industry.

It can scarcely be said that R. S. Cole and his associates have a pessimistic outlook. Not when their schedule of production and distribution activities for the year exceeds last years by 14%. Twenty-eight releases last year, and an estimated thirty-six for the present year ending in August, tells the story.

* * *

Whenever Carl Laemmle thinks of the cost of those sets in "Foolish Wives"—those Monte Carlo affairs which fill the heart with a longing to hop across the briny—he can find some consolation if he thinks of what happened when they made "Sodom and Gomorrah" over in Europe. It may be recalled that these two Biblical hamlets got a pretty rough deal when they didn't behave. So two beautiful film cities were built up. In due time they were to be fired or otherwise exterminated. And they were. Only they caught fire before schedule time, and the cameras were not there.

* * *

Mabel Normand, unfortunately drawn into the Taylor case by having visited him the night of his death, has been completely exonerated of any connection with it by the District Attorney of Los Angeles. The "yellow" dailies must, perforce turn scandal pens in other directions now.

Charles O'Reilly Re-elected President of M. P. T. O. of N. Y.

Brandt Refuses Re-election; Other Officers Unchanged for 1922

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 16 (Special).

THE Albany convention of the M. P. T. O. of New York State opened with a record-breaking attendance and two definite plans in mind.

First, the reduction of film rentals; and second, the encouragement of the independent producer.

About 375 exhibitors and exchangemen were present, a special train from New York City bringing 105. The Albany hotels were filled to capacity.

John Boyd Thacher, city treasurer, acting for Mayor William S. Hackett of Albany, who was confined to his home with a severe cold, officially opened the convention at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening and extended the city's welcome to the exhibitors. Mr. Thacher said:

"It gives me great pleasure and I feel very highly honored indeed to have this opportunity in behalf of, and as the official representative of the Hon. William S. Hackett, Mayor of the City of Albany, who unfortunately can not be here today because of illness, to express to you a very hearty welcome and a very cordial greeting from the people of the city.

"It is particularly gratifying to me at this time, and I am speaking now rather from a personal standpoint than officially, to acknowledge the wonderful contributions to the understanding of art and literature and to the progress and development of education generally, made by the motion picture industry, and through the splendid services and interpretation of men and women of high ideals and worthy purposes.

Officers Elected

PRESIDENT, Charles L. O'Reilly, New York; treasurer, W. H. Linton, Little Falls; secretary, Samuel Berman, Brooklyn; vice-president at large, William Dillon, Ithaca; vice-presidents, Frank Koch, Rochester; Louis Buettner, Cohoes, Bernard Deherz, New York.

Among the resolutions adopted at the close of the convention was one designating the week of November 12, "Exhibitor's Week." Another decried the loan or gift by distributors of films for non-theatrical use in opposition to recognized exhibitors.

"It is a pleasure for me, and a very great pleasure, I assure you, to recall the wonderful response in time, in money, in work and in all other ways made, and willingly made, by many a star of the motion picture world, when bonds were to be sold, or funds were to be collected, or services were to be rendered during th late World War.

"It is also a great pleasure for me to say that because of the character of your work, you have a deeper conception and a keener realization of the problems of life, and a very evident and a very earnest desire to contribute to any movement which has for its end the cause of human happiness and the progress of humanity.

"It is also a further pleasure for me to say that despite certain criticisms, despite the fault of a few perhaps, you have generally won high places of esteem, affection and regard in the hearts of your fellowmen, not only because of your work, but because of those qualities of character which reveal a kindliness, a thoughtfulness and a consideration for others. You have contributed to the happiness of countless thousands and I feel sure that it is your evident determination to select and to screen only those subjects which will best serve those ends.

"I desire to again bid you a very hearty welcome on behalf of the Mayor and the people of this city, and to say to you that we will all be very glad if we can in any way contribute to the pleasure, to the happiness and to the profit of your visit here."

Committees Appointed

The following committees were announced at the opening session of the convention:

Committee on Laws and Legislation:
Chairman, Frank Koch, Rochester; and Messrs. Benton, Saratoga; Quittner, Middletown; Edelherz, New York City; Sanders, Brooklyn; Franklin of Buffalo; McFarlane, Canandaigua; Peyser, Staten Island; McCarthy of Hoosick Falls.

Committee on Ways and Means:

Highlights in Sydney Cohen's Address

"Since the last annual meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, many elements have entered into the motion picture industry which have a vital bearing on the Exhibitor. While in some relations disquieting influences have been suddenly thrust into our business, the fact always stands out most conspicuously that as Theatre Owners we have been entirely apart from every circumstance of a willful character which would in any way tend to alienate from us public confidence.

"The Theatre Owner has a better appreciation of his position now than was previously the case. He realizes now that his theatre is a community institution, a central point about which everything of consequence to the people about him revolves and advances. Theatre owners, because of this fact and the wonderful visualizing and publicity power of the screen, are fast becoming among the leading factors in all communities.

"You must exercise due caution that your screens are not used for mere partisan or political purposes or to inadvertently advance any line of propaganda injurious to the public. Your judgment, discretion and personal knowledge of community needs, will always enable you to avoid such conditions.

"This service will become so universally recognized as among the most valuable in the nation, that all fanatical attempts to injure our business will be met with popular disapproval and like other great utility agencies, the Motion Picture Theatre will stand forward in a position of absolute security.

"The engagement of Postmaster General Will H. Hays need not cause us any alarm. Your national officers met in Washington in January and issued a statement respecting Mr. Hays. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are in no way connected with any of the moves which led to the introduction of Mr. Hays into the business. We are not especially concerned about it and will deal only with such developments affecting us as may follow.

"We do not need the insidious aid of the professional reformer who smiles at evil and gloats over wrong while pretending horror, because of the notoriety it gives him in the exposure and attempted reform. No, we can handle this. Let us serve notice on the elements responsible that no picture containing the face, form or name of any person involved in these tragic and scandalous procedures shall be shown on our screens. Let us be our own censors in this regard.

"We hope to make 'Official Urban Movie Chat' the greatest step forward in our Industry. This reel will be the Screen Organ of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and helpful messages will go to the American public in each issue."

National Exhib. Convention May 8th, in Washington

THE national convention of the Motion Picture Owners of America will be held in Washington, D. C., May 8th to 12th, inclusive. This announcement was made during the week from the M. P. T. O. headquarters in New York City. It is expected that the coming convention will be the biggest exhibitor gathering held so far. Business of the first importance is to be transacted. Arrangements will be pursued to advance the M. P. T. O.'s public service work; plans will be laid to meet adverse legislation; and other measures designed to promote welfare of the exhibitor will be brought up for action.

A special appeal is made in the M. P. T. O. announcement to bring the ladies, as ample provisions are being made for their entertainment at the national capital. The following committee has been named to arrange for the convention:

W. A. True, Hartford, Conn., Chairman; W. A. Steffes, Minneapolis, Minn.; W. D. Burford, Aurora, Ill.; John Manheimer, New York; E. M. Fay, Providence, R. I.; E. T. Peter, New York; A. Julian Brylawsky, Washington, D. C.; Glenn Harper, Los Angeles, Calif; D. A. Harris, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Highlights in President O'Reilly's Address

"To my mind the greatest censor is the public. I do not believe and I know you do not believe that any three—or in fact any other group of men and women can honestly assume the moral guardianship of the great mass of people who enter our theatres daily.

"One of the great leading parties of the state has incorporated in its platform a plank opposed to this un-American restriction—the censorship of the screen. This was unsolicited by the industry or any part thereof, but it should be the duty of every theatre owner to leave no stone unturned to acquaint the people of the state of the issue, should it be presented at any coming election.

"The Movie Chats, the screen organ of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, will give us the proper medium of exposing to the people the dark-lantern tactics of some of these so-called and would-be reformers.

"After many conferences with the officers of the film clubs, an agreement was drawn whereby an equal representation of both organizations would sit as an arbitration committee in various disputes which arise between exhibitors and exchanges, and after a brief trial of this system, I am delighted to report that it is working harmoniously and with every evidence of success.

"Through the co-operation of our Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of the City of New York, and the Woman's City Club, an experiment was conducted during the past summer whereby these ladies who had the interest of children at heart, designated matrons to be at various theatres and children were admitted to three matinees each week, absolutely free of charge. . . . It is my hope that the committee on laws and legislation will take up this great subject, which means so much to the little ones, and present or recommend to the present session of the legislature a bill which, if passed, will safeguard the welfare of the child whether accompanied or unaccompanied, in theatres.

"The statements for yearly dues were mailed less than two weeks ago, and the ready response displayed in this abnormal business depression, through which we are now passing, is full evidence of the place this organization has in the heart of the theatre-owners of this state.

"No charity worthy of the name has been denied the fullest cooperation of the theatre owners of this state, and it has been my proud privilege with the officers and members of your executive committee to pledge and to work for these worthy causes to the extent that we have collected for needy charities in our theatres in the state of New York, considerably over a million dollars, which was utilized for the relief of the destitute.

"We have PROSPERED. We are STRONGER. We will grow stronger year by year, because the very foundation of our organization has been built on that motto—for the good of all."

M. P. T. O. Convention

Immediately following his opening speech Mr. Cohen launched another, presenting figures tending to show the loss exhibitors have sustained, and attacking United Artists for alleged "hold-up" methods.

Mr. Cohen said:

I want to take a little time and talk as one business man to another.

My interest in motion picture theatre owners, aside from being the President of your National Organization, of which I am very proud, is the fact that I have for a little man a considerable investment in this business that I have been trying to protect. My great interest in organization for the last few years was to prevent my moneys and the moneys of we all in the organization from being taken from us. The organization is developing. The morale is high. That is itself evidenced by the large number of substantial theatre owners here in these depressing times from all parts of this state.

I want to present to the attention of the motion picture theatre owners who are here the fact that the government statistics show for the year 1921 that the admission tax based on about a 10 per cent percentage of the receipts showed for the year 1921 receipts of $82,633,093. For the year 1920, $86,944,000. The admission tax was $4,000,000 less for the year. Based on 10 per cent means our admissions to theatres and places of amusement in this country were about $40,000,000 less in the year 1921, as contrasted with the year 1920; despite the fact that almost 1,200 new big theatres opened up throughout the United States. Now don't let's lose sight of the figures—that our receipts were $40,0000,000 less during the year.

The rental tax, which evidences the 5 per cent on the rental of films that we paid, shows for the year 1921 $5,902,731; 1920, $5,372,000. Six hundred thousand dollars more in 1921 than in 1920 on the 5 per cent basis, meaning a difference of $12,000,000 more paid in film rentals in 1921 than in 1920, despite a falling off in receipts of almost $40,000,000. That evidences the business conditions that we have been suffering from during the past year, and an analysis of these figures will show that the worst depression and the worst loss to the theatre owners were in the months of November and December and what we are suffering at this time.

The time has come for producers of film and distributors to reduce film rental prices to the theatre owner in order to keep the theatre owner in business. It is necessary, in my opinion, that the war that has been warred upon us for years by certain elements in this industry be stopped; that the warships that have been built by certain interests be scrapped; a disarmament, if you will; if not voluntarily, by force, so that this antiquated machinery, this business machinery that serves no purpose in this industry except to add to the cost of doing business for the exhibitor should be done away with to bring film prices down to the basis that will permit a man who has his money invested in a theatre in any part of this state or country to get an opportunity of getting a return on that investment.

A case was brought to me today by one of the theatre owners of this state which no doubt you will hear about tomorrow, relative to the tactics of the United Artists Corporation and their selling methods. I am with my own here and I can mention names. I know I will be protected, in case I need to be. I want to register our emphatic opposition and protest against the business methods of Hiram Abrams and the United Artists Corporation. Please do not misunderstand me. There isn't a thing personal about this at all. The personal equation in no way enters into this discussion. Hiram Abrams means nothing to me one way or another. But I contend that Hiram Abrams has a parasitical influence in this business. He puts nothing constructive in our business, nothing corrective, and he takes out far too much from we theatre owners for what he contributes to the industry.

Letters at National headquarters, we get anywhere from eight hundred to one thousand a week from theatre owners all over the United States. It is a wonderful opportunity to learn geography with the postmarks on these letters, and the protests have come in from theatre owners who have been waiting time and time again for an opportunity of playing these pictures.

May I just say a word about the New England situation insofar as Hiram Abrams is concerned. "Way Down East" reflects the character of that particular territory. Most of the scenes were made in New Hampshire. The theatre owners in the New England territory have been waiting almost two years for an opportunity to play this picture. Men up there have written to the Boston office or United Artists Corporation asking for an opportunity to play the picture. They would get a "stall" of one kind or another, or word that they later on would be afforded an opportunity, and without any notice to the theatre owners of New England, what happens? United Artists goes into town after town, engages the town hall and plays the picture on percentage in opposition to the theatre owner, not even giving those owners an opportunity to play these pictures they have been waiting for. What happens in the town where the men do put the picture on? The prices he exacts from the owner makes it impossible for the theatre owner to make money to stay in business and live, and that should not be permitted to continue by you substantial owners and other theatre owners of these United States. It isn't right. We theatre owners have helped make every one of these stars. They are just plain, ordinary beings. We have twenty-four sheeted all over the country; we have spent thousands of dollars on our screens and lobbies and rostrums and in our newspapers, popularizing these people, and why should they be permitted and why should we, as business men, permit them to continue these chaotic, destructive business methods that if eventually are not stopped will put too many men out of this business? I hope that this matter will be given the serious business consideration by the members of the motion picture owners association of New York so that immediate relief can be afforded to the theatre owners of this state. (Applause)

At our National Convention those of you who were there at Minneapolis will recollect that there was considerable discussion on the floor regarding a motion that was introduced providing for a corporation, so-called, to handle centralized distribution. This is the first opportunity I have had to report about the Minneapolis Convention to those of you who were not there. I want to say at that time considerable discussion came up about that matter and about twenty-three men spoke about it. It looked like an all-night affair until our very tactful and diplomatic friend, our State President, introduced a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee to give this matter consideration and attention and to report back the next day. I immediately appointed the twenty-three men who spoke for and against—13 for and 10 against, and the history of the meeting regarding that resolution was this. They convened at eleven o'clock at night after the banquet and sat in a meeting room until four in the morning and then these diversified interests came in with a unanimous report urging the formation of a corporation for the purpose of centralized distribution.

That was advice and warning and notice to certain interests in this business that the theatre owner was complaining of the high film rental prices and wanted relief, and the relief during the year afforded by those people was to double and treble our film rentals. The time has come where we must stop resoluting. Something definite must be done, because all over these United States our theatre owners are writing in along the same lines.

There has been some talk of an attempt of curtailment of production, that this company will only make fifty-two pictures this year; this company will not produce, and an attempt to limit production. I want to say to you all that you need entertain no fears regarding this proposition. Your National Organization have definite offers which have been submitted unsolicited of two of the biggest producing and distributing corporations, to turn over their entire plants to the motion picture theatre owners of America to work out this relief for the theatre owner, and also to help them from the business chaos they are in. We are also definitely offered by a large number of the most important producers, directors of pictures, independent producers and directors of pictures, to make for us motion pictures at prices that will yield them just a fair return on their investment and give an opportunity to every theatre owner to buy these films far below what these same films are being sold to us today.

These matters are being given consideration and you will hear more of same. Our purpose, and the purpose of the motion picture theatre owners of America is constructive. It is not destructive. We are formed for the purpose of protecting the financial investments of the motion picture theatre owners of America and we will resort to such business methods that will afford that protection.

We read so much lately in the trade-papers about a "Goldwyn" week and "Metro" week, and a "Paramount" week, and I think the time has come for an "Exhibitors' week." (Applause) I think the time has come to consider the exhibitor and give him a break. We have been the "poor boobs" too long. We are supporting a lot of swivel-chair, non-producing executives who are taking from this business much more than they ought to and that they can earn.

Might I call attention to an article I read in Wids, our leading daily, the other day. There was a discussion about Al. Lichmann—that is the Film Daily—there was a discussion about Al. Lichmann taking over the reins of general managership of First National and they couldn't get together and the reason being that all he wanted was $75,000 a year salary for that job, as general manager. In other words, the job means how much can I take from the exhibitor more than the fellow ahead of him. Pardon me, I owe you $25,000. It was $100,000. (Laughter) Now just think of it! Just think of $100,000 salary for Al. Lichmann to be general manager of First National? Why, we are all paying for it. It is all passed back to us, but it has become so burdensome that it is breaking our backs. Those salaries are all artificial; they are wrong, and they ought to be stopped.

Resolutions Offered

At the very outset of the Wednesday meeting, Jules Michaels of Buffalo, chairman of resolutions, offered a resolution demanding from film sellers a reduction of not less than 33 1-3 per cent from the 1920 prices on existing contracts, and empowering a committee to be named by the president to bring about the full influence of the organization towards securing this reduction.

No sooner was the resolution introduced than it brought out a wealth of discussion, led by State President Charles L. O'Reilly, who said that many houses in this state were losing money today through being compelled to pay too much for their pictures, and that unless something was done, that by spring a majority of these houses would be closed.

The whole discussion lasted for nearly two hours. Sydney Cohen, in the course of discussing the matter, declared that producing firms were spending too much money on their advertising and trade papers, and, in fact, that there were too many trade papers, and that many of these do not serve the purpose which they should. He also said that there was a sameness of pictures, and that one director would get a good idea and that ten others would ape him. He said that more money should be spent by producers in ways that would bring people to the theatres, and thus give exhibitors encouragement that was so much needed. The resolution was finally passed.

A resolution was introduced and later referred to the committee on laws and legislation, to introduce a bill in the New York state legislature to the end that children under the age of 16 years might be admitted to motion picture theatres where a chaperon was provided.

Condemn "Leech" Films

Another resolution was introduced, although later on sent back to the committee for redrafting, which condemned the makers and distributors of "leech" pictures as being a menace to the industry, and also condemning any exhibitor who knowingly makes himself a party to showing the same and defrauding the public. It was said in connection with this that it frequently occurs that some company capitalizes junk as genuine product, and that the public is hoodwinked. It was also discussed as to whether or not similar action should be taken against any trade paper which might knowingly advertise these leech pictures.

Another resolution was introduced agreeing not to show any pictures in which a star or a performer is proven to be immoral, or who has been involved in any lewd, indecent or immoral action. After much talk it was decided to refer the resolution back to the committee in order that it might be further whipped into shape and meet with universal approval.

A resolution was adopted pledging the hearty support of the state association to Urban Movie Chats.

A resolution was adopted without discussion protesting against fake motion picture and theatre syndicate stocks offered to the public, as well as against any similar schemes to defraud the public by purchasing such stock. The resolution carried with it the suggestion that any person offered motion picture stock should confer with his local banker, or some member of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York state.

Without so much as a dissenting voice, the convention went on record through the adoption of a resolution protesting against campaigns, drives or special weeks, claiming that these have become so frequent that they are a nuisance, and resulting in much confusion in bookings. A copy of this resolution will be sent to every pro-

5,000 Exhibitors to Celebrate First National Week

Independent Screen Artists' Guild Will Participate in Big Campaign

IN celebration of the anniversary of exhibitor co-operation, five thousand theatres in every part of the United States and Canada will participate in First National Week, February 18 to 25, according to the latest returns available at the Home Office of Associated First National Pictures on the eve of the big eight-day event.

Allied with these thousands of exhibitors in the celebration of this anniversary is The Independent Screen Artists' Guild, comprising all the principal independent stars and producers of the United States. Their productions will be available for all these theatres during this week, following the resolution adopted by the Guild at its formation in Los Angeles last December, to dedicate this week in February to the widest possible exhibition of their creations in the independent theatres of the North American continent.

"What the conditon of the exhibitor and independent producer would be today if there were not and never had been any such thing as First National is something worth thinking about," said Moe Mark, president of the Mark Strand Company, one of the original franchise holders and member of the Executive Committee of Associated First National.

"But it is safe to say that hundreds of theatre owners would have been driven to the wall, and hundreds of others would have been practically serfs of distributing monopoly at the mercy of arbitrary and ruinous rental prices and playing any pictures they were able to get regardless of their quality or drawing power.

"Exhibitor and producer independence is today such a tremendous and inescapable fact that there may be a tendency to forget how gravely the producer's and exhibitor's freedom was actually imperilled in 1917.

"That was the year in which fifteen far-seeing exhibitors in self-defense rallied in response to the warning of First National and met the threat of producer-distributors tyranny with the announcement that they were prepared to encourage independent producers by guaranteeing them a profitable market for their product—asking in return only that the picture be the best that could be made, from the standpoint of box-office value.

"The exhibitor body was interested, but incredulous. It was the answer to the gravest of their worries and difficulties, but could it ever be successfully put into practice? Other groups and organizations had come to them before with plans that promised to be a panacea for their ills—but nothing had ever come of them. The fifteen exhibitors who had thrown down the gauntlet to the monopoly knew perfectly well the stupendous nature of the task ahead of them. It was no calm and sunny sea upon which they had embarked. But, in spite of the flood of propaganda let loose against them by the producer-distributor group the response of exhibitors and independent producers alike from the beginning was definite and enthusiastic.

First National Week

"The history of First National naturally falls into two divisions—that of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., and that of Associated First National Pictures, Inc. How rapidly and soundly the First National took root in the minds of exhibitors and producers who had been the victims of the producer-distributors regime may be seen from the fact that at the end of two years, First National was distributing the output of such signal favorites as Charles Chaplin, Norma and Constance Talmadge, Mary Pickford and Anita Stewart, in addition to a number of single productions of producers who were quick to grasp the opportunities offered them by the new situation created by First National. Before another year had passed the productions of Charles Ray, Marshall Neilan, Katherine MacDonald and D. W. Griffith had been added to the list. Then the now celebrated contract with Charlie Chaplin was signed and announced to the trade.

"It was from that moment that all doubts that still lingered as to the success of First National were once and for all removed.

"The franchise idea had demonstrated its validity when applied to a score of exhibitors. Months were spent in working out a sound and consistent plan for building a huge national co-operative organization, with every exhibitor participating as a franchise holder like every other one. The final realization came at the franchise holders' meeting held in Atlantic City in January, 1920. Exhibitor distribution became a full-grown reality.

"The final answer to those who had constituted themselves a wrecking crew for the purpose of destroying First National, if such a thing was possible, was given at Chicago in October, 1921. Last year, because of a practically universal business depression was one of readjustment and unrest and this was the period selected for a final onslaught on First National franchise holders by our enemies, who believed that if they could introduce discord, distrust and dissension into the ranks, the organization would go to pieces.

"How completely they had miscalculated the temper and attitude of the franchise holders was made clear during the session of the National Get Together in Chicago. The duly elected and accredited delegates of the 3,500 franchise holders of Associated First National Pictures flatly denied the rights of any outside element in the industry to meddle in the affairs of their organization, and proceeded to discuss and settle their own problems in a businesslike and constructive manner that astonished those in the industry who had made up their minds that motion picture exhibitors were incapable of holding a convention that was not either a joy party or a free-for-all fight.

"First National Week, 1922, is more than a booking drive. It is more than a sales scheme. It is exhibitor recognition of the fact that independence has been possible and profitable in the motion picture industry for the producer and the exhibitor who wants to be independent. It is a tribute to the success of the 'fair play and a square deal for all' policy upon which First National is and always has been founded. It is a celebration by the independent exhibitors and producers of America of the victory they have won, through co-operation, for the freedom of their screens and the freedom of their studios."

Cumberland Trade Board to Censure Pictures

Franklin A. Ankeney, secretary of the Cumberland Chamber of Commerce, announces the addition of a local censorship department in connection with the various activities of the Chamber of Commerce. Under this arrangement all stage plays and motion pictures will be reviewed by the Chamber of Commerce. This is a new step and is followed locally by considerable interest.

Gradwell Associated with Wid Gunning, Inc.

WID GUNNING announces that he has arranged with Ricord Gradwell to become associated with him in the distribution corporation WID GUNNING, INC., as Managing Director.

Several weeks ago Mr. Gunning made the first announcement of his direct booking profit-sharing plan of co-operation between producer and exhibitor and he will now give practically all of his personal time to production for the benefit of his exhibitor partners. He plans to leave on a trip through the country within a week, stopping on the Coast long enough to arrange certain production activities.

Ricord Gradwell was at one time Vice-President and General Manager of the Oliver Typewriter Company. He took charge of the World Film on behalf of powerful banking interests some years ago and proved there that successful business methods outside this industry could be properly and intelligently applied in the film business. Mr. Gradwell will continue as president of the Producers Security Corporation, which special service organization he created after completing his work at World Film.

Nathan Vidaver has been elected General Counsel for the corporation. There will be no changes in the personnel of the Wid Gunning organization, it is announced.

Important plans both for the distributing organization Wid Gunning, Inc., and for Wid Gunning, personally, as a producer, are understood to be back of this move and further news is promised in the coming weeks.

Upholds Injunction Against Showing of Bandit Film

Judge Joseph B. Lindsley, of the Superior Court in Spokane, Wash., handed down a decision recently on questionable pictures, which is winning much favorable comment from Northwest newspapers. Judge Lindsley denied the petition of E. Clark Walker, manager of the Pantages Theatre, to enjoin the city commissioners here from preventing the appearance of Mrs. Roy Gardner, wife of the mail bandit, who has pictures showing the antics of her husband. After watching a pre-showing of the picture, the city commissioners ordered the act and the pictures with it withdrawn. An injunction was sought by the theater manager. The court witnessed a private exhibition at the theatre. In his ruling, Judge Lindsley said:

"The exploitation of the pretended good character of a notorious criminal with pictures intended to reproduce him in motion in some connection with his crime is an offense to the moral sentiment of all decent, clean-thinking people, is corruptive to the morals of the young and immature and is satisfying only to morbid minds.

"It is neither artistic, entertaining, amusing nor instructive, and I know of no law conferring a right to cater publicly to such curious and morbid minds."

To Build $500,000 Studio Near San Diego, Cal.

With A. H. Sawyer as president and general manager, the S. L. Studios at San Diego, Cal., have acquired a large tract of land at Grossmont, near this city, where a ten-unit community moving picture studio will be constructed at a cost of approximately $500,000, it is announced. The plans have been drawn and it is expected work will be started on the plant very soon. The project is said to be backed by Eastern capital. The main building plan has been copied from Woolsey Hall, one of the most beautiful buildings in the Yale group in New Haven, Conn. There will be four large stages, each 90 x 200 feet. One of the features of the plant will be a miniature Venice, with canals and bridges, and the Venetian buildings in replica, according to advance announcements. Mr. Sawyer plans to install a modern laboratory and printing plant capable of developing and printing 300,000 feet of film a day. On the grounds will be erected reproductions of streets in Paris, New York, London, New England and other sections, it is stated, and it is planned to rent these out to producing companies who may desire the special sets in their pictures.

Carl Laemmle on Annual Trip to Universal City

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, departed on the Twentieth Century on Friday for his annual visit to the Universal City studios in California. He will stop en route at the exchange in Chicago. No special significance is to be attached to Mr. Laemmle's visit at this particular time. It is his invariable custom to spend three or four months of each year at the studios, and this is the time which he has usually chosen. He is accompanied by his daughter, Miss Rosabelle, Mrs. Maurice Fleckles, Miss Estelle Cohn—a friend of Miss Laemmle—by Julius Stern, Zion Myers and Harry Zehner.

Start Campaign to Refill Churches Sunday Evenings

Claiming that their congregations on Sunday nights have dwindled to a very few, and that the theatres are attracting crowded houses, ministers in Watertown and northern New York are about to inaugurate a campaign to win back the members of their flocks. On February 26, the pastors of seventy, or more churches affiliated with the Jefferson County Ministerial Union, will preach the first of a series of sermons on the observance of the Sabbath.

The union will not seek the introduction of any city ordinances in its campaign, but has planned its program of sermons after much deliberation on the part of members of its executive committee.

The Reader Has His Say

Some Pointed Remarks

Mr. Wm. A. Johnson, Editor,
M. P. News, New York.

Dear Sir: I read your editorial in last week's News; also the "14½ Per Cent" article in this week's News.

You say GRANTED that rentals are right. They are not right. That is the whole trouble. I played "The Mark of Zorro" Saturday, Jan. 1st, 1921, Saturday and a holiday—the Christmas crowds home from school—to a gross of two hundred and thirty-five dollars ($235.00), which was the largest business we have ever done; paid $105.00 for film and war tax; expressage and lobby paper were $6.75 extra; newspaper and mailing list were $26.25; daily overhead $27.00. This gave me $70.00 profit on the two best days in the year, during the very best times southern Indiana has ever had.

NOW THEY ASK ME $1,200.00 for "Way Down East" and "The Three Musketeers," and all the others are just as high.

You speak of 14½ per cent and exploitation. Most of us have evploitated productions that have had forced runs on Broadway, highly commendatory articles in the trade papers, thousands of dollars worth of praise by the producer or distributor, only to fall down on the second night, while we the exhibitors were afraid to face our patrons.

14½ per cent! I doubt that there is a theatre in southern Indiana that has made 14½ any year since the picture thing was gobbled by the Dollar Mark Clan.

This is a four thousand town. I have a modern theatre. Twelve years ago I played Henry Savage's "Merry Widow" with the New York cast; guaranteed him $800.00; made a little money at $1.00-1.50-2.00 prices. Now they want that much for a show in a can.

You mention twelve productions. I can't buy any of them at a price that will enable me to make a DOLLAR. I have tried.

14½ per cent! How many, or rather, what per cent of exhibitors are taking the California to the Coast trip? How many are commuting to Europe? None, except those that are fortunate enough to be working for the producers.

The producers are cutting expenses. We paid THEIR war tax; now why don't they cut rentals? Also, why don't you, whose very living depends upon the exhibitor, first and last, take our side once in a while? We only want you to be fair.

Yours truly,
Boonville, Ind. Frank Forrest.

On "Dogs and Dummies"

My dear Mr. Johnson:—

Having just read your editorial entitled "Dogs and Dummies" appearing in the current issue of your trade paper, hasten to compliment you on same.

We believe, beyond the question of a doubt, that you have hit the nail on the head, and the facts as presented by you should ultimately help in placing the screen on the high standard it deserves.

To accomplish this, however, it will be necessary for not only the producer but the exhibitor to absorb thoroughly just what you have said because, while there is no doubt both producers and exhibitors have in many instances placed the dollar mark ahead of every other consideration, it is only through the exhibitor that the producer can reach the public and have in mind many cases, when selling pictures of the type you describe, that have met with a frank statement from exhibitors that they were primarily interested only in box office returns.

It only being natural that human nature follows along the lines of the least resistence, and there is less worry as to box office returns when an exhibitor is playing a ready made box office attraction than there is when exhibiting a picture described by you which might contain the finest elements possible to combine in a picture, but which would require showmanship and exploitation to get the public interested in same. We, therefore, are interested in hearing what the exhibitor has to say concerning your editorial and trust there will be some way in which you can secure an intelligent discussion on the subject.

With kindest personal regards, we are
Yours for success,
W. A. Busch,
Resident Manager.

Hollywood Scandal Hurts

Illinois Motion Picture, Theatre Owners.

Gentlemen: I have never written the trade papers or the M. P. T. O. and I hardly know where to begin. It seems to me some radical change must have come over the motion picture industry. Of course, we have scandals in our every-day lives, but as we are not prominent or before the public, we seldom get into print.

In one way we might say a motion picture actor or actress have the right to do as they like off the screen the same as other individuals. That is the right of a free people,—but don't they owe their popularity to the public? Aren't they getting as much and more than other individuals in other walks of life? Can't they afford to lead the straight and narrow? I for one am getting tired of making excuses for those who I am satisfied in my own mind should conduct themselves as ladies and gentlemen. If it would only hurt those persons who are connected with these scandals, it wouldn't hurt so much. But it is a direct knock at the industry in every way.

I am engaged in the billiard business, and at first some people were opposed to it. I have conducted it as a gentleman's business and a gentleman's pastime, and the majority of the people are with me tooth and nail. I cannot uphold anything that is against the law of God or man. I have never read an article in any trade paper of ll the scandals that have occurred at Hollywood and elsewhere. They all seem to think—keep it quiet—hush it up. Why don't they come out in the open and say, if they don't carry themselves decent off as well as on the screen, they'll have to look for some other line?

The Motion Picture News did take a rap at some of our outragiously high priced stars and were immediately censored by the Moving Picture World. I certainly appreciate the stand the News took the first issue after Fatty's famous party. They didn't make it half strong enough.

I am only a farmer by birth. Perhaps I should have stayed in that business. All the same I have been in this game since 1913—have seen the industry grow. Spent at least five years in it without making 5 per cent. on my investment. I never even finished the eighth grade in school, am one of a family of eight children, and had to get out and work on the farm at the age of 14. But at that I think I am voicing the sentiment of the people in this community.

(Mr. Rush states a number of motion-picture artists who have been in the limelight in the past and on whose pictures he declares he has lost money since their production into the columns of the newspapers.)

As far as that goes, no man in a town of 450 or even 1,500 (we come in the 1,500 class) can pay $25.00 to $30.00 for any picture and come out on top. Now what I'd like to see is some of the good clean actors and actresses (and we have scores of them) work in harmony with the M. P. T. O. for a good, clean, wholesome amusement. Maybe a man shouldn't say it, but there are times when a man has got to be ashamed of his business. Take right now, for instance. I come up to my place in the morning; almost the first person who comes in says: "Well, a new scandal at Hollywood or elsewhere!" I'll say, "Yes, but don't we have such things in every walk of life?" The other fellow says, "Yes, but I saw him or her, as the case may be, in one of the finest pictures and I am surprised that a person can appear in a clean picture and then lead such a life."

I suppose everything will come right, but it must not wait too long or many of us little fellows will be forced to close up shop. I am satisfied the M. P. T. O. will do all in their power to remedy these matters, and I am heartily with you in anything you may undertake.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) J. R. Rush,

Imminence of Theatre Tax Brings Prompt Action

THE news late last week that a double theatre admission tax seemed likely to be adopted by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives brought prompt action on the part of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Both offices set to work at once to launch effective protests against the passage of such a burdensome measure. Developments during the week, however, indicate the abandonment of the double theatre admission tax by the Ways and Means Committee. By Tuesday President Harding had definitely voiced his opposition to the proposed measures, and the sales tax again loomed as the likely medium for raising funds for the payment of the soldier bonus.

The National Association directors were notified on Saturday of a special meeting to be held on Tuesday. Owing to the pressing demand for early action the meeting was advanced to Monday noon, by President William A. Brady. At the Monday meeting, President Brady announced that he had just received authoritative word from Washington that the double theatre admission tax had been abandoned. A special train had been previously arranged for to convey motion picture, theatrical and vaudeville representatives to the national capital in the event of the continued determination of the Committee to adopt the double theatre admission tax.

On Friday, February 10th, the M. P. T. O. of A. addressed a statement to the Ways and Means Committee in which it was declared that any increase in taxation for the theatre would have the effect "of driving many theatres out of existence." The figures recently issued by the Government showing the falling off of over ten million dollars in theatre receipts during November and December of 1921 as compared with the same months in 1920 were submitted as evidence of the distressing situation confronting theatres at the present time.

A. M. P. A. Preparing for "Naked Truth Follies"

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers are announcing the second edition of their Naked Truth Follies, the first of which was held at the Biltmore Hotel last year and established a new high water mark for original novelty entertainment in film circles. Like its predecessor the present volume will be bound with all the formalities of an evening occasion and the gilt trimmings of the Biltmore hostlery.

The date has been set for March 25 and A. M. Botsford, assisted by "Doc" Tom Wiley and the remainder of the entertainment committee are preparing the edition for going to press. Members of the Green Room Club have again volunteered their aid in the preparation of sections of the edition; but with this exception all the material will be supplied and run by A. M. P. A. members.

Final plans for the program will be arranged at a joint meeting of the entertainment committee and board of directors of the A. M. P. A. to be held the latter part of this week.

Offers Hays Aid in Building Film City in East

The Queensboro Chamber of Commerce has placed at the disposal of Will H. Hays, in anticipation of his entrance early in March upon the executive control of the new association of producers and distributors, a report which describes the advantages available in Queens Borough for motion picture production on the East Coast. The Queensboro Chamber of Commerce has also offered its services to the Postmaster General and his future associates in the motion picture industry in the proposed establishment of a motion picture model village in the Queens Borough section of Long Island, N. Y.

The statement points out, in support of its contentions, the building of a $2,000,000 studio in Long Island City by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the purchase by the Selznick Pictures Corporation of a large tract on Queens Boulevard for the construction of another studio.

Japan Asked to Protect Producers in Orient

Motion Picture News is in receipt of a letter from Sunyei-Gumi, Ltd., of Tokyo, Japan, motion picture distributors in the Orient, which is endorsed by Orient Pictures' Corporation, of Los Angeles, another prominent distributor in the Orient, in which it is stated that an attempt is being made to cause the Japanese Parliament to pass a law to protect the rights of American producers in the Orient. Heretofore, it is stated, there has been no law to prevent the exhibition of stolen films to the public.

The assistance and co-operation of the industry is requested. It is suggested that pressure be brought to bear at the American Embassy in Japan, as well as at the Japanese Embassy at Washington. Sanyei-Gumi, Ltd., is confident that the proposed copyright law will be successfully passed.

Protest Film Service to Non-Theatrical Groups

A statement signed by L. G. Humphreys, manager of the Glory B theatre, and G. H. Merriam, manager of the Grand theatre, Miami, Okla., has been addressed to the film exchanges in Kansas City and Oklahoma City, protesting the booking of features and comedies to schools and other non-theatrical institutions in Oklahoma. The letter further notifies the exchanges of the managers' determination to discontinue any service shown in a non-theatrical house in Miami. The theatre managers declare that exhibitors throughout the county in which Miami is situated have suffered a loss of business of from forty to eighty per cent and makes a plea to the exchanges for reductions in proportion to the theatre receipts being realized.

Exhibs. of Missouri and Kansas Meet in March

CONVENTIONS of the M. P. T. O., Missouri and Kansas, which will be held about the middle of March, providing President Sydney Cohen and Senator Walker are in the territory by that time, will be of significant importance. Reformers and the music-tax society need immediate attention.

"A fighting fund," with which to defeat the music tax interests in Kansas, has been organized and contributions are coming in fast, according to Mr. Van Praag, president of the state organization. Hundreds of offers of assistance from fellow exhibitors have been received by Mr. Van Praag during the last week. Attorneys for Mr. Van Praag, against whom the suit has been filed, now are in New York taking depositions of all music publishers.

Attorney General Richard Hopkins, of Kansas, counsel of the Kansas exhibitors' organization, has announced his candidacy for the governorship of Kansas. Mr. Hopkins is opposed to censorship and blue laws.

An injunction in the Supreme Court of Kansas to restrain the music tax society from doing business in that state probably will be asked by Mr. Hopkins in the next few days. A similar step is expected of Attorney General Jesse Barrett, of Missouri, in behalf of the Missouri exhibitors.

Thirteen Companies Incorporate in New York

Motion picture companies incorporating in New York state during the past week numbered thirteen and brought into the business capitalization amounting to $278,500. These companies, with the directors and the amount of capitalization, were as follows:

Smalley-Maxey Theatre, Inc., $500, Oneonta; William C. Smalley, James J. Byard, Jr., Cooperstown; Thomas J. Maxey, Latrobe, Pa.; Morgan Productions, Inc., $5,000, Betty Morgan, H. S. Hechheimer, George A. McCormick, New York; The Miriam Theatre, Inc., $10,000, Joseph and Bessie Brandvein, Benjamin Tunick, Mt. Vernon; Poughkeepsie Theatres, Poughkeepsie, $3,000, Ely Elting, H. R. Gurney, W. DeGarmo Smith, Poughkeepsie; Minsky Theatrical Enterprises, $10,000, M. William Minsky, Julius Kendler, Julius Girden, New York; City Motion Picture Syndicate, $10,000, Saul Abramson, Harry Kroll, Jacob Squire, New York; The Erdill Theatre Corporation, $10,000, Leonard Bergman, A. Smith, New York; Samuel Zieler Photo Play Corporation, $100,000, Samuel Zierler, Jamaica; Rose Greenberg and Freda Freeman, New York; one West 143rd Street amusement company, $15,000, George W. Wetmore, Jr., J. E. Taylor, H. A. Robertson, New York; Di Lorenzo, Inc., $25,000, Joseph and Vincent Di Lorenzo, H. J. Jantser, New York; Noted Dramas, Inc., $30,000, C. S. Hervey, Elizabeth Fingeroth, Lee R. Wakoff, New York; Exhibitors Delivery Company, $10,000, J. J. Jacobs, Aaron Hartma, John Harvey, New York.

Taxis for His Patrons in a Town of 3,700

OUR idea of service is John W. Lunger's stunt of sending taxicabs after his patrons. The enterprising proprietor of the Opera House, Washington, N. J., sprang this one on his public during the recent showing of "Forbidden Fruit."

The weather was wet, very wet. Lunger announced through newspapers and from his stage—to make sure they would talk—that during the rainy spell he would send a cab for anyone who telephoned the theatre asking for one.

In all, he used two taxis at a flat rate of $2.50 a night for each.

Both cabs brought about fifty people to the theatre each night. The admission rate is 25 cents a person, so the expenditure of $5 brought in more than $12.50. This was only a slight profit, but it paid for the stunt, and look at the advertising and good-will.

Mr. Lunger's town, Washington, has a large outlying population and this accommodation was greatly appreciated.

This exhibitor has another stunt which makes the church and charitable elements work for the theatre. Any organization can have his theatre any Monday night for a benefit. From the gross receipts Lunger deducts the film rental and splits the rest fifty-fifty. One, the Presbyterian church, sold 1,009 tickets for the house. Another recent benefit extended three nights straight to raise money for a siren for the local fire engine. Mr. Lunger said that his share of these benefit receipts usually amount to about $50 or $60.

"It is great to have the better element of your community out hustling for your theatre," Mr. Lunger said. "I turn over the tickets to these organizations and they go out and sell them for me. They also bring new patrons to the theatre, people who come on a charitable pretext who might never have come otherwise.

Mr. Lunger worked a novel stunt for "The Woman God Changed" that packed the house.

He announced from his stage one Saturday night—he always makes announcements Saturday night:

"I have been showing you the best pictures made, and now I am going to show you the worst picture you ever saw. I don't even charge admission for it. You just walk in and see it and if you think it is any good drop your quarter in the box near the door.

"I didn't lose a single admission," Mr. Lunger continued, "and they told me I was all wrong on the picture. I deliberately under-advertised what I considered a good picture, and it built itself, until it became the sensation of the week."

When "Heliotrope" played at the Opera House Mr. Lunger tied up Colgate's for $50 worth of cologne, heliotrope persuasion, and gave it to women as souvenirs.

Once Mr. Lunger advertised that on Saturday night at 8:30 he would sing. There was an expectant crowd. Mr. Lunger came on the stage, made his bow and lowered the lights. A baritone then delivered the number, and both he and Lunger took the rapturous applause together.

During the Christmas holidays Mr. Lunger cemented his solidarity in Washington, giving away $475 to charities, and distributing four tons of raw foods. Yep, four tons. Paramount donated the picture, "Straight Is the Way," and Mr. Lunger gave the kiddies a free matinee.

Once a year Mr. Lunger has Carnation Night. He buys 4,000 flowers at four cents apiece and gives one to each patron.

Carnations are Mr. Lunger's pet flower, and he is a great lover of flowers. His lobby resembles a greenhouse. Its present decoration consists of box displays of all sort of foliage, two aquariums of gold fish, each running almost the entire length of the lobby wall, nine large cocoanuts recently received from Florida, and Japanese lanterns.

Mr. Lunger has been an exhibitor for nineteen years, in the little town of 3,700. His staff consists of an orchestra of seven, two operators, two cashiers, two door attendants, and one stage mechanic. Not one of Mr. Lunger's staff has been with him less than five years.

Directors' Ass'n to Hold Dinner-Dance March 16

THE Motion Picture Directors' Association will hold its Fourth Annual Dinner-Dance at the Hotel Astor, New York City, on the evening of Thursday, March 16th. The guest of honor will be Will H. Hays, who assumes active participation in the picture business on the 6th of the same month. Extensive plans are on foot to make this occasion one of the memorable events of local screen history in an effort to make Mr. Hays feel as much at home with movie folk as possible.

As this event will mark the first public appearance of Mr. Hays after his active association with the industry, it is presumed that he will take the opportunity to announce publicly what his policies will be in carrying on his new office.

The M. P. D. A. will alter its general procedure in the handling of this special occasion. The plan now includes a reception to Mr. Hays, a dinner in the Gold Room of the Astor, to be followed by entertainment and general dancing. The program likewise calls for several short addresses by the most prominent celebrities in the industry.

One radical change to be noted also is that whereas former social functions of the Association have been more or less limited to the producing end of the business, in this instance all branches of the industry will be asked to co-operate in extending a welcome to Mr. Hays.

All arrangements for the affair are in the hands of J .Searle Dawley, acting president, and George L. Sargent, chairman of the executive committee, at the headquarters of the Association, 234 West 55th Street.

Universal Appoints Three New District Managers

Due to two promotions and the creation of a new division, Universal has made several new appointments of district managers in its exchange system.

The new territory is called the Mountain Territory and includes Butte, Salt Lake City, Spokane and Denver, and was previously included in the Pacific Coast Division. The Pacific Coast Division now consists of San Francisco, Los Angeles, Portland and Seattle. This division remains under the charge of Edward Armstrong, who makes his headquarters in San Francisco. The manager of the new Mountain Division is announced as H. M. Herbel.

N. W. Gettelson continues as district manager of the Central Western Division. In this division are the exchanges situated at Minneapolis, Des Moines, Omaha and Sioux Falls.

Herman Stern remains as manager of the Central Division, including the exchanges of Chicago, Kansas City, St. Louis, Milwaukee and Oklahoma City.

M. A. Chase has been appointed district manager of the Eastern Division. This division includes the exchanges in Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Indianapolis, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh. Mr. Chase assumes his new duties immediately.

The Central Atlantic Division, comprising the exchanges in Washington, D. C., Philadelphia and Charlotte, N. C., is also to have a new District Manager to take the place of Mr. E. J. Smith, resigned. The new manager is Jules Levey, with headquarters in Philadelphia.

Stanley Employees Give First Entertainment

The Stanley Company of America Employees' Beneficial Association, newly organized, gave an entertainment at the Stanley Theatre recently which was unusual in many ways. It began at 11:40 o'clock, after the last of the audience at the last regular show had departed, introduced many noted actors and actresses and lasted until three o'clock the following morning.

The entertainment was a financial as well as an artistic success, everyone of the four thousand seats in the Stanley Theatre being occupied. The officers of the Association are William K. Goldenberg, President; George T. Battersby, Vice-President; Joseph E. Mastbaum, Treasurer; Leonard Wilson, Secretary. Board of Governors: James Brennan, Miss Minnie Crabtree, John Madden, Walter Deimer, Esther Volk, Martin Wolf, James Martin, Harry Knoblach, Charles McHugh, Littleton Moore and Charles Shissler.

The next issue of The Booking Guide will be out in March.

Exhibitor Convention

ducing and distributing unit in the state.

A resolution was introduced to the effect that the New York State delegation to the national convention in Washington in May should be a unit, consisting of its entire strength, and, to that end, that the president, secretary or treasurer, with the executive committee, be given the power to fill all vacancies. It was carried, with William Brandt the only opposing voice.

A resolution to the effect that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State extend the hand of cooperation to Will Hays, and that they stood ready to cooperate to the end that many abuses might be abolished, was tabled unanimously.

Before the session ended Louis Buettner, of Cohoes, one of the vice-presidents of the state association, rose to his feet and stated that he desired to bring to the attention of the convention a case which might well be likened to Jesse James, but without the horse. He then went on and explained that in Kingston, a city of 28,000, with four motion picture theatres, one, the Colonial, having a seating capacity of 411, with an average day's receipts running between $40 and $100, the owner had been approached by a representative of the United Artists' Corporation, who sold him, said Mr. Buettner, "'Way Down East" for $1,500; second run at that. This picture, according to Mr. Buettner, did well, and the owner of the Colonial bought "The Three Musketeers" for $1,500, taking in between $1,100 and $1,200. According to Mr. Buettner, the owner of the house had the assurance that if the picture did not earn a profit that the United Artists would take care of him. Anyhow, to make a long story short, in four months' time the owner lost $5,000; has gone broke, and, after a trip to New York, was assured by the company that some adjustment would be made. The owner of the house came to Albany Tuesday and put the whole matter up to members and officers of the state association. It was the consensus of opinion that a committee should be appointed to take up the matter with Douglas Fairbanks, if necessary, in an effort to protect the exhibitor.

The day's session adjourned about 2.30 o'clock, but not before Jules Michaels, of Buffalo, had extended an invitation to the exhibitors to hold their next convention in Buffalo.

On Wednesday evening the motion picture ball was held in the State Armory. Scores of stars attended, and the Armory was crowded with sightseers.

A successful dinner, with Senator James J. Walker toastmaster, closed the convention. The details had been in the hands of William Bernstein, to whom much of the success of the affair goes.

Speeches were made by former Governor Martin Glynn, Marcus Loew, Sydney Cohen, Mayor George Lunn of Schenectady, John J. McInerney of

Indianapolis Exhibitors Building Up Treasury

Members of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of Indianapolis, comprising neighborhood houses for the most part, are building up the organization treasury in a substantial manner by paying as dues a sum equal to one-half of the amount formerly turned over to the government in war tax.

Permanent headquarters are maintained in a room on the second floor of the Crystal Theatre downtown.

At the annual election last week A. C. Zaring, former secretary-treasurer, was made president; S. W. Neall, vice-president, and Louis R. Markun, secretary-treasurer.

Wire Briefs from the Coast

ADOLPH ZUKOR, J. D. Williams and Al Lichtman have arrived in Los Angeles. S. R. Kent is reported en route for the Coast also. The purpose of Mr. Williams's presence in Los Angeles is given as desiring to assist in the work of counteracting propaganda against the motion picture industry.

Screen Writers Guild have offered an award of $1,000 for information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of William Desmond Taylor. The Los Angeles "Examiner" has also posted $1,000 for the same purpose.

The officers elected by the Western Motion Picture Advertisers' Association are as follows:

Arch Reeves of Famous Players-Lasky, president; Pete Smith of the Marshall Neilan Productions, vice-president; Harry Hammond Beall, of the Benjamin Hampton organization, secretary; Malcolm Boyland of Universal, treasurer. The directors include Harry Brand of the Jos. Schenck Company, Joseph Jackson of Goldwyn, Barret Kiesling of Metro, Harry Wilson of the Jackie Coogan organization, and Paul Hubert Conlon of the Selig-Rork Company. The installation of the officers is to take place on Monday of the coming week.

St. Louis Exhibitors Suggest New Postmaster

William Sacks, director of the Republican National Bank of St. Louis, oil refiner and producer and former postal clerk, has been unanimously indorsed by the St. Louis film colony for appointment by President Harding as Postmaster General to succeed William H. Hays. Telegrams to that effect have been forwarded to the President and Attorney General Daugherty by St. Louis F. I. L. M. Club and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of St. Louis.

Weitzel's Book Attracting Attention

The book "Intimate Talks with Movie Stars," published by Edward Weitzel, of the Dale Publishing Co., for years with Moving Picture World, is being cordially received, not only by picture fans, but throughout the trade. Adolph Zukor has been among those who lately commended the work, declaring it performed a big service in telling the real story of the big personalities in the profession.

"Our Mutual Friend" Is Danish Picture

The Nordisk Films Kompagni, of Copenhagen, desires to correct the statement which appeared in the Motion Picture News of December 31st, 1921. In the article, "A Fan Critic Says," by Robert E. Sherwood, it was stated that "Our Mutual Friend" came from Sweden. This picture, states the Nordisk company, was produced by them in Denmark, with a Danish director and Danish cast. It is also stated that "Hamlet" does not come from Denmark, but from Germany, although a Danish actress plays the leading role.

Activities of Exchange Managers, Exhibitors, Salesmen and Others

Albany

R. S. BENDELL has been added to the sales force of Select in this district. He is a brother to "Vic" Bendell, well-known throughout the territory.

H. H. Hilsinger, of Cohoes, camera man for Pathe in the Albany district, will leave within the next few weeks for San Francisco, returning by automobile in the late spring. Mr. Hilsinger plans to film many of the scenic beauties of the country on his return trip.

Vitagraph has added C. C. Charles to its Albany sales force.

While in Albany this week, Irving Goldsmith said that he had done a big business with "A Man's Home," and expected to duplicate it with "Conceit," which is booked for the near future.

The Auditorium, a 1,200-seat house in Fulton, N. Y., has just been opened by the American Woolen Company. John W. Stevenson will act as manager.

Elmer Crownshield promises a new 800-seat house for Hudson Falls. Mr. Crownshield plans to build in the near future.

L. L. Connors, who manages the Victory theatre in Cambridge, N. Y., attended the motion picture exhibitors' convention in Albany last week.

Before leaving on an extended European trip, B. W. Burdick, president of the O. H. Stacy Amusement Company, in Albany, N. Y., was presented with a handsome diamond Masonic ring by the employees of the company. Mr. Burdick will be abroad until some time in May, and will visit Italy, Turkey, Palestine, Egypt, France and England.

Buffalo

GEORGE A. FAULKNER has resigned as manager of the Buffalo Wid Gunning, Inc., Exchange in the Grand & Warner offices, Pearl street. The present sales staff has been dropped. H. C. Bissell, however, has been added to the Grand & Warner sales force. "Hub" Taylor has not as yet made another connection. The exchange is being continued in charge of a young lady, who is making shipments for the time being.

Roy E. Churchill

THE career of Roy E. Churchill, Kansas City branch manager of Robertson-Cole, has been a dynamic one. Two years ago Mr. Churchill entered the film game in Kansas City as R-C branch manager. A short time prior to that he had abandoned the insurance business in his native state, Nebraska.

During his two years in Kansas City Mr. Churchill, as a member of the Kansas City Film Board of Trade, as well as an exchange manager, has won a host of friends. During R-C week in Kansas City, February 5-12, the Kansas City branch served more film than at any other time in the history of the exchange. A large percentage of Mr. Churchill's intimate friends are exhibitors, with whom he is termed: "A regular fellow."

WILLIAM KOCH, veteran Minneapolis theatrical man, has been appointed manager of the State theatre. Mr. Koch has been associated with Twin City theatres for 11 years. He started as an usher in the old Princess theatre at St. Paul, and then worked as assistant and general manager of the Grand, New Aster, New Garden and Unique theatres in Minneapolis.

Harry D. Barnes will succeed Mr. Koch as manager of the New Aster and Frank Murray of the State staff will be Mr. Koch's assistant.

E. C. Rhoden

BACK in 1912 and '13 exhibitors in the Omaha, Neb., territory looked to E. C. Rhoden for prompt and efficient service from the shipping department of the General Film Company. This was the foundation on which one of the most popular men in Kansas City film circles started his career. With a goal for more knowledge still in a distance, Mr. Rhoden enrolled as a student in the University of Nebraska. After being discharged from the Army in 1918, Mr. Rhoden hit a high average with the A. H. Blank Enterprises, as territorial representative. Mr. Rhoden proved his ability so completely that when the A. H. Blank Enterprises were identified among the exchanges of Kansas City he was placed in charge of the Kansas City office. Following the consolidation of A. H. Blank and Associated First National, the responsibility of Mr. Rhoden was increased no small amount.

And close friends of Mr. Rhoden assert that he has only begun to climb the ladder of success.

HAROLD F. WENDT, who since the opening of Toledo's Rivoli theatre has been advertising and publicity director of that playhouse, has resigned from that position to join forces with S. Barret McCormick at the Allen theatre, Cleveland, where he will handle the publicity for that theatre.

manager of the Niagara Pictures Corporation, with offices on the third floor of the Warner Building, 257 Franklin street. Mr. Price announces that the arrest of George Williams in connection with the theft of some films, was a mistake, and he has been re-engaged as a salesman. David and Levi Ruslander are providing the financial backing for Niagara Pictures Corporation. Mr. Price is making a trip to New York to buy some new productions to add to the company's list. A revival of "Mickey" is being planned.

Sydney Samson, manager of the Grand & Warner office, has closed the following week runs on "School Days": Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo; Strand, Syracuse; Lumberg, Niagara Falls; Regent Elmira; Regent, Dunkirk; Liberty, Corning, and Shattuck Opera House, Hornell.

"Andy" Sharick, formerly a member of the Select staff, has accepted the post of secretary of the Chamber of Commerce in Gowanda, N. Y. "Andy" has been with Select for several years, acting both as exploitation manager and salesman. He was an able aid to Charlie McClintock. He put over an unusually large number of stunts throughout the territory, where he has a host of friends, who will be sorry to hear that he is leaving the industry.

Richard C. Fox, manager of the Selznick Exchange, is feeling unusually good these days. It's all because the Buffalo office topped the list in both the Operating Cost Efficiency and Film Rental Efficiency columns recently, being several hundred marks ahead of any other exchange in the country. Business must be good at Select, in spite of all this "depression" talk.

Ray Powers, a relative of Pat Powers, is now office manager at the Paramount Exchange. Ray spent several weeks at the home office informing himself on Paramount policies. Mr. Powers was formerly assistant to Harry Lotz at the old Realart Exchange. Mr. Lotz, by the way, is reported to be doing unusually well with the Dempsey-Carpentier pictures in the Ohio territory.

Ernest Leue has been assigned to cover the Rochester territory for Vitagraph. Manager John Kimberly is placing Vitagraph attractions at a large number of Buffalo theatres these days.

Fred Myers, Jr., manager of the Fox office, announces that the Strand theatre has signed up for the Fox Specials, and will show "Over the Hill," second run the week of February 26th. The Victoria has booked the whole works including the super-productions. Joseph H. Berdel, former newspaper man, is finding the "fillum bizness" much to his liking. He is doing a lot of traveling these days, covering percentage engagements "in the sticks."

S. V. Phelps, representing the Exhibitors' Fund of Los Angeles, was in Buffalo last week placing the Screen Weekly, which will be handled in Western New York by Grand & Warner.

Washington

THE SUPERIOR FILM DISTRIBUTING COMPANY have just opened an exchange at 505-507 Mather Building, to handle productions on the State Rights market. The parties back of the company have had considerable experience in the requirements of this territory, having been with the big companies in their local exchanges for several years.

The consolidation of the Realart Exchange with Local Famous Players Exchange is about completed. The former headquarters of Realart in the Mather Building have been leased to Mr. S. Berman, of Philadelphia, distributing Warner productions.

Mr. Harry Coffey, manager of Empire Film Distributing Corporation, has been on a six weeks' trip in North and South Carolina.

The question of a building for the exchanges to conform to the fire regulations of the District of Columbia is still very much to the fore, as something must be decided on by the first of March and actual operations of some kind in evidence according to the official ruling. Mr. C. W. Linkins and others are negotiating with the exchanges for the erection of a building or a series of buildings.

Seattle

J. T. SHEFFIELD, secretary and treasurer of the Greater Features Corporation, of Seattle, was recently elected president of the Northwest Film Board of Trade for the year 1922.

The membership of the Northwest Film Board of Trade includes representatives of the film exchanges of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana.

The Greater Features Corporation is a Seattle institution whose growth has been rapid and whose activities now cover eight Western states, with branch offices in their principal cities. Jack Lannon, of Seattle, is president of the corporation.

Leon D. Netter, after sixteen months in Seattle as manager of the Seattle exchange of the Educational Film Company, recently received a substantial promotion to general manager of the New York office of that company.

Netter left Seattle the end of January for the Eastern coast, making the trip by way of California, where he intended making an informal investigation of film conditions there.

Allen S. Moritz

ALLAN S. MORITZ, president of the Buffalo Film Board of Trade, is celebrating his first anniversary as manager of the Paramount exchange in that city, by breaking all records for bookings in the history of the office. Mr. Moritz came to Buffalo from Washington and has made an enviable record at the F. P.-L. headquarters in the Queen City of the Lakes. He has only one failing—he drives a Ford.

J. A. Gage, who has also been connected with the Seattle office of Educational Films for several months, succeeded Netter as manager.

Charles Bridges has just taken the position of assistant manager of the Columbia theatre. Robert Bender, former assistant manager, is now editorial secretary at the University of Washington. Bender, however, continues to handle the publicity for the Columbia.

Stanley Orne, who gave up the position of assistant manager about five months ago, is now editor-in-chief of the University of Washington Daily.

Kansas City

JOE Silverman, Kansas City representative for Wid Gunning, has been named as successor to Joe Bloom, former branch manager. Mr. Bloom, who was forced to resign because of ill health, left last week for Modesta, Cal., where he and Mrs. Bloom will rest for several months.

Handicapped in the past insufficient floor space, the Kansas City Universal branch will move from the second floor of the Film building, March 1, to its new quarters at 1710 Wyandotte street, former Realart offices.

"Way Down East," "The Three Musketeers" and "Little Lord Fauntleroy" are doing a capacity business in the Missouri and Kansas territory, according to T. Y. Henry, Kansas City United Artists branch manager. Glenn Klock, owner of the Colonial theatre, Pittsburg, Kas., after a week's run of "Way Down East," wants a repetition of it, stating that it brought in the only real profit of many weeks.

More film than at any time during the history of the Kansas City R-C exchange was served during R-C week, February 5-12, according to Roy E. Churchill, branch manager. Kansas City, St. Joseph, Mo., Topeka, Kas., Wichita, Kas., Sedalia Mo. and many other larger towns in the Missouri and Kansas territory played R-C pictures.

Plans for opening offices of the Liberty Theatres Corporation Film Exchanges of Denver in Kansas City were completed last week. The new concern will be housed on the sixth floor of the Film building. Besides owning and distributing "His Nibs" for Western Missouri and Kansas, George A. Levy, president and manager, has announced "Shadows of Conscience," starring Russell Simpson, for immediate release.

M. E. Williams, a veteran film man in the Kansas City territory, will be in charge of the sales department of the new corporation's Kansas City branch.

Harry Graham, Kansas City Pathe branch manager, after an illness of four weeks, has again assumed active charge of his office. Mr. Graham was a victim of a diphtheria epidemic which spread throughout Missouri and Kansas.

St. Louis

W. B. TAYLOR, of Paducah, Ky., was buzzing around Picture Row. He plans to re-open the Orpheum at Paducah very shortly, and was arranging his programmes.

Henry Bollman, who is said to be the youngest picture producer in the world and possibly the Solar System—that's taking in enough territory—is in town in conjunction with the showing of "The Light in the Clearing" at the Del-Mar, Congress and Criterion theatres.

Barney Fegan, of the St. Louis Independent Film Exchange, is recovering from a near attack of flu.

Robert Werth and Albert Goettler have hit the high grass armed with a bundle of Metro contracts. Charlie Werner put them on the road last Monday. Werth was formerly with Pioneer, while Goettler's last love was Associated First National.

New York should learn something. Floyd Lewis, late Realart manager; Sam Harris, of Pathe; Samuel Werner, of United Film Service, and Spyros Skouras, of Skouras Brothers' Enterprises, are all on Manhattan Isle at one and the same time. Call the F. I. L. M. Club, of St. Louis, to order Floyd.

St. Louis filmdom is just recovering from the annual mask ball of the Film Exchange Employees of St. Louis at Arcadia Dance Hall, 3515 Olive street, last Wednesday. Some event. And as they say, a good time was had by all. Twenty-one prizes (count 'em) were awarded for the fanciest tnd funniest costumes. Never again! Until next year.

Eddie Dustin, late manager for Hodkinson, is in the St. Louis Mullanphy Hospital. He is somewhat improved.

C. D. Hill is proud of the new Wid Gunning home, 3630 Olive street. It formerly was the Realart headquarters.

Tom Curran, of Arrow, is in our midst. "Ten Nights in a Barroom" holds the screen at the William Fox Liberty. Tom is the heavy man to see that it hits on high. He got away to a good start. Of course, he wouldn't object if local exchange managers insist on signing contracts for available Arrow productions. Oh, my no! He might even furnish the fountain pen.

Outstanding Features of This Week's Section

Look at the "Saturday Night" stunt (cut above and story on next page) pulled by the Missouri Theatre, St Louis, for something out of the ordinary in exploitation.

There is a fine exploitation idea for "Don't Tell Everything" in the story on page 1233, captioned "Special Talking Machine Serves New Lobby Purpose."

For an attractive lobby display that can be used for almost any picture see page 1245 at the front on "Molly O" used by the Strand Theatre, Seattle.

If you are going to play "Get Rich Quick Wallingford" read the exploitation story about the "oil well" stunt, page 1238, pulled by Hugo Plath of the Queen Theatre, Abilene, Texas.

For an attractive "A Virginia Courtship" lobby display suggestion inspect the cut on page 1240. It shows a front designed by Oscar White of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C.

Lobby display for "Thunderclap" arranged by Manager M. C. McCord of the Rex theatre, El Dorado, Ark.

Installs Switch Board in Lobby

Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, Pulls Excellent "Saturday Night" Stunt

SIX very busy telephone girls, working at six telephonic switchboards located in the lobby of the Missouri theatre, St. Louis, apprised the patrons of the theatre of the coming engagement of "Saturday Night," and together with a line of advertising patter about the picture comprised one of the most novel and effective lobby displays ever originated in the city.

The girls were enclosed by a picket fence and a banner informing everyone to "Telephone Lidel 5000 for information about Cecil B. DeMille's big picture 'Saturday Night'" told those attending the Missouri what all the activity was about. At the corners of the picket fence were signs reading: "Headquarters for 'Saturday Night!'"

The stunt went over big. Humanity likes to follow humanity, and when the Missouri patrons saw the switchboard lights flashing and apparently many people inquiring about the coming picture they decided it must be something big.

The results of this propaganda arranged by Harry Niemeyer, publicity director for the Famous Players Missouri Corporation, and William Goldman, manager of the Missouri, were apparent on Saturday and Sunday, when "Saturday Night" was introduced to the playgoing public of St. Louis.

The switchboards were borrowed from the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company and experienced operators from that company were employed to sit in on the theatre lines. Through a motor attachment the six switchboards would flash from time to time as if real calls were coming in. The girls were instructed in a course of answers to give to supposed questions. And with the six girlies busily talking and plugging in and out as the lights flashed, the Missouri patrons thought it was the real thing.

In addition to the switchboard stunt, Niemeyer sent out 10,000 post cards to a selected mailing list, telling of the coming engagement of Saturday. Ten thousand heralds, 5,000 window cards and the usual amount of newspaper and bill board space was utilized to exploit the picture.

The cut appearing on the opening page of this section shows the switchboards installed in the Missouri lobby and also some of the decorative exploitation used for the showing.

Washington Theatre Prints Newspaper for "Saturday Night"

LOEW'S Columbia theatre, Washington, D. C., is the latest house to print a newspaper devoted to a picture, its issue booming "Saturday Night."

The make-up was the same as a daily paper and carried a 36-point banner to the effect that a millionaire's daughter eloped with her chauffeur. That put over the central idea of the story.

Prison Showing Makes Fine Publicity Material

A week prior to the opening of "Over the Hill" at the Auditorium theatre, Auburn, N. Y., the management arranged with the officials of Auburn Penitentiary for a showing of the picture to inmates of that institution. This was done with the idea of some clever exploitation, and the result was even better than had been expected.

The showing of the picture brought from the convicts a stream of letters thanking the management of the theatre for the opportunity to see "such a wonderful screen play," etc. The newspapers of Auburn had assigned reporters to "cover" the prison showing and as a result the front pages of the Auburn dailies were devoted to stories of how hardened convicts had been moved to shed tears. Some of the letters written by the inmates also were used in facsimile.

"Thunderclap" Lobby Built by Manager McCord

The cut appearing on this page shows the "Thunderclap" lobby display originated by M. S. McCord, manager of the Rex theatre, El Dorado, Ark.

As a ballyhoo, Mr. McCord mounted a large gong of the sort used in the starter's box at the race tracks and kept this ringing at regular intervals. On the outside, a 24-sheet cut-out and a six-sheet cut-out of Mary Carr was displayed.

Another part of the ballyhoo was a bugle cal sounded occasionally.

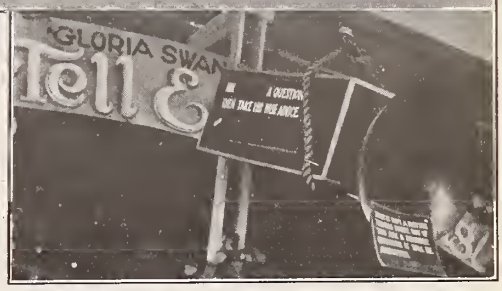
PICK the right pictures. Give them proper exploitation and the result will be dollars in the box office. Which are the right pictures? The BOOKING GUIDE and your NEWS file will tell you. By the same method you can arrive at the best manner of presentation.

Special Talking Machine Serves New Lobby Purpose



As a special stunt for calling attention to his lobby during the recent showing of "Don't Tell Everything," Manager J. M. Edgar Hart, of the Palace theatre, El Paso, rigged up a special talking machine and attached it to the ceiling in front of his box office. The contrivance was given the name of "Spooks" and a sign placed before the large black box with phonograph horn extending asked the passer-by to ask "Spooks" any question and receive an answer.

With signs bearing the words "Don't Tell Everything" on all sides people became naturally curious to find out whether the funny looking talking machine would answer their queries or not. A tube was extended from the horn outside to the office within the theatre and a man kept in the office constantly to answer the questions as they came through the tube. Humorous answers were given always and to put a finishing touch onto the idea with each answer "Spooks" voice told the questioner to see "Don't Tell Everything."

The picture played four days to exceptional business, thousands asked questions of the "Spooks" machine and newspapers gave the idea special publicity. All in all the idea was one of the most talked about stunts ever pulled in El Paso and it is not unusual to see pedestrians who pass by the theatre hurriedly glance up at the ceiling to see if the "Spooks" machine is still there, even today.

Mr. Hart has had numerous requests for the loan of the special lobby contrivance, with the result that his clever idea is being used to call attention to "Don't Tell Everything" in several cities of Texas at the present time.

Hyman Presents Attractive "Doll's House" Prologue

AN old-fashioned rope garden swing illuminated with colored lights, hung in a rose-arbor, and in which was seated a Colonial maiden in crinoline while a dandy in powdered wig and velvet coat swung her high, was the exploitation idea used in a prologue at the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre preceding the showing of "A Doll's House."

The number opened revealing a French colonial garden with trellises and ivy-covered walls. On one side of the stage Edgar Kiefer, as the lover in the film, sang Friml's "I Love You, Dear," to his sweetheart—Sonia Serova, danseuse, who at the end of the song in her crinoline skirt featured a modest dance. Then while another young couple in costume of the period, Mary Fabian, soprano, and Frederick Jagel, tenor, joined in a duet rendition of Grieg's "Sunshine Song," Miss Serova took her seat in the swing and the lights in colors on the long robes flamed out.

Mrs. Koch Compiles Interesting Figures

Mrs. B. Koch, who conducts the Novelty theatre, Anthony, Kas., has secured some interesting data from her patrons on why people attend her picture shows.

Through the aid of the Anthony Bulletin, Mrs. Koch has compiled a list of these reasons and later transferred them to percentages.

She finds that thirty-nine per cent of her patrons come for the sake of entertainment; thirty per cent alleged an educational reason; fourteen per cent for recreation, which is very much the same thing as entertainment; four per cent for music, two per cent for morals and eleven per cent for various unimportant reasons.

It is probable that Mrs. Koch's figures alone do not prove anything about audiences, but in Mrs. Koch's idea is a chance for producers and distributors to compile some country-wide percentage figures that might mean a great deal to the industry.

It is significant that fifty per cent of the Novelty patrons expressed themselves interested only from the standpoint of entertainment, that only two per cent cared about the theme of a picture and only four per cent were attracted by the music.

Here is a window display on "Get Rich Quick Wallingford" arranged by Ray Whitfield, manager of the Lyric theatre, San Angelo, Texas

Ernest Gets Local Merchants' Aid Again

CHARLES H. ERNEST, manager of the Palm theatre, Pueblo, Colo., has put over another full page co-operative newspaper display stunt.

The picture for which Mr. Ernest secured the aid of Pueblo merchants was "Mother O'Mine." There were thirteen mercantile ads. Mr. Ernest's space was the equivalent of a quarter page, placed in the center of the space with a cut of Miss Talmadge the principal feature.

The results for both the merchants and the theatre were entirely satisfactory, according to Mr. Ernest.

Elaborate Fashion Show Presented

George Dumond, Loew's State Theatre, Cleveland, Originates Fine Prologue

The fashion show, with some notable additions and innovations, served as a prologue number and audience magnet to "Love's Redemption" when this picture played Loew's State theatre, Cleveland, Ohio.

A stage setting was provided by Managing Director George Dumond that was an exact duplicate of one of Cleveland's popular restaurants. There were the high arched windows, paneled walls, fresco trimmings and side bracket lights. The right side of the stage was devoted to an orchestra. The left side of the stage had tables and chairs arranged just like any restaurant. Beautifully gowned women and sartorially correct men were seated at the tables. A novelty dancing act was introduced, just as if it were a cabaret show in a real dining room. A dainty little girl then sang "He's Making Eyes at Me." After this there was a display of gowns. The mannikins walked around the stage, and out over the runway, which extended twelve rows out over the audience. The runway had footlights. The table guests got up and joined the parade of gowns. Others then sat down at the tables. After a few minutes of this display, a "colored" waiter did a clever negro character song that made a big hit. More dancing. This time a Spanish dance in costume by a troupe of eight, all in regular Spanish costume, with many-colored silk shawls, castanets and gay head dresses. More gown displays, all artistically done both on the stage and on the runway. A tenor solo, again carrying out the cabaret idea, followed, in which the male chorus joined. Again more gowns. Then a pause. An announcement. Monte Blue would appear in person. He entered, to tell a funny story or two. Then he introduced to the audience Miss Tave Danor, Harrison Fisher's favorite model, in gowns made for Mae Murray to appear in "Peacock Alley." Low lights. Miss Danor appeared in the gown in which Miss Murray is seen in the beginning of "Peacock Alley." A dainty little page in a gown made all of pink ostrich feathers carried the gorgeous peacock tail. All this with the lights subdued. Miss Danor strutted across the stage, peacock fashion, out over the runway and back again. With the lights up again, the audience was treated to a charming soprano solo waltz song, with "The Sheik" as an encore.

In the meantime, the table guests kept changing. The waiter poured water. New guests arrived. Again a display of gowns. Two little pages who had announced the numbers then sang a little Irish ballad called "Peggy O'Neil." Once again Tave Danor appeared in a Mme. Peacock gown. This time it was the sequin gown. Lights were turned on her so that she was resplendent with color. She was greeted with breathless applause. Another specialty flower dance by six dainty misses, and a grand finale in which the entire company participated.

Lobby Displays

ARE important in selling the picture to the public. Thousands of dollars yearly are paid to experts in this line for their services. They are as necessary to the theatre as the window dressers are to the big retail dry goods houses in artistically presenting their merchandise. THE BOOKING GUIDE and a file of "MOTION PICTURE NEWS" puts them at your service without increasing your payroll.

Builds Lobby Display on "Old Oaken Bucket"

FOR his showing of "The Old Oaken Bucket," manager Guy A. Kenimer of the Imperial theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., used newspaper advertising and the regular billboard screen to exploit this picture. A frame was built in the lobby, on which canvas was stretched and painted to look like a house with vines and flowers. Opposite the box office and next to the curb was placed an old well-house with the curbing painted so it looked like stone. An old-fashioned well pulley was hung in the top of this well-house and a rope run through it, on one end of which was fastened an old oaken bucket. So many people stopped to look and see what was down at the bottom of the well that Manager Kenimer placed a large card there reading, "Way Down East" will play a return engagement next week.

This cut illustrates the accompanying story relative to the prologue number for "Love's Redemption" presented by George Dumond, managing director of Loew's State theatre, Cleveland

Well Dressed Lobby Sells "Three Musketeers"

When Manager Schreiber of the Blackstone theatre, Detroit, booked "The Three Musketeers," he went to a great deal of trouble and some expense to properly exploit this feature.

His lobby and theatre front were exceptionally well-dressed. Above the entrance, on the front, was a huge banner sheet, announcing the title of the picture, with a big head of Fairbanks right in the center, and on each side smaller cut-outs of Fairbanks as D'Artagnan in his duelling scenes.

On the house front proper were big displays of one sheet posters, surrounded by lobby cards. Inside the lobby were frames containing twenty-two by twenty-eight cards and black and white stills. The whole made a most attractive display. It meant a lot of work, but was not very expensive.

Newspapers Help Tynes Put Over "Hail the Woman"

By tying up with the leading merchants and the newspaper and arranging a private screening in advance, to which leading citizens were invited, Fred N. Tynes, manager of the Columbia theatre, Portsmouth, Ohio, conducted a most successful campaign for the showing of "Hail the Woman" in that city.

Invitations to the private screening, which was held several days in advance of the showing, were sent out to a list of several hundred persons, including ministers, school teachers and club women. They had the appearance of personal letters to the individual, each being typewritten on the theatre's letterhead and signed by Mr. Tynes personally.

The advertising manager of the Portsmouth Sunday Sun-Times became interested in cooperative advertising campaign and through his efforts a full page of advertisements appeared around a special ad for "Hail the Woman" in the issue of Sunday preceding the showing. The merchants proclaimed the week of the showing "Hail the Woman" Week for Portsmouth and offered special bargains to women during the week.

In addition to these advertisements, a "Hail the Woman" advertising contest was conducted by the newspaper and the Columbia theatre, the prizes being ten sets of tickets of admission to the theatre during the showing. These prizes were awarded to the ten persons finding the phrase "Hail the Woman" the largest number of times by using the letters in the advertisements appearing on "Hail the Woman" page.

The screening with the comments of those who viewed the picture in advance and the advertising contest provided plenty of publicity ammunition ahead of the showing and the feature played to exceptional business as the result.

Wright Builds Attractive Lobby Front

The accompanying photographs show two of the many ways in which Manager H. B. Wright of the Strand theatre, Seattle, put over a three weeks' run of "Molly O" a few weeks ago.

The first photograph shows the attractive lobby display used by the playhouse. It was merely a black and white stripe effect but showed the lobby up very effectively both day and night. Each panel of the door showed a silhouette of Miss Normand, and also had a cutout from one of the scenes of the play.

The two stands in the foreground, also carrying out the black and white idea, featured the Strand orchestra, under Director S. K. Wineland, and the Emerald Trio, who furnished the prologue.

San Diego Exhibitor and Evening Sun Co-operate

MANAGER H. H. HOMER of the Colonial, San Diego, Cal., made a tie-up recently with the publishers of the "Evening Sun" whereby every youngster who clipped a coupon which ran certain days in the paper could get admission to see Jackie Coogan in "My Boy," without a cent of charge, and the Colonial, by actual count, had 1,700 children present the coupons, making it necessary for some of the youthful holders to come back the second day, as the capacity of the Colonial was taxed by the influx.

Window Display Helps "Connecticut Yankee" Showing

A display representing a stage and its performers constituted a unique window decoration installed in various stores in Steubenville, Ohio, by Manager A. Constant of the Strand theatre during an engagement of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

The affair was constructed from cut-outs of posters, at a minimum of cost. The front framework of the miniature stage was made of beaver-board and placed against the glass of the window. The sides were made to represent drawn curtains and over the top was the name of the production. Above all was a round cut-out of Mark Twain's head with the letters S-T-R-A-N-D resting on it. The base bore the legend "Laugh and the world laughs with you," under a cut-out of the Yankee and the heroine of the picture seated at the wheel of a flivver.

On the stage proper stood small figures of "Sir Boss" hypnotizing the sun into an eclipse in the presence of Merlin the magician and the heroine. The background was done in green and flooded from above with red light, producing an effective picture. The whole display attracted large crowds during the entire week prior to and during the run.

"Mother o' Mine" Campaign Includes Speech by School Principal

Here's an exploitation campaign which put over "Mother O' Mine" for Capt. B. B. Osborn, manager of the New Liberty Theatre, Cincinnati, in great style and at a total cost of less than $10, including printing and distributing of two styles of heralds.

Announcing his feature a week ahead of the play date, the exhibitor had printed 1,000 card heralds in which he called upon his patrons to make the event an "Honor Your Mother" neighborhood party at his theatre. The heralds also were distributed to school children of three schools in the neighborhood.

Taking advantage of the elocutionary ability of one of the school principals, Capt. Osborn prevailed upon that gentleman to appear at his theatre on the night of the showing and recite Kipling's "Mother O' Mine." He also gave the other recitations from the poems of James Whitcomb Riley. This fact was announced on the card heralds and also in circulars distributed to patrons at the theatre.

Announcement was made also that all mothers over 70 years old would be admitted free to any performance. The exhibitor arranged to give these specially selected seats. With this momentum the feature went over in a big way and gave full satisfaction to the patrons of the neighborhood house.

Artistic "Theodora" Presentation

Oliver Theatre, South Bend, Stages Pleasing Prologue Number

AN attractive "Theodora" presentation was that used by E. H. Woods, manager of the Oliver theatre, South Bend, Ind. The screening of the film was stopped at the end of the fifth reel and the Miserere from "Il Trovatore" sung against an appropriate background.

The interlude came at the end of the fifth reel and a double screen was used, the front screen replacing the back one without stopping the picture. The back screen was replaced with a drop showing a prison scene with barred window, overlooking a harbor and landscape. Lighting effects showed dawn, sunrise and evening. Dimmers and colored lights were used. The orchestra worked up to the presentation and finished with the "Anvil Chorus," using anvils in the pit.

John Knox, tenor, behind the barred window, and Dell Gary, soprano, center stage, sang "The Miserere" with baby spots on the prison window, baby spot with red playing on the soprano. At the finish the house lights were turned off, the front screen removed and the picture picked up at the beginning of the sixth reel, on the sub-title, "On the morrow, etc." The stage was cleared and the screens replaced. The time required was seven minutes.

H. C. Horater, manager of the Pantheon theatre, Toledo, Ohio, used an original lobby display idea for the showing of "Theodora." He tied up with one of the biggest millinery stores in town for the creation of a "Theodora" hat, interest in which was aroused through a program and newspaper campaign and a display in the store window.

Then Mr. Horater had the lobby of the Pantheon decorated with very up-to-date furnishings. It represented the living room in a modern house, with fireplace and mantel with mirror, vases of flowers on the mantel, two floor lamps, two desks with baskets of flowers on them and with several Windsor chairs.

In the centre of the display was a large framed picture of a beautiful woman wearing the "Theodora" hat with a brief description of the hat and of the picture on the card.

Mr. Horater carried on an extensive newspaper and billboard advertising campaign, as is his custom, bringing the picture to the attention of everyone in Toledo.

Smith Has New Way of Coaxing 'Em In

Here's a good way to get 'em coming to your theatre. A. L. Small, owner of the New Franklin theatre, Franklin, Ohio, originated the plan and says it has proved a winner. In conjunction with his daily advertisements in the newspapers, Mr. Small makes use of a small boxed space in which is printed each week, the name of a prominent resident of Franklin or its immediate vicinity. This box, clipped and presented at the box office of the theatre, entitles the man to a pair of seats for any one performance during the week. Mr. Small says that almost invariably the couple with the clipped coupon are accompanied by one or more couples, who, of course, pay the usual admission price to see the show.

Garner's Campaign for "Fall of Babylon"

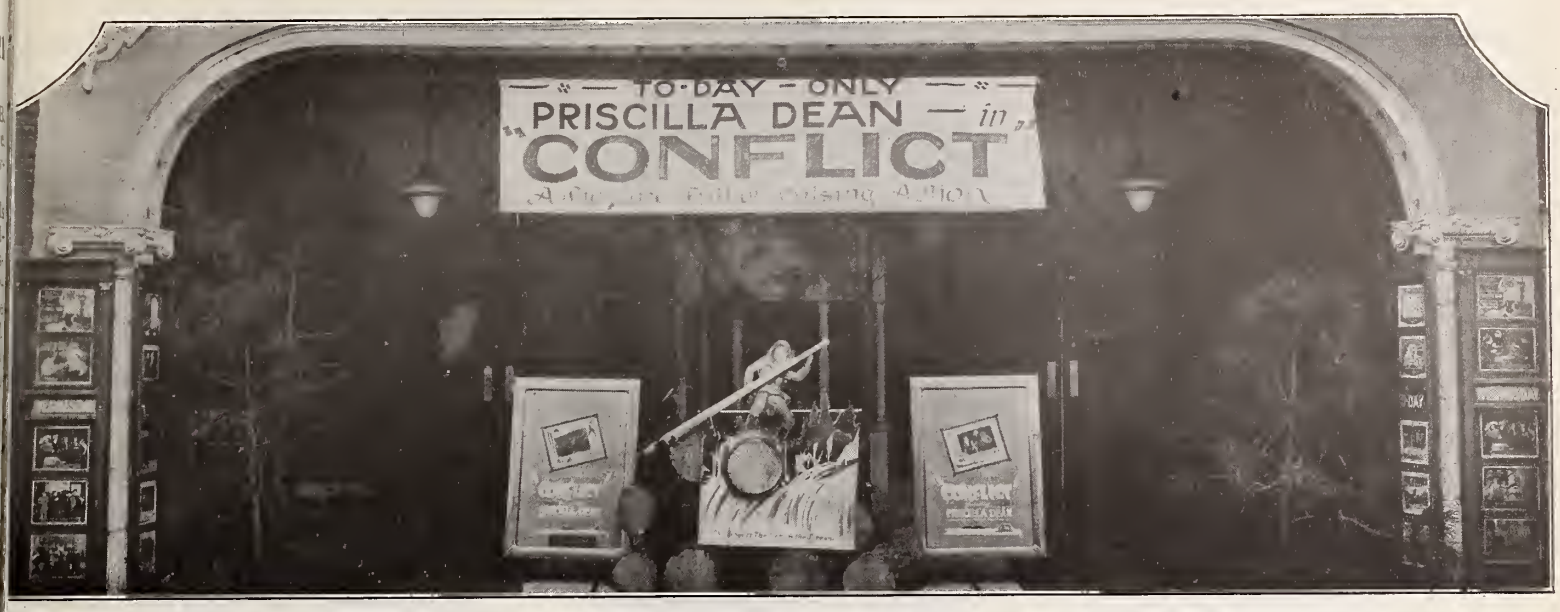
The circus idea was used extensively by B. B. Garner, manager of the Casino Theatre, Lakeland, Fla., in exploiting his recent showing of "The Fall of Babylon."

In all the surrounding community tack cards were displayed and paper posted in every available spot. Used about 70 inches of extra newspaper space to put this picture over. A "stonewall" lobby display of composition board, the wall reaching to the ceiling, was constructed. It was made to represent a stonewall as nearly as it was possible for paint and a brush to make it.

Mr. Garner secured the cooperation of a local merchant, whereby in exchange for 100 free tickets, good for the engagement, the merchant advertised that one free ticket would be given with every purchase as long as the supply lasted. Only one ticket was allowed to one family, and when the passes were turned in it was found that the good old minstrel show rule, that each pass was accompanied by a paid admission, held good.

Distinctive Lobby Decorations For "Enchantment"

For "Enchantment," when this picture played a two day engagement at his Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Georgia, Manager Frank Miller erected an unusual looking "lobby-board" which attraced favorable attention.



White card-board—the heavy, pebbled kind frequently used by amateur artists to mount their paintings on—was used, a piece large enough to take up the center of the lobby, leaving a narrow space on either side for entrance and exit.

Narrow green strips, latticewise, were used at the top and bottom of this board, and the whole mounted to look something like a green-and-white fence. It was lower in the middle than on either side, and this space held a one-sheet. On either side of this one-sheet, well-spaced, were stills from the picture, with little catch-lines beneath each one, which drew attention. One line, beneath a photograph of the star cuddling her dog, read "Who wouldn't lead a dog's life, for a girl like Ethel?" Under a still showing the star and her leading man in a heated argument, the line read "What man has a chance, in a case like this? You're licked before you start, Ernie." And so on. There were sixteen of the stills, each with its humorous line beneath.

Amber-lights, shaded and concealed beneath the trailing artificial vines which wound around the lattice-work, added to the effectiveness of this display at night.

"Over the Hill" Exploitation Sets New Buffalo Record

Frank A. Tierney, Fox exploiteer, has been working overtime at Buffalo in the interests of "Over the Hill," playing a three weeks' engagement at Shea's Criterion.

One of the first stunts was to stage a big screening party for Buffalo elect at the Hotel Statler.

In arranging this stunt he got the consent of the mayor's secretary, Charles A. Armitage, to send out invitations to city officials, newspaper men, ministers and friends, over the signature of that gentleman. Over 600 were present at the affair, which was staged in the large ballroom of the hotel. Following the screening there were more column stories.

One of the best tie-ups in the campaign was that put over in co-operation with the Buffalo Evening News, through which two special shows were arranged, the receipts of which went to pay up the mortgage on the newsboys' home. An avalanche of free reading matter was gained through this stunt.

Then there was an unusually big advertising campaign, over $3,000 being spent on the newspaper end alone. Billboards plastered the city, as well as window cards, heralds and novelties.

Special ads were used on the church pages of the local newspapers, appealing to churchgoers to see the production.

"Conflict" Lobby Front Goes Big at Sumter, S. C.

In exploiting "Conflict" Manager Oscar White, of the Rex theatre, Sumter, S. C., recognized the possibilities for a lobby display, and concentrated on this. Several large logs were placed in the lobby and a cut-out from a three-sheet showing Priscilla Dean riding the logs down the stream with a canthook in her hands was also placed in the lobby. The hook was borrowed from one of the local hardware stores. The canthook is fastened to the log and the cut-out was tacked to the handle giving it a real life-like appearance. Small pine groves were built on either side and pine needles scattered about the floor to give it a better effect. Two large pine trees were placed on either side of the box office. Banners were also used announcing the name of the picture and star.

Valentine's Day Show Arranged by Manager Watters

Realizing that on St. Valentine's Night a number of house parties were the usual rule and people were inclined to remain at home rather than to come down town, Manager George D. Watters of the Majestic theatre. Austin, arranged a special "St. Valentine's Night" for his theatre and with the co-operation of the Austin American put on a big party in which the best talent of the city was represented.

For over a week in advance of the party Mr. Watters sent out cards and distributed heralds which called attention to the St. Valentine's Party at the Majestic. The newspaper ran daily stories about the event and printed entry blanks for those who wished to sing, dance, play or do stunts for the $100 in prizes to be awarded as the audience's applause dictated. Merchants gave various prizes and placed them on display in their show windows with cards which called attention to the picture being shown and the added attraction.

Mr. Watters let it be known that the performers would have the assistance of the best theatre orchestra in town and assured that there would be no amateur staging of the events.

Gibson Grabs Much Free Publicity by Gift to Library

When Manager Malcolm Gibson of the Mozart theatre, Elmira, N. Y., booked "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," he recalled the fact that Elmira's new Steele Memorial Library would be completed in April.

He decided that the Mozart theatre would be the first donor of a set of volumes to the new public institution, and thereupon a set of Mark Twain's works, including "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," was purchased and presented to the Library Committee.

It was impossible for the daily newspapers to refrain from giving the incident considerable attention in their columns, despite the fact that it was apparently a publicity stunt. As a result each of the dallies devoted front page space to the event.

This was followed up by the Mozart with the distribution of several thousand bookmarks bearing an inscription advertising the feature picture. These were distributed from the lobby of the house, by a number of boys (employed with passes as remuneration), who left them on doorknobs, and at stores wherein window displays had been established.

Large banners were placed across the front of the theatre, sentineled on either side by cardboard cut-outs.

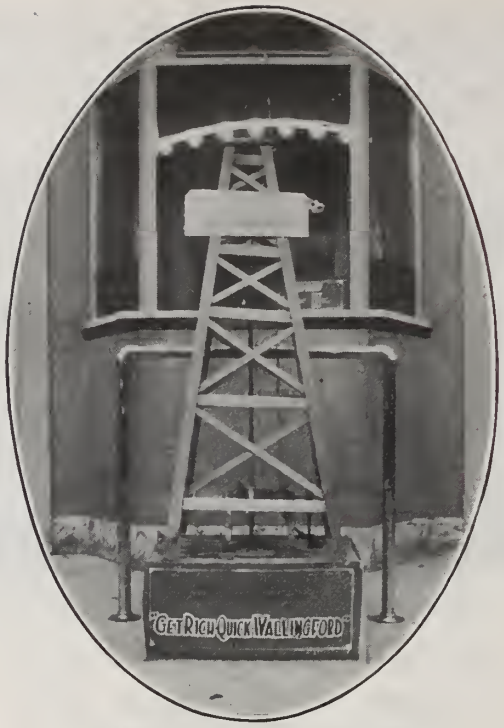
The front of trolley cars were plastered with "Yankee" paper.

"Why Girls Leave Home" lobby front by Harry Gould, manager of the Hippodrome theatre, Fort Worth, Texas

Harris Enlists School Authorities for "Fauntleroy"

THE exploitation campaign which J. P. Harris, manager of the Arcade theatre, Fort Myers, Fla., used for his showing of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" was simplicity itself, but it served to attract much extra business for the engagement.

A special article was printed on the front page of the local newspaper, announcing that the children of all schools would be admitted at a reduced price, the faculty to be admitted as the manager's guests, and all pupils who did not have the admission price would be passed in free of charge. It was also announced at the schools that the picture would play at the theatre on the set date and the principal advised the children to see it. All schools were turned out one-half hour sooner than the usual time.



McVoy Uses Telephone to Exploit "Over the Hill"

Ross A. McVoy, manager of the Temple Theatre, Geneva, N. Y., saw to it that every subscriber to the local telephone system was verbally informed that he was to present "Over the Hill" for a run at his house. And that meant a large percentage of his regular patrons.

For two days prior to the opening of the engagement two ushers were placed on the telephone to call every name in the 'phone directory, beginning with the A's and going all through the alphabet. After "hello's" had been exchanged, the usher said: "I hope to meet you at the Temple, where 'Over the Hill,' the best picture of the year, starts Monday night." With this message delivered, "bood-byes" were exchanged.

Not only was the curiosity of most of the people aroused to the point of desire to see the production, but they were also anxious to learn who had called them up. The little stunt worked admirably and produced the desired results.

The dressing of several store windows and attractive lobby display completed McVoy's exploitation.

Hugo Plath's "oil well" explained by the accompanying story relative to the exploitation put over for "Get Rich Quick Wallingford" at the Queen theatre, Abilene, Texas

Plath Invents Mechanical Display for "Wallingford"

The cut appearing herewith shows the "oil well" which Hugo Plath and his assistants at the Queen theatre, Abilene, Texas, Jack Reed and Oscar Tuttle, rigged up at a cost of one dollar, as exploitation for "Get Rich Quick Wallingford."

The outfit gave a very realistic appearance of an oil well being drilled. A pipe in the center of the "rig" turned around slowly and at the back was a big "spool," also practical. A cable was used to run from the pipe in the center to the spool and plenty of "rattle" as the machine moved.

Mr. Plath has promised a complete account of a stunt somewhat similar that he proposes to put over in exploiting "Fool's Faradise." Watch for it.

George Ade Helps Put Over Picture in Florida

GEORGE ADE, who wrote the subtitles for "THE LOTUS EATER," was wintering at Clearwater, Florida, twenty-five miles from St. Petersburg. Working on the strength that there are more than 1,000 tourists in St Petersburg, from Indiana, the author's native state, Mr. Dorman got in touch with Mr. Ade over long distance the day previous to the opening day and extended him a special invitation to be Pheil's guest of honor during the showing of "THE LOTUS EATER," requesting that he make a brief address on motion pictures in the making. This invitation was accepted.

A box was roped off and tagged, "RESERVED FOR MR. GEORGE ADE AND PARTY." A card, the size of a one-sheet, was placed in the lobby reading as follows "Rear Right Hand Box reserved for Mr. Ade and Party. Mr. Ade wrote the subtitles for today's picture."

Mr. Dorman claims that people were turned away on the first day.

Elaborate Staging of Song for "Queen of Sheba"

Elaborate staging of a song was part of the program of the Strand theatre, Des Moines, Ia., during the engagement of "Queen of Sheba."

The singer was attired in a costume resembling in a way one worn by the Queen of Sheba of the picture. A large heart-shaped head-piece fringed with protruding peacock feathers, several long strings of beads, and a scant gown of satin and georgette comprised the outfit, which was made at a cost to the exhibitor of $10.

The singer appeared twice during each performance, singing Egyptian melodies. The setting for each song was different, both, however, resembling the desert scenes of the production with long stretches of sand, palm trees and trekking palanquins.

The pseudo "Queen" appeared in the lobby of the theatre prior to the first performance each evening and afternoon, and attracted large crowds.

This attractive lobby display on "The Queen of Sheba" is from the Sun theatre, Omaha

St. Paul Capitol Lobby Turned Into Ship

The lobby of the Capitol Theatre, St. Paul, was turned into a ship during the recent run of "A Sailor-Made Man."

There was a gang plank and life preservers on the walls. The lamps were dipped to indicate starboard and port side of the "ship" which was christened "SS Lloyd," the words being painted on a life preserver resting between the two cashiers' windows. The inner lobby had bow, stern, and riding light. A ship's bell was suspended and a regulation anchor hung over the "rail." All emergency house lights on both the main floor and balcony were carried out in the same idea—port and starboard.

The ushers were all dressed in blue regulation sailor uniforms so as not to draw too much attention from the patron's eye when walking up and down the aisle. The directors and chief ushers were dressed all in white sailor uniforms as well as the cashiers. The door man and floor man were dressed in regulation U. S. navy blues and a string of red and green lights in the "inner" lobby were suspended in such a manner as to indicate a reception aboard ship at sea—same being elevated at points to indicate the different crow's nest and down to the bow and stern. The 24 sheet cut-outs of Harold Lloyd with spot lights focused on them completed the display.

Want Ad Colums Used on "Room and Board"

Manager W. G. Kaliska, of the Forsyth theatre, Atlanta, staged an impromptu but none the less effective exploitation for "Room and Board" recently, when this picture played at the Forsyth theatre.

On Sunday, in the classified want ad columns, under the heading of "Room—Furnished" was a small ad reading, "Are you looking for room and board? See Cashier, Forsyth theatre." The same ad appeared under the columns devoted to apartments, rooms, etc.

Small window-cards which read "Room and Board, at the Forsyth, All Week. Twenty-five cents. Inquire cashier." This was during the holiday season when Atlanta was full of visitors, and the little ads attracted considerable attention.

Donkey Ballyhoo Exploits "Connecticut Yankee"

"A CONNECTICUT Yankee in King Arthur's Court," was exploited from the back of a donkey by the management of the Royal theatre, Chillicothe, O.

A gray donkey, which was more or less a town "character" because of its obdurate attitude concerning locomotion, was bedecked with a double banner which read: "Don't Be a Donkey—You Will Be If You Miss 'A Connecticut Yankee'—Royal Theatre." The sight of the animal itself was sufficient cause for the congregating of many who were near, but with the added attraction of the signs, interest was greatly increased. A large cow-bell was hung from the donkey's neck and served its purpose with such effect that many children tagged after the animal wherever it went.

Real Prairie Schooner Advertises "Last Trail"

A prairie schooner, with four mules attached, a mounted rider and a riderless horse made up the street ballyhoo used by Manager George Schmidt of the Strand theatre, Atlanta, to advertise "The Last Trail." The schooner was the real thing—weather-stained canvas, upheld by battered, creaking poles, and filled with straw on which a dummy could be half-discerned through the narrow opening at the back of the wagon. This gave special significance to the riderless horse, who trotted behind the wagon, still and saddled and bridled. A man, with a two-weeks growth of beard, in battered western togs rode ahead of the schooner, which carried a small placard on one side, which read "Zane Grey's Last Trail—Strand, all this week."

The lobby was a modest one, yet drew attention. The letters "The Last Trail" were cut out of card-board painted in colors to represent a forest fire. Instead of all letters being the same size, and spreading straight across the front, they ran from the left of the lobby back, ending over the box-office, and diminishing in size, to look like a trail. A cut out of a mounted rider was mounted at one side of the lobby, and there were the usual stock one-sheets, and such advertising matter.

Pretty Lobby Front Secured at Small Expense

One of the most effective yet economical treatments of a lobby and front for the exploitation of a picture was that of the Riviera theatre at Knoxville, designed and executed by William E. Drumbar, the manager.

Very little scenic effects were required for the set, the main drop being a curtain of blue mosquito netting on which were pasted a silver moon and a number of silver stars, all cut from paper or cardboard.

On each side was a minaret or tower with numbers of window slots cut in it, these being covered with transparent paper.

Blue lights were substituted for the regular clear globes on the front and in the lobby, giving the effect of a night scene with clear blue sky studded with silver stars and a big moon hanging overhead.

Above is shown the stage setting which Phil Gersdorf provided for his showing of "Way Down East." The insert shows a ballyhoo which Mr. Gersdorf used during the engagement

Gibson Conducts "Careful Driving" Contest

What Malcolm Gibson, manager of the Mozart Theatre, Elmira, N. Y., has termed a "Careful Driver's" contest was conducted recently in connection with the exploitation campaign for "Over the Hill."

After making special arrangements with the police department, advertisements were inserted in the daily newspapers announcing that the traffic officer who guards the thoroughfare intersection nearest the theatre would award a pair of free passes for "Over the Hill" to the five most careful automobilists who passed during each of the specified days.

The result of the newspaper publicity attracted large throngs of drivers, who vied with each other for possession of the free tickets. Not only did the stunt tend to impress the public with the fact that "Over the Hill" was playing at the Mozart, but it also brought hundreds of automobiles and their passengers in close proximity to the Mozart Theatre and its elaborate lobby display.

Pomeranian Pup Helps Sydney Exhibitor's Lobby Front

A handsome Pomeranian pup was "white and unmarried" when it was displayed in the lobby of the Lyceum theatre, New South Wales, in conjunction with the showing of "White and Unmarried."

Paul Cheyne, representing Paramount, took an old packing box and fitted it out like a miniature bedroom, the front covered with wire netting.

This got a good laugh and later the entire outfit was moved to the square in front of the General Post Office where it attracted everybody.

Cheyne also spread himself to a window tie-up with a boot-shop's display of white shoes.

"Over the Hill" lobby decorations by the Madison theatre, Toronto, Canada

Another Fine Lobby by Manager White of Sumter, S. C.

THE accompanying cut will illustrate the lobby decorations which Manager Oscar White, of the Rex theatre, Sumter, S. C., constructed for his engagement of "A Virginia Courtship."

A white fence was built across the lobby with two gates, which were left open. A pump, bucket and dipper were borrowed from one of the dealers and placed in the lobby. Over the box office and over each door were placed appropriate signs advertising the show. The display was very effective and inexpensive.

Dorman's "Three Live Ghosts" Ballyhoo Goes Big

Manager Richmond Dorman of the Phiel Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., opened his engagement of "Three Live Ghosts" on Monday.

The Saturday before, three tall boys paraded the streets in formation, garbed in ghost costumes made of white bed sheets. A neat card on the back of each chap read: "I Am One of the Live Ghosts."

Note—These boys were supplied with handbills, which announced the title of this picture and told about the three pals in the war who were reported lost, but who later breezed back to town. Every tourist on the side-walk-benches received one of these announcements.

Mr. Dorman's ballyhoo got attention and the heralds that sold among other things the fact that "Three Live Ghosts" is not a spiritistic picture but a comedy based on a clever idea, got the business.

Newsboys as Sandwich Men Advertise "Over the Hill"

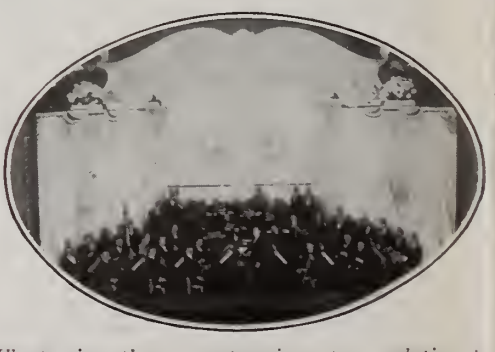
The Plaza theatre, Sioux City, Iowa, conducted an effective exploitation campaign in connection with the engagement of "Over the Hill."

For a week prior to the opening and during the entire run of the production, every newsboy in the downtown section of the city carried on his back a canvas sign, printed in bold black letters and announcing the Plaza's attraction.

A special showing, for which 2,000 invitations were sent out, was held a few days prior to the opening night and resulted in the receipt of several voluntary notes of praise for the picture written by the city's most prominent ministers and teachers and social and business leaders. These testimonials were capitalized to the fullest extent by insertion in the newspaper advertisements.

A newspaper contest in which subscribers were invited to identify Mary Carr as famous American women attracted unusual interest.

The Plaza's lobby was decorated with cutouts and several window displays in the shopping districts of the city were cleverly designed.



Novel "Foolish Wives" Stage Setting at the Central

A novel stage setting is on view at the Central theatre, New York, where "Foolish Wives" is playing an indefinite engagement.

The side panels of this set, and the drapes used for a temporary screen covering, are of delicate tints and are decorted with medallion figures of the Louis Quatorze period. These panels support arches and flower pots. Behind the set is a Mediterranean blue cyclorama.

The Central orchestra, 35 pieces conducted by J. Frank Cork, occupies the stage in front of the panel set.

Manager A. J. Cobe reports that the white set has no bad effect upon the clearness of his picture.

How the Liberty Theatre, Corning, Sold "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court"

The management of the Liberty Theatre, Corning, N. Y., decorated the lobby several days in advance of the opening of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" with large, specially designed frames. The display consisted of seven large frames, stationed about the corners and walls of the lobby, containing original and very clever designs and teaser messages.

Some of the captions of the framed posters were: "Steel union suits were not made for a speedy getaway when Sir Knight took to his royal steed"; "The First Ford—Even in King Arthur's day they wondered what kept it together"; "An entire castleful of people was blown up by dynamite by the Connecticut Yankee"; "See the hero cause an eclipse of the sun"; and "Sixth Century Knights show the enemy a new stunt when they ride to battle on Twentieth Century motorcycles."

A postcard campaign consisting of two mailings also helped in bringing big crowds to witness the production.

"Bride's Play" Prologue a Reproduction of Scene in Picture

Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre, faithfully reproduced one of the scenes of "The Bride's Play" as a prologue number for this picture.

The backdrop was typical of Ireland, a painting of the Wicklow Mountains with a panorama of sea below. The blue crags meeting the sky-line made a pretty effect. Cut-out trees in silhouette served as a front border. In this frame sat Edna Burhams, soprano, dressed as Miss Davies is in the play, and Frederick Jagel, tenor, impersonating Wyndham Standing. The singers in quaint Irish nobility costume sang Herbert's "Thine Alone" from "Eileen," a ballad particularly adapted to the scene.

The lighting was mixed light and blue to bring about the effect of soft twilight, the orchestra being toned with a major green. The entire prologue had a delicate tinting, the song number being interpreted in soft strain to create a dreamy atmosphere. Directly upon conclusion of the prologue there was transition to the film.

El Paso Fans Thought Bill Hart Had Arrived

CITIZENS of El Paso, Tex., had visions of a visit of William S. Hart and his bride in El Paso recently when the Palace theatre played "White Oak," due to a stunt put into use by Manager J. M. Edgar Hart.

On the morning of the first presentation a girl who looked like Winifred Westover rode down the main business and residential streets on a pinto pony the exact counterpart of the famous pinto of the pictures and in the evening a local man who looked enough the famous actor to be his brother took the mount and paraded about the city. Also the Hart double and the cow-girl who resembled Winifred Westover were taken to the newspaper offices together and special stories about their resemblance to the newlywed film players resulted. A small canvas sign read "W. S. Hart and Pinto at the Palace Now."

Civic Organizations Sell Title for Carpenter

When theatres let the automobile clubs sell "Too Much Speed" for them they only scratched the surface of the advertising possibilities of the various civic associations.

The latest is George Carpenter's clever work for "Just Around the Corner," when the picture played at the Paramount-Empress Theatre, Salt Lake City.

It was a quarter-page ad in the Salt Lake Tribune, with the slogan, "Prosperity Is Just 'Round the Corner." A large wood-cut caught everybody's eye at once. Not a dime was spent. The Tribune gave the space; the Rotary Club took care of the text, and an advertising agency made up the cut and copy. George Carpenter contributed the slogan, which was the title of his attraction.

The slogan is being used on billboards all through the Salt Lake territory. The Rotary Club, in its campaign to popularize the slogan, has sold to the stores. Not infrequently such signs as "Murray's is just around the corner" are seen on the streets.

It is selling the title in the small towns as well as in Salt Lake City.

Automobile Company Donates Ballyhoo

Somehow the Cameraphone theatre, East Liberty, Pa., established the fact that Lois Wilson, playing the title role of "Miss Lulu Bett," owned a Westcott automobile, and the theatre prevailed upon the local agency to give them a car to use as a ballyhoo.

The company was pleased at the idea and even paid for the banner displayed on the radiator, which read:

This Westcott sedan is the official car of "Lois Wilson," heroine of the Paramount production "Miss Lulu Bett," playing at the Cameraphone theatre.

The resident papers gave a news story on the tieup, and even the Pittsburgh Press came through with a picture of the car and a story.

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Saturday Night

Great picture to attract large audiences. Sounds spicy. Interesting enough to hold the attention after they get in and has enough in it to create an argument. Splendid business all week. (Middle West.)

All the people went out talking favorably of it. Better business than usual. (Middle West.)

Special exploitation, the changing of the policy of the house from Sunday openings to Saturday, helped this one in attracting capacity crowds for a week's run. (Middle West.)

A wonderful entertainment. Fits any audience. Exploitation unlimited. Broke year's box office record. (Middle West.)

Rated only as of medium quality and regarded as much quantity. Receipts fair. (East.)

Flopped after strong opening. This talk about story without star seems to be bunk. When both are lacking there's not much money to count at the box office. (East.)

Three Live Ghosts—

Very entertaining with right mixture of comedy and pathos to keep audience interested. Did excellent business. (Middle West.)

Fine comedy. Good box office value. (Middle West.)

Call of the North—

Fairly entertaining and fair box office value. (West.)

This display was used by the Loew's Palace at Washington to advertise "One Glorious Day."

The Law and the Woman—

Knockout of a picture; business good considering conditions. (Middle West.)

Exit the Vamp—

Nifty story though it didn't go over big; those who saw it were well pleased. (Middle West.)

Peter Ibbetson—

Delightful. Very classy. Business fair. (Middle West.)

Just Around the Corner—

Mediocre picture. Business commensurately mediocre. (Middle West.)

Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford—

Clever comedy which our patrons liked. Did good business. (Middle West.)

Boomerang Bill—

Fine picture. Fair business. (Middle West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

The Beautiful Liar—

This one pleased followers of Katherine MacDonald, the picture doing an average week's business. (Middle West.)

Dry picture; held out four days; MacDonald losing favor. (Middle West.)

My Boy—

Good picture and box office receipts. (West.)

Hail the Woman—

Liked very much. Receipts pleasing. (East.)

All for a Woman—

Fairly well liked. Receipts fair. (East.)

Star Dust—

A good picture, however much it differs from the novel. (Middle West.)

Woman's Place—

Very good production. Fine box office value. (West.)

Polly of the Follies—

Nearly every one who saw it liked it very much. Nothing unusual, but a good attraction. (Middle West.)

Love's Redemption—

Wonderful picture; did big business throughout week. (Middle West.)

One of Norma Talmadge's best. Pleased big crowds at every performance. Should go well anywhere. (Middle West.)

Alf's Button—

One of the best comedy pictures of the year. But it did not draw particularly well. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Shattered Dreams—

Fair business. This is the second picture we have shown starring Miss Dupon. She must be gaining with the public because we did better with this one than with the first one. A good show. It would be a big seller if the star were better known. (Middle West.)

Foolish Wives—

Opened to capacity but business sloped off toward end of first week with two more to go. (East.)

Dr. Jim—

A fairly entertaining production. Business fair. (East.)

Conflict—

Patrons thought it a very good picture. (Middle West.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

The Swamp—

An excellent picture which did a lively week's business and made a hit with patrons. (Middle West.)

Hayakawa always draws well at this house and this feature attracted average business. (East.)

At the Stage Door—

Business excellent. Helped by personal appearance of Miriam Battista. Audiences liked it. (East.)

The Call of Home—

Very capably handled. Excellent plot. Audiences seemed to like it. Nice crowds. (Middle West.)

REALART

Tillie—

Very good production. Pleased my patrons. Business good. (West.)

Nancy From Nowhere—

Peach of a love story; went over big in conjunction with Lloyd comedy. Full house at practically every show. (Middle West.)

The House That Jazz Built—

The picture drew well for a week's run. (Middle West.)

FOX

A Virgin Paradise—

This is a good one. Pearl White has pleasing role that appealed to young and old alike. She is a favorite here. Good attendance. (Middle West.)

Shame—

Fine picture. Business very good. (West.)

Footfalls—

No particular drawing attraction; story interesting; did fair business for six days. (Middle West.)

A Connecticut Yankee—

One of the best pictures in months. Kept the audience in an uproar. (Middle West.)

An attractive ad display employed by the Metropolitan, Washington, to advertise "Star Dust."

Quarter-page on "Don't Get Personal" at the Superba theatre, Los Angeles

HODKINSON

The Mysterious Rider—

Better than average western and proved good box office attraction. (Middle West.)

Jane Eyre—

Very artistic production, but commercial value not very good. (East.)

French Heels—

Only an average picture. Fair box office attraction. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

Theodora—

Not as great as had been expected. Business fair. (West.)

The Night Rose—

Lon Chaney's popularity here put this one across in great style. A large attendance for the week. (Middle West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

I Accuse—

Very poor entertainment. Business the same. (West.)

PATHE

A Sailor-Made Man—

Good comedy feature. Business good (East.)

METRO

Peacock Alley—

Somewhat improbable story but good acting and magnificent settings put it over big. Holding it over for second week. (Middle West.)

SELZNICK

De Luxe Annie—

One of Norma's best revivals: business fair. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

Judgments—

Up to the high standard set by best of foreign made historic features. Interesting and spectacular. Played to average business. Holding it for second week. (Middle West.)

Ten Nights in a Barroom—

One of the big pictures of the year. Crowds limited by house capacity. No mistake to book this one. (Middle West.)

Out of the Dust—

Good western stuff; plenty of thrills and stirring scenes. Played to fair houses for full week. (Middle West.)

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

Edna Wallace Hopper, noted stage beauty, is appearing in person at the Barbee with a movie on how she stole twenty years from Father Time and rejuvenated her youth. Several excellent publicity stunts were pulled during her engagement, such as a full color page tie-up with the Chicago American, all of which were arranged by Jo Fischer and Al Dezel, of Master Advertisers, who are handling her publicity and exploitation campaign during her personal appearances at the Chicago motion picture houses.

Clyde W. Eckhardt, manager of Fox's Chicago exchange, has engaged Louis P. Kramer as publicity representative for the local office. Mr. Kramer is an experienced newspaper man, having worked on the Chicago Tribune, as well as other leading papers, and became known from coast to coast as press representative for General Leonard Wood, when the general was a presidential candidate. He also worked for Universal as field man in Ohio.

Manager Woods of the Columbia theatre, Chicago, has taken over the management of the Oliver theatre, South Bend, Indiana, where he succeeds Harry Leonard. The latter intends to devote his entire time to the Bucklin theatre at Elkhart, Indiana.

Walter Eschenbach reopened the Art theatre at Gary, Indiana, on February 11th. Extensive repairs and improvements have been made in the theatre, which is now one of the most beautiful small houses in that part of the state.

The Hawthorne theatre, of Cicero, Illinois, also reopened on February 11th with "Conflict," starring Priscilla Dean as its big feature. The Hawthorne is under the management of Mr. Lopatka.

Construction of the New Palace treatre, South Bend, Indiana, was slightly delayed when the scaffolding surrounding the new house was destroyed by fire last week. Little damage, however, was done to the structure itself, and work is progressing rapidly.

The Castle theatre, South Bend, Indiana, has cut its admission prices, all seats now being ten cents instead of ten and twenty cents, as heretofore charged.

Another theatre reporting a cut in admissions is the Rhode theatre, of Kenosha, Wisconsin, which is now charging fifteen cents, instead of twenty-five cents, as formerly.

Carl Laemmle, accompanied by his daughter, Rosabelle Laemmle, and her friend, Estelle Cohen, of New York City, left for the coast studios of Universal after stopping off in Chicago to witness the opening performance of "Foolish Wives" at the Roosevelt theatre. Julius Stern also is on his way to the coast after stopping off in Chicago for the opening.

"Over the Hill" broke all booking records when it last week completed a simultaneous run of one week in forty-three outlying Chicago theatres. This city wide engagement was of more than ordinary interest as it established a record breaking schedule for New York, as well as Chicago. The majority of these houses never before ran a feature for one entire week, and it is gratifying to know that many of them broke house records with this production.

Following is a list of the theatres which presented "Over the Hill:" Standard, Julian, Milford, Howard, Rex, DeLuxe, (South side) Central Park, DeLuxe (north side), Bryn Mawr, Vision, Paulina, Stratford, Keystone, Peerless, Villas, Casimir, Kimbark, Gayety-Hippo, Jackson Park, New Brookline, President, Harper, Lyceum, Owl, Ideal, Berth, Gold, Crown, States, Monogram, Vitagraph, Franklin, Eighteenth Street, King, Hamlin, Parkside, Crane, Parkway, Iris, Elston, Liberty, Wilson and Lawndale.

Salesman H. R. Smith was winner with Phil Solomon as second in the six weeks' sales drive conducted by the local Vitagraph exchange, and both have received handsome rewards for their good work.

Educational Films, Inc., will hold a district sales convention in Chicago on February 20th and 21st. President E. W. Hammons will preside over the meeting and Mr. Ginsberg will also be present. The branch managers who will attend include M. H. Starr, of Detroit; Lee Goldberg, of Louisville; Carl Lieber, of Indianapolis; H. J. Fitzgerald, of Milwaukee; and I. Maynard Schwartz, of Chicago. The meetings will be held in the Educational exchange at 837 S. Wabash Avenue.

Sid Schwartz is now connected with Security Pictures as special representative, selling the feature, "Call of the Wild." He is a well known Chicago film man, having been connected for some time with Celebrated and other exchanges.

At the request of Constance Talmadge, Balaban & Katz arranged a midnight show for the Chicago theatrical profession when Miss Talmadge's newest picture, "Polly of the Follies" was exhibited. The affair took place at the Chicago theatre on Thursday at midnight with Raymond Hitchcock acting as master of ceremonies. A large number of celebrities of the speaking stage and newspaper men enjoyed the performance and applauded the picture heartily.

F. B. Warren, of the American Releasing Corporation, was in Chicago this week looking over the newly opened exchange of the corporation, which is located at 806-808 S. Wabash avenue, and conferring with Central West Manager Sidney Goldman.

With the close of "The Connecticut Yankee's" eight weeks' run at the Woods theatre, on February 18th, the house goes back to the legitimate, although its first offering, "The Varying Shore," will star a movie favorite, Elsie Ferguson.

The week of February 12th marked the first anniversary of Balaban & Katz's Tivoli theatre. Gala features were put on in honor of the occasion. This house, which since its opening has become one of the most noted in America, has achieved a remarkable success and even during the oppressive and depressing summer of 1921, pulled big business.

Griever Productions has recently added some big features to its extensive list of releases, including "Judgment," which is having a successful run at the Ziegfeld, "The Polish Dancer," featuring Pola Negra, and the Second National Associated Photoplay programs.

G. H. Meyers has purchased the Park theatre at Urbana, Illinois, from H. A. Kariher and C. T. Walton. Mr. Meyers has been manager of the Park theatre for the past three years.

Verner Hick, through a recent transaction, has become owner of the Family theatre at Marion and the Family theatre at Pittsburg, Illinois.

R. V. Anderson, field representative of the International News Reel Corporation, is now making his headquarters at the Universal exchange in Chicago, and will cover the territory embracing Detroit, Milwaukee, St. Louis and Cleveland. Mr. Anderson states that he will place twenty more news reel prints in this immediate territory at once.

Phil Tyrrell is the latest addition to Clyde E. Elliott's sales organization, and will cover country territory for the fight films being distributed by Mr. Elliott. Mr. Tyrrell comes from Tennessee and has had several years of experience in the business.

Messrs. Fisk and Elwood, of De Kalb, are reported to have completed plans for a new motion picture theatre at that city, and construction is expected to start at an early date.

Tisdale Film Corp. to Open Branch in East

F. M. Tisdale, president of the Tisdale Industrial Film Corporation of Chicago, announces the opening in the very near future, of a new eastern division with headquarters in Pittsburgh, Pa. F. R. Martin, division sales manager, will leave to make arrangements for the new office this week.

The Tisdale Company has taken its place in the front rank of the industrial division—directing its activities largely to the production of municipal exploitation subjects, in which it has specialized for the past ten years, developing this field with remarkable success. Exhibitors find in these local productions new and powerful exploitation, as they form an effective tie-up between the theatres and leading local manufacturers, and mercantile establishments as well as with the schools, churches and important civic bodies. The big fleet of fast camera cars used by the Tisdale company forms one of the most complete mobile film equipments in the industry and is designed to obtain the utmost efficiency. The camera cars and their equipment get the interest and excitement from the start and the co-operation of the local newspaper is readily obtained, the latter contributing in running stories throughout the time the crews are at work. In this way the filming of each city becomes at once an event, while the finished product supplies an accurate historical record of the town.

Hundreds of the leading cities of the country have been filmed, the pictures meeting with great favor and furnishing splendid added attractions for the theatres using them.

The increasing demand for this service in the east, according to Mr. Tisdale, has necessitated the establishment of a permanent eastern branch to better serve their clients in that section. Complete field units of Tisdale fleet of camera cars will be assigned to handle the production while a complete force of publicity men industrial experts. etc., will be transferred to work out of the Pittsburg office.

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

Experiment with Titles via Wireless

A NOVEL experiment was tried by Alexander Film Corporation when screening "The Solitary Cyclist," one of its Sherlock Holmes stories, in the production room recently. Instead of the screened titles the audience heard the exclamations of the players in the picture, not via a talking machine, but by a wireless telephone service dispatched by a speaker watching the picture from the stage side of the screened drama. Wireless transmitters were fixed to the back of each seat, and an apparatus was fastened over the head. The effect was startling and uncanny.

According to the film men who witnessed the experiment, the idea is of commercial value.

Seeling Productions to Film True Story

Charles R. Seeling Productions have taken advantage of the college life romance of Ralph Obenchain and have featured him in a story titled "A Man in a Million" which portrays this romance.

Ralph Obenchain stepped into the limelight when he gave up a lucrative position as counsel for an insurance company in Chicago to go to Los Angeles to aid in the defense of his divorced wife who was held on a charge of murder. The story of the photoplay, according to Charles Seeling, the producing director and author of the play, does not depend in any sense upon the sensational murder case. The story is clean in every respect, according to Seeling, and contains nothing that would be objectionable in the highest class theatre.

The role of Madalynne Obenchain as she appeared when a fair co-ed is taken by Ruby Ray. All the players in the cast, with the exception of Obenchain, have had wide experience in the films.

Lynch Circuit Signs for Sacred Films

Savini Films Incorporated, of Atlanta, distributors for the Sacred Films in the South, announced last week that they had closed a contract with the S. A. Lynch Enterprises for the exhibition of the entire output of the Bible Narratives.

This deal involves approximately fifty theatres on the Lynch string, with the first run at Atlanta's million-dollar theatre, the Howard.

Equity Makes Sales Record

47½ Per Cent. of Territory Sold in 24 Hours on "Wandering Boy"

ALL records for the amount of territory sold in the shortest space of time, on any independent picture in the entire history of the industry goes to the credit of "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight" the Equity Special, produced by B. F. Zeidman.

In less than twenty-four hours after the world premiere of "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight" at the Criterion theatre, in New York City, 47¼ per cent of the entire territory of the United States was sold, sealed, and delivered.

That this is an outstanding accomplishment will, it is believed, be admitted by all connected with selling in the independent field and it is an especial feat in view of the present business conditions. "A coup of this magnitude," states Equity, "even in the palmy days would have been considered big, while today it is the biggest single campaign in the shortest time on record, and speaks in greater volume for th box office possibilities for the picture than anything that might be said in connection with it."

The territories sold so far and the buyers are as follows: New York State and northern New Jersey, purchased by Mr. Sam Zierler, Commonwealth Film Corporation, 729 Seventh Ave., New York; Eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey, purchased by Ben Amsterdam of Philadelphia; New England States purchased by Mr. Sam Grand of the Federated Film Exchange of Boston; Indiana, Northern Illinois and the entire state of Wisconsin purchased by Mr. Joe Friedman of the Celebrated Players Film Co., of 810 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago; and the entire Dominion of Canada purchased by Mr. Charles Stephenson of the Stephenson Attractions Ltd. of 28½ Adelaide St., E. Toronto, Canada.

Deals are now pending for other territory that constitutes a full 100 per cent for the picture.

"On no picture the independent field has seen in the past short period," said an Equity official, "have so many shrewd buyers expressed such unlimited confidence as expressed for the success of 'Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight.' After all is said and done, the selling of a state rights production takes care of itself, for given the real merchandise, the selling is entirely automatic. It depends on the goods you've got and if you've got the stuff that will get money for exhibiors, the rest is simple. Several hundred inquiries from exhibitors have reached the offices of Equity asking who will have the picture in various territories—an indicator of how the underground rumors on the box office value of the production have traveled far and wide. A special campaign to back up these various Independent Exchangemen is planned for regional papers, so that before the campaign is over not one exhibitor in all the world but what will know that 'Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight' is on the way to help many a distressed exhibitor out of the hole with some real receipts."

Reports of the opening at the Criterion theatre on Feb. 5th reached theatre owners in every part of the country and they are awaiting with enthusiasm the release date of this Equity special.

Mayer's "Travelaughs" for Independents

It is announced this week that the Hy Mayer "Travelaughs" are to be offered to State Rights buyers. The C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation has just completed arrangements with the famous traveler-cartoonist whereby it will take over the "Travelaughs" immediately and offer them on the State Rights plan.

The Hy Mayer "Travelaughs" have been recognized as one of the most unusual and highest-class single reel series ever made for the screen, being a series of picturized impressions of Europe as seen through the eyes of a noted cartoonist.

Hayes, of Pacific Film, to Tour Exchanges

JOHN J. HAYES, founder and executive head of the Pacific Film Co., of Culver City, Cal., said to be the pioneer in western state-rights distributing field, will make a "get acquainted" trip in April, his itinerary to embrace almost the entire U. S.

"I want to get acquainted with every exchange owner handling our pictures, and it seems to me that, as they cannot all come to California, I'll have to visit each manager individually," said Mr. Hayes in discussing his proposed trip.

Sensational Aeroplane Thrill in Serial

Word has been received at the offices of The Export & Import Film Co., world distributors of "The Jungle Goddess," that Col. Selig, producer of this, his third, wild animal jungle serial, has successfully completed the shooting of one of the most daring stunts in the serial, a stunt which has up to this time "stumped" him.

The scenario called for a fight in mid-air in a speeding airplane between the pilot and two leopards. Several attempts to stage this thrill for the camera met with failure. In one of the attempts one of the leopards, frightened by the deafening exhaust of the airplane motor, clawed and ripped the linen off the wings and fuselage of the plane. Two more attempts to accomplish the feat met with failure. Selig decided to try once more, and if unsuccessful to give up the idea of the mid-air struggle.

The third time the two planes took to the air with the leopards invisibly strapped to the struts. Elinor Field and Truman Van Dyke, co-stars, then took their cues and the fight in the air was caught by the airplane circling above.

Pacific Coast Studios to Be Enlarged

The Pacific Film Co.'s studios at Culver City, Cal., are undergoing extensive repairs and structural changes, according to word received by Julius Singer, Pacific's Eastern representative. It is the plan of John J. Hayes, manager of Pacific, to enlarge the stages and to make additions to the dressing-room section. A portrait gallery will also be added. Several carloads of newly-built studio furniture and other "props" have just been received at the plant.

Second Nat'l Exchanges in New England

TWO new exchanges were added to the list by Second National Pictures Corporation this week. The Second National Pictures Corporation of New England was established with offices at 57 Church street, Boston, with Herman Rifkin manager. The Eastern Film Features Company, Inc., 134 Meadow street, New Haven, which also is under the direction of Mr. Rifkin, was made a branch exchange for Second National. These exchanges will distribute the series of twelve photoplays to be released by Second National in the current season to exhibitors throughout New England.

Announcement already has been made of the release of "David and Jonathan," from the popular modern novel by E. Temple Thurston, and "Her Story," by Dion Titheradge, who also directed his talented sister, Madge Titheradge, in the production.

Thos. Ince to Release "When She Marries"

Thomas H. Ince made announcement from the studios at Culver City, Calif., this week of the forthcoming release of a special drama, "When She Marries."

The story was written by Bradley King, who has written a number of successful screen stories, and the picture is under the direction of John Griffith Wray with a special cast.

Mr. Wray's reputation as a director of big pictures has been enhanced by the dramatic excellence of "Hail the Woman," the current Thomas H. Ince release, which was directed by Mr. Wray under the personal supervision of Mr. Ince.

Viola Dana Welcomed to Salt Lake City

Viola Dana, the Metro star, who is making a tour of personal appearances, was welcomed to Salt Lake City, Utah, last week by Governor Charles Mabey. After her reception at the state capitol she motored to City Hall, where she was received by Mayor Charles Nelson.

After the official welcome, Miss Dana attended a luncheon of the Kiwanis Club, where she gave a talk on motion picture production. She then gave short talks at two high schools. The following day she addressed the assembly of the University of Utah and then motored to the Utah State Penitentiary, where she showed her new picture, "There Are No Villains."

Plans for Miss Dana's tour include visits to Kansas City, New Orleans, Birmingham, Memphis, Charleston, Baltimore, Washington and New York. At the end of the tour she will return to Metro studios in Hollywood to begin work on a new picture.

Many "His Nibs" Bookings

Exceptional Feature to Run at N. Y. Capitol and Other Big Houses

L. L. HILLER, the president of "His Nibs" Syndicate, Inc., has forwarded the Exceptional Pictures Corporation, producers of the comedy novelty in which the versatile Charles (Chic) Sale has transferred his protean art to the screen, reports from various portions of the country showing the enthusiasm with which the picture is being received by both exhibitors and the public.

A portion of the report contains the important announcement that "His Nibs" will be shown at the Capitol theatre in New York City, within the next two or three weeks, where it is expected to rank among the greatest comedy features ever produced at New York's biggest motion picture theatre.

Still another item of importance is the fact that the feature was shown at Ogden, Utah, with great success, and did a tremendous business at the Pantages theatre in Salt Lake City, where, to quote one report, "they hung them on the chandeliers."

Other important showings are the Doric theatre, in Kansas City, where the picture was immediately booked for two weeks when first shown, and the Allen theatre, in Cleveland, where it met with hilarious acceptance and big crowds. It is booked to play the Rivoli theatre, in Toledo, the latter part of February, and other Ohio bookings in the first-run cities are announced.

In Michigan, the Favorite Film Corporation, of which Mr. William Hurlbut is the president, controls the rights for the state, and the picture has been bought for the entire Butterfield Circuit for Michigan, as well as being booked in Grand Rapids and Muskegon, and in Pontiac. It will also be played in Detroit this month.

Mr. Sidney Baker, of the Exhibitors Direct Service, reports that "His Nibs" will soon start showing over that circuit, which is the only circuit in the country which is cooperatively booked and managed by theatre owners. The Exhibitors Direct Service controls thirty theatres in and about St. Louis, including many of the finest motion picture houses in the state of Missouri.

Still another important distribution note is that Mr. Max Wintroub, the president of the Fontenelle Film Corporation, of Omaha, Nebraska, has purchased the feature for Nebraska and Iowa, and that he is arranging first run bookings in Des Moines, Sioux City and Omaha; also that he finds exhibitors throughout both states most enthusiastic over the manner in which "Chic" Sale's comedy (which is always highly appreciated in the middle West) has been transferred to the screen.

Mr. Hiller also reports that he has several important contracts pending, announcement of which will probably be made within a week. "The success of 'Chic' Sale in 'His Nibs,' wherever it has been shown, proves it to be a truly 'exceptional' picture," was Mr. Hiller's comment. "both the public and the box-office enjoy the feature."

Outlines Pacific's Plans

Julius Singer, Eastern Representative, Tells Company's Policy

THE Pacific Film Company of Culver City, California, one of the largest independent producers of the West Coast, recently announced the appointment of Julius Singer as Eastern representative with offices at 729 Seventh Avenue. In an interview with Mr. Singer the company's plans were brought forth. "The Pacific Co. has waited, patiently, for the time to ring the bell of action and that time is now—1922.

"Sometime ago at the memorable Minneapolis convention I wrote and sent a message to that honorable gathering saying that the time will come when I would enter the independent field with a company that would show Wall Street and all other monopolistic film concerns that they would not be the "boss" of the film business.

"We will continue to make 'fewer and better pictures' which we have always done—that being nothing new to us. The public are not flocking to the theatres as they did before they are now carefully 'buying' their pictures like any other merchandise. Cleanliness has been the big policy with all the Pacific Company's output. I would cite the instance of 'The Call from the Wild' which has elicited high praise by exhibitors as an idealistic and clean production. We are now offering on the state-right market the following pictures: Henry B. Walthall in 'The Able Minded Lady' supported by Elinor Fair and Helen Raymond, adapted from the Saturday Evening Post story by William R. Leighton; 'The Girl from Rocky Point' with Ora Carew, Gloria Joy, Walt Whitman, and directed by Frederick Becker; 'The Fatal 30' a stirring action-drama; The Forest King' a red blooded picture of the Northwest with Reed Chapman and Lillian Hall."

Jigg-Saw Puzzle for "Jungle Goddess"

The Export & Import Film Co., Inc., distributors of Col. Selig's new wild animal serial, "The Jungle Goddess," is preparing a line of novelties to be issued with the serial. Among them is a multicolored card with odd shaped, meaningless cuts spread over it. When cut out and pieced together, the fragments make up a scene from the picture with the title and the names of the stars disclosed.

M.P.D.A. in Hollywood Elects Officers

THE members of the Motion Picture Director's Association at their regular members meeting February 9th held at their club rooms in the Markham Building in Hollywood elected the following officers for the coming year: David Hartford, director; Frederick Sullivan, assistant director; Wally Van, technical director; Norval MacGregor, treasurer; Frederick A. Thompson, secretary; Charles Parrott, inner guard; Duke Warren, outer guard; M. J. McQuarrie and Major Maurice Campbell, trustees.

The new officers will be installed at the next regular meeting to be held February 23d.

M. J. Winkler to Release State Right Product

Miss M. J. Winkler has severed her connections with the Warners, with whom she has been actively identified for a number of years, and according to a current announcement, will branch out in the independent field at the helm of her own company. Her new plans as outlined in her initial statement, embrace the formation of a large distributing unit with distribution headquarters in New York and production offices in Los Angeles. The company will specialize in the marketing and exploitation of independent product. Offices have been taken in the Candler Bldg.

At the present time Miss Winkler is personally negotiating for the distribution of a series of big feature attractions which will star several well-known screen favorites. It is expected that the contract will be closed within the present month.

The series of animated cartoon comics, universally known as "Felix," which are animated by the Pat Sullivan Studios and which for the past two years were distributed and exploited by the Paramount Pictures Corporation, was acquired recently by Miss Winkler for independent distribution.

"Chic" Sale Writing Own Screen Story

Charles (Chic) Sale, the Exceptional Pictures star whose first motion picture was "His Nibs," left New York last December for a tour of the middle Western theatres of the Keith Circuit, and has met with the greatest success in every city he has played. He appeared in Louisville last week, and the reviewers tore loose as usual and used all their adjectives to explain how they enjoyed his rural impersonations.

Mr. Sale has made a point of meeting the leading exhibitors in every town he plays. He is also busy with the script of his second motion picture. The story will be an original, of which "Chic" is the author, and he has an experienced continuity writer with him, to aid in the preparation of the story.

Two Pacific Film Releases

"The Able-Minded Lady" and "Girl from Rockpoint" for Independents

TWO unusual productions, recently completed, are being offered on the independent market this month by the Pacific Film Company, the Culver City, Cal., producing and distributing concern, of which Julius Singer is the eastern representative.

Both pictures are five-part comedy-dramas and will be released simultaneously, according to Mr. John Hayes, executive head of Pacific. Both have stars in the leading roles and both pictures, he promises, will be drawing cards to the theatres showing them.

Henry B. Walthall, supported by Elinor Fair and a large cast of well chosen screen performers, is the star in William Leighton's Saturday Evening Post story, "The Able Minded Lady." Seldom has Walthall been cast in a comedy-dramatic role, but when he essays a comedy part, says Mr. Hayes, the rendition seems to be inspired. "The Able Minded Lady" is described as a rural piece, with plenty of genuine comedy elements in its basic structure.

In the second picture Ora Carew is cast in the stellar role and has the support of Walt Whitman, Theodor von Eltz, Gloria Joy and others. "The Girl from Rockpoint" is the release title. Frederick Becker directed from the original story by Sherwood MacDonald.

"Too much cannot be said of these two productions from every angle," says Mr. Hayes. "Great care was spent in details and every effort was made to film each scene in a realistic manner. Photographically they are perfect."

Carewe Feature Is Titled

Burr Announces "I Am the Law" as Release Title of All-Star Feature

C. C. BURR announces this week that "I am the Law" has been selected as the title for the Edwin S. Carewe production which is now in production. This is the picture which will include in its cast Alice Lake, Kenneth Harlan, Rosemary Theby, Gaston Glass, Noah and Wallace Beery. Mr. Burr states that he has been in touch with representative independent buyers regarding the selection of a title, and after careful consideration it was decided that "I Am the Law" was both powerful and appropriate.

The company is now on location at Truckee, California, obtaining exteriors, and according to reports is in the midst of a terrific blizzard which is exactly the type of scene needed for the picture. The company worked continually, taking advantage of the snow, until the blizzard became such that further production was impossible.

An elaborate billboard campaign will launch the new picture, it is stated this week, in addition to a minutely prepared trade paper campaign.

"The term a 'northwest mounted' story," says Mr. Burr, "has often been used in connection with various outdoor pictures, but when applied to Edwin Carewe's Affiliated production, it takes on a different aspect. The reason for this statement is because of the type of cast, the unusual treatment of the story, and the general policy of the productions handled by Edwin S. Carewe. There have been any number of so-called small pictures made in the northwest, that in comparison—for the reasons already explained—Carewe's picture can be regarded as a special production.

"Carewe has passed the halfway mark in production. His enthusiasm is even greater than his first day of production, at which time he telegraphed me that he was sure he had started a winner—sure-fire in every sense of the word."

Franchise Holders Gather

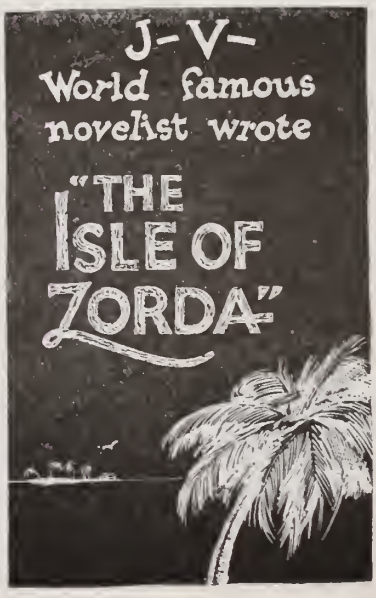
Amalgamated Distributors Meet in New York to Discuss Release Plans

BEFORE leaving for Los Angeles, where he will confer with C. M. Anderson about the twelve co-star features including "Ashes" and "Any Night," starring jointly Robert Edeson, Lillian Courtleigh, Myrtle Steadman, Tully Marshall, and other well-known stage and screen players and now being released through franchise-holders from among the independent exchange owners of the country, Franklyn N. Backer took advantage of the fact that New York would be the headquarters of many of the leading independent exchange men last week to arrange for a meeting of Amalgamated franchise-holders at the Hotel Astor.

In addition to a further study of the plans of the new organization in relation to how they are operating while actually in force through the release of the first two pictures, the matter of the new series of two-reel comedies featuring Stanley Laurel, the first three of which are completed and will be brought to New York by Mr. Backer upon his early return from the Coast, was discussed, as was also the subject of a third series which is now said to be in the making. Among the well-known film men handling the Amalgamated product in their respective territories were Sam Werner, of St. Louis; Al Kahn, of Kansas City and Omaha; Peter Oletesky, of Baltimore; Bill Underwood, of Dallas, and Sam Grand, of Grand and Werner, of Buffalo.

Mr. Werner, in New York, is releasing the first subject, "Ashes," as a Washington's Birthday present on February 22nd, and the second subject follows it almost immediately, being released on March 2nd. Sam Spitzer, of Chicago, also created considerable of a stir in the meeting by the news of an elaborate method of exploitation he has devised for attracting attention to the big stage stars in the first two pictures.

Urban's "Animal Kingdom"



52 Reels of Single Reel Subjects Will be Offered by Kineto Company

COMMENTS from Hodkinson exchange managers who are handling the distribution to theatres of "The Four Seasons," the four reel nature classic produced by the Kineto Company of America, and also from the theatres which are playing it, indicate that its largest element of popularity is due to the animals which form a great portion of the subject matter. When this was brought to the attention of Mr. Urban, President of the Kineto Company, it pleased him particularly because Kineto has a tremendous series of single reels on animals which are being edited for early release.

The entire series will be styled as "The Animal Kingdom" and includes at the present time more than 40 reels and is not yet completed. Each of the reels is edited to be complete in itself, though every reel is a distinct part of the entire series. What Mr. Urban will probably do will be to edit the entire series to comprise 52 reels and then release it on a yearly basis, making one animal reel for each week in the year.

In the majority of instances, the exhibitors who are playing "The Four Seasons" are making up their program with high-class short subjects around it and are not including any other feature. Thus the showing last week at the Stanley theatre in Philadelphia had besides "The Four Seasons" the Geraldine Farrar version of "Carmen" as produced recently by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, and a high-class two reel comedy, making eight reels in all for the motion picture part of the program.

Comments from all over indicate that far from being too "high-class" for audiences, "The Four Seasons" is creating demand for more material of the same sort.

Cincinnati Exhibitors Hold Election

AT a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Greater Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors, held at the Hotel Gibson, J. A. Ackerman was elected President; A. G. Hettesheimer, vice-President; Dr. G. C. Kolb, second vice-president; John J. Huss, treasurer, and Godfrey Kotzin, secretary. The above officers and the following members constitute the Board of Directors: I. Libson, I. W. McMahan, J. Burkhardt, William Gerwes, J. B. Bruner, Henry Levy and H. J. Bley. The officers were installed at a "get-together" meeting at the Hotel Gibson.

Paramount Has Booklet for Theatre Patrons

Among the special accessories for Paramount's Tenth Anniversary Month is a 24-page booklet, "The Story of 200,000 Miles of Entertainment," which is planned for free distribution to theatre patrons.

The press run of the booklet is five million copies, and they may be had by exhibitors free of charge in any quantity desired as long as they last. They will be available at all Paramount Exchanges within the next few days. The booklet, which is profusely illustrated, sketches the history of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the productions it has released. Then follow pages devoted to the various Paramount stars and special directors.

Pages 12 and 13 are given over to a 200-word statement by the theatre management, telling patrons why Paramount Pictures are shown at that theatre. The back cover is left blank for the theatre's own imprinting.

Strong Cast Seen in "One Clear Call"

An unusually strong cast is announced for Louis B. Mayer's "One Clear Call," which John M. Stahl is producing as a First National attraction. Henry B. Walthall, Claire Windsor, Milton Sills and Irene Ritch head the list.

Joseph Dowling, who will be remembered as "The Miracle Man," "Doris Pawn," Shannon Day, Donald MacDonald, Annette DeFoe, Edith Yorke, Fred Kelsey, William Marion, Stanley Goethals, Nick Cogley and Albert MacQuarrie also have important roles.

Ingram Special Ready Soon

Final Cutting and Titling of "The Prisoner of Zenda" are in Progress

FINAL cutting and titling of "The Prisoner of Zenda" is being done at the Metro studios in Hollywood by Rex Ingram. Announcement of the completion of the enactment of Mr. Ingram's production for the screen of Anthony Hope's story came this week from the Metro home offices in New York.

The work of cutting and titling has been in progress during the course of production, but this process was preliminary, merely the elimination from the immense amount of footage shot for "The Prisoner of Zenda" of the least important action. The ultimate job of reducing the picture to its finished form will consume perhaps a month, according to Mr. Ingram's conservative estimate. In a telegram this week from Hollywood he mentioned four weeks as the probable length of time necessary for the completion of this last stage in the making of the picture, with the reservation that it might be done sooner, but that it would not be unless the end of shorter period found the photoplay in a fully satisfactory shape.

"Feel it is my best picture," was the only reference in Mr. Ingram's telegram to the Metro home offices in regard to his opinion upon the picture as it now appears.

Mary O'Hara, who collaborated with June Mathis in the adaptation of "Turn to the Right," has written the scenario of "The Frisoner of Zenda"; and John F. Seitz, photographer of all the big Ingram successes, has again supervised the camera work. Starrett Ford was production manager.

A strong cast has been assembled for this photoplay. The dual roles of Rudolf Rassendyll and King Rudolf are enacted by Lewis Stone; and the fair beauty of the Princess Flavia could not have been more splendidly represented than by Alice Terry's. Robert Edeson as Colonel Sapt; Stuart Holmes as Black Michael; Ramon Samaniegos, a new Ingram find, as Rupert of Hentzau; Malcom McGregor as Count Von Tarlenheim; Barbara la Marr as Antoinette de Mauben; and Edward Connelly as Marshall Von Strakencz, are the principals among the others.

Melodrama on the Screen

Whitman Bennett Calls Melodrama Well-Done, Greatest Entertainment

WHITMAN BENNETT, producer of "Lady Fair," second of the Rex Beach pictures for United Artists Corporation, presents this new screen romance as an example of high-class melodrama with a broad general appeal.

"It is my belief," says Mr. Bennett, that melodrama if made clean enough and good enough to appeal to the educated, and elemental enough to appeal to the ordinary person, furnishes the most acceptable of all forms of picture amusement. Melodrama is stimulating in its action, and if it is logical in construction, has decided values as well, and, if in addition, it is kept clean, it has every element of amusement.

"After all, what we want in the theatre is entertainment and melodrama seeks only to be entertaining without any pretext at unfolding great truths or theories, or expounding hypothetical sex or domestic problems. The melodrama does not draw people into the theatre under a pretext of amusement, and then ask them to burden their minds with riddles of the why and the wherefore of some question of morals or politics.

"The melodrama comes right out into the open and says frankly, 'Here I am ready to take your minds off your worries and amuse you.' It says plainly, 'If you want to be entertained come on in,' and you know that when you accept the invitation you at least are not going to be bored.

"That's the reason I believe in the melodrama, and am bending every effort to make it so high-class in character that its appeal will be strengthened and broadened in scope.

"There is another thing about melodrama, and that is its informative value. By paying close attention to the subject one can glean much information about a wealth of matters without the information being forced on one. For instance in 'Fair Lady' much can be learned about the customs of Sicilians, about foreign and domestic architecture, about the quaint city of New Orleans; about fashions and customs, both foreign and domestic, and a sprinkling of political history. But all these things are secondary to the story and its purpose."

Lloyd Re-Issues Called "Emphatic Success"

Reports from the greater New York district received at Pathe Exchange show that the Harold Lloyd one reel reissues are meeting with the most emphatic success, according to a statement from the Pathe headquarters. It is estimated, from attendance averages, that one million persons in the metropolitan district are weekly entertained by these comedies, declares the statement from the Pathe office. Manager Joseph Plunkett, of the Strand theatre, two weeks ago showed "Look Out Below." Last week the Strand embodied in its weekly program "She Loves Me Not." Other Broadway houses, situated in the heart of the populous theatre district and further uptown, which have booked the Lloyd reissues are: The Strand theatre, the Broadway, the Schuyler, the Adelphi, the Standard, the Symphony, the Photoplay theatre, the Claremont and the Washington Heights theatre.

Pathe Film Record of Foch's Visit Shown

The Pathe News film record of the enthusiastic receptions which welcomed Marshal Foch during his tour of the principal cities of the United States, and was presented to him on his departure for his own country has had a first showing in Paris under distinguished auspices. The leading Paris newspapers made advance announcements of the event, and reported it at length. The showing was conducted by Post No. 1 of the American Legion, U. S. Ambassador Myron T. Herrick presided, introducing Marshal Foch.

Assd. Exhibs. Closes Big Foreign Contract

THE foreign expansion of Associated Exhibitors is revealed in a statement from that organization to the effect that arrangements have just been completed for the distribution of its entire product in Australasia for a period of three years by Alec. B. Helmrich of Sydney, Australia. It is understood that Mr. Helmrich will operate an organization similar to that of Associated Exhibitors in the United States. He has already opened offices in Sydney, Melbourne and Brisbane, and is leaving immediately to complete an exchange system throughout Australia and in Auckland and New Zealand.

Exhibitors Are Asked to Aid in Campaign

Goldwyn Pictures announces that every exhibitor in the country is being requested to take part in the selection of the girl to whom will be given a year's contract and expenses to and from the Goldwyn studio on the Coast. This arrangement, as announced in last week's NEWS, is a part of Goldwyn's campaign to introduce "new faces" on the screens of the country in the Goldwyn product. The campaign, which goes under the name of the New Faces Opportunity, is being conducted by Goldwyn and Photoplay Magazine. The exhibitor who is responsible for the successful girl's participation in the screen try-outs will be suitably rewarded, according to an announcement from the Goldwyn headquarters.

Hughes and Bessie Love in Big Special

Louis Burston announced from his headquarters in Hollywood this week an entirely new series of special productions to be made during the coming year.

The first special is now in production with the romantic Garreth Hughes, of Barry's "Sentimental Tommy" fame, and the wistful Bessie Love in the leading roles. The picture is as yet untitled, it being an original story by Henry R. Symonds and John B. Clymer, with the continuity by Clymer.

Mr. Burston has selected for his director W. S. Van Dyke. In the picture will be seen "Queenie," familiarly known as "the miracle dog of the screen." A capable cast has been selected in support of Hughes and Miss Love. It includes Irene Hunt, well remembered for excellent work in numerous Griffith pictures; William Machin, seen recently in Jackie Coogan's "My Boy;" Otto Lederer, Helen Gilmore, Mollie Thompson, Hal Wilson and Aggie Herring.

No releasing channel has been decided for the Louis Burston Specials, Mr. Burston said, although the David Butler Productions which he makes are handled by Western Pictures Exploitation Company of Los Angeles.

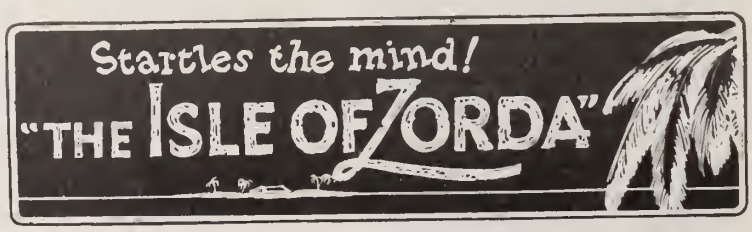
"Her Own Money" and "Love's Boomerang" Are Set for Feb. 19th

PARAMOUNT announces two pictures to be released on February 19, "Her Own Money," starring Ethel Clayton, and the first John S. Robertson British-made production, "Love's Boomerang," with Ann Forrest and David Powell.

The story of "Love's Boomerang," which is an adaptation by Josephine Lovett of Dion Clayton Calthrop's well-known novel, "Perpetua," centers around the love of Brian McCree, an artist, for "Perpetua," supposedly an orphan, whom he has adopted and brought up from a child. The girl, grown to womanhood, meets her father, an English rogue, and Sayville Mender, heir to a fortune, in Brian's studio. Mender, a drunkard and tool of her father, falls in love with her and begs her to marry him to save him from drink. Urged on by her father, Perpetua consents and many exciting incidents follow only to bring Brian and Perpetua, the true lovers, to a happy ending.



The photoplay is rich in beautiful exteriors, having been filmed in France and England, the locale of the original story. The cast, in addition to David Powell and Ann Forrest, who have the leading roles, includes Geoffrey Kerr, John Miltern, and Amy Willard.

In "Her Own Money," Ethel Clayton is seen as the self-sacrificing wife, a role of great appeal. Mildred Alden, by practicing the strictest economy, manages to save enough money to buy a home. Her husband, Lewis, who is very extravagant and irresponsible, wants $2,000 to hold an option which he thinks will be very profitable to him. Mildred arranges to lend her money to him through Harvey Beecher, a neighbor. Beecher's jealous wife understands the communication between her husband and Mildred and creates a scene. Lewis hears of it and leaves home in a rage, thinking Mildred was afraid to lend him the money direct for fear he might not pay it back. Things look stormy for a while but the blackness is all cleared away and everything ends happily.

Mark Swan wrote "Her Own Money," which is a play adapted to the screen by Elmer Harris. Warner Baxter plays the lead opposite Miss Clayton, and Clarence Burton, Mae Busch, Jean Acker and Charles French complete the cast.

Paul Powell to Direct Agnes Ayres

Jesse L. Lasky has assigned Paul Powell to direct Agnes Ayres in her next Paramount picture, "The Ordeal," by W. Somerset Maugham. Conrad Nagel will appear opposite Miss Ayres and Clarence Burton will have the chief heavy role. Others in the cast chosen are Edna Murphy, Edward Sutherland, Adele Farrington, Claire DuBrey, Lloyd Whitlock, Eugene Corey, Ann Schaefer and Shannon Day. The adaption is by Beulah Marie Dix.

Educational in Force in Greater New York

THE week of February 11 was a great week for Educational Pictures in the New York Metropolitan area.

At the New York Strand, "Free and Easy," a Mermaid comedy with Lige Conley and Jimmy Adams, was the comedy number on the program.

The Brooklyn Strand at the same time was showing "The Vagrant," a Mermaid Comedy featuring Lloyd Hamilton.

"Torchy's Frame-up," a comedy featuring Johnny Hines, went into its second week at the Criterion Theatre in New York.

"Just For Fun," one of the series of Sketchografs by Julian Ollendorff, showed at the Rialto in New York.

"The Love Egg," a Punch Comedy featuring Louise Fazenda, Chester Conklin, Baby John Henry, Jr., and "Teddy," the dog, began on Loew's Greater New York Circuit.

In Newark Loew's new State Theatre had the Christie Comedy "A Pair of Sexes," featuring Neal Burns.

Making Film by Author of "For Pity's Sake"

Remember that really funny sketch in vaudeville, "For Pity's Sake," which has run for nine years, and made even London laugh? Everett Shinn, noted artist and decorator, wrote it ten years ago. Well, Everett is doing it again. Up at the William Fox studio in New York, Shinn is busy filming another screening burlesque called "The Prune Hater's Daughter." When you learn that the plot has to do with a man who invents a machine to take the pits out of prunes, and a villain who invents another machine to put them back again, you gather something of the burlesque possibilities. Members of "The Dutch Treat Club," an organization of artists and writers, compose the cast.

It is being made to put on at the annual dinner of the club next month, and at present is for private showing only. But just as "For Pity's Sake" reached the stage though at first intended for private showing, it would not be surprising to see "The Prune Hater's Daughter" flashed on the screen of theatres throughout the country.

Fox to Film Novel by Author of "The Sheik"

William Fox announces the purchase of the motion picture rights to "The Shadow of the East," by E. M. Hull, the English novelist, before the novel has been published in this country—where it is expected to be one of the best sellers of the year. E. M. Hull is the author of "The Sheik."

William Fox has not announced whether it is to be made by one of his stars or as a special production.

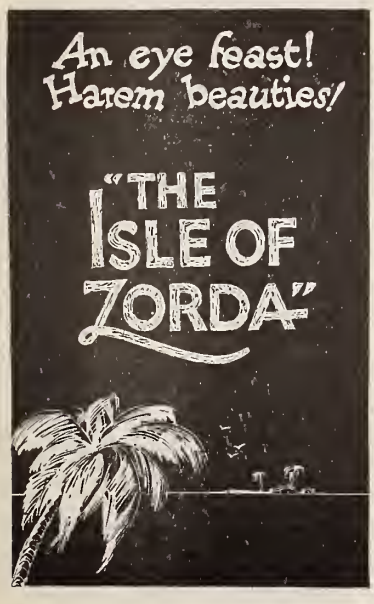
Stern to Enlarge Century Comedies



JULIUS STERN, president of Century Film Corporation and second vice-president of Universal, has left New York on his way to Universal City where he will resume his duties as Carl Laemmle's western representative. Mr. Stern accompanied Mr. Laemmle, who went on the same train, and together they will plan a record breaking season for Universal.

As regards his projects for expanding his own Century Comedy Company, Stern has already begun by engaging Henry Lehrman, who formerly directed Owen Moore and other well known screen stars. Lehrman in his contract agrees to furnish Century with twelve super comedies during the coming year. There is a probability that a new star will be engaged for him to direct. In the meantime the regular staff of Century directors remain: Fred Hibbard for Brownie, Alf Goulding for Lee Moran, Tom Buckingham for Harry Sweet and Arvid Gillstrom for Baby Peggy.

Bert Lytell Arrives in New York on Tour

Bert Lytell arrived in New York this week in the course of his around-the-country tour which began several weeks ago at the Meiro studios in Hollywood, and which has included personal appearances in as many of the largest photoplay theatres in the United States as could be visited in the time allotted the star before his return to the West Coast and further work before the Metro cameras.

While in the Eastern metropolis Mr. Lytell will be seen in person at several of the more important motion picture playhouses in this district. The list of these and the star's schedule of dates will be announced later.

Pearl White Signed by Pathe

Will Again Star in Serials; to Start Work July 15th

Pearl White who will return to the Pathe serial fold soon

PEARL WHITE has redeemed the promise she made to Paul Brunet three years ago—that if she ever starred in another serial it would be under a Pathe contract. Pathe announces the signing of a contract to that effect last week, under the terms of which the famous star of eight serials still playing in all civilized countries returns to the "House of Serials." The first production will start July 15.

Following the signing of her new Pathe contract Miss White sailed for France on the Aquitania last Tuesday to fill a revue engagement in Paris. During her three years' absence from serial work she has spent much of her time abroad. It is well known to the theatrical world of two continents that she has become one of the most popular stage favorites in the French capital. Several times within the last six months newspaper cables have stated that capital was ready to induce her to establish herself permanently in Paris at a theatre built for her and bearing her name, it is declared. It will therefore cause surprise in many quarters that she is to return to the hazardous work of a serial heroine.

The Pathe statement does not name the figure at which Miss White re-enters serial work. It is said, however, to be even larger than the salary she was receiving at the time of the production of her last Pathe serial, "The Black Secret."

The following statement was issued by the Pathe home office during the week in connection with the announcement of Pearl White's contract with that organization.

"It is understood that sentiment, quite as much as the matter of financial returns, influenced Miss White to come back in Pathe serials. That list of productions, beginning with 'The Perils of Pauline,' started and firmly established her great reputation as a screen actress. It was a remarkable personal achievement, all accomplished under the Pathe banner. It is said that the first intimation that she might be induced to reappear as a Pathe serial star was the result of a meeting between herself and a high Pathe official in Paris last summer, when she was jokingly reminded of her promise to Paul Brunet (as referred to above).

"It was not until two or three days before the sailing of the Aquitania that the matter appears to have progressed any further. The new contract is said to be the result of a conference of several hours between the actress and President Brunet in the latter's offices, at which other prominent Pathe officials were present. It is needless to add that the outcome of that conference will be received with agreeable anticipations by motion picture exhibitors everywhere.

"Respecting Pathe plans for Pearl White's reappearance as 'Serial Queen'—by which spontaneously bestwed title she is as familiarly known in Europe and Asia as in this country—there is little information beyond the date above named for the beginning of her first production. Obviously, she will be surrounded by a picked company and provided with a vehicle calculated to call upon her natural gifts and the rich and varied resources of an actress who never has been surpassed in motion pictures either for dramatic effectiveness along lines of realism or for physical courage and trained ability to meet the requirements of hazardous physical action which are peculiar to the serial form. The coming Pearl White serial, however, as Pathe points out—and as Miss White of course is aware—will reflect in the fullest degree the advances in choice of material and in technique of picturization which the typical Pathe serial now shows over the productions of three or four years ago."

"Educational Pictures Week"

Short Subject Drive Is Announced for April 16-23

PLANS were announced last week by E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., for Educational Pictures' Week, beginning Sunday, April 16, and ending Sunday, April 23.

An event of national recognition on the part of exhibitors of the importance of the superior short subject to his program and recognition on the part of the public of the greater strides being made in the production of short reel subjects, is announced as the aim of Educational Pictures Week.

The goal that has been set by Mr. Hammons is absolute 100 per cent representation for Educational Pictures during this special week. Backed by extensive exploitation and a special advertising campaign, the exchanges expect to have Educational product running in practically every theatre in the country.

One of the features of the week will be a great number of programs made up entirely of short subjects. The variety and quantity of the product handled by Educational Exchanges puts this organization in a very favorable position to provide entire programs of short reel subjects that are diversified and well balanced. Distinctive programs made up completely of Edueational product ean be provided for any number of theatres in the same district without conflict.

Special helps for the exhibitor are being prepared, work already having gotten well under way on this. A special one-sheet announcing Educational Week and linking up with Educational's national advertising will be provided free to the exhibitor. In addition to this, duplicate one-sheets and three-sheets will be provided gratis with all orders for these accessories. If an exhibitor orders two onesheets to advertise a comedy subject, he will receive four one-sheets on this subject without extra charge.

One of the biggest helps being prepared is a foreeful broadside telling some of the advantages of a short subject program and suggesting eight short subject programs comprising all the required types of pictures for a well-balanced presentation, and consisting entirely of Educational Pictures.

One of these suggestions is for Limit?"; Sketchografs, by Julian Ollendorff, being a cartoonist's idea of the limitation of armament; (4) "The Battle of Jutland," the authenticated screen visualization the theatre that wishes to present a serious program, and includes the following subjects:

(1) Kinograms, the visual news of all the world; (2) "The Crater of Mt. Katmai"; (3) "What's the of history's greatest sea fight (5) "Oh, Buddy!" a Christie comedy featuring Neal Burns.

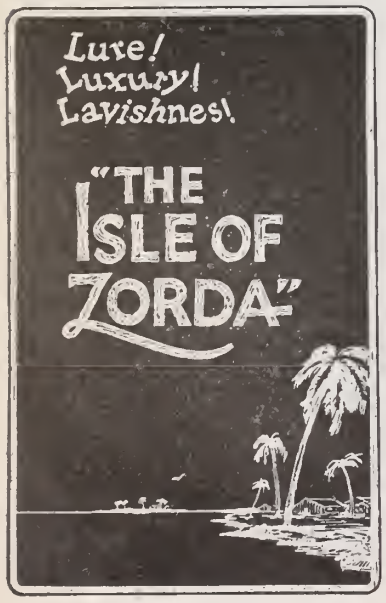
Another of the eight suggested programs is prepared as a "jazz program," for the house that wants a light, fastmoving program with thrills and plenty of laughs. It includes: (1) Kinograms; (2) "A Ride of a Runaway Train," by Lyman H. Howe; (3) "Eve's Leaves," Sketchografs, by Julian Ollendorff; (4) "Dummy Love," a Gayety Comedy; (5) "Bang," a Mermaid Comedy; (6) "Southern Exposure," a Christie Comedy.

"The biggest idea behind this special week, said Mr. Hammons, "is the recognition that it signifies of the great efforts Educational has been making to provide for the exhibitors the highest type of short subject possible, including not only the short comedies, but travel pictures, thrillers, pictures with dramatic kick and, in fact, every sort of short subject.

"We are looking forward to the week of April 16 with high hopes that it will be the most significant week in the history of short motion picture subjects."

Vitagraph to Release "Gypsy Passion"

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has announced the acquisition by that company of "Gypsy Passion" for the United States and Canada. Mr. Smith announces that this French production, an adaptation of Jean Richepin's gypsy story, "Miarka, the Child of the Bear," will be released during March. The genral release will be preceded by a Broadway showing which will take place this month. The picture has already ben shown in France and England, where it was acclaimed as one of the greatest film productions of the year.



Jean Richepin himself made the adaptation from his novel, published originally under the French title, "Miarka—la Fille a l'Ourse." The picture was produced by the Societe des Films Mercanton, under the personal direction of Louis Mercanton, known as the Griffith of France. The cast is extraordinary for its brilliancy. Madame Rejane, the foremost French tragedienne, with the exception of Sarah Bernhardt, has the leading role of Romany Kate, and this is the only picture Madame Rejane made for the screen.

Norman Dawn to Make Features for R-C

Arrangements have been made, according to R-C Pictures, by that organization and Norman Dawn, who formerly directed Sessue Hayakawa, under which Mr. Dawn will make for distribution through R-C Pictures, a series of five productions a year.

The first production by Mr. Dawn under this arrangement, will be an adaptation of the Jack London story, "The Son of the Wolf." This will be adapted by Edwin Warren Guyol, who adapted Homer Lea's story, "The Vermilion Pencil" for Sessue Hayakawa.

The cast, which has been selected with the exception of the leading man, includes Edith Roberts, Ashley Cooper, Thomas Jefferson, Fred Kohler, Arthur Jasmine, Fred Stanton and Eagle Eye.

Reviewers Laud Fox Film

"Smiles are Trump" Melodrama Is Well Received by Trade Press

"SMILES ARE TRUMP," the latest Fox production starring Maurice Flynn, the former famous Yale athlete, has been accorded much praise by trade paper reviewers. "Smiles Are Trumps" is a melodrama of railroad life which surpasses anything of the sort that was ever before attempted by the Fox production forces. The picture, which was released early in February was adapted for the screen from Frank L. Packard's story, "Tempered Steel."

Motion Picture News says: "In 'Smiles Are Trump' you look only for action and more, and then some more. Frank L. Packard knows how to write a railroad story insofar as filling one with stirring incident. This one hits the bull's eye for action which outdocs the serial for compact punch scenes. There isn't a single wait That doesn't seem to be Maurice Flynn's way. Built for work, possessing a magnetic personality, willing to smile when danger looms up as black as death—he gives this vivid melodrama a great deal of its appeal. He makes his tasks look easy. Probably because he is big and strong enough to get and deliver the goods. And believe me, he has to deliver them here."

Moving Picture World: "To Maurice Flynn, the star, much of the credit is due for making the action convincing. He is natural and earnest, and moves with less regard for the camera than any of the big-hero types do . . . The most sensational event is the race of the two engines and Flynn's leap from one to the other—a scene which should prove thrilling anywhere."

Film Daily says: "The story is a fine vehicle for Flynn, and he certainly makes the most of it. There is action galore in 'Smiles Are Trump,' almost enough for a short serial if they wanted to make one. Flynn and his enemies have any number of battles and the beatings he survives surely make it appear that he has nine lives. . . . It isn't likely that you will have another one exactly like this come your way, so you ought to be nicely set to show 'Smiles Are Trump.'"

Assd. Exhibs. Set Release

"Don't Doubt Your Wife," a Leah Baird Production, Due March 12

MARCH 12TH has been announced as the release date of "Don't Doubt Your Wife," the first of a series of Leah Baird productions, based on domestic life, which will be released by Associated Exhibitors during 1922.

Leah Baird is assisted by a large cast which includes Edward Peil, Emory Johnson, Katherine Lewis and Mathilda Brundage who play, respectively, the husband, the "other man," the "other woman" and the bride's mother. "Don't Doubt Your Wife" was directed by James W. Horne, and is said to be one of the outstanding works of his successful career. The production was supervised by Arthur S. Beck.

Associated Exhibitors insist that while "Don't Doubt Your Wife" is a story of marriage and the divorce evil, it is far from being what might be considered a picture with a message other than that it is an interesting chapter on the problems of married life. It is declared to be a sincere human drama of intimate human interest, and is tense with the power of its emotion. It is conceived with the idea of exposing the futility of jealousy, the folly of stubbornness, the sin of doubt and the evil of divorce.

The high lights of the story are said to concern the experiences of a faithful wife, whose husband is unreasonably jealous of her and who represents the type of man given to the belief that guilt exists until innocence is proved.

Will Film "The Shaugraun"

Famous Irish Play by Dion Boucicault to Be Produced by Vitagraph

VITAGRAPH announces for screen production "The Shaugraun," the famous stage play by Dion Boucicault, which was first presented in the old Drury Lane theatre in London in 1875, and has since played the world over in every English-speaking country from Australia to Bombay. "The Shaugraun" is a story of Irish life of a few decades ago, genial and appealing in character and devoid of offense to any provincial or national groups.

The first scenes have already been taken at Vitagraph's Hollywood studios under the supervision of David Smith. Pauline Starke and Pat O'Malley head the all-star cast of "The Shaugraun." Miss Starke's work in "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," "Flower of the North" and many other of the very biggest film successes, justify her choice as the female lead. Pat O'Malley, a star with a wide following, will play the leading male role in "The Shaugraun." O'Malley was for three years in Chauncey Olcott's stage company.

A special part has been written into the picture for little Richard Daniels, whose charming work as "Micah" in Vitagraph's "The Little Minister" attracted considerable attention.

Rupert Hughes Returns to Culver City

Rupert Hughes, Goldwyn's author-director, has returned to the corporation's Culver City studios, after spending several weeks in New York attending to personal matters and conferring with Goldwyn executives on new pictures which he has in mind, on business conditions in the industry and policies which will conform to present conditions.

While in New York Mr. Hughes made several speeches against motion picture censorship at various gatherings and talked on the making of motion pictures before students of the photoplay at Columbia University.

Selznick News Scoops New York Dailies

Selznick News claimed another "beat" when, following the newspaper reports that the body of Evelyn Nesbit (formerly Mrs. Harry K. Thaw) had been found in the Potomac River, Selznick News cameramen discovered Miss Nesbit alive and safe in New York City. In this instance the screen news beat the reporters for the daily papers.

Miss Nesbit was captured by cameramen and rushed to the Selznick studios in West Forty-eighth Street where exclusive pictures were taken showing Miss Nesbit reading of her own "death" in the New York dailies. Selznick News 1013-C carry the Nesbit pictures.

John Gilbert on New Subject for Fox

"In the Land of Beginning Again," is the filming title of a picture on which John Gilbert, the Fox star, has begun work at the Fox West Coast studios in Hollywood. Jerome Storm is directing the photoplay, the story and scenario of which were written by Jules Furthman.

In the cast are a number of prominent actors. They include Barbara Bedford, Barbara Le Mar, Herschel Mayall, Robert Kortman, and William A. Orlamond.

Exteriors in "Conceit" Excite Admiration

In the many first-run theatres in which "Conceit," second of the Supreme Selznick Six series of specials, is being shown the exceptionally beautiful exteriors in the picture are exciting comment. Many of the shots in "Conceit" were made in the vicinity of Banff in the heart of the Canadian Rockies, a district which attracts thousands of tourists each summer.

Coast Adv. Club Honors Pauline Frederick

The Advertising Club of Los Angeles, one of the biggest and most influential organizations of its kind on the Pacific Coast, paid Pauline Frederick an unusual compliment by making her the honor guest at their aunual banquet and ladies' night, recently.

"Old Swimmin' Hole" at Special Showing

THE VISUAL INSTRUCTION ASSOCIATION of New York City has selected the Charles Ray-First National attraction, "The Old Swimmin' Hole," in which Arthur S. Kane presents the star, as the feature picture to be shown at its benefit in the Maxine Elliot theatre, Sunday evening, February 19. Postmaster-General Will H. Hays is expected to be present to make an address and several picture stars have been invited to make personal appearances.

The object of the entertainment is to obtain funds to further the work of the association which has full charge of the selection and placing of motion pictures in classes of the city schools. The city's appropriation for visual instruction this year is only $25,000, an amount far too small for the carrying out of the organization's program on the scale which had been hoped for.

Unusual Story for Jack McGowan Feature

"The Hills of Missing Men," a new Jack McGowan feature, scheduled for release by Playgoers' Pictures on February 26th, is declared by that organization to offer exhibitors the best audience appeal of all of the McGowans released to date.

The story, written by John B. Clymer, deals with the efforts of a rich fanatic to organize an army to usurp the peninsula of Southern California and set himself up as absolute monarch. Against him is arrayed Jack McGowan, posing as the powerful leader of a band of outlaws, but in reality an army officer sent by Washington to quell the disturbance. A romantic interest is added by the presence of two daughters of a rich rancher, one of whom is fascinated by the self-appointed monarch, and her younger sister, who falls in love with McGowan, the supposed bad man.

American Releasing Schedule

MESSMORE KENDALL'S production of Robert W. Chambers' revolutionary romantic drama "Cardigan" is the opening attraction offered to exhibitors of the United States and Canada by American Releasing Corporation, the new international distributing company organized by Walter E. Greene and F. B. Warren. Since November this new organiaztion has maintained the utmost secrecy about the productions it had contracted to market.

"Cardigan" was directed for Mr. Kendall by John W. Noble and edited by Mr. Chambers, Mr. Kendall and their editorial associates. It will have its world premiere the week of February 19th (Washington's Birthday week) at the Capitol theatre, New York, with simultaneous engagements in first run theatres in twenty of the largest cities East of Denver. This surprise picture has been in the making for many months and comes as the direct answer to the often-asked question why some American producer has not offered a great American historical drama of the same magnitude as the spectacular German-made pageant dramas. "Cardigan" is the story of the outbreak of the American Revolution and its big historic moments embrace the battle of Concord, the march on Lexington, the thrilling ride of Paul Revere and the soothing, bitter struggle between the Loyalists and patriots in New England.

American Releasing obtained the world-wide distribution of this production in competition with the largest and oldest distributing organizations of the industry, it is said. "Cardigan" has an all-star cast of widespread popularity, headed by Betty Carpenter and William (Buster) Collier, Jr.

Simultaneous with this first production announcement American Releasing reveals its next five subjects, and the titles, together with advance news that has leaked out regarding the individual pictures, indicates a strong array of product for the company at the outset of its career.

"Martin Johnson's Jungle Adventures," presented by Alexander Boyfuss' Exceptional Pictures, which had its American premiere at the New York Capitol theatre recently, is the second release offered by Messrs. Greene and Warren. Chester Bennett's big Klondike melodrama, "Belle of Alaska," starring wistful Jane Novak, is the third production gaining American release.

James Oliver Curwood's big outdoor drama of the Hudson Bay country, "Jan of the Big Snows," is the fourth production of the group. It was directed by Charles M. Seay and stars Louise Prussing. This production is by the author of "The River's End," "Isobel, or Trail's End," and "The Yellow Back."

Marion Fairfax's "The Lying Truth," a dramatic production personally directed by Miss Fairfax, has been held back off the market since November to be one of the early-released productions of this new distributing company.

A new star and a brand new producing organization offering lighter romantic comedy-drama comes into the field through Frank Tuttle and Fred Waller, Jr., who present Glenn Hunter in "The Cradle Buster," the story being by Mr. Tuttle, the director, and in the best Tarkington vein about adolescent youth. Glenn Hunter is known throughout the country, having been seen everywhere in Tarkington's "Clarence."

Sixth among the releases of American comes the first of the Pyramid Pictures' productions, Ray Smallwood's able picturization of "My Old Kentucky Home," with an all-star cast comprising Sigrid Holmquist, Monte Blue, Lucy Fox and others.

William P. S. Earle Pictures, Inc., also brings another director of note into the field producing on his own hook with his own personal organization. The first of his series of productions is "Destiny's Isle," made in Florida and the Bahamas, with an all-star cast including Virginia Lee, Florence Billings, Ward Crane, George Fawcett, Arthur Housman and William B. Davidson.

American Releasing Corporation now makes definite announcement of one production to be released each week from February 19 to July 9, a period of twenty weeks, and fourteen of these twenty releases are completed and in the distributing company's vaults in New York, thereby making certain that there will be no delays of any kind in meeting all scheduled release dates.

The company will release in its first calendar year an absolute minimum of twenty major grade productions by the biggest independent producers in the industry, and between twenty and thirty additional moderate-priced productions of well known directors.

Remarkable Beat for Fox News

AFTER several months of preparation and the expenditure of many thousands of dollars, William Fox announces the publication of "Face to Face With Japan," a colossal news and educational beat which it is stated, deals impartially with the important question of the so-called peril of Japanese expansion and territorial aggrandizement in respect to the effect of these upon American interests.

The film will be released in installments, each of which is to be embodied as a portion of the even numbered issues of Fox News. The first installment appears with Fox News No. 40.

A statement issued from the Fox headquarters in connection with the announcement of the new picture follows:

"So far as is humanly possible," this Fox production answers the query "Does war threaten between United States and Japan?" Opinions of the nation's leaders have been diversified. Because Japan has been a country of peculiar reticence and of more or less mystery, no one has been able to ascertain the true motives actuating Japanese national life.

"Fox news, in this amazing series of pictures, supplies the facts for the first time—throws open the door of mystery, lifts the curtain of intrique, and for the first time in history reveals the secrets of Japan's army and navy.

"Because of the dearth of information on true conditions in the Pacific empire, and because of the dangerous straits into which the American public might be led by virtue of its lack of such information, Mr. Fox felt the urge to get at the bottom of it all.

"Accordingly it was decided to send a cameraman to Japan to obtain actual photographs of material accomplishments, preparations and resources. Instructions were issued to Al Brick, the star photographer of the New York staff, to take the assignment and to procure every possible detail desired in photographic form, regardless of risk, time and expense. The journey took the Fox man more than 6,000 miles over stretches of land inhabitated in many sections of barbarous tribes under the military control of Japan, and into portions of the world never before photographed or entered by civilized white men. Brick braved death, prison, and other perils to accomplish his purpose and to present to the world this amazing series of informative motion pictures.

"The production vividly displays the vast resources of the nation of islands, her civilization, her preparedness for war, her industries. It is the real Japan revealed for the first time.

"The installment which inaugurates the series graphically describes, by means of a number of maps, the territory which Japan owns and controls, through military domination or otherwise. It takes up the Japanese expansion from 1894, including the territorial gains following the Chinese-Japanese War in 1894-95, the Russian-Japanese War in 1904-5, and the World War of 1914-18.

"The introductory pictures show a review of the tremendous Japanese army, numbering in all 2,500,000 men and a review of the Japanese navy, which ranks third among the naval forces of the world. It includes views of the "camphor hells" on the Island of Formosa, where Japan holds palpable control of the world's output of the camphor so necessary in the production of explosives. These scenes were taken at great risk, and with the protection of a large body guard because of the savage character of the Mongolian tribes inhabitating the island. For nearly thirty years these people have been under the control of Japanese military.

"These unusual pictures are an integral part of every second issue of Fox News and are accordingly supplied to subscribers at no additional cost."

A tense moment from "When Romance Rides," a Zane Grey picture, produced by Benjamin B. Hampton, and released by Goldwyn

Cast Is Completed for "Gay and Devilish"

The cast for "Gay and Devilish," a comedy drama starring Doris May, has been completed, according to announcement from the studio at Hollywood. This will be Miss May's fourth R-C picture produced by Hunt Stromberg and directed by William A. Seiter.

The play was written by Charles Logue, and Garrett Elsden Fort adapted it for the screen. The members of the cast supporting Miss May who has the role of Fanchon Browne, are: Cullen Landis as Peter Armitage; Otis Harlan as Peter Armitage, uncle of young Peter; Jacqueline Logan as Lilah Deane; Bull Montana as Tony; Lila Leslie as Aunt Bessie; Ashley Cooper as the butler; Arthur Millet, Kingsley Benedict and Milton Ross as detectives; and George Periolat as Nethercote.

Stanley House Features "Sailor Made Man"

In line with the declaration that the biggest first-run theatres everywhere are using Harold Lloyd's "A Sailor Made Man" as a big feature attraction rather than a short comedy, Associated Exhibitors quote, as a typical example, the Stanley Company of Philadelphia. For the week of February 5th the big Stanley theatre at 19th and Market street played "A Sailor Made Man" first run in Philadelphia and featured it in an exceptionally big advertising and billbard campaign as the real feature of the program.

New Rex Beach Picture Is Completed

"Fair Lady," second of the Rex Beach film productions for United Artists Corporation, and an adaptation of Mr. Beach's novel, "The Net," has been completed, and is now in the final stages of assembling and titling. While no definite release date has been fixed it is expected that "Fair Lady," in which Betty Blythe plays the leading feminine role, will be ready for exhibitors in a short time.

With Miss Blythe in the cast for this new Beach photoplay are such players as Thurston Hall, Gladys Hulette, Robert Elliott, Florence Auer, Macey Harlam, Arnold Lucy and Effingham Pinto. "Fair Lady" was directed by Kenneth Webb.

Ten Stories for Goldwyn

Famous Authors Supply Stories to be Filmed in Near Future

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION, with the recent purchase of three scenarios by Carey Wilson, has ten stories for early translation to the screen. Nearly all of them are stories written directly for motion pictures.

Rupert Hughes is represented in this list by "The Bitterness of Sweets," another comedy of everyday American life. Mr. Hughes' latest comedy, "Come On Over," is being released for the week in which comes St. Patrick's Day.

Gouverneur Morris has also written a new story expressly for motion pictures. It is called at present, "Always Warm and Green," and is said to be in the Morris vein of tense action. This author is represented on Goldwyn's latest group of releases by "Yellow Men and Gold," a stirring adventure tale of the South Seas.

A new author to come under the Goldwyn banner is Peter B. Kyne, whose story, "Brothers Under the Skin," is being prepared by the scenario department for filming.

Carey Wilson is another new Goldwyn author with something of a record. Goldwyn has bought three scenarios from him before a single tale from his pen has been reflected on the silver sheet. One of these is a South Sea story, "Captain Blackbird." Another is a three-part story of New York life, and the part played in the lives of three women by a big diamond. This story is called "Women Love Diamonds." The third Carey Wilson story is called "This Way Out." Mr. Wilson is now at the Culver City studios as a permanent member of the Goldwyn scenario department.

Charles Kenyon, author of two Goldwyn successes, "The Invisible Power," with House Peters and Irene Rich, and "Beating the Game," with Tom Moore, has sold a new original story to Goldwyn. It is called "Fame," and deals with the life of a grand opera prima donna.

The screen version of Hall Caine's novel, "The Christian," prepared by Charles Kenyon and approved by the author, is now in readiness for filming. A new Western drama by Katharine Newlin Burt called "Summons" has been purchased. It is an original screen story.

The screen rights to a new Kathleen Norris story, known for the time being as "Sis," have also been obtained by this producing corporation.

Hunt Stromberg Heads New Independent Producing Organization

HUNT STROMBERG, who left the fold of Thomas H. Ince to produce photoplays starring Doris May for Robertson-Cole release, has withdrawn from the active production and management of the Doris May pictures to become the sole independent owner of his own producing organization, it was announced on the coast last week. Mr. Stromberg, however, retains his full financial interest in the Doris May features to be continued for production and release by Robertson-Cole.

The first acquisition of Stromberg under the new independent order of affairs is a long-term contract which elevates into stardom in his own right Bull Montana, who will be featured in a series of elaborately produced two-reel comedies. Negotiations between Stromberg and Bull Montana were consummated last week, with Douglas Fairbanks, who first discovered Montana and brought him to the Coast, representing his protege's interests during the negotiations.

Bull Montana's personal success as "the social secretary deluxe" in the first Hunt Stromberg production, "The Foolish Age," capped the climax on the youthful producer's long-nursed idea that in the engaging personality of "Mister Montana" the screen was endowed with an unusual character-novelty with an established popularity throughout the United States. Previous to his appearance in "The Foolish Age," "Bull" was featured in the casts supporting many of the most prominent stars. At leading theatres in various cities, the name of Bull Montana has been advertised and exploited equally with that of the featured star.

"The personnel and producing staff of the Hunt Stromberg Productions will be announced shortly. Announcement of distribution arrangements are being withheld pending the consideration of several proffered arrangements. Work on the initial Bull Montana feature will begin on March 1st at the United Studios. Stromberg's further plans for expansion in the production field include the acquisition of other special units, to be announced shortly."

Canadian Exhibs Praise Wm. Fox Releases

From H. S. Mitchell, president of the Windsor Amusement Co., Ltd., of Windsor, N. S., comes this letter:

"After last night we cannot refrain from letting you know that 'After Your Own Heart' is far and away the finest Mix picture, and incidentally the finest western, that has yet graced our screen. We broke our record in attendance, and we did it at advanced prices. It is our annual Comedy Week, so prices went up. Thank you for giving us this much-valued subject when we wanted it. That's what we call co-operation."

C. N. Begin, manager of the Theatre Casino, Edmundston, N. S., sent this to William Fox:

"I want to record our appreciation for the last picture of William Farnum, 'If I Were King.' Our patrons were simply delighted with it and have pronounced same one of the best we have shown in our theatre."

Baby Peggy in Cast of Neilan Production

Baby Peggy, the Century comedy star, will again appear in a Marshall Neilan production. She was loaned to Mr. Neilan to play in "Fools First," in which Richard Dix and Claire Windsor are featured. Baby Peggy is now at work on "The Little Angel," under her director, Arvid Gillstrom.

The littlest star, who has just celebrated her third birthday, also recently signed a three-year contract with Julius Stern, president of Century Comedies.

A Genuine All-Star Cast for "Nice People"

Jesse Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announces that in William de Mille's Paramount production of "Nice People," which follows "Bought and Paid For," a number of noted stars and players will be featured. Among these are Wallace Reid, Bebe Daniels, Wanda Hawley, all of whom are stars in their own right and Conrad Nagel, the popular young leading man.

Winifred Verina Wins a Contract With Pathe

WINIFRED VERINA, a slim young English dancer, was graduated on Monday last from the Hippodrome ballet to a job as a "dare-devil" beauty in Pathe serials, starring Charles Hutchison. Miss Verina was not the unanimous choice of the judges.

The try-out was opened by George B. Seitz, producer of Pathe serials, and, as the Keith's Boys' Band of 200 pieces blared out its contribution, 200 girls from the "Get Together" Ballet and the "Good Morning Dearie" chorus trooped from the wings. While the judges were deciding the winner, a Harold Lloyd comedy was shown.

Winifred Verina has been trained in the ballet since she was five. She is now twenty-one, is five feet seven inches in height, has natural blonde hair and light hazel eyes. She was discovered two years ago in a London dancing school by Pavlowa and subsequently toured North and South America with the famous ballerina. Miss Verina will leave shortly for Florida with the Pathe company, directed by George B. Seitz. She will be cast in the same Pathe serial with Charles Hutchison and Lucy Fox.

Two January Releases Work of Eve Unsell

Two important releases within a month is an unusual record for a screen author. Miss Eve Unsell, editor at the R-C Pictures studios at Hollywood, achieved that record recently when R-C released "Five Days to Live," starring Sessue Hayakawa; and "The Call of Home," L. J. Gasnier's spectacular flood drama, for both of which Miss Unsell prepared the continuities.

"Five Days to Live" was based on Dorothy Goodfellow's story, "The Street of the Flying Dragon," and the adaptation was made by Miss Unsell in collaboration with Garret Elsden Fort. The story is a dramatic romance. "The Call of Home" is the picturization of George Agneu Chamberlain's memorable novel "Home" and Miss Unsell made the adaptation alone.

A Worthy Successor to Other McGowan Films

With the release on February 26th of Jack McGowan's "Hills of Missing Men," Playgoers Pictures say they have a worthy successor to the previous McGowan Westerns, "Reckless Chances," "The Ruse of the Rattler" and "Discontented Wives." "Hills of Missing Men" is declared to be the most lavishly produced feature of the entire series. The cast, besides McGowan, includes Jean Perry, Florence Gilbert, Andrew Waldron, Helen Holmes, James Wang and Charles Brindley.

Record Business Being Reported by Exchanges on Eve of Big Drive

REPORTS from the First National exchanges indicate that First National week, February 18 to 25, celebrating the second anniversary of the formation of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., will exceed the most optimistic expectations, declares a statement from the home-office of that organization. More than 5,000 theatres have booked First National attractions solid for the week, it is announced, and the avalanche of bookings being received in the eleventh hour are expected to add considerably more to this number.

Chief among the First National pictures which are going big is "Molly O," the Mack Sennett special comedy starring Mabel Normand.

In Cincinnati it shattered the box office attendance records of three of the largest theatres. At the Orpheum, the biggest house in the city, it "broke all records for attendance and box office receipts. The previous record was held by 'The Kid.' Stood them out in line all afternoon and evening." The Boulevard theatre reported: "First picture Boulevard has ever given a week's run. Smashed all records for Sunday and first half of week. Drew patrons from all parts of the city." Other houses in which it broke office and attendance records are the Strand, Milwaukee, Wis; the Majestic, Columbus, O.; and the Luna, Lafayette, Ind.

Chicago theatre-goers capitulated also to "Tol'able David," Richard Barthelmess' first starring vehicle for First National, "excellent attendance" characterizing its showing at the Harvard, and "very good attendance" at the Linden. "Exceptional box office receipts" were recorded at the Walnut in Cincinnati, the management of which declared: "Stood them out to the sidewalk Sunday afternoon and evening. Good business all week. Went over very big." "Did a fine business," reported the Princess, Sioux City, Ia.

"The Lotus Eater," a John Barrymore production directed by Marshall Neilan, drew "very good attendance" at the Kenwood and Harvard theatres in Chicago, and won "very good receipts" at the Orpheum in Cincinnati.

"The Sign on the Door," starring Norma Talmadge, "almost" broke the attendance records of the Regent, Springfield, O., and was responsible for "excellent receipts" at Thielen's Majestic, Bloomington, Ill.

"Hail the Woman," Thomas H. Ince's masterpiece, was booked by the Jewell, Fremont, O., for a week, providing business warranted. It did. Records for midweek attendance and receipts were slightly exceeded. "Fine receipts," reported the Majestic, London, O.

"The Child Thou Gavest Me," a John M. Stahl production, was shown at the Empress, Owensboro, Ky., with resultant "Good business." William Gordon, of the Palace, Newport News, Va., reported "it did more business on the third day than it did on the first. I have never had a picture do this before." Mat Kohler, of the Eagle, Buffalo, Minn., stated "many patrons came to see it twice."

Fox News Has Woman as Associate Editor

FOX FILM CORPORATION announces this week the appointment of Miss Mildred E. Phillips, formerly Sunday editor of the Post-Standard, Syracuse, N. Y., as associate editor of the Fox News. This is said to be the first time that a woman has been appointed to the editorial staff of a news reel. The Fox organization states the appointment is the result of Mr. Fox's efforts to give the feminine patrons of motion pictures greater satisfaction.

Miss Phillips left the Post-Standard to join the Fox publicity department, of which she has been a member since last October.

Child Actress in Personal Appearance

Little Miriam Battista, who has an appealing part in the prologue of William Christy Cabanne's production, "At the Stage Door," presented by R-C Pictures, has added new laurels to her crown by personal appearances of "a different kind" with the presentation of the picture at Loew's State Theatre, Newark.

Miriam came out before the footlights dressed in the costume she wears in the picture, and carrying the little broken doll she uses in her scenes. She addressed the audience and explained to them her longing to grow up and be like Lillian "Billie" Dove, who plays the same part Miriam does, after the character has grown to womanhood. Miriam then enacts a scene just as Miss Dove does in the picture.

The audience caught the spirit of the presentation, and applauded the talented child vigorously. She followed with a song and dance, and gave a number of dramatic and comedy recitations.

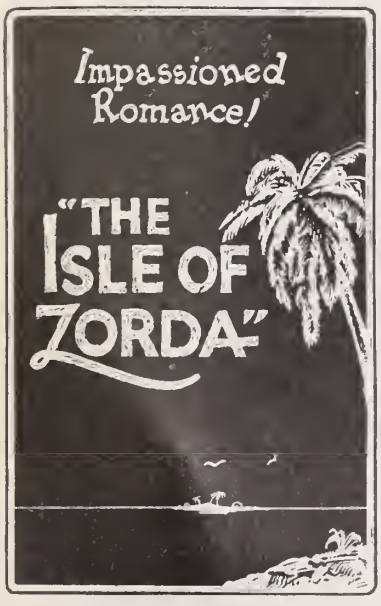
"Molly O" in Detroit for Second Run

One week of "Molly O" was not enough for the patrons of the Madison theatre, Detroit. Mack Sennett's First National super-comedy was brought back for another run seven days after the close of the first engagement. Here is the way the Detroit newspapers recorded the event:

The Free Press: "So insistent were the demands for a return engagement of 'Molly O,' Mabel Normand's latest starring vehicle, that John H. Kunsky defied tradition and brought the picture back for another week's showing. Mabel Normand was never better than in this comedy-drama of city moments, too, when tears come close to the surface."

The News: "Mabel Normand is back at the Madison again this week in 'Molly O,' and cavorting in real Mack Sennett style, all of which means romance, melodrama and fun of the most interesting kind."

Pathe Names Releases for February 26th



THE Pathe release schedule for the week of February 26th is headed by the Pathe playlet, "At Bay," starring Florence Reed. The present picture is in three reels, having been cut down from its original feature length. The production was directed by George Fitzmaurice from a scenario by Ouida Bergere.

"The Flaming Arrow" is the ninth episode of the new Pathe serial, "White Eagle," starring Ruth Roland. "Here Come the Girls" is the title of the re-issued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd. Bebe Daniels and "Snub" Pollard are seen in prominent parts. "Down and Out" is the latest Hal Roach comedy, featuring "Snub" Pollard. "The Cat and the Swordfish" is the title of animated cartoon of the "Aesop's Film Fables" series released on the 26th.

Pathe Review No. 144 presents "Mr. Beagle Makes His Bow," a camera interview with an aristocrat of the kennels; "The Farm Folk of Alsace," a Pathe color presentation; "Kiss Me, Henry!" an amusing slow-motion novelty; "Stepping Some," a dance exhibition by Julian Ollendorff; and "Teddy Descends," showing Alpine locales in Pathecolor.

Selznick Alters Dates on O'Brien Releases

In arranging the Eugene O'Brien schedule it becomes necessary to set back the release date of "Channing of the Northwest" to April 30 and give the original date for this recently-filmed picture to "The Prophet's Paradise." The last named issue, now set for release on February 28, was made last summer at the Selznick studios in Fort Lee and has long been in readiness for showing.

John Dooley Added to Cosmopolitan Cast

John Dooley has been added to the cast of "When Knighthood Was In Flower," to be filmed by Cosmopolitan Productions starring Marion Davies. Mr. Dooley will play the part of Will Somers, the jester of the court of Henry VIII.

Miss Davies' part is that of Princess Mary Tudor, and the other characters will be interpreted as follows: Charles Brandon, by Forrest Stanley; King Henry VII, by Lyn Harding, who came over from England for that purpose; Queen Catherine, Theresa Maxwell Conover; Duke of Buckingham, Pedro de Cordoba; Lady Jane, Ruth Shepley; Caskoden, Ernest Glendinning; Wolsey, Arthur Forrest; Adam Judson, Charles Gerard; Louis XII, William Norris; Duke de Longueville, Macey Harlan, and Captain Bradhurst, George Nash.

The production will be directed by Robert G. Vignola.

"Disraeli" Praised by College Professor

The George Arliss film version of "Disraeli," shown recently at Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, brought forth the following letter of indorsement for this United Artists release from Philip D. Sherman, Associate Professor of English, and director of the Oberlin Dramatic Association:

"I want to tell you how much our patrons enjoyed the film 'Disraeli.' We have, as you know, a discriminating public here in Oberlin, a public which it is frankly difficult to please. We were accordingly gratified when on all sides nothing but favorable comment resulted from the showing of this exceedingly artistic picture. Our patrons felt that the historical background made the film decidedly worth while. Then, of course, the finished acting of George Arliss and his company provided one more element of delight."

Hampton Production for Early Release

Goldwyn announces the early release to the trade of "When Romance Rides," a Benjamin B. Hampton production. The press and service book and other exhibitor aids are being prepared. "When Romance Rides" is the new title for "Wildfire," and was made from Zane Grey's western novel of adventure of that title. "Wildfire" is the wild horse captured by the hero of the story which wins the $5,000 stakes in the free-for-all horse race which forms one of the high spots of interest and excitement in the photoplay.

Effect National Tie-Up on "Fool's Paradise"

ONE of the biggest national tie-ups ever effected has just been put over in connection with Cecil B DeMille's picture, "Fool's Paradise."

The Paramount publicity department has arranged with a Chicago novelty manufacturing house for the distribution of 25,000,000 cards, exploiting "Fool's Paradise," as a package insert in a new candy bar just put on the market by the Oxford Candy Company of Oxford, Pa. The candy bar is known as the "Oh Poll Candy Bar," taking its name from the character played by Dorothy Dalton in the picture.

The action of "Fool's Paradise" is told in a series of eighty cards. On one side of each of these cards is reproduced a still from the picture, with a caption explaining the action. On the back of the cards is a brief sketch of "Fool's Paradise," giving the names of the players who have the leading parts.

In co-operation with Paramount's field force of exploitation men, the Oxford Candy Company is arranging a nation-wide tie-up between candy stores handling the Oh Poll Candy Bar and theatres showing "Fool's Paradise."

Katherine MacDonald Completes Subject

Katherine MacDonald's latest picture, just completed for First National release, has been titled "The Heart Dealer."

"The Heart Dealer" is a modern comedy by Charles A. Logue. Miss MacDonald is supported by Nigel Barrie, her leading man; Ethel Key, Charles Gerrard, Charles Clary, and Mona Kingsley. Mr. Barrie played in "The Notorious Miss Lisle," with Miss MacDonald, and also in "The Turning Point," two First National attractions which Miss MacDonald completed in 1920. Chet Withey directed "The Heart Dealer," which is the fifth picture Miss MacDonald has completed under new First National contract.

"For Love or Money" a First Nat'l Release

"For Love or Money" is the title of the second feature production made by Mack Sennett for Associated First National release. It is based on an original story by the comedy king, and it has been enacted by a strong cast, including Noah Beery, Ethel Grey Terry, George O'Hara and Kathryn McGuire. F. Richard Jones, director of many Sennett successes, among them "Molly O," and "Mickey," both of which starred Mabel Normand, had directorial charge of this production also.

"For Love or Money" is a fascinating mixture of comedy, adventure and drama, thrills and laughter succeeding each other in rapid succession.

"Foolish Wives" Opens in Chicago

"Foolish Wives" opened at Ascher's Roosevelt theatre in Chicago's loop Sunday to crowds which broke all Sunday records previously made at this house, according to General Manager Newhafer, of Ascher Brothers.

Miss Dupont appeared in person at all de luxe performances and Walter Blaufuss, musical director, conducted the orchestra which rendeed a specially prepared musical setting for the big feature.

Carl Laemmle's party, which attended the evening performances included his daughter, Rosabelle Laemmle, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Lammle, Julius Stern, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Stern, Mr. and Mrs. I. L. Lesserman, F. C. McConnell, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Alexander, and members of the local Universal staff.

F. C. McConnell, who came on from New York to handle the exploitation of the picture, and Walter Hill, director of publicity at Chicago's Universal exchange, are responsible for the great amount of publicity procured for this feature in connection with the opening at the Roosevelt.

Broadhurst Lauds Adaptation of His Play

"It is my first motion picture of no regrets. I am delighted with William de Mille's screen production of 'Bought and Paid For.'"

That is the unqualified statement made by George Broadhurst, famous playwright and author of the original stage play which William de Mille recently adapted for the screen, following the preview at the Lasky studio of this new Paramount Picture.

"Mr. de Mille has made a picture that pleases me in every way," Mr. Broadhurst declared. "I am convinced that he is the only man who could have achieved this perfect result. I am proud of 'Bought and Paid For' as William de Mille has transferred it to the screen. You may quote me if you wish and I shall be glad to put my complete approval in writing over my signature."

"THE splendid showing made by the exhibitors during RC Week in all parts of the country prompts me to express to them my own sincere appreciation and that of R-C Pictures Corporation, for their splendid co-operation," said Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution for R-C Pictures.

"The volume of bookings and play dates during R-C Week was a splendid testimonial to the merit of these pictures and to the confidence the exhibitors have in the pictures and in the organization.

"The thorough co-operation of the exhibitors in our extensive plans for that week is most thoroughly appreciated by all who have worked to make that week a big financial success for the exhibitors, and we are gratified beyond measure by the success of the week's showing."

Selznick Announces New Talmadge Revival

In Selznick's arrangements for early releases, "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," starring Constance Talmadge, will be issued from Select exchanges March 10. This number will be a revival of one of the former Talmadge successes and it now returns to the screen after about four years.

The late Walter Edwards directed from Edith Kennedy's scenario of Augustus Thomas' greatly successful stage play which had great vogue just previous to its arrival on the screen. Harrison Ford appears in the role of Mr. Leffingwell, opposite Constance.

Selling Films in Australia

Abundance of Thrills in Life of Antipodes Salesman, Says Manager

SELLING film-thrills in Australia involves some original thrills in the process, according to John C. Jones, general manager of the Australian Selznick Company. Telephones and mail must be abandoned in most instances, according to Mr. Jones, and the exchange manager finds it necessary to travel and keep in direct personal touch with every section of his territory. And what a territory! The itinerary of Stanley D. Bott, manager of New South Wales, for eight weeks, brings him over about 5.281 miles and to 76 towns. On a recent trip from Sydney to Bourke, during the bush fire season, Bott got the the thrill of riding aboard a railroad-coach through a hundred miles of flame.

Here are three paragraphs from a letter of Mr. Bott's, recently received at the Selznick headquarters:

"Showmen in the country are experiencing a very bad time mostly due to the combination of bush fires and drought. On the day I arrived at Mungindi, which is on the extreme North Western Border of New South Wales, a terrific gale rendered life out of doors impossible. The picture theatre, which had only recently been redecorated, had its roof hurled 100 yards away. Three houses in the same town were also demolished.

"Such hardships are common occurrences to the men in the back country, and by some peculiar prank of fate the exhibitors are singled out as victims. Theatres generally are poorly constructed, have very little comfort for patrons on a wet night are uninhabitable. Advertising in most centres is an unknown quantity, but the keen men who are rebuilding and going in for the picture game as a financial proposition and not as a gamble are giving the business a much-wanted fillip.

"Selznick Pictures are very popular through the territory I have traveled. The people seem to have tired of the cowboy and Indian type of picture and crave film fare a little more like real life."

"Wild Honey" Announced

Title of New Priscilla Dean Release is Now Definitely Decided

UNIVERSAL states that on account of a peculiar situation under our copyright laws it is only now able to announce its next Priscilla Dean picture and the correct title. The story is "Wild Honey," directed by Wesley Ruggles from Cynthia Stockley's own novel of English and South African life. This is Mr. Ruggles' first picture for Universal, and it utilizes the services in support of Miss Dean of Robert Ellis, Noah Beery, Wallace Beery, Lloyd Whitlock, Mai Wells, Helen Raymond and Percy Challenger.

Although "Wild Honey" was completed at Universal City some time ago, it has been held in abeyance for some time, owing to uncertainty about the title. Because "Wild Honey" was the name of the popular novel from which the play was made, the presumption would naturally be that it was a usable and acceptable title for the picture, Such, however, was not the case. A picture with this title had been made some years ago and copyrighted. Owing to this fact and to the further objection that the owner intended at some later date to reissue the picture, painstaking endeavor was made to select another suitable title for this picture. However, an amicable arrangement was effected with the owner of the title, it is stated, and Universal is now able to call its adaptation of a popular novel by its original name.

"Wild Honey" starts off with a sensational murder mystery in the very first few reels, and the far reaching effects of this mystery stretch into far away South Africa, where the romance culminates with a gigantic scene in a gorge where the rival factions are overcome by the bursting of a huge dam. No actual release date for "Wild Honey" has yet been announced, but the Exploitation Departments have started the compilation of elaborate press, advertising and exploitation material.

It is anticipated that Miss Dean will very soon have completed her work in Frances Hodgson Burnett's well-known novel, "That Lass o' Lowries," under the direction of Hobart Henley. This picture of the Lancashire district also contains a very strong cast headed by Robert Ellis, Wallace Beery, Beatrice Burnham and Katherine McGuire. It is hoped to get this picture on the market before June. As soon as Dean is finished with "That Lass o' Lowries" she will start immediately on a gigantic production of "Under Two Flags," which has just been purchased.

"Pardon My Nerve" Is New Chas. Jones Film

"Pardon My Nerve" is the title of the picture Charles Jones is now making for Fox at Hollywood. Reeves Eason is directing and Eileen Percy is leading woman. Shirley Mason is finishing "The Ragged Heiress" at the Western studio.

"Fauntleroy" Goes Big in Reading, Pa.

"Little Lord Fauntleroy," starring Mary Pickford, had a highly successful engagement at the Capitol theatre, Reading, Pa., according to a report from the office of the United Artists. Captain Stanley Lewis, who has been doing exploitation work for various United Artists releases throughout Pennsylvania, was largely responsible for the big opening of the picture in Reading, Pa. As a guest at a banquet of the Kawanis Club at the Berkshire Hotel, Captain Lewis delivered a brief address on the U. S. Marines, and with his talk tied up the "fighting qualities" of Cedric, as played by Mary Pickford.

WESTERN NEW YORK

Lodowick Jones, former Buffalo attorney and reformer, created a real sensation when he appeared last week and claimed ownership of the Academy theatre, which Samuel Carver was preparing to open as a picture house. Jones entered the theatre, but was obliged to leave under protest. Later he obtained a show cause order, answer to which will be made February 21 before Federal Judge Hazel. The defendants, the Amalgamated Burlesque Company of New York, will then argue that the local federal court has no jurisdiction in the case as both the defendant and plaintiff are not residents of this federal district. Jones claims that he purchased the property some 15 years ago and was later tricked out of it. It is said that state courts have previously decided against him. The Academy was opened as per schedule Saturday, February 11, with Mayor Schwat making the welcoming address. I. H. Herk is the "big boss" of the Academy.

Almost 10,000 persons saw "Molly O" in two days at the Cataract theatre, Niagara Falls, according to Manager Howard Carroll, who put on a big newspaper campaign in connection with the presentation last week.

The precautions against fire and ease of exit in Buffalo theatres are the best in the country, according to Fire Chief Edward P. Murphy, who has completed a survey of houses, following complaints on overcrowding received by Mayor Frank X. Schwab. The Mayor and the managers held a conference last week. No standing will be allowed in the rear of theatres hereafter. The fire chief said that Buffalo need have no fear of a disaster such as occurred at the Knickerbocker, Washington.

Organ solos will be a feature at the Elmwood theatre, Buffalo, in the future. Joseph A. Raszeja, concert organist, will play numbers suggested by patrons.

Buffalo's delegation of exhibitors at the Albany convention the past week included Walter Hays, E. O. Weinberg, Bruce Fowler, Harold B. Franklin, Howard J. Smith, J. H. Michael, Harry Harry Marsey, Harry Green, Charlie Hayman of Niagara Falls and Judge John W. Schatt of Gowanda.

Miriam Battista entertained some 5,000 newsboys at the party last Saturday arranged by Manager Al Beckerich and the "Evening News" in the new Loew State theatre. The little star of "Humoresque" received a great welcome and the boys had the time of their lives. "At the Stage Door" was the feature. The State got a lot of good publicity through the party.

SAN DIEGO

Manager H. H. Homer, of the Colonial, has reduced his schedule of admission prices and is now charging for matinees 35 cents for entire main floor and 25 cents for entire balcony, with night prices at 50 and 35 cents, respectively, these figures including war tax. The Colonial did a good business with the week's showing of the Chaplin feature, "The Idle Class." In view of the large number of service men on duty here Manager Homer has issued a strip ticket, good for four admissions to 50 cents seats, which he is selling to them for $1.50.

The management of the Rialto theatre has changed recently, J. S. Stout, formerly in the amusement business in Los Angeles, and Leslie W. Weir taking over the house, succeeding Jack Wahl and Harry Payne. Bert Lytell in "Alias Ladyfingers" proved a good attraction for the week ending February 4.

There was a local interest in the showing of "The Last Trail," a Fox feature, at the Plaza theatre as many of the scenes were taken at the Barrett Dam site, where a new unit of this city's water system is under construction. Manager Rogers extended a special invitation to view the picture to H. N. Savage, the hydraulic engineer in charge of the work, who was the host for the Fox company when working at the dam.

INDIANAPOLIS

Charles M. Reed, local scene painter, purchased the Gaiety theatre for $1,585, and Peter Brown, restaurant proprietor, bought the Lenwood for $1,692.15 at a receiver's sale last week. The properties were among the four houses owned by the Lenwood Amusement Company, thrown into receivership a month ago. The Broadway and Rialto, completing the Lenwood chain, are to be disposed of later.

Loew's State is showing the public through the house of mornings this week as part of its observation of its first anniversary. The theatre is one of the most beautiful in Indiana and was erected at a cost reported to be near a million dollars. Herb Jennings, formerly of the publicity force of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, recently succeeded Walter David as manager.

Pictures indorsed by the Indiana Board of Photoplay Indorsers during January are as follows:

For the Family—"Molly O," "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "The Little Minister," "Three Live Ghosts," "Enchantment," "Duke of Chimney Butte," "The Fox," "Our Mutual Friends," "The Sight of the Rose," "R. S. V. P.," "Miss Lulu Bett" and "Sky High."

For Adults—"Thunderclap," "Why Girls Leave Home," "At the Stage Door," "Tropical Love," "Love's Redemption," "The Blot," "The Lane That Has No Turning," "Steelheart," "Peacock Alley," "Foolish Matrons," "The Law and the Woman," "A Girl from God's Country," "Back Pay," "Boomerang Bill."

Comedies—"A Sailor Made Man," "Just Drop In," "Torchy's Frame-Up," "Saving Sister Susie," "No Parking," "A Barn Yard Cavalier," "The Star Boarder" and "The Strap Hanger."

Five out of forty pictures were not indorsed. J. W. Ertmann, of Cleveland, special representative of Associated Producers, and Floyd Brown, of the First National Exchange, spoke at the January meeting of the indorsers.

In co-operation with the Department of Visual Education of the Indianapolis public schools, the Indiana Board of Photoplay Indorsers will present at neighborhood houses a series of educational films. "The Highest Law" and "The Land of Opportunity" were the first subjects to be presented at the Stratford, Orpheum, Blair and Tacoma theatres last week. The stunt is getting favorable publicity.

Mr. and Mrs. Booth Tarkington saw "Penrod," the screen adaptation of the author's short stories, for the first time in the Circle screening room as the guest of Manager Ralph Lieber last week.

Claude Cline, Verne J. Cline and Robert Cline incorporated the Idle Hour, Inc., of Huntington, last week.

Stone City Opera House Company, of Bedford, filed preliminary certificate of dissolution with the Secretary of State.

BALTIMORE

Motion Picture Row is in the process of changing about, due to the city claiming sites for the erection of the Municipal War Memorial Building.

George A. McDermit and Martin J. Porter, formerly of Loew's Hippodrome, have joined with the Whitehurst interests. McDermit takes a supervising position over the several theatres, including the New, Garden and Parkway, and Porter becomes publicity man for New and Parkway.

ALBANY, N. Y

Chairman George W. Cobb, of the State Motion Picture Commission, expresses the opinion that the demand for censorship is growing stronger in New York State. Mr. Cobb says that while there was some opposition to censorship in the beginning, it is fast disappearing.

Opposition against Sunday motion-picture shows has arisen in Beacon, N. Y. Members of the various churches in that city appeared before the City Council on February 6 and made an unsuccessful plea for the repeal of the ordinance permitting Sunday shows.

A bill recently introduced by Senator Alvah W. Burlingam in the New York State Legislature would require that all master builders should possess certificates of qualification. The introduction of this bill follows the recent Knickerbocker disaster in Washington.

OKLAHOMA CITY

Prices have been lowered at the American theatre at Bingham, Texas. They are now 5 and 10 cents in the galery and 25 cents normally on the lower floor.

Tom Donnell, manager of the Majestic theatre at Stephensville, Texas, who has been quite sick, is recovering.

Oscar Oldknow has been promoted to branch manager of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company at Atlanta, Ga.

Olive Belle Hamon, daughter of the late Colonel Jake Hamon, is reported as going to enter the movie screen star field in the near future. Miss Hamon is only twelve years of age.

Announcement that theatre managers would be prosecuted for violation of the child labor law if they allowed children under fourteen years of age to appear on the stage in Oklahoma City theatres was made by County Attorney Forest L. Hughes on February 4. An act alleged to have appeared on the stage of the Orpheum theatre and reported by the Labor Commissioner is said to have caused the announcement.

CANADA

A big event in moving picture activities in Canada was the first Canadian presentation of "Cameron of the Royal Mounted" at the Imperial theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, on February 10, under the auspices of the Canadian Authors' Association before a notable gathering of 1,000 invited people, representing government circles, clubs and many important organizations.

It is interesting to note that the squadron of the Royal Mounted stationed at Ottawa attended the special screening and many of the Mounties present actually took part in the action of the picture. There were outbursts of cheers when these men were seen on the screen.

"Cameron of the Royal Mounted" is released by Hodkinson in Canada through the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd. The premier engagement of the feature in the Dominion was the showing at the Imperial theatre, Ottawa, during the week of February 13.

Selznick Pictures Corporation, Ltd., recently organized in Canada with headquarters at Toronto, has officially announced that all Selznick and Select pictures will be released throughout the Dominion through Regal Films, Limited, Toronto and other cities. Phil Kauffman, a prominent exchange man in Canada, has been appointed general manager of the Selznick Pictures Corporatoin, Limited.

W. J. Drummond has resigned as general manager of the Associated First National Pictures, Eastern Canada, Limited, after occupying that post for two years, in order to organize a new exchange company to handle independent productions in Canada. Mr. Drummond formerly had charge of First National offices at Toronto, Montreal and St. John, N. B.

Cosmopolitan Pictures, Limited, Toronto, has been organized by Harry Kauffman for the distribution of independent releases throughout Canada. The headquarters of the new company have been established at 12 Queen Street East, Toronto. The first release to be handled by Cosmopolitan Pictures is "Ten Nights in a Barroom," which was recently shown for two weeks at the Toronto Strand wtih much success.

The incorporation of Cosmopolitan Pictures, Limited, under a Canadian charter, with a capitalization of $50,000, was announced by the Canadian Government on February 11. Harry Kauffman was formerly sales manager of Regal Films, Limited.

The Canadian Government announced the organization of Laval Photoplays, Limited, of Montreal, as a chartered company on February 11, the authorized capitalization being $300,000. The new company will distribute pictures in Canada and will also engage in production, it is stated.

Century Productions, Limited, has also been organized at Toronto, Ontario, with a capital of $100,000, under Ontario charter to engage in the moving picture business.

CINCINNATI

I. W. McMahan, of McMahan & Jackson, theatre owners, was elected commander of the Minute Men of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce at the recent election.

Eight Cincinnatians have been named by Mrs. Evelyn Frances Snow, head of the Division of Films, State Department of Education, to aid in a movement having for its purpose the uplift of motion pictures. The members of this committee will act in the capacity of inspectors to view exhibitions in Cincinnati theatres and keep tab upon any violations of the censor laws. Those named to serve in this capacity are Rev. Dr. David McKinney, Rev. John Hergert, Rev. H. Pierce Atkins, Mrs. Wilmer Crawford, Mrs. Lowell Hobart, Miss Marie Costello, Miss Lulu Aler and Mrs. Frederick Ungenholt.

Late Feature and Short Subject Reviews

"Too Much Married"

(Associated Photoplays—State Rights Feature)

THE very emphasis of this title suggests that it is a farce-comedy and it proceeds to live up to it in fairly satisfying fashion. The theme is based upon a tried and true formula which reveals a girl married secretly and immediately separated from her husband. It is a story which builds a number of complications and really releases some sure-fire incident of a farcical trend. Even the bedroom farce idea is suggested here and there, although the vulgarities are never established. The exhibitor will catalogue it as average entertainment likely to please his patrons if he surrounds it with a colorful bill with comedy dominant in the short subjects.

There is a delicate twist in the sequence which reveals an elderly couple requesting the heroine and her "better half" to accompany them on a motor tour. The girl is unable to explain and the "husband" realizes that he is prevented from declaring his true identity. The plot itself hinges upon a youth losing his fortune if he marries before he is twenty-five. While attending another marriage the young man and the heroine decide to marry secretly and the witness is another guest who had overheard the plan. The complications develop and much mystery, much confusion occurs before the newly-weds are reunited.

The production is satisfying without being anything extraordinary in sets, locations, atmosphere or photography. You can catalogue them as just average. But at least they don't irritate the spectator. The direction is capably handled—the tempo of well regulated farce being adequately expressed. Mary Anderson plays the feature role and does good work, although she is nothing of a comedienne. Her support is fairly competent, consisting of Roscoe Karnes and Jack Connelly. It is a picture which can be well exploited. The title is a winner and should be made the most of in all advertising. —Length 5 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"Rich Man, Poor Man"

(Hal Roach Comedy—Pathe)

THIS is a pleasant little masquerade party introducing Paul Parrot and Sunshine Sammy and some others having a good time with romance in a fashionable hotel. You discover an heiress doubling as a maid and a janitor determined to look like a gentleman. A grand ball takes place and the rich girl refuses to wed the aristocrat until she discovers that he is really the porter. The comedy points are registered during the ball. There is some good hokum having to do with the burning feet of the janitor, whose patent leather shoes are too tight for him. Thus electric sparks shoot forth. When he takes them off, he doesn't notice where he places them. But they are riding gracefully about the room aboard the train of a lady's dress. Can you guess the following? Well, in attempting to rescue the shoes the train is torn and the milady is covered quickly with a cloak taken from another masquerader. The comedy offers some amusing gags and travels with no time wasted.—Length 1 Reel.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Boat"

(Buster Keaton Comedy—First National)

A HILARIOUS sample of ridiculous burlesque is offered in Buster Keaton's comedy, "The Boat," which presents the sober-faced comedian as an amateur sailor. The high jinks are not long in collecting, and the action is so novel, so filled with comic buffoonery that even a "hard-boiled egg" must laugh. Buster builds a sea-going yacht. Everything is topsy-turvey for the grand plunge. When the boat glides into the water it sinks right out of sight, leaving Buster swimming for dear life. He is joined by his wife and a couple of kiddies. And while she acts as the cook, the star is the skipper, mate and jolly tar—tripling in brass as usual.

There is some rich incident as the boat is operated upon a swivel system—so that the masts may clear the bridges. Buster pulls a lever and the yacht is able to sail under nicely. He forgets one bridge and the masts are broken off. But he turns into ship's carpenter and the repairs are made. Finally the boat strikes a typhoon and becomes a toy of the elements. It is like riding the loop. Meals are prevented from being served. Buster drills a hole in the boat to let the water out and succeeds in letting it in. He even puts a pancake over a leakage and it stays for a time. The ultimate climax finds Buster and wife and kiddies taking to a wash boiler for a life-boat. Like three men in a boat or tub, he sails the briny deep. This may be a children's bath-tub, for one of the youngsters pulls the stopper and the water comes in again. The boat is about to sink when Buster feels land under him.

The comedy is a rip-roarer, one calculated to please any house and put it in a mirthful state. The rare hokum, the ridiculous burlesque, the funny incidents—these are sufficient to make this Keaton pattern a sure-fire knockout. It is comedy with a vengeance. Between you and me, it is going to make many a feature resemble an "also ran."—Length 2 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Phantom Terror"

(Navy Feature—Two Reels—Universal)

THIS adventure story of the briny deep carries a title suggestive of a serial. But it continues no further than two episodes. However in this brief space there is revealed a story crammed with adventure, rapid action, good suspense and a wealth of atmosphere—to say nothing of some novel thrills having to do with submarine activities. Much of the interest centers upon the submarine exploits. The hero allows himself to be shot through the torpedo tube and climbs aboard the mystery ship from which he is able to send a wireless for assistance. The naval base is revealed and no time is lost in dispatching aid. Interspersed with the action are some good shots of a flotilla of U. S. submarines plowing through the water in typical battle formation.

What is happening to the hero? He is having a tough time of it, fighting the cutthroats who compose the crew of "The Phantom Terror," the outlaw ship. He skips over the vessel and manages to elude his tormentors by climbing to the top-rigging until the rescuers arrive. The love interest is well established although there is really no necessity for its introduction seeing as how the action is so vivid. In a little fishing village the girl awaits his appearance—willing to surrender her heart to a true son of the sea. Jack Perrin plays the fighting sailor with acceptable vigor and Gertrude Olmsted is the heroine. The picture is calculated to stir the pulse—so keen is the suspense—so vivid the thrills. It carries a full quota of exciting action.—LAURENCE REID.

"Missing Men"

(Robt. Bruce Wilderness Tales Series—Released through Educational Exchanges, Inc.)

THE second of Mr. Bruce's series of "new idea" one-reelers, which combine the pictorial beauty of the scenic with the human interest of drama, takes the audience into the north woods, and impresses, in very fine fashion, the grandeur and the solemn vastness of the wilderness. His characters are two men who are hunting far from civilization. They chase a deer across the snows, down the mountain sides, through gulches and streams. They become lost and the solitude and awful silence fills them with a vague terror. "Timber Panic," Mr. Bruce calls it. Each has his own idea as to the direction of the lost trail. They separate. One reaches camp, but the other wanders in circles until the terrible fear of the forest unhinges his mind. He rushes senselessly through the wilderness until he falls exhausted, and he is crawling on hands and knees when the searching party finds him.

The backgrounds for this little story have been carefully selected, and help to make the reel powerful and beautiful. It is a worthy successor to "Women Must Weep," the first of this series.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Bashful Lover"

(Ay Vee Bee Comedy-Pathe)

"THE BASHFUL LOVER" belongs to the series of comedies starring Ernest Truex, the diminutive comedian who is registering success upon the stage in a current Broadway play, "Six Cylinder Love." This fact is mentioned if the exhibitor intends to "campaign" the selling qualities of the comedy and personality of the star. As a medium of expressing humor, "The Bashful Lover" is not entirely successful. This is because the director or author has had recourse to a number of stock situations. However this may be due to the compressed edition of the star's personality. The little fellow is being forced to marry a "heavyweight" because she is the choice of his aunt.

Truex is adept in bringing out the pathos of the situation. He can register a forlorn attitude with the best of them. After the story presents a series of shots having to do with aesthetic dancing with the dancers getting into the comedian's room, the story ends with the hero marrying the star dancer after the doors are locked upon the pursuers. Mr. Truex should be given serio-comic stories—stories which emphasize his ability to find the hidden subtleties—the little satirical slants of life. Broad burlesque is not his forte.—Length, 2 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"THE SONG OF LIFE"
(John M. Stahl-First National)

A Different "Mother" Story; a Real Dramatic Treat

THE story value of John M. Stahl's latest production is near the hundred per cent. mark. It is a different treatment of an attractive theme—a woman revolting against a sordid home life in her desire for luxury. It is a splendid screen drama, which never fails to convince, and because of this quality of sincerity, it stamps Mr. Stahl once more as a director of unusual merit.

The "mother story," which allows its central character to make a succession of sacrifices for her child, is ordinary enough, but Mr. Stahl gives us a mother who lives to redeem herself for a wrong done to her child in babyhood. He paints the pathos of this woman's life in rich colors; he shows the pitiful tenderness of her soul as she tries to win back her son's love and yet keep her identity hidden from him. She sees this son's wife on the point of making the same mistake which she made in her early life. She understands the longing that fills the girl's soul when her life is but a drab existence in the New York tenement district, and her heart calls for a life of gayety and pretty things to wear.

A murder brings about the denouement. The husband shoots the man who is winning his wife away from him, and the old lady, still keeping her identity hidden, tries to shield him. Here are some police court scenes which rank with those in the foremost of the "crook" plays. The officials will not believe her. Her son is to be accused. Then, although she knows that her son's heart is filled with contempt for the mother he hardly remembers, she makes herself known. She must assign a logical motive for his confession of crime. And so it is that the boy is cleared of suspicion, although he protests his guilt. To save the hoppy ending, Mr. Stahl has the wounded man recover and refuse to press the charge, claiming that the shooting was simply accidental. The climax is one of real power; it is dramatic conflict of the highest type.

Director Stahl rounds out his production by some comedy scenes, in which a monkey with the funniest face and mannerisms the screen has ever seen, plays a leading part. Little curly-headed Richard Headrick helps him along.

The action of the later part of the feature is laid entirely in the New York slums, and the atmosphere is established in a decided, convincing manner. Georgia Woodthorpe gives a vivid performance as the mother. She feels her pathos, and she can make an audience feel it without overacting. Gaston Glass gives his usual creditable performance as the boy. The young wife is Grace Darmond, and Arthur Stuart Hull, in a small bit as the District Attorney, impresses with his naturalness. Length, 6,920 feet.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Song of Life," an engrossing story of a woman's life-long struggle for happiness, will be the unusual feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. The story can best be described as a live, gripping drama of human hearts. The central character is the wife of a railroad track foreman in a lonely, God-forsaken place. Life to her is a treadmill of dirty dishes, when she decides to take the step that will lead her to a world of new pleasures. In her search for "pretty things" she leaves her home. All her life she searches for finery and luxury, but in vain. And when, years later, the opportunity comes to save another woman from the mistake she has made, she willingly tells her life story.

A capable cast is seen in "The Song of Life." It includes such players as Gaston Glass, Grace Darmond, Georgia Woodthorpe and Richard Headrick. The production was directed by John M. Stahl, who has produced the master pictures, "The Woman in the House" and "The Child Thou Gavest Me." Although only four years old, Little Richard Headrick, who plays an important part in the picture, is an accomplished little actor and gives a very effective performance. Gaston Glass is one of the most popular leading men of filmdom, and Grace Darmond is a screen beauty who has risen rapidly to a high place of popularity.

"The Song of Life" will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days, beginning ————.

PROGRAM READER

It was the old, old story of the wife in a God-forsaken country. With her husband she lived in the Western desert—a land of heat, sand and ugliness. She dreamed pretty dreams of big cities and pretty dresses and fine parties. When the time came to make her big decision, she deserted the home of loneliness. It seemed so easy to have all the pretty things for which her heart cravd. But the years rolled by, but luxury never came. Only poverty, labor and toil. Years later, a white-haired woman, she saw another woman repeating her mistake. And she wanted to save her—save her even at the cost of her own life.

"The Song of Life," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————, is as gripping a story as has reached the screen in many a day. It is a John M. Stahl production with Gaston Glass and Grace Darmond in the leading roles. Others in the cast include little Richard Headrick, Georgia Woodthorpe and Arthur Stuart Hull, all popular screen players, especially little Richard Headrick, who is one of the best liked child players on the screen.

CATCH LINES

A story of a woman who placed finery and "pretty things" against a home life that was as dull and monotonous as the desert in which she lived. Years later she discovered her mistake. You will enjoy seeing "The Song of Life," the John M. Stahl production which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————.

"A DOLL'S HOUSE"
(United Artists)

Good Production of Famous Stage Play

TRIANGLE did Henrick Ibsen's "A Doll's House" in 1916, Universal made it in '17 with Dorothy Phillips and Famous, ditto, in '18, Elsie Ferguson being the star and now Nazimova selects this famous "high brow" play as a vehicle.

The result, from the standpoint of the fan, especially Nazimova fans, is undoubtedly the best production to be made, the reason being that the Ibsen stuff has been very largely denatured. The picture is simply the story of a young wife who after making a great sacrifice to save her husband's life, finds him unworthy of her love and decides to leave him. In evolving a picture play from the original script, no actual liberties have been taken with the plot. Action and incident, even though rather trivial, has been substituted for words and the characters move about and get over effectually and without the excessive use of titles, all that is necessary in unfolding the plot.

How well the picture will please the aggressive, however, is another matter. Lovers of Ibsen may object because the Ibsen touch is missing. Those who know little of Ibsen and considerable about pictures, may think that the plot lacks punch and is rather trite.

The picture is well acted. Nazimova has corrected many of her late acting faults in that she displays no disposition to pose and is truly effective in her emotional scenes. The supporting cast is flawless, being good types and proving excellent foils for the star.

The production as a whole is adequate. Good sets have been provided and the photoplay and camera work are satisfactory. Also considering that the dramatic strength of the plot is not great, an excellent continuity has been evolved. The picture makes no attempt to be foreign in atmosphere and is presented as a drama which might happen anywhere. Length, 7 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Torvald Helmer.....Alan Hale
Nora, his wife.....Nazimova
Dr. Rank.....Nigel De Brulier
Anna, a nurse.....Elinor Oliver
Nils Krogstad.....Wedgwood Nowell

Ivar.....Phillippe De Lacy
Emmy.....Barbara Maier

Adapted from Henrik Ibsen's play of the same name.
Directed by Charles Bryant.
Scenario by Peter M. Winters.
Photographed by Charles Van Enger.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

At last Nazimova is to be seen on the screen in one of the great Ibsen plays in which she gained recognition as our foremost English-speaking actress. She has adapted Henrik Ibsen's "A Doll's House," one of the most discussed plays in modern literature, and will appear in it at the ———— theatre for an engagement of ———— days.

Nazimova plays the same role in the screen version of this famous play, released by United Artists, as she did on the stage, that of Nora, the affectionate little wife who is willing to sacrifice all to her inconsiderate husband.

It is a tremendous drama of life and because of the world-wide storm of discussion it aroused, has been one of the chief instruments used by the advocates of Feminism in their long continuing struggle for the recognition of Woman's right to frame her destiny.

PROGRAM READER

Every human emotion is pictured, and all the elements of a really great photoplay are to be found in "A Doll's House," which the great Nazimova, who made this play tremendously popular on the speaking stage, has transferred to the screen in her first production for United Artists, and which will be seen next ———— at the ————.

There is comedy and pathos, even to the point of laughter and tears, according to the theatre management; there is humor in the situations wherein Nora, the doll-like wife, the character pictured by Nazimova, makes her odd and ludicrous mistakes as a housekeeper and as a mother of two beautiful children and a tiny infant, and there is the lesson for all women everywhere that brings out the big point in the play, namely, that every woman has the right to control her own destiny, to the development of her own individuality and personality.

SUGGESTIONS

Get after the leading woman's club, women's political organizations, local card and dancing clubs, and similar groups of women banded together for purely social purposes; even the welfare organizations in whatever big industries there may be in the community. Window displays in connection with the published plays of Ibsen can be easily arranged. Also work with the public libraries. A prereview showing for influential people should be easy to arrange.

CATCH LINES

Ibsen's most famous play, Nazimova's great stage vehicle and one of the greatest of modern classics brought to the screen.

As in the play, Nazimova has a perfect vehicle for her particular talents. She brings Ibsen to the screen in all its beauty.

A classic of the stage with the star who made it famous in America playing the same role. A great picture and a great vehicle for Nazimova.

A dramatization of Ibsen's greatest play. Nazimova in her best role in "A Doll's House." A story which reveals every quality of the woman's soul.

As powerful a drama as has reached the screen in many a moon. Ibsen's powerful play, "A Doll's House," rich in pathos and drama, filmed with Nazimova in the leading role.

"THE BROADWAY PEACOCK"
(Fox)

Pearl White Has More Emotional Opportunities in Stage Story

THIS is a companion piece to "Any Wife" in the sense that it gives Pearl White further opportunities to display an emotional talent. Time was when the erstwhile serial queen was putting over the circus stunts, and so strongly did she emphasize her personality in this direction that many of her followers are not yet reconciled to the fact that Miss White can "troupe" with the majority of her sisters of the profession. "The Broadway Peacock" is a stage story carrying very little physical action but relying upon shadings, subtleties and much romance and atmosphere for its interesting qualities. The title, incidentally, is a winner for this type of feature. The star plays a colorful role—that a stage star affectionately called "The Broadway Peacock."

The story is an obvious one, but because of this obviousness one is pleasingly surprised when the ending arrives bringing with it an unconventional climax. The broken romance is not colored with sweet, sticky sentiment, but is allowed to culminate as it often happens in real life. And anyone who follows the stage knows that it isn't a bed of roses. Tragedy and sorrow follow its devious paths more often than sunshine and light. Miss White is a fitting personality for the title role, giving the character a warmth and sympathy and color wholly in keeping with the incident and the idea conveyed by the author. The main theme is nothing but a broken romance inspired a great deal from jealousy.

The heroine is hostess of a cabaret is engaged to a young aristocrat. He pays prompt attention to her until he falls in love with a young girl who has been befriended by the actress. The latter discovers them together and orders them to leave her house and, being heartbroken, goes to the youth's mother with the intention of branded her youthful rival as disreputable. The heroine repents of her conduct and the youthful lovers are married. The picture builds well, it being directed with economy so that there is no waste of footage. The scenes are well conceived and executed and carry the action along appropriately. Being a stage story the glamour of the profession will interest the spectator. It is competently acted by Miss White and a supporting cast that includes Doris Eaton, Harry Southard, Joseph Stryker and Elizabeth Garrison. Charles J. Brabin wrote and directed the picture from a story by Julia Tolsva. Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Broadway Peacock," a colorful story of the stage, will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre with Pearl White as the star. The offering will appear next ————. Miss White displays an emotional power which is as surprising as it is artistic in the role of Myrtle May, commonly called "The Broadway Peacock." The patrons who remember the star as an exponent of serials will admit that she is capable enough in expression to enact the roles found in dramatic subjects.

The picture is based upon a broken romance with Myrtle May being worshipped by a rich youth, until he happens to find a girl nearer his own age. This girl has been a protege of Myrtle and it piques her to find Rose stealing the affections of the youth. She ejects the girl from her home and attempts to embarrass her former fiance. Eventually, however, she becomes conscience-stricken and makes amends for her attitude. "The Broadway Peacock" is surrounded by charming atmosphere and is well acted by a cast that includes Joseph Stryker, Harry Southard, Doris Eaton and others. It is a typical story of the stage and fascinates with its intimate touches.

PROGRAM READER

They called her the Broadway Peacock because of her ability to wear clothes and command attention through her bizarre personality. Her real name was Myrtle May, a gifted Broadway actress who suffered a broken romance. This picture is unlike the usual story of the stage. It offers a surprise climax which is as unusual as it is entertaining and interesting. The Broadway queen discovers that her fame is fleeting—that there are younger girls who are bidding for popularity. She attempts to embarrass her new friends. Then— But, come to the ———— theatre next ———— and see Pearl White in the picture. It is one that will arouse your interest. It is presented with charming atmosphere, carries a fine romance and enough intimate life back stage to please anyone. A notable cast assists the star.

SUGGESTIONS

This title and the popularity of the star will help a lot in putting this picture across. The title, in particular, is sufficiently attractive to intrigue the imagination. You can bill it as a stage story—of that life back stage which is ever fascinating to the spectator unacquainted with it. Make mention that Miss White will surprise the spectators with her finished emotional acting—that the former queen of the serials has qualified to play any and all emotional roles. Make use of the stills showing the star wearing a lavish wardrobe. For a prologue you can put over a tabloid sketch of life back stage with a central figure being well garbed and executing a dance or singing a song.

CATCH LINES

See Pearl White in her finest role. See the popular star in "The Broadway Peacock." A picture filled with sentiment, romance and pathos. A picture of life back stage.

Don't miss the opportunity to see Pearl White in "The Broadway Peacock," a picture of stage life.

"ALF'S BUTTON"
(First National)

Carries Novelty Although Entirely Too Long

THIS First National release made in England contains a first rate comedy idea although to be judged solely as entertainment it is entirely too long for feature length. The story back of "Alf's Button" is a fanciful thing—one bearing a strange resemblance to "Aladdin and his Wonderful Lamp." In fact it is a distant relative to that fantastic tale. By means of exploiting an English comedian who, seemingly knows his work, and using a deal of double exposure and other trick feats of the camera, there is constructed a picture which is often amusing despite the fact that much repetition is involved.

The action opens on a cockney soldier in the trenches—a sort of lazy, good-natured fellow who, when he is given a new uniform, is reminded to keep the buttons of his coat highly polished. It is when he rubs the second button that a genie appears and instantly becomes his slave. All that Alf has to do is to express a wish and it is gratified. The cockney has a buddy who acts as a foil. The hero wishes for a stein of beer and presto!—the genie brings it to him. Alf and his pal are next discovered in high society and later in a harem, and so on until he marries. Then he grows tired of buttons, genies and other supernatural impulses and marries, and his wife returns the button to the slave. It may be said that time and place are completely annihilated in Alf's fantastic journeys or pilgrimages and a number of them build humorous situations.

However, after three reels have traveled through the machine, one becomes a trifle tired. It is all the same. Presented with a full-grown orchestra the picture certainly possesses its amusing possibilities. The emphasis of a drum or trombone or other musical or noisy effects can heighten a situation and make it truly mirthful. "Alf's Button" through its fanciful plot is a novelty and should be accepted by the exhibitor as such. If he exploits it as something new in comedy ideas there is no question that he can make it pay at his theatre. As it usually happens in English products, the lighting and photography are consistently cloudy and "pin-pointy." But on the credit side of it presents a good comedian—a perfect type, incidentally, in Leslie Henson. The double exposure work is not especially meritorious. However, the titles are truly cockney and carry no little humor. Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The adventure of a cockney soldier in "high society" are amusingly shown in "Alf's Button," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. The humor centers about the manner in which Alf, the central figure, is able to carry out his wishes and desires. Alf is a lovable chap, somewhat careless about his dress and mannners and unable to look at life seriously. Through chance he comes into possession of the means of summoning a genie, who has the power to carry out any and all commands. Alf cannot take care of his clothes. A new uniform is issued to him when the old one becomes disreputable.

Then is when his troubles begin. For the second brass button on the coat had been made out of Aladdin's lamp, of which fact Alf is not aware at the time. It did not take long for the button to tarnish, so when the cockney rubbed it to make it clean, the genie appeared, willing to obey his commands. The manner in which Alf makes use of this supernatural power furnishes some richly humorous situations. Time and place are annihilated and Alf gets everything he wants. His wishes include a harem, a country estate, entry into high society, beer and a few other trifles. When he marries his wife gives the buttton back to the genie, the reason being that Alf had tired of its use.

PROGRAM READER

Alf was a plain sort of guy. His tastes were simple. He just wanted a home. So he rubbed the magic button on the coat of his uniform, and oh—boy!—he got a harem. The story relates the adventures of Alf and his magic button made from Aladdin's lamp. As master of the "slave of the button" Alf is not at all slow in issuing orders. Good things come to him. He rubs the button and pretty girls appear. He gets beer, an entry into high society and other things. Alf is the luckiest man in the world. But he marries after a time and tires of the button. Come to the ———— theatre next ———— and see "Alf's Button," an amusing picture of fancy and imagination. It is similar to the story of "Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp."

SUGGESTIONS

How would you like to rub a button on your coat and find yourself the possessor of a harem? That's the experience that came to Alf, the cockney soldier. If you play up this line of argument with a snappy line of advertising, asking your customers a series of pertinent questions as outlined above, the picture will stimulate a deal of curiosity. Mention that the story is a fanciful, imaginative one—similar to the famous tale of "Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp." Tell them that it is a novelty likely to amuse them through its rich situations. You can present a prologue after the fashion of Aladdin. A soldier can be presented, rubbing the magic button and immediately be followed by the dancing girls.

CATCH LINES

Come and enjoy a good laugh from the novel comedy, "Alf's Button." He rubbed the button of his coat and presto!—great pleasures and rich gifts came to him.

See "Alf's Button," a picture of novel and delicious humor. Remember Aladdin and his Wonderful Lamp? Well, Alf has a button made from the lamp, and he rubs it and it brings all sorts of gifts and pleasures. See it.

"THE WAY OF A MAID"
(Selznick)

Society Comedy-Drama Is Interestingly Presented

HERE is a comedy-drama polished off with excellent treatment in every respect. It carries a simple little story which does not tax the spectator and while it is obvious and easily anticipated from scene to scene, the contents are so well balanced with romance, humor, satire and surprise touches that it must be classified as something really worth while. There is not the broad humor exposed in "Why Announce Your Marriage?" It depends more upon its romantic note. And the story is so logical in development that it actually bears a resemblance to a slice of life. The humor is subtly handled—the delicate touches being emphasized with just the right strokes. And while it gives evidence of losing its substance here and there, still the story always manages to finish a weak scene with a happy flourish.

It is all about an aristocratic girl who masquerades as a lady's maid and who is compelled to follow the deception because of financial embarrassment. She has gone to the home of a friend and encounters the hero, who mistakes her for a servant because of her attire. The heroine, being an impulsive creature, carries out the whimsical touch, partly because of a mischevious streak in her character, and partly because the wolf is howling at her door. Her home is leased by the hero's mother and she becomes a social secretary. Thus thrown into intimate contact with the youth, it is easy to see that the romance is developing in a handy manner. The action is smooth and filled with some charming incident—with none of the scenes being overdrawn for the sake of bringing out a vulgar laugh.

Sympathy is extended to the girl because she makes the most of her unpleasant experience. She discovers that romance can be true. The youth, not knowing her identity until the denouement, cannot be called a fortune hunter. He is conquered through her charm and personality. There is a proposal of marriage which is accepted and since the girl's identity becomes known the social aspirations of the dowager are fully realized without her becoming mercenary in her efforts. The comedy of the deception may be imagined. It is delicate, but to the point. This picture is not dull. It doesn't convey a moral, but simply goes to its climax, releasing high lights of entertainment. Director Earle has staged it in fine fashion, the sets, both interiors and exteriors being appropriate and the lighting, uniformly good. It is a good box-office bet because it is interestingly told and acted. George Fawcett and Niles Welch contribute first rate performances in support of the star who gives a charming portrayal. Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Way of a Maid" is the title of the Selznick picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Elaine Hammerstein as the star. This is said to be a highly interesting photoplay which offers Miss Hammerstein a chance to express her talent and personality in the role of an aristocratic member of society who masquerades as a maid and is forced to become one in reality when misfortunes visit her. The picture develops a semi-humorous treatment, uncovering a deal of satire, whimsy and romance. The heroine wins a prize at a masquerade by her impersonation of a lady's maid.

It happens that she spends the night with her friend, Dorothy Graham, and Thomas Lawlor encounters her and naturally mistakes her for a servant since she is attired as a maid. Misfortune comes to her and when she leases her summer home, Tom's mother takes it. The latter has social aspirations. The heroine becomes secretary to Mr. Lawlor and her identity is carefully hidden until some friends visit her. Before Tom discovers the truth he proposes marriage and is accepted. Thus the girl recovers her aristocratic environment with none of its worries concerning financial matters. The picture is acted by a competent cast that includes Niles Welch, Arthur Housman, George Fawcett and Helen Lindroth.

PROGRAM READER

Did you ever go to a masquerade dance disguised as a servant? Just suppose you were a member of the upper circle—the exclusive society sphere and you went disguised as a lady's maid. Suppose through a mischievous impulse you continued to pose in that attire and attracted a youth. Would you declare your identity? There were reasons which prevented Naida from revealing her true name and position. For one thing she was financially embarrassed. So she became a social secretary. And the youth offered a true love because he thought her a maid. He was sincere and not a fortune hunter. This sparkling comedy-romance, "The Way of a Maid" is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— with Elaine Hammerstein as the star. In the cast are Niles Welch, George Fawcett, Diana Allen, Helen Lindroth and Arthur Housman.

SUGGESTIONS

This Elaine Hammerstein picture is similar to some others presented recently in which she has starred. You can feature it as a semi-humorous comedy-drama revealing a sparkling romance and plenty of amusing incident. Tell that it features a heroine who went to a dance disguised as a lady's maid. Play up that it was a masquerade dance. Then circumstances compelled her to become a true servant. And she loved the deception because it meant taking up her idle moments. She learned how to judge the realities. She also discovered true love. Emphasize the title and make much of it in a teaser campaign. Tell that the picture is a sparkling offering, well acted by a cast that is known to the steady patron. Mention Niles Welch, George Fawcett and Diana Allen in all of your publicity. A prologue can feature a Benda mask dance.

"TILLIE"
(Realart-Paramount)

Pennsylvania Dutch Story Well Done

IN this adaptation of a fairly popular story and play, "Tillie, a Mennonite Maid," Mary Miles Minter has an opportunity to appear in character. It will surprise many of her following to see her discarding her Pollyanna personality to find expression in a story which doesn't permit her to radiate her charm. When she adorns herself in a quaint dress and tops it off with a poke bonnet she makes an attractive person—although the scene is a limited one. Stories of life among the Mennonites have not been shown very much on the screen. "Erstwhile Susan" and "The Shulamite" are a couple which will be remembered.

The entire gist of this tale revolves around the supremacy of man over woman, the idea among the Mennonites holding the gentler sex as mere chattels. Tillie is a young girl who is dominated by a particularly cruel and mercenary father. She toils in the field with the other women—her whole life being given up to working or rather slaving for some man. It develops that she will inherit a snug sum if she adopts the Mennonite faith by her eighteenth birthday. And a persistent suitor connives with her father to marry her and come into her wealth. Well Tillie adopts the faith but runs away. The hero is a young artist who has awakened romance in her. He is too obviously dressed to be genuine, though for the purposes of the story he manages to extricate a deal of sympathy for aiding the girl and encouraging her to defy the harsh custom of her people.

The picture is done extremely well as far as production is concerned. The correct atmosphere is always present—not only in the costumes of the natives but in the intimate scenes of the homes and fields. The characterization is effective, the different parts being assigned to players who get thoroughly into character—even Miss Minter flashes a talent for character work not usually identified with her pictures. The story builds consistently, releasing a first rate interest and appeal, although the action becomes draggy in several of the scenes. This is due to planting the plot, characterization and moral. And the plot being of a single thread is easy to anticipate. The director has failed to rid the community of the elderly woman who willed the money to the girl. As far as the spectator knows her death never occurred. The titles are gems of characteristic dialect, filled with quaintness and charm, and the acting is excellent, particularly the performances of Lucien Littlefield as an old friend of Tillie, and Noah Beery as her father. There are not many dramatic scenes—it being mostly a slice of lie in a quaint community. Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mary Miles Minter is the star of "Tillie" which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This is an adaptation of Helen Martin and Frank Howe's play, "Tillie, a Mennonite Maid," which scored a hit upon the stage. It is based upon the life of the Mennonites, a colony in Pennsylvania—commonly called Pennsylvania Dutch. It is a story of humor and pathos—this "Tillie" and revolves around the life of a girl in the strict Mennonite community. The picture presents the attractive star in a role minus her curls. Her lovely personality is displaced by an entirely straight character.

The girl struggles for happiness in the narrow-minded community, a home devoid either of father or mother love. While Tillie has a father, he is so brutal and so stern in his attitude that the daughter is incapable of offering him any devotion. It develops that she will inherit a fortune if she becomes a Mennonite before her eighteenth birthday. And a mercenary admirer attempts to win her for the sake of her inheritance. But love comes to Tillie—a beautiful, unbounded love. And she is rescued from her life of toil and unhappiness. "Tillie" is an interesting character sketch, filled with romance, humor and pathos. It is excellently acted by a cast that includes Alan Forrest and Noah Beery.

PROGRAM READER

"Tillie, the Mennonite Maid" is one of the most widely read stories ever published. As a play it scored a decided hit. It now comes to the ———— theatre next ———— as a photoplay with Mary Miles Minter as the star. "She must obey." That was the edict of her father. Grim visaged and determined, he threatened her. He would flog her into submission and make her a Mennonite. But Tillie, too, was determined. There must be something better, brighter than life in this Mennonite colony. She led a life of drudgery, abuse and bleak sorrow. But happiness awaited her at the end of the trail. See Mary Miles Minter in her superb portrayal of "Tillie." You will like this picture. It depicts life among the Pennsylvania Dutch—life among the Mennonites.

SUGGESTIONS

You have an interesting story to exploit here. It exposes life among the Pennsylvania Dutch colonists in the Mennonite community. This is a creed followed by these people. So the picture is colorful in depicting their lives. Send out your post-cards. Tell them that they will scarcely recognize Miss Minter deprived of her curls. Tell them that it is a picture which affords the chance to give a rich portrayal. Present stills of her in her Mennonite costume. Feature the original story and announce that it is one of the most widely read ever published. Use snappy catch lines and make a great play about the Mennonites.

"CROSSING TRAILS"
(Associated Photoplays—State Rights)

Conventional Western in Plot and Incident

EVEN Westerns nowadays must carry something more than a conventional display of heroics with the hero triumphing over the villain to succeed as far as story interest is concerned. "Crossing Trails" is a typical old-time Western with the usual shooting, the usual riding, and the usual plottings of the onery outlaws to carry out their plans. The screen has certainly not progressed in its expression of Westerns. Perhaps it cannot show itself in any other way. But there can be a note or three of novelty. One Western star is adding burlesque and satire and novel stunts to his pictures. Perhaps he is showing the way.

This is not to say that "Crossing Trails" is uninteresting. On the contrary it measures out a good sample of action even if it contains little suspense. The latter element cannot be registered when you know from the introductory scene just how it will end. There is always a public for the primitive sequences—showing a persecuted heroine and a hero attempting to assert his manliness by lifting her out of her distress. This is all about a heroine who escapes the villain and finds refuge on the ranch of the hero. There is very little plot, the action comprising a series of incidents having to do with villainous plotting and the constant foiling of their dastardly attempts. "Crossing Trails" takes up the chase issue in a majority of its sequences. The hero bobs up to frustrate the enemy and after some melodrama, the arch-conspirator is thrown over a cliff and the love interest is registered.

There is no pathos, no sentiment, no character drawing, no surprises, no dramatic climaxes. Instead it is the old story of virtue triumphing over villainy with a marked economy of conflict. There are no side issues. The thread of the pattern is consistent from the start and everything develops and ends according to Hoyle. Cliff Smith, the director, is an able technician when it comes to a Western. In fact he has dressed up this picture to make it more entertaining than such a plot deserves. Noted for his pictorial effects, he has not neglected to present a few which are marked for their scenic value and atmosphere. Besides he has brought out the spirt of the story with sufficient action. Pete Morrison, the star, plays the role in an acceptable rugged fashion and his support is competent enough. Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Jim Warren.....Pete Morrison
Helen Stratton.....Esther Ralston
Buster Stratton.....John McL. Hatton
"Red" Murphy.....Lew Meehan

"Bull" Devine.....J. B. Warner
Mrs. Warren.....Billie Bennett

By L. V. Jefferson.
Directed by Cliff Smith.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Crossing Trails" is the title of the Western feature which comes to the ———— theatre next ————, with Pete Morrison as the star. It is a story filled with crisp action and suspense calculated to keep the spectator at attention. There is a hero who is harassed at every opportunity by a group of villains, the chief of which is endeavoring to force the heroine to marry him. When the minister refuses to perform the ceremony the villain shoots him. Of course it is natural for the girl to hide out of fear that she will be arrested for the crime. She takes refuge on the ranch of Jim Warren and is captured by the villain only to be rescued by the rancher.

In the end virtue triumphs over villainy, Jim punishing the ringleader by tossing hi over a cliff. The romantic interest keeps pace with the action moments and eventually it is discovered that Jim and Helen love each other well enough to marry. The picture is crammed with stirring incident, is laid in a picturesque country where the atmosphere is typical, and the story has been entrusted to a director and players who make the most of their opportunities. Cliff Smith, the director, was formerly identified with William S. Hart, and his pictorial effects are magnificent.

PROGRAM READER

A vivid and vital and picturesque story of the open spaces of the West is "Crossing Trails," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————, featuring Pete Morrison, a rugged type of cowboy-actor. The picture is filled with typical action, so characteristic in so many Westerns. It is the type of picture which reveals a harassed heroine and a young rancher whose object is to frustrate the plans of his enemies and those of the girl. The incident is crisp, the suspense keen, and the picture has been staged in the open spaces, thus bringing a wealth of appropriate atmosphere. The mention that Cliff Smith is the director is sufficient guarantee of its pictorial quality, the director having been identified with the best actors of Westerns on the screen. So come and see Pete Morrison triumph in "Crossing Trails."

SUGGESTIONS

You can tell them that this is a characteristic melodrama of the West. Bring out the idea that it is crammed with stirring action, plenty of gun-play, hard-riding, and suspense. Make mention that the spectators will not be disappointed because of the wealth of action and atmosphere. They may be reminded of its obviousness and familiarity, but they will sit up in their seats over the melodramatic moments. Make mention that Cliff Smith is the director. If your patrons remember him they will notice that he formerly directed William S. Hart and other capable actors of Westerns. The title is a winner and will suggest a deal of action. Get out your cowboy ensemble and put over some characteristic stunts if you feel like exploiting the picture.

CATCH LINES

See Pete Morrison, the dare-devil cowboy-actor, in "Crossing Trails," a vivid story of the West. Cliff Smith directed.

A rugged document of the open country. See a true and typical Western. See "Crossing Trails." A picture of real action and suspense.

"TRACKED TO EARTH"
(Universal)

Man Hunt Story Releases Limited Action

THEY have given Frank Mayo a man-hunt story in which he is under suspicion as a horse thief. While this indicates a certain quality of suspense one knows that he is honorable from the mere fact that he is the hero. Consequently the interest centers upon his real identity. Is he a government agent or a rich ranchman? It develops that he is the treasurer of a railroad who became a detective to catch the real bandits. The story carries a colorful title suggestive of much action, but this necessary element never figures prominently, it being subordinated to the love interest. You catch sight of four outlaws roping the hero and imprisoning him in a crude shack.

The backgrounds reveal some picturesque shots of a desert country, with the sand and sage-brush visible in every direction. The hero is to hang in the morning, but he digs his way to safety as the walls of his prison are made of mud. The man hunt is taken up in earnest and here is revealed a note of novelty in the manner in which the young man secrets himself. While he displays Indian methods in his system of camouflage, hiding, as he does, in the sand up to his head, which is covered by some underbrush, the pursuers never stop to follow his tracks from the hut. There is always an indication that some action will develop, but the man hunt is merely a pursuit over the sands. The country is alarmed over the "desperado" being at large. But the heroine stumbles upon him and the novelty of the hero hiding in the sand is unique enough for the director to "hold" the scene to get every effect. She brings him eatables and he manages to start a flirtation. She even suggests that he make his escape, but he always comes back to the sand to bury himself.

Another point which reveals how suspense is striven for is the case of the hero riding away with an extra horse. Which is to indicate that he is a regular horse thief. The climax introduces the sheriff entering the house of the heroine where the young man is hidden. The outlaws are also congregated there. And they are caught between two fires, when the hero comes out of his hiding place and confronts them with a gun. The bandits have robbed an express train and killed a messenger. Thus it ends with the young people declaring their love for one another. The picture is mostly exteriors, and the director has caught some highly picturesque shots. But there is little action or incident. Frank Mayo fulfils the demands of the role and his support is competent enough. You can call it fairly interesting. Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Tracked to Earth" is an interesting story about a man hunt and comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Frank Mayo as the star. Written by Wm. J. Neidig for a popular magazine, it comes to the screen with a deal of novelty. The central figure is under suspicion as a horse thief. In fact several men are tracking him and succeed in capturing him. He makes his escape and hides in the sands so that just his head is visible if you look beneath the branch of sage-brush hiding it. He covers his tracks successfully after his escape but a girl stumbles upon his hiding place and so nonchalant and courtly is he in his attitude that she refuses to bring him to justice. She offers him her horse to make his real escape but he prefers to remain and discover romance.

Ultimately it is revealed that he is a wealthy railroad man bent upon capturing the very men determined to hang him. They are the real outlaws. "Tracked to Earth" carries some beautiful exteriors, which show trackless wastes of the desert. It is a rugged story carrying some novelty, is well acted and directed. In the supporting cast are Virginia Valli and Harold Goodwin.

PROGRAM READER

He outwitted his pursuers by taking advantage of the sands. He covered himself up to his head which he kept hidden from view by means of a branch of sage-brush. Thus he adopted the camouflage—the cunning of the Indian. They could not track him down after he made his escape. But a girl found him. What happened? Did she turn him over to the authorities or did she fall in love? Did he make his escape? What manner of man was he? Was he a government marshal or a real bandit? These questions are answered in the vital and rugged picture of the West, entitled "Tracked to Earth," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This is an adaptation of a popular magazine story and presents Frank Mayo as the star.

SUGGESTIONS

The story is adapted from a popular magazine written by an author famous for several screen stories. After you make this fact plain tell them that Frank Mayo has an interesting story based upon a man hunt. Tell that it carries several novel incidents—that it concerns a man who escaped a group of man-hunters by secreting himself in Indian fashion in the sands. Tell them that the picture offers a romantic appeal, is staged in the sage-brush country, reveals some highly picturesque shots, and is well directed. Play up the other Mayo pictures such as "Across the Dead Line" and "Dr. Jim." For a prologue you can stage a scenic of the desert country and work in some color effects for atmosphere.

CATCH LINES

They captured him and were about to hang him, but he made his escape. There was no place for him to hide. And it seemed easy to re-capture him upon the burning sands. How did he escape detection? See Frank Mayo in "Tracked to Earth."

Contains Enough Action for a Serial

THIS picture is apt to be a tough one for the spectator to define. It carries all the earmarks of broad burlesque, not only because of its lively action which releases a sample of slapstick, but because the players act in a spirit of mock-heroics. Which is to say that they exaggerate. If the purpose is to have fun with the old-time comic opera revolution then George D. Baker, the director, has succeeded admirably. If he has attempted to be serious—then one must be inclined to say that he has "overshot."

The subject-matter is not entirely fitting to Gareth Hughes' personality. While he plays a browbeaten character, who is persecuted by a jealous husband, the part does not permit him to flash his individual talent for expressing pathos and sympathy. Somehow you gain the impression that one of a dozen second-class comedians could have done it just as well. The action opens on the golf links with the jealous husband arriving in time to catch his wife in a compromizing situation with his junior partner. After the necessary explanations, the youthful hero is caught again in his office—whither he had gone to recover some innocent letters from the wife. More choking and chasing action. In the interim there is a scene showing Hughes being punished by his sweetheart's father and a jealous suitor. The sequence following depicts the state-room of a boat bound for a Central American republic—with the hero "shanghaied" by his partner. The wife is aboard too.

It is action and more action. And the burlesque enters when the boat docks. The president of the republic is plotting with his generalissimo, and a kittenish vampire is also employed. There is some humor revealed in the "red tape" business of passing the quarantine doctors. It is broad slapstick, for characters toss each other about and a general hustle and bustle starts everyone scampering about on the dock. This sequence is followed by a lavish interior with some intimate touches between the characters. Continuity does not seem to be present in the action to any extent, because of the hectic action which is abundant throughout. With the South American scenes over with, the mild hero returns to his native town in time to rescue his fiance from a hateful marriage. His pet phrase is "I can explain" whenever his partner stops his persecution for the wee part of a minute. There is no time wasted in this offering. It keeps moving at breakneck speed—in typical farce measure. This is why one must accept it lightly—as a picture bordering the domains of burlesque. There is not much entertainment value, but at least it will suffice as a fairly interesting release. Hughes needs quieter pieces—such as "Little Eva Ascends." Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"I Can Explain" is the title of the Gareth Hughes picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. In this comedy-drama which borders upon burlesque, the talented star, who is gifted enough to appear equally at ease in farces as well as in serious stories, plays the part of a browbeaten young man who is junior partner in a firm, the senior of which is a jealous husband. Whatever the youthful hero does, his partner places a wrong conclusion upon it. He is intensely jealous of his wife. And he catches the hero with her on several occasions. Tiring of having to watch his young partner, the other has him "shanghaied" aboard a boat sailing for some South American port. There is an exciting time on board—for the persecuted youth is forced to keep hidden and suffer the insults and tortures of his strong, heavy and jealous partner.

Arriving at the port, there is more excitement when the quarantine officials refuse to allow entry to the city. The story follows with a duel between the partners, the younger being vamped by a passionate senorita. In good time, he returns to his home town and marries the sweetheart who waited patiently for his homecoming. The picture is adequately staged, is acted by a large and competent cast and is said to afford novel entertainment.

PROGRAM READER

If your partner discovered you with his wife and he happened to be much larger than you and threatened you—would you stop and explain, or would you run for dear life. Here is Gareth Hughes who is persecuted by a jealous husband—his own business partner incidentally—and because of his diminutive personality in comparison to his partner—is forced to be humiliated time and again. He always objects and says "I can explain." But it is of no use. The jealous husband refuses to listen to reason. Come to the ———— theatre next ———— and see the comedy sketch entitled "I Can Explain," with Gareth Hughes in one of his characteristic performances. This star has made rapid strides. Surely you cannot forget him in "Little Eva Ascends." So come and see him in a novel entertainment.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have had any success with Gareth Hughes pictures, it is well that you exploit this as up with the others in point of comedy appeal. While it isn't in the same class as "Little Eva Ascends," it contains enough sure-fire hokum and comedy to succeed almost anywhere. Describe it as a fast-moving comedy-drama of a busy youth who is kept on the jump avoiding a jealous partner and husband. The latter is frightfully jealous and he always manages to place a wrong conclusion upon the scene whenever he sees his wife with the youth. Tell that it is a picture which will chase the blues away. Bring forth the title in a snappy teaser campaign.

"GLASS HOUSES"
(Metro)

Interesting Little Farce-Comedy With Viola Dana Putting Over a Clever Character Sketch

THIS farce-comedy places Viola Dana in a character sketch which enables her to flash a talent heretofore undiscovered. While it is improbable and carries a few flaws if you examine it closely, still it manages to exude a deal of charm, romance and happy high jinks—the latter touches having to do with an irrepressible hoyden masquerading as a prim teacher to a wild youth who needs repression. The director, Harry Beaumont, has paid careful attention to the tempo, the action fitting perrectly and keeping up its pace without undue exaggeration. Money has been spent upon this feature, for there are at least fifteen lavish sets—to say nothing of a small army of extras providing atmosphere and an array of costumes which might have come from some fashionable Fifth Avenue shop.

Miss Dana is a society girl who is introduced as a Russian dancer at a private fete. And she will surprise her public through her ability to execute the native dance. When she learns that her fortune is gone, she resolves to go to work and applies at an agency, attired as a prim, old-fashioned intellectual. The hero's aunt has threatened to stop his income unless he mends his ways. And she thinks the best plan is to employ a monitor who will teach him deportment and a knowledge of books. Miss Dana certainly scores in her interpretation. She never steps out of character. The plot swings into its substance when the heroine steals away in the night, enters her own home and is mistaken for a well-known thief. The hero has also disappeared from his bedroom window. This gives them a chance to appear compromised when they find themselves together in the garage where they had gone to spend the night after realizing that the doors are locked. The aunt, seeing them in the morning, thinks they have eloped and is joyful to think that her nephew has shown such good judgment. He is pleasantly surprised when his bride joins him as a modern, up-to-date flapper.

The subsequent sequences clear away the complications resulting from the husband mistaking his wife for the thief—for she has lugged home a suitcase of her own treasures and the Jap butler has discovered them. The sick-room scene is inclined to be a bit draggy, but it all ends happily. The picture is excellently lighted.

Miss Dana's personality being revealed in several soft-focus effects. "Glass Houses" is breezy and full of peppy jazz—an ideal vehicle for the star. Gaston Glass, while he acquits himself in creditable fashion, appears more at home in straight dramatic parts. Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The leading attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "Glass Houses," with Viola Dana as the star. In this story the vibrant Metro star has an ideal vehicle for the expression of her exuberant personality. It is a role that enables her to interpret a colorful character sketch—that of a prim and prudish young teacher to a youthful collegian who needs suppression. The heroine realizing that her fortune is gone, applies for a position as maid, servant or social secretary. She is disappointed to learn that her modern clothes and style won't do. So she returns disguised as the aforesaid young, old maid.

The story carries several comedy highlights chief of which introduces the young people confronting each other in a garage after they have both stolen away from the house in the night and found the doors locked upon their return. The girl, carrying a suitcast, makes the aunt place a wrong conclusion upon the scene. She thinks the young people have eloped. The youth is disappointed in being compelled to marry the girl, but he is pleasantly surprised to discover her as her former self. The picture unfolds a deal of charm and comedy and contains a wholesome romance. It is lavishly staged and directed in a capable manner.

PROGRAM READER

People in glass houses shouldn't throw stones. And glass houses are awfully breakable. The aunt thought her nephew safe from temptation—what with the presence in the house of a prim disciplinarian. But the girl has occasion to steal away from the house, and the youth breaks his bondage and also escapes. When they return in the morning the aunt thought she spied a fine romance. So she arranged a marriage. This is the brief outline of "Glass Houses," the peppy, jazzy comedy which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Viola Dana as the star. This picture will afford a novelty to the patron and many will be surprised to see that Miss Dana displays a talent heretofore undiscovered. Come and see for yourself. Gaston Glass is the leading man.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture is lavishly staged and carries all the good qualities of a stimulating story. Play up that it offers the star one of the most appropriate roles of her career. Tell them that Miss Dana will surprise her following through her talent as a dancer and also as an actress who can interpret character. Emphasize the title and play it up for its novelty. Describe it as a picture which travels on high, releasing a wealth of comedy, high jinks, romance, sentiment and story interest. A prologue can feature an ensemble richly staged with the central figure being a Russian dancer interpreting native dances. Mention that Gaston Glass, hero of "Humoresque," is in the cast as leading man.

CATCH LINES

See "Glass Houses." Oh Boy!—What a jazzy, peppy picture. You'll say that Viola Dana is there as a dancer and as—. Come and see for yourself.

"A STAGE ROMANCE"
(Fox)

Artistic Achievement for Wm. Farnum

THERE will doubtless be a great many among William Farnum's following who will consider "A Stage Romance" his most artistic achievement. Certainly the Fox star has never had greater romantic opportunities than this picturization of Duma's play based upon the life of the celebrated English tragedian, Edmund Kean. Perhaps the majority of his following will be disappointed not to find him in a picture which expresses more action. In our opinion it is his finest offering since he appeared in the Mormon stories by Zane Grey. Perhaps it will be over their heads.

For one thing it goes back many years and may be called a costume drama. The proper definition of it would be to call it a character sketch of a truly colorful figure. And this sketch is filled with picturesque incident of a decidedly romantic nature. From this standpoint we cannot see how it will fail to carry appeal for those in search of illusion. There is so much to tell that the sponsors may be pardoned for revealing much of Kean's life through the subtitles. We see how he rises to the heights from a circus acrobat; we discover that he was an idealist who placed woman on a pedestal and who would keep her there even though royalty would bring her down to earth. A gentleman, a philanthropist, a man of honor—he strove to keep to his ideals, even though eventually he was banished to America for daring to defy the Prince of Wales.

Kean has two amours in this picture—one with a countess, the other with a stage-struck, hero-worshipping girl, who refuses to go out of his life even when he commands. Farnum has occasion to display a virile punch when he punishes a group of roustabouts determined to kidnap the girl. The big moment comes when he consents to give a charity performance and allows himself to suffer with temperament. He learns that his royal friend is faithless. So in a Hamlet scene he becomes pedantic and denounces the Prince from the stage.

Farnum has presented a novelty here in "A Stage Romance," something entirely different from anything heretofore attempted. At this time when the screen is under fire, the character of Kean will do much to kindle a feeling of generosity. If the exhibitor will remember this note and exploit it so that press and pulpit and the general public can be influenced—then Farnum's picture will not have been made in vain. Director Herbert Brenon has produced it with a correct tempo, giving the scenes a splendid balance and marking the story with a fine atmosphere characteristic of the period. The cast is a large one and contains such excellent players as Holmes Herbert, Etienne Giradot and Paul McAllister. Peggy Shaw reveals a charming quaintness and screens wonderfully as the little stage-struck girl, while Myrtle Bonillas gives a sincere performance as the aristocratic lady. Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Farnum is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in what is said to be his greatest film achievement. It is the role of Edmund Kean, famous as England's most gifted actor of all time. The picture is entitled "A Stage Romance" based upon a play by the gifted French author and playwright, Alexandre Dumas, and it gives to William Farnum the opportunities to flash his expression as a romantic actor. The story is rich in situation and incident and romance and pathos, too. It relates the romantic adventures of the famous Kean, an actor who rose from the circus to become the greatest interpreter of Shakespeare. Mr. Farnum has moments when he appears as Othello and Hamlet, and in the background is the tale of Kean himself—his amours—his willingness to sacerifice his fame and fortune to bring honor to the women of his heart.

PROGRAM READER

William Farnum comes to the ———— theatre next ———— in what is said to be his greatest screen achievement. This picture, presenting the celebrated Fox star, is adapted from a play by Alexandre Dumas, and relates the adventures and romances of Emund Kean, the famous English actor, who was hanished to America for daring to denounce the Prince of Wales. The picture presents charming atmosphere of a period rich in English stage traditions. Kean, the famous actor, rose from the depths to become the greatest star of his time—a star who quite eclipses them all in the power of his emotion.

"BLUE BLAZES"
(Western Pictures—Doubleday—State Rights)

Action and Incident in This Western

THEY give you Western action and incident in generous doses here. "Blue Blazes," which is being "state-righted," is likely sample of the characteristic, melodramatic slice of the open country, with a hero whose object is to knock villainy for the count. There is nothing original in the plot itself, but the director has crammed it with enough sure-fire touches to put over as a feature always interesting and sometimes thrilling. The spark of sympathy is ever being ignited not only because the hero has a man-size job on his hands frustrating the villain's dastardly plans, but because the heroine and her mother are constantly harassed to save the mortgage.

The central figure is a pugilist, who, upon being held up by a group of tramps and deprived of his clothes and money, journeys to a ranch and receives food and shelter. It doesn't take any imagination to realize that this house harbors the heroine and her mother, who are being troubled about the mortgage. The young man champions them and because of his heroic qualities you instinctively feel that there is going to be something doing in the shape of "he-man" fights, gun-toting and daring rescue work. You are not disappointed. He is arrested upon mistaken identity but manages to escape in time to foil the "heavy." The latter is desirous of gaining possession of the property because it is rich in oil. The title carries a double meaning. The guns release a fire and there is a burning oil scene which is colorful and even thrilling. Some rescue work is interspersed with the action and plenty of hand-to-hand conflict. Later it is revealed that the hero is a pugilist.

The picture is staged in appropriate atmosphere and since it contains a healthy sample of action and some suspense derived from the scenes and not from the story, there is no question that it carries a forceful appeal for this type of offering. It is a typical western melodrama constructed to release the elements of strife, pathos, heart interest and the inevitable romance. It is adventure tinctured by fiction rather than reality. Exhibitors should find it a good proposition for the fans who glory in Western stuff. Lester Cuneo portrays the hero with the necessary courage and his feminine lead is played in acceptable fashion by Francelia Billington. Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Jerry Connors	Lester Cuneo
Mary Lee	Francelia Billington
Mrs. Lee	Fannie Midgely
Black Lanning	Bert Sprotte
Foreman of ranch	Roy Watson
Lawyer	Philip Gastrook

Directed by Robert Kelley.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

This Western picture entitled "Blue Blazes," features Lester Cuneo, who has achieved popularity through his capable performances in the past and it comes as the chief attraction of a well balanced program at the ———— theatre next ————. The story concerns a successful pugilist who is held up by tramps in the sage-brush country and deprived of his clothes and money. Forced to become a hoho himself, he walks to the nearest ranch and is given food and shelter. Here he discovers that the mother and daughter are about to dispossessed and he becomes their champion.

There is a villain desirous of obtaining the ranch and marrying the girl and Jerry Connors, the erstwhile prizefighter, defeats the plans of the vicious thug. Jerry is involved in several difficulties which include a couple of arrests. But he manages to escape and punish his enemy. The villain discovers oil on the property which brings into the story some melodramatic incident which has to do with a fire and a rescue scene from the flames. The picture is punctuated with typical western action of the gun-toting kind. Francelia Billington plays the heroine in an acceptable fashion while others include Bert Sprotte, Roy Watson and Fannie Midgely.

A picture typical of the rugged West—a picture crammed with fighting, smashing, crashing action and keen suspense—a picture of the big, open country of plains and mountains—a picture of the triumph of virtue over villainy—a picture of a picturesque pugilist who conquered his enemies through his strong hands and his indomitable courage. He came to the house begging for food and he remained to show his gratitude. It was lucky for the girl and her mother. "Blue Blazes" presents some crackling incident, several thrills, and colorful scenes which include sensational rescues and a picturesque fire. Lester Cuneo is the star, while Francelia Billington is the leading woman. "Blue Blazes" will appear at the ———— theatre next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

You can advertise this picture as a rugged document of the West. Express the fact that it carried a wealth of action and a goodly quantity of suspense. Make mention that it is typical of the big, open country. Tell that it carries thrills, adventure, heart interest, romance and colorful incident. Feature the fact that the hero inspires a sympathy because of the vicissitudes which beset his path. Tell that he is courageous enough to meet and conquer them. Mention that Lester Cuneo is the star. If he is not known to your patrons, the chance is yours to advertise him as a star likely to interest them. Bill his name. Play up Francelia Billington, who is appealing. Run stills of her. Play it up as a clever melodrama carrying the sure-fire incident which interests the spectator.

CATCH LINES

A picturesque and rugged photo-drama of the big, open country. A picture of a courageous hero who met his problems and solved them through his daring and perseverance. See Lester Cuneo in "Blue Blazes."

He was a pugilist and he knew how to put up a battle. See the melodramatic offering crammed with action. See "Blue Blazes."

"THE BEAUTIFUL LIAR"
(First National)

Pleasing Light Comedy-Drama with Katherine MacDonald in Dual Role

ALTHOUGH built around a plot slightly improbable of theme, the picture is clean and wholesome, and, strangely enough, is minus a villain. This is something in its favor when one notices that the cloying sentimentality of triumphant virtue marks the majority of most of our photoplays. "The Beautiful Liar" may be called a pleasing light comedy-drama in which Katherine MacDonald plays a dual role and does justice to each character. While the offering does not quite equal the work of the star in some of her best productions, it is far above the average and is brimful of genuine entertainment. It is a feature which lends an appeal due to its dominant romantic note and the captivating, subtle humor of its theme and characterization.

The story is a fit selection for the star in that it does not tax her with emotional stress. She is called upon to appear as an everyday sort of girl—a human and charming bit of femininity. And the star can shine when she plays herself. One may be able to anticipate the outcome of the plot from the beginning, yet it builds so evenly, so surely to its denouement that even the "I-told-you-so's" cannot take offense. The heroine, being romantically inclined, goes forth in search of adventure and finds it. And the impressionable girls in the audience are apt to be quite carried away with the exploits of the pretty stenographer. We say girls because the picture carries more appeal for the feminine heart. The characterization indicates as much.

Miss MacDonald is discovered as a stenographer of humble circumstances who is confronted with the opportunity to impersonate a great actress, and take part in a theatrical production at a fashionable hotel. Her courage fails her when she learns she is actually supposed to act. A young milloinaire is introduced and the charming "steno" learns that he is to be the leading man. This causes her to change her mind. Complications follow the return of the real actress, but the love interest is so dominant by this time that the atmosphere is cleared of all entanglements. The picture carries some adequate sets, is capably directed and well played by Joseph J. Dowling in a character role, Wilfred Lucas in a humorous bit, and Kate Lester, who acts her grande dame in her usual finished style. The production is certain to please followers of the star, in that its entertainment value is high and the main plot unfolds itself with a gratifying smoothness. Length, 5,236 feet.—Eugene Carlton.

Directed by Wallace Worsley.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

In "The Beautiful Liar," which comes to the ——— theatre next ———, Katherine MacDonald plays a dual role—that of Helen Haynes, a stenographer in humble circumstances, and Elsie Parmelee, the reigning musical comedy queen. As the former the beautiful star is compelled to work in a broker's office and live in a cheap boarding house. One day it develops that the kind fates take it into their heads to relieve the stenographer's monotonous existence, and they do it with a vengeance. Shortly after Helen is compelled to impersonate the famous Elsie Parmelee and to take part in a theatrical production for the delectation of the "400."

Her courage begins to fail when she learns that she is supposed to act, but it returns quickly when she finds that a charming young millionaire is to be her leading man. It is on the stage with an audience in full view that Cupid gets in his best work. The picture is wholesome and decidedly interesting and is played by a company that includes the dependable Joseph J. Dowling, Charles Meredith, Kate Lester and Wilfred Lucas. Miss MacDonald is captivating in the dual role, her beauty lending a rich charm to the feature.

PROGRAM READER

A captivating star in a sparkling story. That is what Manager ——— promises for next ——— at the ———. Katherine MacDonald lends her charming personality to a dual role in a picture which is said to be exceptionally interesting. The radiant star masquerades as a famous actress, when in reality she is a stenographer. And in substituting one identity for the other, the part presents the star with many adventures. "The Beautiful Liar" is a story within a story and Miss MacDonald will charm you with her portrayal. Prominent in her supporting cast are Joseph J. Dowling, who will be remembered as the Miracle Man in the play of that name, Charles Meredith, Wilfred Lucas and Kate Lester.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have Katherine MacDonald to exploit in a simple but thoroughly charming story. While the plot is familiar, it nevertheless carries a deal of sparkle. Due to its obviousness, the best plan is to use the soft pedal in giving away an outline of the story. Stress the fact that the audience is sure to be captivated by the star's lovely personality. You can use the announcement often made that Miss MacDonald is said to be Woodrow Wilson's favorite screen actress. Use stills of her. Play up her beauty. And don't forget to state that she is considered the most beautiful woman of the screen. Mention should be made that the picture is an adventure-romance—a story without a villain. A prologue can feature a mask dance.

CATCH LINES

Would you tell a little lie—if it meant changing from steno to star, desk-lights to footlights, trolley car to town car, hall-room to hotel, typewriter to tiara, lunch-room to Rector's?

A romance without a villain—a clever story acted by good looking people. And clothes and settings that are the last word! We'd lie if we didn't say it was Katherine MacDonald's best! See the radiant star in "The Beautiful Liar."

"POLLY OF THE FOLLIES"
(Constance Talmadge—First National)

"Connie" as a Stage-Struck Amateur Provides Plenty of Fun

"POLLY OF THE FOLLIES" can be ranked with the best of the Constance Talmadge vehicles. John Emerson's and Anita Loos' story may not be very true to life, but that is beside the point when these two authors can provide such clever comedy, interspersed with innocent touches of drama.

The inimitable "Connie" is cast this time as a young lady with theatrical aspirations. She is a small town girl and the romance of the stage has so set her afire that she decides there is no other life for her. But Uncle Silas has different ideas as to a woman's place. He breaks up her amateur theatrical show which Polly is staging in her home town, and for a time it appears as if the stage-struck girl must forever abandon her hopes and aspirations.

But Polly is not to be daunted. She wins for herself a place in the famous Ziegfeld Follies in New York. Here are shown some of the best scenes in the picture. Polly's antics on the stage at the Follies, where she almost sets the spectators in a panic, are a scream. In the end she wins popularity and a husband.

The small town amateur theatrical is excellently burlesqued by Director Joseph Plunkett. For instance, the star gives a matinee at the Old Soldiers' Home. When she puts on her Cleopatra costume for the Follies there are even more laughs. Constance may be a certain type of vampire, but not the Cleopatra type, and no one could burlesque the ancient queen better than this star. The feature is filled with small-town types such as Polly's uncle, played by Horace Knight.

Miss Talmadge will continue to run a popularity race with sister Norma in this brand of comedy. The Emerson and Loos combination proves that they understand perfectly her requirement and capabilities.

The feature has been carefully staged and careful attention has been paid to detail. Varying the locale from the small town to New York has a good effect and the various situations in which Polly finds herself allow the star to express that peculiar personality of hers to the best effect.—John E. Kennebeck.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The inimitable "Connie" Talmadge (most of her admirers do not care to call her formally, "Constance") will be seen in a new type of role in her latest feature, "Polly of the Follies," which will be the main attraction at the ——— theatre on ———. The story has been provided for her by John Emerson and Anita Loos, who have written many of her previous stories, and who are considered among the foremost screen writers in the country today. As writers of clever comedies they are almost universally acknowledged to be leaders.

Miss Talmadge plays the part of a small town girl who feels the lure of the stage. Nothing can stop Polly when she makes up her mind to a thing. And she decides that she is going to be an actress—a great actress. Uncle Silas has different ideas about woman's place in life, and when he breaks up Polly's amateur theatrical in her home town things look black for the ambitious little girl. It is only when she arrives in New York and makes her way in the Zeigfeld Follies in the Gay White Way that Polly feels satisfied. Incidentally she wins a husband with her success.

The pretty star is supported by a capable cast in "Polly of the Follies," which includes George Fawcett, Kenneth Harlan, Billie Dove, Thomas Carr, and Horace Knight. The feature will be shown at the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

PROGRAM READER

Constance Talmadge's latest feature, "Polly of the Follies," will be the feature attraction at the ——— theatre on ———. This pretty star has been seen in a succession of clever comedies, but it is doubtful if there are any which can equal this latest riot of fun. This story was written especially for the star by John Emerson and Anita Loos, who have provided her with many laugh makers in the past, and who, according to competent critics, have outdone themselves in "Polly of the Follies." It suits the star's personality to perfection. She plays the part of a small town girl who is filled with a sudden and fierce desire to go on the stage, conquer the world, and twist it around by the tail. So she puts on an amateur show in her own home town. It isn't everything that a show ought to be. But at any rate, Polly is determined and before the picture ends she has won success in New York and a husband besides.

CATCH LINES

Constance Talmadge in five reels of laughs. The prettiest star in her cleverest comedy.

The story of a stage-struck girl. She started in amateur theatricals and ended in The Follies.

"THE NIGHT ROSE"
(Goldwyn)

Vivid Underworld Melodrama Is Excellently Acted by Lon Chaney

IN New York censorship circles this Goldwyn picture, entitled "The Night Rose," the work of a favorite author, has aroused much discussion. In fact, it is "taboo" in the Empire State, owing to the belief of the commission that crime and crookdom are held under the spotlight and might have a tendency to corrupt the young and old impressionables. Missouri has said "Show me!" And the state hasn't gone to the bow-wows as yet. Frankly speaking, "The Night Rose" does not differ from dozens of other stories which have been screened and which have carried identical plots. It holds the light up to raw realities—not mincing matters in its approach to life, but telling its plot as it might be told in a crowded courtroom.

It is said that the author has evolved his tale from facts. Crooked politics form the very naked background of the story, the central theme concerning San Francisco's underworld. It is melodramatic and carries some tense action and a fair sample of suspense. The producers have assembled a well known cast, with Lon Chaney climbing to the histrionic heights, as usual, in his portrayal of a crooked hotel proprietor. In some respects his work is the one redeeming factor in the picture, for the theme is lax in several spots and several of the cast do not always keep in character. The photography is exceptionally good, but the interior scenes cannot be considered anything out of the ordinary, with the exception, possibly, of the ball-room sequence.

You are introduced to the heroine, played by Leatrice Joy, as she witnesses the shooting of a policeman while in an underworld cafe with her sweetheart, portrayed by Cullen Landis. The girl is driven from home by her mother and the youth takes her to O'Rourke's hotel, where she becomes known as the "Night Rose," making her appearance after dark. One of the proprietor's men shoots the young man and the heroine, believing him dead, attempts to slay O'Rourke (the part played by Chaney) in the ball-room, but the hotel man's former sweetheart grabs the revolver and beats her to it. The heroine returns home, finds the youth recovering from his wound and receives her mother's forgiveness. The fans who like melodramatic fare with a kick in it will be attracted to "The Night Rose." Catering to this type of patron, and he is the red-blooded individual eating three squares a day, the picture possesses a real box-office value. Length, 6 reels.—Eugene Carlton.

THE CAST

Scenario by Arthur Statter.
Directed by Wallace Worsley.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "The Night Rose," adapted by Arthur Statter from Leroy Scott's story of the same name and directed by Wallace Worsley. This is a dramatic document of underworld life with a cast comprising Lon Chaney, Leatrice Joy, John Bowers, Cullen Landis, Richard Tucker, Mary Warren, Edythe Chapman, Betty Schade, Maurice Flynn, Milton Ross and John Cossar. The reader can see that this assembly of players is of all-star proportions. The company alone should insure an interesting picture. It is said that the author assisted Mr. Worsley in the direction, thus assuring a production which adheres strictly to the printed page.

The heroine witnesses the shooting of a policeman while in an underworld cafe with her sweetheart, Jimmy. She is driven from home by her mother and the youth takes her to a shady hotel where she becomes known as the "Night Rose," appearing only after dark. Jimmy is shot and the girl believing him dead, attempts to slay the proprietor. His former sweetheart grabs the revolver and beats her to it. The heroine returns home, finds Jimmy recovering from his wound, and is forgiven by her mother. The picture unfolds a deal of tense drama and is excellently acted.

PROGRAM READER

A vivid tale of the underworld—a tense drama of life as it is found in the slums of San Francisco is "The Night Rose," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with an all-star cast comprising such well known and competent players as Lon Chaney, Leatrice Joy, Cullen Landis, John Bowers, Richard Tucker, Mary Warren, Edythe Chapman, Maurice (Lefty) Flynn, John Cossar and others. This vivid drama is adapted from Leroy Scott's vital story and it is said that the author assisted the director in the production, thus assuring an authentic version of the screen play. We will not acquaint you with the contents of this graphic story. Suffice to say that it carries a full quota of exciting scenes and is rich melodrama in every particular.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture is a vivid melodrama of the underworld—a story of crooks—of a girl who defies her mother—of a girl who shoots to kill, to avenge the wounding of her lover. Do not give away the plot, but acquaint your crowd with the fact that tense exciting, graphic, picturesque entertainment is assured them when they see "The Night Rose." Play up the author, Leroy Scott, and emphasize that he is one of the leading fictionists writing modern literature. Play up that he is truly an eminent author. The cast is a large and notable one and you should mention each member—particularly Leatrice Joy, Lon Chaney, John Bowers, Cullen Landis, Edythe Chapman, and Mary Warren. Play up that the picture is a tense drama filled with crisp scenes, offering action and suspense. A prologue can feature a tabloid sketch of the story. This will provide fitting atmosphere.

"PENROD"
(First National)

Delightful Revel of Boyhood Life

"PENROD" is a humorous revel of boyhood life and one of the biggest laughs of the season. Everyone who ever had a happy childhood will like it, with its kid's circus, battle of the rival gangs, bits of humor, and occasional thrill, like when the boys capture a pair of bandits.

The Booth Tarkington "Penrod" stories, with Wesley Barry as the inventive and ingenious hero, all his pals and juvenile enemies have been brought to the screen with every bit of humor and naturalness of the original. There are a lot of famous child players and players who are famous for their portrayal of juvenile parts in the cast. Frederick Morrison (Sunshine Sammy) has forsaken the Hal Roach lot long enough to play a part. Then there is Claire McDowell, Marjorie Daw and Clara Horton.

The young Mr. Barry, however, is the king of the gang. He it is who organizes and sees to it that he is elected president of the American Boys' Protective Association, that has "nishiashons," secret meetings, "symbols" and grips, with lodge rooms and general headquarters in the cave the thirty members have dug in the ground and furnished to suit their fancy. Of course, the sedate grownups of the town, even as you and I, frown on the organization, but one day "Penrod" and his society capture two notorious bandits that have been terrorizing the neighborhood, for which they win the gratitude of the whole community, to say nothing of earning for themselves such glory as never a boy could hope for. There is a childhood love affair that adds interest to the story, but for the most part the picture is just great entertainment of the sort that Booth Tarkington can and Mark Twain could write, visualized as Marshall Neilan's genius can do it.

All America is going to laugh with "Penrod." Length, 8,037 feet. —John E. Kennebeck.

From the Booth Tarkington Stories.
Scenario by Lucita Squier.
Directed by Marshall Neilan.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Penrod" and his gang, those honest-to-goodness boys of Booth Tarkington's stories, are coming to the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement next ————, in a wonderful juvenile pictutre made by Marshall Neilan and distributed by First National. Wesley Barry is "Penrod," that inventive and ingenious youngster who organized the American Boys' Protective Society, got himself elected president and finally captured the notorious bandits who had been robbing the whole neighborhood, with the aid of his gang. "Penrod's" supporting cast includes a big company of juvenile and grown-up players of renown. There is "Sunshine Sammy," the little colored boy with a host of friends; Claire McDowell, Clara Horton, Marjorie Daw and Tully Marshall, to say nothing of a half hundred of lesser lights.

"Penrod" is for entertainment purposes only, but it is a king pin of its kind. Few people who remember their own childhood will want to miss it.

PROGRAM READER

Marshall Neilan's "Penrod," a picturization of Booth Tarkington's stories of the same name, with Wesley Barry in the title role and a cast of half a hundred, will be the feature photoplay attraction at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' showing beginning ————.

It is a humorous and entertaining story that the picturization of "Penrod" tells. Wesley (Penrod) has organized a society with "grips," "nishiathions" and "symbols." The soceity meets in a cave they have dug, much against the wishes of the grown-ups of the village, who look askance on the new fraternal order. Finally after the boys capture two notorious bandits parental objections turn into parental favor.

There are few people who have so far forgotten their own childhood days as to want to miss this picture of real boys and girls playing away as only happy childhood can.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill this as entertainment, giving prospective patrons an idea of what they are going to see with particular attention to the cast, even to splitting the billing that ordinarily would go to the star. Let your advertising be light and snappy. Promise laughs. Mentoin Booth Tarkington, but don't overdo it. There is a great chance for hokum exploitation, window display tie-ups, lobby displays and juvenile actor prologue.

CATCH LINES

You cannot afford to miss seeing Freckles Barry, Sunshine Sammy, and the other juvenile stars in this humorous and at times exciting picture about a boy's society that captured two bandits, licked the alley gang, put on a circus and did a lot of other things that will bring back your own happy childhood and send you home with a smile on your lips. It's great entertainment.

Application of Colored Light in Connection with Music

Modified Illumination Permits One to "Feel" the Atmosphere

By A. L. POWELL, Edison Lamp Works

Securing An Atmosphere

IT has been only recently that much study has been placed on the subject of the connection of light and music and up to the present time very limited practical application of this subject has been used. However, a rapidly increasing number of Motion Picture theatres are adopting, in some form or another, the use of modified illumination to produce an atmosphere which is in harmony with the music. The study is only in its infancy and in the near future we may expect to see great strides in the advancement of this art.

The progressive exhibitor is constantly on the alert for suggestions permitting an original and effective touch to his house. Mr. Powell has endeavored to point out the importance of the subject to the Motion Picture theatre, the wonderful opportunity for experimentation which it possesses, the fundamental points of similarity and difference between light and sound. Mr. Powell has also tried to show by practical examples, how we associated light with certain emotional qualities and the difficulties likely to be encountered in combining light and sound.

One of the most interesting phases of the application of colored light is in connection with music. It is the part of our subject on which there is the least definite information available, less real work and investigation has been carried on and the general principles are but little understood. It is therefore a fascinating subject to the experimenter be he scientist, decorator or musician. To all intents and purposes, it offers a virgin field for constructive effort and the Motion Picture Theatres constitute a huge laboratory extending from coast to coast.

To obtain results, one must have apparatus with which to conduct experiments and fortunately we have them. Huge symphony orchestras under the direction of capable, sincere, progressive conductors, adequate capacity in electric current to supply the necessary light, flexible control or switching apparatus, electrical men with ingenuity in the handling of light, audiences, varied in character, as subjects. Surely one could not ask for a better set of conditions.

It is not strange that the co-ordination or joining of light and music has not been developed to a greater degree. Broadly speaking, appreciation of music itself is comparatively modern and it was only in the last few years that adequate means of controlling and changing or modifying the light have been available. The future looks very bright. Within the last decade several very creditable attempts have been made to combine light and music and more and more investigators are interesting themselves in the subject. Individually, one can accomplish very little, but as pointed out above, when the Motion Picture Theatres with their trained organizations take up the matter actively, the art should advance by leaps and bounds.

There are several fundamental features which work for the success or failure of the endeavor and these must be borne in mind. It is well, therefore, to stop and study the question before attempting to enter into the details. The first question which comes up is, "How will the light affect our emotions?" In one of the earlier articles, we pointed out that light affected us through association. It might be well to repeat this: We associate green, for example, with the quiet restful wood or meadow, yellow with the warm sun, red with fire, danger, war and carnage, blue with the calm sea and sky." Bear this point in mind and let us digress for a minute.

Light is similar to sound (music) in more ways than most of us realize. One is received by the eye, and the other by the ear and then conveyed by nerves to our brain where we get the impression. Both light and sound are produced by vibrations. A deep tone is produced by a slowly moving wave or vibration, a high pitch by a much quicker movement. We have a so-called octave of sound c, d e, f, g, a, b, c, and what might be termed an octave of light, red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo and violet—the red vibrating much less rapidly than the violet. Due to this similarity, some experimenters have made the mistake, the writer believes, of attempting to assign tonal values to the colors of the spectrum, just as though they were to play a scale in colors, or write a score for colors as they would for sound.

As a somewhat exaggerated illustration of the point we are trying to bring out, an experimenter might try to write a color score for "America" (My Country, 'Tis of Thee). His music would read—c, c, d b, c, d, e, e, etc., his light score might read, yellow, yellow, green, orange, yellow, green, blue, etc.

It is obvious that attempting to follow any such practice as this would lead us nowhere and that we would have a meaningless, unintelligible result. We must have our tie-in between the two senses—hearing and sight—based on the association element. We must study how both light and sound affect our feelings. Realizing this, we will see that rather than an individual note having a corresponding light to accompany it, a group of notes, that is a mood or theme of the composition, or even a whole section, will have a much more definitely associated color. For example, one would naturally associate green with a pastoral bit, red with martial music, vivid yellow with the bright sprightly dance, blue with the moonlight, blue-green with the barcarolle and so on.

The next point to be kept in mind is the method of applying color. The first extensive attempt made in America along this line was at Carnegie Hall, four or five years ago. The Russian composer Scriabine had prepared the score of a number with color accompaniment (Poem of Fire, Prometheus). One instrument of his orchestra was what he termed "tastiera per luce" (Light keyboard). This was a box about five feet square with a white background on which colored light could be thrown and varied in intensity and tone (color). He wrote a score for this device and introduced it at will, as he would a part for the woodwinds or brass. Sometimes one color would be visible for quite a period, then there would be a rapid variation of tint. The box which he used was so small that the effect was lost at the rear of the hall. The effect of the color was

Competent Engineering Necessary to Insure Safety in Theatre Construction

Competition by contractors tends toward lower standards in building materials

"Much has been written and a great deal said of late concerning the responsibility of faulty theatre construction. This is due to the two recent theatre collapses—one the American theatre in Brooklyn, which was under construction and in which seven lives of workmen were lost, the other the Knickerbocker theatre in Washington, which had been operating several years, in which ninety-eight lives of patrons have been accounted for to date.

"The general public seems to be at a total loss to understand how such things could occur. It is not surprising that a collapse of this nature is not generally understood; indeed it is doubtful whether the architectural or even the engineering profession is able definitely to explain, beyond a reasonable doubt, the reasons therefor. So many factors enter into a problem of this character that it becomes very difficult to establish that there can be but one solution to the problem, and then to prove that particular solution.

"Eyewitnesses are usually very few in number, if any, and those that are available, due to stress of excitement, may be expected to be indefinite and unreliable. Consequently it is more difficult to find, after failure, where the point of weakness was than it would be to determine it before if a proper and competent search were made. These vital weak points or points of incipient failure must have been there and could have been found prior to or during construction. Why, then, were they not found and such terrible calamities averted?

"Numerous reasons may be advanced for this oversight or lack of precaution. Owners generally engage an architect to prepare plans and specifications, including engineering design, and often no inspection is thought necessary or required. The architect, not being an engineer, is obliged to engage some one to do the engineering features, especially with respect to the structural steel, the importance of which is often treated lightly or totally disregarded.

"The architect is then placed in a position where he must pay for the engineering work out of his own fee, which may be none too large, and since it is to his interest to get the work done as economically as possible he is disinclined to engage a high-grade engineer at a corresponding price. So he very often engages less reliable services, or even employs an engineering draughtsman in his own office on a small salary basis. When these plans are sent out to contractors for bids, permission is given each contractor to redesign, if he thinks he can reduce his bid by doing so, and he usually thinks he can, so that very frequently in the end the contractor furnishes the design as well as the material, and his only requirement is that he meet the approval of the building department having jurisdiction. This practice should be condemned. Building department engineers are not for that purpose and should not be expected to relieve the owner or architects of their own responsibility. Indeed in many departments they are not able to do so.

The Contractor as Engineer

"Consequently the work is designed and built with the least possible amount of engineering services, and only those of the contractor, who is naturally biassed with his own itnerests of profit. He therefore not only reduces the amount of steel to a minimum, but does so with more or less incompetent engineering service,

Economical Floor-Covering for the Medium-Size, High-Class Theatre

What the average theatre owner wants is a good looking, durable, and reasonably priced floor-covering.

Expensive, easily ruined carpet may be the choice of palatial movie houses in the big cities, with their high prices and thousands of admissions every day. But the initial and replacement costs of carpet would make an appalling dent in the bank balances of most theatre-owners. Nor is fabric carpet the most practical from an efficiency standpoint.

For the man looking for the qualities most desirable in a floor-covering—attractiveness, quietness, and durability, ease and low cost of maintenance—Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum is the soundest possible investment.

Here is a floor-covering admirably suited to theatre service. As cork is one of the principal ingredients, it is pleasingly resilient and quiet beneath the tread of ever-changing audiences. The durability of Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum is beyond question. It is made in strict accordance with the rigid specifications of the United States Navy.

Gold-Seal Cork Carpet

Where absolutely quiet floors are desired, we suggest Gold-Seal Cork Carpet. This durable floor-covering is as silent and comfortable underfoot as a thick woven rug. A super-quiet covering for aisles, rest rooms, etc. It is made in attractive shades of brown, green and terra cotta.

Consult our nearest office for any information you may wish on floors or floor-covering for your theatre. We shall be glad to send you information, samples of Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum and Cork Carpet, and specifications for their proper laying.

since he cannot afford to carry in his organization expert engineers. He is not in the engineering business and charges only a small amount, if indeed he charges at all, for the services rendered. He is a contractor and derives his profits from sales of materials.

"The contractor may be permitted to redesign, if he can save the owner an appreciable amount of money by doing so. As very often happens, the contractor may even be able to produce better steel designs than the architect has. In this case the owner should engage a thoroughly competent engineer to check up the contractor's work. If the owner does not do this, he takes all the risk, should a collapse occur.

"Owners should awaken to the fact that they must have competent engineering design and supervision in connection with the architectural work. The foundation of theatre construction is engineering. This is of vital importance and must stand out above everything else. Safety first! If the theatre is made structurally sound there can be no failure, and this must be given first consideration. 'A chain is only as strong as the weakest link, so in a theatre one weak point is enough to cause a total collapse. Of what value is the most architecturally beautiful theatre if it be structurally weak?'

"The question then arises how to eliminate this element of danger and provide absolute safety to the public, to which they are entitled.

Visual Inspections Useless

"Numerous investigations have been started by governors, mayors, and others to reinspect those theatres that are now open. Undoubtedly the move is a good one if properly reinforced and carried through in the right direction. It is reported that building departments are organizing additional squads to make visual inspection of theatres for the purpose of determining their degree of safety. Such inspections can have very little value of any kind, and certainly none so far as the structural strength of a theatre is concerned.

"The safety of a theatre against collapse, except from fire, is contingent entirely on the structural features, the strength of which cannot be determined by visual inspection. Indeed, in most cases the structural members are not visible or even accessible.

"All theatres that have been built or are now under construction without thoroughly competent engineering direction should now be investigated by competent engineers. All engineering plans should be thoroughly reviewed and checked, inspection of the premises with regard to masonry, foundations, etc., so far as practicable, should be made, and if there is developed a reasonable ground for suspicion, the house should be closed, if necessary, until the defective parts have been reinforced.

Needed Legislation

"Competent engineering is the key to the situation. Some States now require that engineers be licensed, which means comparatively little as the requirement for a license is relatively low. However, it would improve conditions materially if it was legally required that all plans must be designed and executed by a licensed engineer, but this would not give all the desired security. Professional engineers like lawyers and doctors, must be judged by their special experience and reputation and compensated accordingly. Consequently it is very well to place a limit by a license; still the owner must select his engineer in the same careful manner that he selects his lawyer—according to his specific qualifications for the work to be done.

"Legislation should make it mandatory, so far as possible, that all owners do this—at least, to the extent that all engineering work must be designed and executed by a licensed engineer. And the standard of requirements for a license should be made equal to that for admission to full membership in the American Society of Civil Engineering.

"If this is done both the public and the owners will be protected against failure due to incompetence or negligence, or both."

The comfort of your patrons should always be of first consideration.

Installations of Barton Organs

F. W. Fischer, who owns a string of theatres comprising the cities of LaSalle, Ill., Kewanee, Ill., and Madison, Wis., has recently purchased the Grand Opera House building in Appleton, Wis. Mr. Dan Barton of the Bartola Musical Instrument Co., has personally laid out an organ installation which will rank with the best in the State of Wisconsin. A large model Barton Organ will be installed in the proscenium. The instrument will have a special instrumentation to provide for all orchestral effects. Mr. Fischer's entire circuit of theatres is equipped with Barton Musical Instruments.

John Herziger installed a large model Barton Organ in his Orpheum Theatre at Menasha, Wis., one year ago and has made a special feature of the organ music featuring Mr. T. D. Waiss, a prominent theatre organist. The Barton Organ has been such an attraction in the Orpheum Theatre, that Mr. Herziger is now installing a Barton Organ of even larger size than the Menasha instrument in his theatre at Neenah, Wis. The organ is a three manual instrument and will cost $18,000.

The new $400,000 theatre which will soon open at Kenosha, Wis., will be equipped with the latest model Barton Organ. This instrument is fitted with a new organ invention THE DIVIDED MANUAL. The installation will be on each side of the stage in especially prepared organ lofts. A complete orchestral division in the organ has been provided, giving the instrumentation of a large symphony orchestra. The Barton Organ will be made a feature of the beautiful new theatre.

Largest Spot Light in Studio Work Property of Jackie Coogan

The 20th Century mode of lighting in motion picture studios is indeed one of perfection. This has been evinced in the completion recently of the largest spot light to be used in studio lighting work.

Jackie Coogan, the screen star, is the proud owner of the lamp which was purchased by the Coogan organization. The lamp was manufactured by the United Studios in Hollywood under the personal direction of Walter Strohr the electrical engineer of the studio plant.

It is 110 volts and 150 amperes. It is automatically fed and will carry a light 10 miles distant. With reflectors, it will send a parallel ray a distance of 20 miles.

Jackie Coogan is a very sincere student of electricity. When he grows up he tells the studio folks he wants to be an electrician. The moment he completes a scene he rushes off to this huge lamp and tests its many controls turns the lights all around the huge interior stage and takes great pleasure in telling visitors just how it works. "The Kid" can run the lamp with the skill of any electrician. It is being used in all the future Jackie Coogan productions.

Your Patrons' Comfort

It is now time for the exhibitor to consider the advisability of installing a ventilating system. The public of to-day demands a great deal and the exhibitor who can best meet the demands of this public will naturally obtain the greater success.

The Motion Picture News would be very glad to cooperate with any exhibitor in helping him make a decision on ventilating systems. We offer you our engineering services.

Arrangements made by Lou Kaufman, business agent of Newark Local.

Bill in Legislature Relates Solely to Projectionists

The first bill relating to motion pictures to be introduced at the present session of the New York state legislature was handed in the past week by Assemblyman Joseph D. McKee af New York. The bill relates solely to motion picture operators. It seeks to amend the general city law relative to the licensing of such persons. The bill provides, among other things, that a permit can be issued to any person over 18 years of age desiring to serve as an apprentice to a licensed operator, but that the apprentice is not to be permitted to operate any apparatus except under the personal supervision of a licensed operator. Furthermore the bill provides that no license can be granted to an applicant unless that person has served an apprenticeship of at least six months with a licensed operator, or that he has had at least six months' experience as an operator in a theatre or place of public assemblage.—GRANT.

National Anti-Misframe League Forum

Dear Editor:

It's been quite a while since I have written into the "Projection Dept." I've been quiet and peaceful since the first of the year, and had begun to think that all the operators had joined the N. A. M. L., and had made good New Year resolutions, when along comes a peanut brained punch artist, who must have got a new punch for Christmas. The film was "Salvage," put out by R. C. Picture Corp. The film was in good shape and was a work of art by the motion picture industry.

Then this thing, who calls himself an operator, and who must have been promoted from a conductor on a jerk water railroad, had the nerve to butcher this film with his gold engraved punch. He couldn't be satisfied with two or three punch marks in the film, put in by another of his tribe, but had to put his brand in every frame for nine frames. I am enclosing the clipping. It's the limit, I call it.

I am glad to see the Projection Dept. of the News picking up.

And another good thing, all the boys who are writing to the department are boosters for the N. A. M. L.

I would like to give an idea to the film exchanges that would save the titles and film on each picture for a good many more months' service. And that is to put a black strip of film between the picture and the end part strip on each reel.

All over the country are theatres with one machine, and each operator cuts at least one frame off the picture to make the splice in connecting the two reels. This strip of black film would be cheaper and easier to replace than the picture or titles of the film. That is the reason you see so many short titles at the end of the reels.

I see where you are considering getting out some real honest-to-goodness "membership buttons." Let me tell you, I and all the rest of the boys would gladly pay at least fifty cents for a button we wouldn't be ashamed to wear. The former buttons, a person didn't know whether you were advertising some kind of chewing gum or a new patent medicine. Ha! ha! So, Editor, let's have the new button.

So's here's success to N. A. M. L. and the Projection Dept.

Yours sincerely,
Leslie F. Clark.

P. S.: Enclosing a few sketches of handy operating kinks.

Dear Friend and Editor:

I am herewith enclosing a list of our officers elected at the last regular meeting for the coming year. If you have a little space in your N. A. M. L. Forum why we would feel pleased to see same in print.

I am an old member myself. I joined in 1915, when situated in Chatham, Ont.

You will also find enclosed a copy of the film report that I am using in the theatre in which I am employed in this city. If it is worth while use it.

With very best wishes for success to the N. A. M. L., I am,

Very truly yours,
C. A. McKeen.

Member 729, c/o Griffin Theatre.

Brother McKeen has a very good idea. The following film report allows the manager a basis on which to form his opinion of the exchange with which he is dealing.—Editor.

Dear Editor:

I am getting the boys here lined up with the N. A. M. L. Enclosed find an application from one of them; he is new in the game but he's the kind we can help get a good start. I hope you received my letter containing drawings of my Motor Rewind which is a decided success in eliminating poor patches. "Let's go, boys" and make a clean-up of mistreated prints! I keep a ledger on films I run and keep in it the following items: Oily, dry, dirty, number of mis-frames, punch marks and whether the photography is good or bad, this is merely for my own good, as at the end of a "block" of pictures my manager buys, I give him an average of the kind of prints the exchange is sending him.

JOHN E. DUNKIN
No. 1581

Yours truly,
IRVIN ALBRIGHT.

Dear Editor:

It has been a real long time since I have written to the Dept., so will try to butt in with a few lines. I am an old member as my number is 423. I am in for getting new badges for the N. A. M. L. How about the rest of the Brothers? In answer to Mr. Burnett's article on change-over I certainly agree with him as I have been using it for about 6 years. It is about the only sure way of changing over, that is, unless you wish to take a nap at the end of each reel, and miss the cue. I have never been able to see why an operator, as he calls himself, should use a punch. And some of the so-called gentlemen are still using them as I have to cut punch holes out about 6 days a week. But maybe some day they will take their punches and sell them to a conductor or someone who has some use for it. I have got a new booth now. And a good equipment and am getting a good picture so won't kick any more now. So will cut in on the next reel and cut this one off as you are tired of reading it.

Yours very truly,
G. S. HEATWOLE,
N. A. M. L. No. 423
Local No. 619

P. S. Will try and send you a picture of my projection room and equipment a little later on. Will you please send me a new supply of labels, as I am out?

Dear Sir:

In answer of your ad in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS of Jan. 28th, I think your plan of the "Bronze Medal" is very good. I will be only too glad to pay for one of them.

And I think that most if not all of the other members will.

Yours for success
SAMUEL MCALLISTER,
N. A. M. L. 1161

Dear Ed:

I have long neglected in sending in my application for membership in the N. A. M. L. and I think it is a great thing for any operator to become a member of.

It is my intention to live up to the pledge.

I am also sending you some samples of what I cut out of a picture that I just ran, entitled "One Arabian Night," which is a First National picture. The print was not old, but nevertheless I cut out 87 bad patches, 4 misframes and 9 punch holes. And not long ago I cut out 53 patches out of another picture which also was a First National.

I always try to put a picture into just as good shape as possible before running. I always put from 2 to 4 hours on every picture inspecting, cleaning and paraffining.

Well, I had better bring this letter to an end before it hits the basket.

With best wishes and success to your department,

Yours for Better Projection,

lost in competition with the huge orchestra.

We pointed out in a previous article that we see things by reflected light, but that to get a maximum impression of color, we must have a relatively large light colored area on which the tinted light can be thrown. One way of accomplishing the desired end would be to flood the entire auditorium with tinted light, so that one "feels" the atmosphere. This can be accomplished by the use of concealed lamps in inverted reflectors placed in a cornice for indirect lighting. Again the curtain and draperies at the front of the house might be of a light neutral tint and colored light from concealed sources thrown on this or, as mentioned in one of the previous articles, the orchestra itself, could be clothed in white suits and beams of colored light projected on this area. Suitable connections of circuits of the three primary colors red green and blue with dimming devices will permit the use of any combination or mixture desired.

Having the means at hand to get color effects on a large scale, it will be up to the musician to co-operate with the man who has observed the effect of color on our emotions (the psychologist) and with the man who knows how to produce the lighting effects (the electrician or engineer). The musician will outline to the psychologist the impression which the music is supposed to create. The latter will determine what color is most likely to be associated with this emotion and the engineer will see that the right color is available at the proper time.

One can visualize the time when sufficient information has been obtained from experiments to lay down certain definite fundamental rules and then still further to the time when these effects will be appreciated by the general public. This will not be a difficult matter, for most of us are affected by music.

We are stirred at the sound of the military band, the soft soothing strains of the Humoresque or Kamennoi-Ostrow rest us and quiet the nerves, while the modern jazz tune has still another effect. Some of us experience the whole gamut of human emotions, listening to the wonderfully descriptive music of Massennet, Puccini or Wagner. Particular phrases promote sorrow or joy, depress or exuberate us. Light has a similar effect, the colorings of nature as expressed in sunrise or sunset give one a thrill, the cool, restful green of the wood has its effect, while the changing blues and white caps of the sea also promote an impression. Certainly these can be combined.

In many of the larger Motion Picture houses it is a regular practice to vary the lighting while the orchestra plays the prelude or special numbers. Observations indicate that while some of the effects obtained are excellent, at times there is apparently little connection between the music and the lighting. Even though the lighting is most artistic, it should most certainly be in harmony with the music. Careful forethought along the lines suggested should produce the desired result.

It is going somewhat out of the province of this article to lay down detailed programs for various selections. There are certain descriptive numbers which are particularly susceptible to color treatment, for example, Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries," "Siegfried's Funeral March," "Good Friday Spell," Tschaikowsky's "Marche Slav," "Overture 1812," Rimsky-Korsakow's "Scheherazade," "Sadko," "Ballet Music from M'lads," Rachmaninoff's "Island of the Dead," Rossini's Overture "William Tell," Von Suppe's Overtures, and so on.

The numerous themes offer great possibilities for changing colors. Flashes of one color can be superimposed on another. A shrill, piercing note can be accentuated by a brilliant, momentarily exposed light. At times, the change from one color to another will take place gradually, at other parts abruptly.

We can all look hopefully to the future for great advances in combining the arts of music and light.

Plans for New Theatre

Plans for the construction of a new moving picture theatre at 608 Main street, Houston, Texas, are being drawn up by local architects for H. Silverberg and S. Abrams, present managers of the Crown theatre here. The plans call for the expenditure of approximately $30,000 on the building, which will have a seating capacity of 450. A name has not been chosen for the theatre and a contest may be held to select one.

Get Perfect Light and a Perfect Dissolve at Less Cost With

TransVerteR

The Standard M-G Set of the Motion Picture Industry

TRANSVERTER (double arc type), furnishes two perfect arcs in series simultaneously, each of the same amperage and light value—and in striking the second arc the one showing is not disturbed in the slightest degree. This gives a perfect dissolve.

And, throughout the whole operation the automatic voltage control maintains constant amperage without the use of wasteful resistance, which, of course, means less heat in the booth and less maintenance and operating cost than any other device.

These are but a few of many TransVerteR features that contribute to the successful operation of motion picture theaters.

Eastman Motion Picture Tells Story

The picture tells the romance of film making from the cotton grower to the motion picture studio. Its theme is, therefore, of direct and vital interest to the movies. But along with the educational interest there is provided ample comedy entertainment in the form of animated cartoons from the pen of that clever film cartoonist, Paul Felton.

These relieve the industrial features and make delightful every moment of the story's unfolding.

The locale is Kodak Park where we watch the arrival of a train laden with cotton of which the title informs the audience, "4,000,000 pounds are used annually."

We see the cotton unloaded and then passed through huge washers to remove vegetable and other impurities. Then through dryers to eliminate moisture and into moisture proof cans.

The cotton, now pure white, is next fed through chutes into nitrating machines where the acids acting upon it render it soluble later. Then into huge vats where it goes through a period of washing and rinsing lasting several weeks, to remove every trace of acid. This cleansing completed, the cotton is fed to the solvent and a thick, honey-like substance called "dope," held up for our inspection, is the result.

On highly polished wheels this dope is spread to form a sheet of film base 3½ feet wide and 5-1000th of an inch thick. By way of contrast we are shown the little barrel which, with a twin brother, sufficed for all the "dope" made before the advent of motion pictures.

A trip through the grounds of Kodak Park gives the audience some idea of the extent of this film industry, while a view of its private water pumping station and reservoir suggests the scale on which its manufacture is conducted. The capacity of this pumping station, pumping water direct from Lake Ontario, six miles away, the title informs us, is "12,000,000 gallons daily."

A great safe containing pure silver bullion, of which 3 tons are used weekly at Kodak Park, is then shown, followed by a graphic illustration of the actions of nitric acid on the silver in the process of reducing it to silver crystals. Then the mixing of these crystals with the potassium bromide and gelatine to form the light sensitive emulsion with which the film is coated.

The processes of coating, slitting, perforating and reeling the film are then shown in order. Then, as a climax and to visualize the "147,000 miles of motion picture film annually turned out at Kodak Park, a huge rotating globe has been constructed and six strands of film apparently take their journey around it. These six strands leave Kodak Park and pass like telegraph wires over New York, across the Atlantic, through London, Paris, crossing Italy, Turkey, Persia, India, China, Japan and the Pacific, passing through Hollywood before their final leap across the continent to Kodak Park from where they started.

Miniature architecture, typical of each of the cotuntries through which the six ribbons pass, is constructed upon the surface of this globe.

Seating Capacity Doubled

The seating capacity of the Majestic moving picture theatre, Fort Mill, S. C., has been doubled, and two new projecting machines have been installed. Improvements also have been made in the heating and ventilating systems. The Majestic was closed for several weeks while the improvements were in progress.—KEENEY.

Columbia University Offers Courses in Motion Pictures

The course deals briefly with the history and development of motion pictures, and the classification of pictures according to their use: entertainment, educational and industrial. It establishes tentative standards for judging these types of pictures according to the degree of success with which they attain their objectives. It also includes a study of the following topics:

1. The physics of production, including a study of the nature and phenomena of light.
2. The chemistry of production, especially the manufacture of raw photographic stock, developing, printing, tinting, and toning.
3. The mechanics of production, with consideration of various types of motion picture cameras and their method of use.
4. The functions of production, with analysis of the duties and responsibilities of scenario writer, production manager, director, art director, camera man, and editor.
5. The factors of production, including types of photography, as straight, "trick," natural color, and microscopic, the making of cartoons and technical drawings.

It is the custom to have invited guests who are experts in the various branches of production address the class and thus supplement the work of the instructor. By this means, students come in contact with capable motion picture directors, laboratory experts, critics, editors and producers.

New Wrinkle in Lobby Display Frames

The Book Devise, made by the Newman Manufacturing Company for Frank Rembush, of the Rembush Enterprises, Shelbyville, Ind. Mr. Rembush believes this idea has never been worked out by any other owner and it has proven so successful that he has decided to install these devises in other theatres.

There are spaces on all four sides, and on the gable roof of this device, for posters, photos and hand-painted cards. It is well made of wood with an outer covering of polished brass. The brass can be plated in statuary bronze or other finishes.

The glass door at the top of the front panel protects the best part of the device, which is a series of 10 x 14" mounted photographs so arranged that they will turn like the leaves of a book at 30-second intervals. The necessary illumination is provided so that persons standing for a few moments in front of this device can review the scenes in a feature picture in a very short time in a very convenient manner.

Business Offerings

I would like to give a good position to a man who would invest from three to five thousand dollars—and pay interest for same—in a large theatre to be opened soon with high class vaudeville and pictures. Must have good reference. Address Box 100, Motion Picture News, New York City.

New Simplex-Sun-Light High Intensity Arc Lamp Now Ready

Claims to embody many new features and improvements

AN important announcement is that contained in a statement issued by Edwin S. Porter, president of the Precision Machine Company, regarding the development, designing and building of the new Simplex Sun-Light Arc High Intensity Projector Lamp which is now ready for the market and which is indeed a welcome accessory to the modern projection room.

"Many people," said Mr. Porter, "are apparently under the impression that the high intensity arc is something which has been developed in the past year, but such is not the case. The high intensity arc has been in use for some seven years and played a most important part in the great war, for it was the Sperry Gyroscope Company of Brooklyn, who having advanced so far in search-light work were selected by the United States Government to equip the United States Navy with Sperry High Intensity Search-Lights which played so important a part in our naval transport work in bringing troops and supplies to France, but in actual warfare wherever a search-light was used by United States forces on land or sea, it was the Sperry High Intensity Search-Light that was used exclusively, thus making it the only American light of its kind used abroad, which can be interpreted as a splendid tribute to the engineers of the Sperry Company. It might be of interest too, to know that the search-light which is now nightly projecting a beam of light seven miles straight up into the heavens is a Sperry light which is being tested out in Brooklyn, and which is receiving the close attention of lighting experts, as well as military and naval men from every country in the world.

"The tremendous strides taken by the Sperry Organization in high intensity work attracted the attention of Mr. J. Justice Harmer, president of the Sun-Light Arc Corporation, who so arranged matters that his company was granted exclusive rights to the Sperry High Intensity Lamp in the motion picture field. The Sun-Light Arc Corporation has undoubtedly revolutionized studio lighting through the installation of their Sun-Light arc units which produce in the studios practically the same lighting results as are obtained through the use of real sunlight in exterior work.

E. S. Porter, President of Precision Machine Co.

"And now we come to the period which interests the projector users, who to a certain extent had been led to believe by those exploiting another lamp, that all but the builders of this particular lamp were 'asleep at the switch.' Such is not the case however, for immediately following the war, a lamp of original design for projector use was developed by the Sperry Company, whose experience, facilities and data provided them with everything that was needed to produce an ideal motion picture arc lamp Together with the engineers of the Sun-Light Organization they worked along altogether different lines than had been followed by others. The idea that was always before them was to produce a lamp that could be used on varying amperage and that would be readily adjustable as is the present type of carbon arc lamp and yet strong and rugged enough to withstand high amperage, which latter, when run over rating. has made short work of the high intensity lamps that have thus far found their way onto the market.

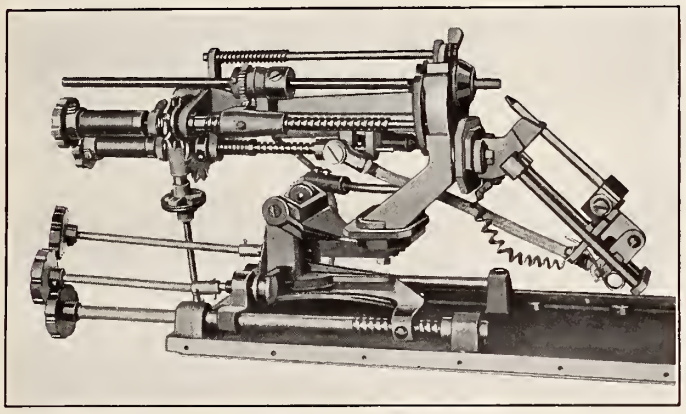
"Fourteen months before any other high intensity was on the market, one of the new Sperry Sun-Light Lamps was quietly placed in the Capitol Theatre (New York City) projection room, where its work was carefully checked up, and this lamp was soon followed by three of similar design. So well did they do their work, and apparently so far ahead of any competitive lamp did they prove, that Mr. Samuel Rothapfel, the well-known manager of the Capitol, wrote a very strong letter of endorsement after having used these lamps for a year and watching them function side by side for a few weeks with lamps of competitive manufacture.

"Yet no announcement had been made of this marvelous lamp, although hundreds of men interested in projection had visited the Capitol projection room, and after watching the results, invariably requested details as to when this type of lamp could be had for the general market. Just about this time, the industry was being fed-up on high intensity claims, but no commercial lamp had yet been announced that would operate on anything but a certain fixed amperage and the great interest of high intensity greatly died down, when it was found that the only lamps yet commercialized were restricted to certain limited conditions. Meanwhile The Precision Machine Company had become interested in the Sun-Light Arc High Intensity Lamp (which name was given the Sperry Lamp when Mr. Harmer's Organization procured the motion picture rights to it). Having, through experience in projector building, a most comprehensive knowledge of modern projection room requirements, I incorporated some Simplex ideas into the lamp which is today known as the Simplex-Sun-Light Arc High Intensity Lamp, and which, according to all who have seen it work, can well be declared an achievement in projector lighting."

J. Justice Harmer, Pres. Sun Light Arc Co.

This lamp, it is claimed, has eliminated the weakness that seems to prevail in the usual lamp of this type. Its construction is extremely rugged, all contact units being of such type and design that tend to greatly strengthen their efficiency, as well as promote long service. A striking and unusual feature not found in any other lamp of its kind lies in the fact that it can be used on any amperage between seventy and one hundred and twenty. It is claimed that all other lamps function only on a fixed amperage. Another departure is noted in the fact that instead of being operated in a fixed position, the Simplex Sun-Light Arc is equipped with every adjustment handle that is found in the ordinary carbon arc lamp, which permits for the focusing, centering and adjusting of the light. In other lamps it is alleged that such flexibility is not had.

The "Positive head," which is the technical term for the unit which holds the positive carbon, is readily removable and fastened in a manner which permits for quickly exchanging this head. The contact through which the current enters the positive carbon is a distinctive feature, inasmuch as it is operated by a finger clamp which easily lifts up, yet it is so constructed and located that it sets into its seat in a floating position to compensate for any irregularity in the carbon, and at the same time affords a perfectly tight contact. All springs used in the lamp are removed the longest distance away from the heat sources, while the motor which operates the lamps is outside of the lamphouse.



It is further claimed that in the type "A" Lamp, the regular Simplex Motor which drives the projector is used in conjunction with the new Simplex Arc Control, while in the type "2 C" Lamp the motor is located on the outside of the rear end of the lamphouse. The many advantages obtained through having the motor away from the inside of the lamphouse can be readily recognized. The feeding mechanism of both types of lamp is a revelation to all who have followed high intensity lighting, for these units are of such a positive while simple construction that they greatly eliminate the big drawback that has thus far prevented many from adopting high intensity—namely, complication of mechanism and absolutely undivided attention while running.

The Simplex Sun-Light Arc Projection Lamp has already been installed in many of the Loew's Theatres (this circuit having adopted this type of lamp exclusively), and already almost one hundred of these lamps are operated in and around New York City with most satisfactory results. Both the Messrs. Porter and Harmer are agreed that they did well to wait until they had a 100% unit to offer to the industry before placing the reputations of their respective organizations behind their lamp. The Precision Machine Company and its distributors are now in a position to take immediate orders for the new Simplex Sunlight Arc Lamp, and have every reason to be proud of this latest Simplex accessory.
